Spurred by persistent reports of new entries in several races, candidates for Macon County offices in the Spring Democratic primaries got down to serious vote canvassing this week. To date the only contest was in the race for the post in the Legislature in which three candidates already have qualified, with others rumored ready to take the plunge.

Candidates have until March 1 to qualify for the primaries.

During the week several persons who had been mentioned as possible candidates told friends they had decided against qualifying but additional names kept arising to keep interest in the various races at a high pitch.

Of particular interest during the week was the entry of two veteran office holders who are seeking re-election.

Probate Judge William Varner, who has held the office since 1937, is asking the voters to return him to office. Some talk has been heard that he might have opposition but latest reports were that he probably will be unopposed.

Henry Watson, with an even longer term of service as clerk of the Circuit Court, dating from 19-35, also filed qualification papers during the week to seek re-election.

Still another long-time office holder, A. B. Hope, qualified fo[r] re-election as member of the Ma[-]con County Board of Education.

Citizens' Councils Begin Quest For New Secretary

Advertiser P. 1A

Montgomery Ala.

The executive committee of the Alabama Assn. of Citizens' Councils met here yesterday to begin a search for a new executive secretary.

The present occupant of that position, Sen. Sam Engelhardt of Macon, has resigned to become a candidate for lieutenant governor.

In a brief farewell address to the leaders of the Alabama council movement, Engelhardt said he hated to leave "but I feel it is the only thing to do under the circumstances."

Presiding at yesterday's meeting at the Whitley was Judge Verdo Elmore of Gordo, chairman of the state association.

Prior to going into executive session, Elmore told the group that the council would not support any individual candidates in the upcoming election "but we do intend to find out which candidates are behind us in our beliefs."

"We will favor men who have stood for the same things we stand for all their lives, and not those who have taken a stand yesterday or even six months ago." Elmore continued. "But for God's sake, let's don't get another governor like we have had for the last 12 years."

Elmore said the Council planned to send out questionnaires to candidates just as it did in 1956.

In other business yesterday the group, which included delegates representing councils in 12 Alabama counties, elected three new members to the executive committee. They were Fred Short, Birmingham; L. K. (Snag) Andrews, Union Springs, and Jesse McConnell, Mobile.

Council members present from Birmingham brought with them a gigantic petition addressed to President Eisenhower in which the signers vowed their determination to maintain segregation.

Fri 2-7-58

The Birmingham council members said they had already received more than 300,000 signatures to the petition.

'Fool promises' scored—

Elebash backs right to work, segregation

Montgomery 2-7-58

Gubernatorial candidate Shearen Elebash of Montgomery, who will formally launch his campaign Thursday night in his native Selma, is for retaining Alabama's right-to-work law and will be "resolute and firm" in maintaining segregation.

He labeled as "fool promises" pledges by some gubernatorial aspirants to pay $60 to $75 and more old-age pensions, declaring he considered $45 to $50 a month more "in the line of reason."

"I hope we can get more, but we can't tax the people indiscriminately," said Elebash. "But I think it's unfair to give anybody a delusion they can get more. The old people have to make plans in their declining years for the rest of their lives.

"To promise them $75 a month is just like promising them the moon," he added.

ELEBASH, Montgomery business man, who said he signed the

...mocratic loyalty oath willing-..., said Alabama would "per-...ps be a little better off with-...ut it."

"But we must maintain our seniority on congressional committees, and the loyalty oath is the best way to maintain that at this time," he said.

Elebash made these declarations on Sunday's WABT-WAPI "Alabama Press Conference," as Jack Owen and John Patterson pushed their campaigns for governor in the Birmingham area.

Owen, president of the Public Service Commission, and strong backer of the right-to-work law, met with North Alabama campaign leaders today.

Atty. Gen. Patterson brought his campaign here for a rally at 7:30 tonight at the Gardendale Community Center.

PATTERSON, who has promised $75 a month to the aged needy will address another rally at 7:30 Wednesday night at Bessemer City Auditorium. He will have Hillbilly Rebe Gosdin and his Sunny Valley Gang with him.

State Rep. Karl Harrison of Shelby, who formerly kicked off his campaign for the governorship with a TV "Report to the People" in Birmingham over the week-end, will deliver another televised report ovr Mobile's WKRG-TV tonight.

Harrison, Columbiana attorney and legislative veterans, will push his bid for votes in the Mobile area tomorrow and Wednesday.

Harrison went to bat for the cotton farmers, wiring Secretary of Agriculture Benson:

"The farmers of Alabama have made application to the agricultural stabilization and conservation committee, a branch of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, for 588,000 acres of cotton land for this year's allotment. Only 260,000 of these have been accepted for approval.

"This is to notify you that the farmers in Alabama are in imminent peril of losing a large number of additional cotton acres to the West, unless these 328,000 acres are accepted now, or the farmers of Alabama are notified immediately that they will not be accepted.

"This is, therefore, to demand that you, as secretary of agriculture, either accept this 328,000 acres of cotton land now, or immediately notify the farmers of this state that the same will not be accepted, thus permitting this land to be planted and the acreage saved.

Jimmy Faulkner, after a series of North Alabama rallies, headed for Georgiana in Butler County for another "home folks" party at 7:30 tomorrow night. Faulkner will have the gospel-singing Statesmen Quartet with him again at this South Alabama rally.

FORMER NINTH DISTRICT Congr. Laurie Battle of Birmingham opened his South Alabama campaign headquarters at '82 Commerce-st in Montgomery today.

State Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd, who will meet with campaign leaders in Birmingham Wednesday, will stage another "friendship" rally at 7:30 Thursday night at the Carbon Hill National Guard Armory. With Todd will be gospel-singing Wally Fowler and the Sons of Song, plus the Chuck Wagon Gang, Western musicmakers.

Todd will address the Alabama Sheep and Wool Growers Assn. Friday at Huntsville.

Owen, who attended a Tuscaloosa fish fry sponsored by supporters, declared that "the salvation of Alabama is for labor and management to work together."

But Owen said that "regardless of whether there is a right-to-work law on the books, I will stand by labor and management and let my actions on any matter be governed by what I think is right."

Todd has pledged $60 a month old-age pensions, with Owen and Faulkner declaring for $50. State Rep. George Hawkins said he would strive to provide $45 to $48.

ELEBASH, YALE UNIVERSITY graduate, who is engaged in the jewelry business and various enterprises, said he is running for governor because "I believe many people in Alabama want the same thing for their children that I want for mine." Elebash has three sons and a daughter.

"I think I can bring dignity and integrity to the state government," he added, in saying "I have no political ties or obligations. And I'm running as a very serious candidate."

He said he was getting "small contributions" and hoped to get "a lot more," but that "no large groups are backing my campaign." And he added "I haven't got $150,000" to make the campaign.

Elebash, who is an entertainer of note, took a couple of minutes out from answering questions to play and sing a spiritual. He said he would have no hillbilly band or gospel singers, but would have other entertainers to help with his campaign.

ELEBASH'S SELMA kickoff rally is set for 7:30 p.m., Thursday, in the old junior high school (Baker School).

Elebash, who was graduated in political science from Yale, said he doesn't feel being well educated is any handicap to being elected governor.

"It certainly shouldn't be," he said. "I think a person can be well educated without being a stuffed shirt."

Elebash said he is not a member of the Citizens Council, but approved of "a great many things some of the membership stands for." On the other hand, he said he decried "some of the things" done in the name of one branch of the council.

HE IS AGAINST increasing the state sales tax and feels that increased revenues will come with industrial development from the present levy. He added "I don't know the answer" to whether ad valorem (property) assessments should be equalized to bring small county assessments in line with those in larger counties.

Questioning Elebash were Bill Tome of Birmingham, United Press state news manager, and this reporter. Everett Holle was moderator, substituting for Charlie Davis, WABT-WAPI news editor, sidelined with flu

Patterson tops in straw vote

ANNISTON, Ala., Feb. 17—Atty. Gen. John Patterson led a gubernatorial race straw vote taken at the Anniston Kiwanis Club luncheon, with Jimmy Faulkner second and George Wallace third. The results: Patterson, 23; Faulkner, 18; Wallace, 15; Laurie Battle, 10; Jack Owen, three; Karl Harrison, Shearen Elebash and George Hawkins, one each. Tom Sims, Kiwanis Club member, received eight and Fred Taylor, political writer for The Birmingham News, who addressed the luncheon, got five, although neither is a candidate. Other non-candidate receiving one vote each were Alabama Football Coach Bear Bryant, Dr. Houston Cole, president of Jacksonville State College; Pat Burnham, club president; A. A. Goodwyn and "a Republican."

Wallace Bears Down On Race Issue In Opening Campaign

By [illegible]
Advertiser Staff Writer

OZARK, Ala., Feb. 15—Circuit Judge George C. Wallace of Clayton opened his campaign for governor here this wintry afternoon with a promise that segregation will be maintained "without violence or ill will."

Despite extremely unfavorable weather conditions, Wallace's opener was impressive. A crowd of approximately 3,000 people crowded the streets of Ozark for the rally, braving 40 degree weather made even more miserable by cutting winds of near-gale force.

Wallace spoke from the rear of a truck on courthouse square and on a couple of occasions was all but blown away by gusts of winds.

What sort of crowd might have attended under better conditions is anybody's guess, but it certainly would have been considerable.

The weather was not only a factor in the size of the crowd, it was also a factor in the length of Wallace's speech. He deliberately cut it short, hitting only the high spots of his platform.

It was expected from the friendly audience, Wallace was well received. A total 14 times during his 21-minute address the crowd removed its hands from its pockets, collectively, to applaud.

Wallace's remarks on segregation and states rights were well received in particular.

"With fairness, dignity and firmness we can preserve our way of life," Wallace told the crowd. "We must never resort to maliciousness, violence or ill will—that will only compound our problems."

Wallace added that the question of civil rights was a political issue, noting that "we have outsmarted our enemies in the past and we can outsmart them again."

Wallace also fired a shot at the Civil Rights Commission relative to the determination of registered voters.

"You have enough good and honest people right here in Ozark to decide on matters such as that," Wallace said, "and you sure don't have to rely on any imported federal and district judges."

Wallace also hit lightly on the other main issues, and to the surprise of some, gave an endorsement to reapportionment of the Legislature. Wallace is from Barbour County, one of several counties which have historically and bitterly opposed any form of legislative reapportionment.

INTENT STATED

"I intend to be governor of all the state, not just of the South, North, East or West," Wallace said. "And it is also my desire to see that those sections which are now under-represented in the Legislature are given fair representation."

Wallace was introduced to the crowd by Mayor Douglas Brown of Ozark, one of a number of municipal officials here for the rally. Also speaking was Mayor Leonard Beard of Sheffield, who drove 325 miles to attend the rally, and Mayor H. H. Dees of Atmore. Both are former presidents of the Alabama League of Municipalities.

The presence of these city officials gave added credence to reports that the politically potent League looks upon Wallace's candidacy with considerable favor.

FOLSOM TINT

There was also a Folsom tint visible in the Wallace camp. Frank Boswell, prison director during Folsom's first administration and now an executive in the Revenue Department was on hand. Also seen in the crowd was Phillip Hamm, Folsom's candidate for governor in 1950, and C. F. Halstead, Montgomery contractor who was in the front ranks, physically and financially, during Folsom's 1954 sweep.

To top it off, a niece of Gov. Folsom sought to join in the entertainment here today but was rebuffed.

Miss Cornelia Ellis, a freshman at Huntingdon, offered to sing a little song she had composed (to the tune of "Wake Up, Little Suzie") about Wallace. But Emcee Bob Underwood, a Montgomery television announcer, turned her down on the grounds that she had no union card.

GUITARS DECORATED

Miss Ellis is the daughter of Mrs. Ruby Folsom Ellis. She and her teen-age companion both were armed with guitars decorated with "Wallace for Governor" signs.

Although the Huntingdon duet didn't entertain there were others who did. Minnie Pearl and Webb Pierce of the Grand Ole Opry were on hand and won a rousing reception from the crowd. They were accompanied by Jack Turner and his string band from Montgomery.

Minnie Pearl appropriately wore long underwear under her dress.

Practically everybody who is anybody in Dale County politics was present for the rally. They included Rep. Henry Steagall, Ozark Council President Tom Goff and Councilman N. G. Andrews, Garner Smith, Frank Young and Murray Wells; Sheriff Hoyt Searcy, Probate Judge Alta F. Head abd Commissioner Roy Parker.

OTHER LEGISLATORS

Also on hand were several other members of the Legislature including Sen. George Little and Rep. McDowell Lee of Barbour and Sen. Joe Davis of Lowndes.

At least two candidates for other state offices were doing some campaigning of their own here—Mrs. Betty Frink and Roy King, both running for secretary of state.

To the Qualified Voters of Macon County:

On next Tuesday, May sixth, you will have the privilege, and it is your duty, to go to the polls and exercise your right to vote for the candidate of your choice to fill the various offices in the State of Alabama at large and in your County.

This is a privilege and a duty that should not be taken lightly. Each voter should consider very carefully the qualifications, the integrity, and abilities of those seeking office.

Don't be a dis-interested citizen staying away from the polls, and then criticize the officials that others put in office. Go to the polls and vote into office the candidate of your choice, and if you make me your choice for the Probate Juge of Macon County, it will be deeply appreciated.

I feel that I am qualified for the Office of Probate Judge of Macon County, and I will do everything possible to operate the office efficiently for every person who comes within its jurisdiction.

GO TO THE POLLS AND VOTE ON MAY SIXTH, AND VOTE FOR WILLIAM C. HARE FOR PROBATE JUDGE OF MACON COUNTY. I THANK YOU.

Patterson Gets Big Vote In County, Loyalists Win

Talladega County went along with the rest of the state in giving an overwhelming vote to John Patterson, but it favored loyalty oath supporters.

Six of the eight top man for Democratic executive committeeman favored the loyalty oath, official returns showed.

The two anti-oath candidates chosen in the top eight here were Sam Venable and Jerre W. Reynolds.

The six loyalists in the top eight were Earl V. Atkinson, Thomas Cooley, John W. Walker, Jr. Leonard Goldberg, Curtis Gauntt and Travis L. Arnold.

The vote for other candidates was A. D. Todd 1168; Laurie Battle 917; Carl Harrison 844; Jack Owen 331; George Hawkins 198; Billy Walker 167; W. E. Dodd 51; Ralph Shorty Price 39; Shearen Elebash 22; John G. Crommelin 20; J. W. Gullate 9.

Patterson And Wallace Huddle With Advisors

By The Associated Press

Atty. Gen. John Patterson and Circuit Judge George C. Wallace were closeted with their advisors Friday morning mapping campaign plans for the June 3 run-off for governor.

Patterson ended a visit to Montgomery to return to Birmingham. His headquarters there said he would hold a statewide meeting with his workers there "very shortly."

Wallace scheduled a 30-minute television appearance on WBRC TV at Birmingham Friday night at 9 p. m. He promised earlier that he was going to "take off the wraps" in his runoff battle with Patterson, who led in the first primary.

Seeking possible second primary Thursday was State Sen. Albert Boutwell of Jefferson County, who led the field of five for the lieutenant governor nomination.

The legislator said, "I deeply appreciate the fine vote I received. I am determined to continue to work just as hard as ever to assure my victory in June."

Out of 3121 boxes of 3313 for governor Patterson had 182,241; Wallace 148,537; Faulkner 85,937; Battle 37,738; Crommelin 2,229; Price 819; Todd 55,714; Walker 10,652.

The vote total was 585,314.

Patterson's Lead Widens To 27,000

Atty. Gen. John Patterson extended his lead in the race for the gubernatorial nomination. He will face a runoff election June 3 against Circuit Judge George Wallace.

The unofficial returns from 2928 of 3313 boxes gave Patterson 162,646 and Wallace 135,239.

Other gubernatorial candidates incluuded:

Returns from 2,771 boxes gave:

Attorney general — Richmond Flowers 101,203; MacDonald Gallion, 221,227; Charles W. McKay Jr. 93,717.

RUN-OFF TO NAME ALA. GOVERNOR

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (INS)—The 49th Democratic primary for Alabama's governor will be decided by a run-off.

The participants will be Atty. Gen. John Patterson, 37, and fiery Circuit Court Judge George Wallace, 38, of Barbour County. Neither received the required majority of votes to win the primary Tuesday.

The slightly balding Patterson, whose father's slaying set off the Phenix City crime wave cleanup four years ago, and Wallace, who used a Hill Billy band as an aid in his campaign, completely dominated the voting in what was believed to have been a record turn out at the polls.

JUNE 3, THE DAY

June 3 has been set as run-off day. A victory in Alabama's Democratic primary has traditionally assured the victor the top political post.

Patterson, whose slogan was "Nobody Votes for Patterson but People," netted 149,995 votes, while Wallace, with the aid of his Hill Billy singers, received 119,207 votes. Approximately three-quarters of the ballots have been counted.

Running [illegible] with returns from 2,722 of 3,281 boxes was Jimmy Faulkner—one of the early favorites and runner-up to Gov. James E. Folsom four years ago.

Wallace was in a joyous mood Wednesday and confident of victory in the run-off. "I have just been trying to get in the run-off and I made it," he said. He added: "I expect complete victory in the run-off on the third of June."

The race for lieutenant-governor also boiled down to a two-man affair and a run-off there too seemed [illegible].

State Sen. Albert Boutwell — known as the father of Alabama's segregation legislation — and Sen. E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa are leading a five-man field.

37 More Join Growing List Of Candidates

By BOB INGRAM

The office of the Secretary of State was flooded with another 37 candidates who qualified yesterday for the various offices to be filled in the May 6 Democratic primary.

Two candidates for governor who had already qualified with the State Democratic Executive Committee filed with Secretary of State Marv Texas Garner yesterday. They were Jack Owen, president of the Public Service Commission, and W. E. Dodd, a Bessemer millwright.

Candidates must file with both the committee and the secretary of state and frequently they do not file simultaneously. It is because of this that one office might have more candidates for a particular office than the other.

PERRY QUALIFIES

Another man qualifying yesterday was Circuit Solicitor Emmett Perry of Birmingham. He will be a candidate for reelection. At one time Perry was mentioned as a possible candidate for state office, either governor or attorney general.

Among the other qualifiers yesterday was State Sen. Rolan Cooper of Camden, seeking reelection, and former State Sen. Lawrence K. (Snag) Andrews of Union Springs. Andrews will be a candidate for the Senate.

Incumbent members of the House who qualified yesterday for reelection included Rep. Bob Locke of Choctaw, Albert P. Brewer of Decatur. M. B. McLendon of Union Springs, A. J. Brooks of Fort Deposit and H. B. Taylor of Butler.

A former House member, Lawrence (Larry) Dumas of Birmingham, qualified as a candidate for the Senate from Jefferson, a seat being vacated by lieutenant governor aspirant Albert Boutwell.

Other qualifiers yesterday included:

James Ray Wyatt, Ashville, State Senate from the 6th District (St. Clair and Etowah); Vernon Millsap, Evergreen, House from Conecuh; W. A. Graham, Eclectic, House, Place No. 2, Elmore; C. B. Williams, Union Springs, House, Place No. 1, Bullock;

Tom Bevill, Jasper, House, Place No. 2, Walker; H. H. Matthews, Camden, Democratic Executive Committee, First District; Jack Bridges, Headland, Democratic Executive Committee, 3rd District.

Will E. James and H. R. Lowry both of Cullman, seeking the Third District Senate seat embracing Cullman, Blount and Winston Counties.

Alton L. Turner of Luverne, Senate 25th District (Crenshaw, Pike, and Coffee Counties).

Carlton R. Larkins of Elba, House, Coffee County.

Vernon B. Millsap, Evergreen, House, Conecuh.

Leslie Earl Speigle, Dothan, House, Houston.

Robert V. Wooldridge Jr., of Tuscaloosa, House, Tuscaloosa.

Lena Wade Adams, Linden, House, Marengo.

Buford L. Copeland, Gadsden, House, Etowah.

James D. Finlay, Luverne, House, Crenshaw.

W. M. Cole, Sylacauga, House, Talladega.

W. Ralph Chambers of Columbia, House, Henry.

Lewis Charles Ellerman Coker of Prattville, House, Autauga.

Circuit Judge Hubert M. Hall of Bay Minette for renomination in 28th Circuit (Baldwin County).

Herbert H. Conway of Albertville for judge of 27th Circuit (Marshall County).

Circuit Judge S. A. Lynne of Decatur for renomination in 8th Circuit (Lawrence, Limestone and Morgan Counties).

Ingram Beasley of Birmingham for circuit judge Place No. 6, 10th Circuit (Jefferson County).

Circuit Solicitor James E. Wilson of Jasper for renomination in 14th Circuit (Walker County).

W. G. Hawkins of Fort Payne for solicitor of 9th Circuit (Cherokee, DeKalb and Jackson Counties).

Patterson picks Engelhardt for highway post

Birmingham News

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Dec. 4—Although selection of former State Sen. Sam M. Engelhardt Jr. of Macon as state highway director had been considered a certainty for months, Gov.-Elect John Patterson waited until today to make it official.

Thus, Engelhardt, successful farmer-merchant-ginner and veteran member of House and Senate, will succeed Herman Nelson as head of the state's largest department Jan. 19 when Patterson is inaugurated governor. The job pays $15,000 a year.

ENGELHARDT SHOULD feel at home in the State Highway Department, having worked there from 1933 to 1937.

He became the 14th cabinet selection announced by Patterson.

Engelhardt who served in the House during the administration of former Gov. Gordon Persons and who was a member of the State Senate during the present Folsom regime, formerly was executive secretary of the Citizens Councils of Alabama.

He sponsored numerous measures, the best known of which were the school placement act, recently upheld on its face by the U. S. Supreme Court; the Macon County dissolution law and the Tuskegee gerrymandering bill.

THE SO-CALLED dissolution law provides for carving up, or complete abolition, of Macon County in which Negroes outnumber white persons nearly seven to one. The gerrymandering measure changed the corporate boundaries of Tuskegee to eliminate as municipal voters most of the Negroes there.

Engelhardt, who was elected to the State Democratic Executive Committee last Spring when he also was a candidate for lieutenant governor, has been talked for the committee chairmanship. He was one of Patterson's strongest supporters in the run-off primary last June.

Engelhardt, who is a member of the Farm Bureau, is the son of Mrs. S. M. Engelhardt of Montgomery (his father is deceased).

He attended public school at Shorter, where he now lives, and was graduated from Washington and Lee University in 1934.

ENGELHARDT is a Baptist and is married to the former Sara Miller Bonner of Camden, daughter of former State Sen. J. Miller Bonner and niece of the late Gov. B. M. Miller. They have four children—Samuel Martin Engelhardt III, Miller Bonner Engelhardt, Sara Marlow and Harriet Brice Engelhardt.

Patterson is expected soon to complete cabinet appointments by announcing the selection of Charles M. Meriwether of Birmingham for state finance director and Asst. Atty. Gen. Alvin T. Prestwood to head the State Pensions and Security Department, along with other appointments.

Three In Race For Probate Judge Post

Last minute entry of two candidates before the deadline last Saturday made a three-man race for the office of probate judge of Macon County. Another entry in the race for the Alabama House of Representatives brought the total in this contest to five.

The two candidates entering in opposition to the veteran Probate Judge William Varner are William C. Hare, local attorney, and Robert Howard, local business man.

The contest for the office of probate judge is the first in the county in more than 20 years. Judge Varner first took office when appointed to fill the unexpired term of Judge D. E. Leslie, who died in 1937. He has been elected to succeeding terms without opposition since that time.

Mr. Martin, the latest to enter as candidate for Macon County's seat in the Legislature, is the only one of the five to make public in detail the platform on which he is seeking office.

Among the planks on which he will campaign are better schools and higher pay for teachers; a program to attract industry to Alabama and Macon County; economy in operation of all state departments and adequate aid for aged citizens.

The list of candidates for the Democratic primaries this Spring is the largest in a number of years. Only one candidate, C. A. Huddleston, who is seeking re-election as member of the Board of Revenue from District 1, is without opposition in the primaries.

Group From County Will Take Part In State-Wide TV Wallace Rally Friday Night

Macon County is sending a large delegation to Montgomery Friday night to attend the state-wide television campaign kick-off of Judge George C. Wallace in his campaign for governor. The Macon delegation will be seated in a reserved section in the Municipal Auditorium, where the rally will be held.

Mayor Phil Lightfoot, of Tuskegee, will head the Macon County group and has been invited to be seated on the speaker's stand for the telecast, which will start at 8 p. m. and will be carried over both Montgomery TV stations and Channel 4, Columbus.

Judge Wallace has made two sectional "platform" speeches in his campaign, one at Ozark and one at Troy, but the Friday night address will be his first state-wide appeal. A network of nine television stations and more than 20 radio stations will carry the address in which Judge Wallace is expected to outline in detail his stand on important issues of the campaign.

Local supporters of Judge Wallace have not organized a Votercade for the Montgomery trip but will travel in individual cars to meet at the Montgomery City Auditorium at 7 p. m. The program will get under way at 7:30, with the televised speech by Judge Wallace scheduled for 8 p. m.

The Macon County section will be marked by a large banner and each delegate will be supplied with a placard to identify them as residents of this county and as supporters of Judge Wallace.

EVERYONE INVITED

Macon County will have a large reserved space at the City Auditorium in Montgomery Friday night and supporters of Judge George C. Wallace invite everyone to attend the big television rally and sit in the Macon section.

Persons unable to attend the rally are invited to see and hear Judge Wallace on television, starting at 8 p. m. Both Montgomery channels and Channel 4, Columbus, will carry the program.

RUN AGAIN IN '62

Negro Candidate Quits State Race

By BOB INGRAM

Negro radio announcer Perry L. (Tiger) Thompson of Bessemer withdrew from the lieutenant governor's race Monday with a promise that he would run for governor in 1962 "if there's not a good man running."

"There ought to be a lot of happy candidates for lieutenant governor in Alabama now that I have withdrawn," Thompson said in a telephone interview with The Advertiser.

The 49-year-old Thompson entered the field for lieutenant governor late in February, the first Negro to seek state office in Alabama since 1902.

Ironically, Thompson blamed the right-to-work issue as the main reason he withdrew, rather than racial segregation.

"The newspapers of Alabama took a dirty dig at me by printing that I was for the right-to-work bill," Thompson said. "I'm against it, but I haven't got time to go around the state and retract what the newspapers said about me."

Thompson said he was convinced he would have been in the run-off this year "and I could of come back in 1962 and won easily."

"I was conducting an easy-going campaign but had received lots of support," he continued. "And I would have gotten more white votes than colored votes, although I'd gotten all of them."

"But I accomplished one thing I set out to do; I qualified under conditions where nobody else qualified," Thompson said. "I said I didn't believe in white supremacy, and some of the State Democratic Committee members had a lot to say about me. I think "the rest of them felt the same way but they didn't say anything."

"They talked about disqualifying me but I can say now I was prepared to get an injunction if they tried anything like that," Thompson continued.

Thompson said he didn't get any "serious threats" adding he had received some "crank threats."

The Negro said he would definitely be a candidate for office in 1962, either for governor or lieutenant governor.

Thompson's withdrawal brought no comment from the Montgomery Improvement Assn., a Negro organization which has encouraged members of that race to take a more active interest in state government.

R. A. Lewis, executive secretary of the MIA, said last night he felt "no comment necessary" on Thompson's withdrawal.

Segregation 'Litigation' Endorsed By Wallace

BY IVAN SWIFT

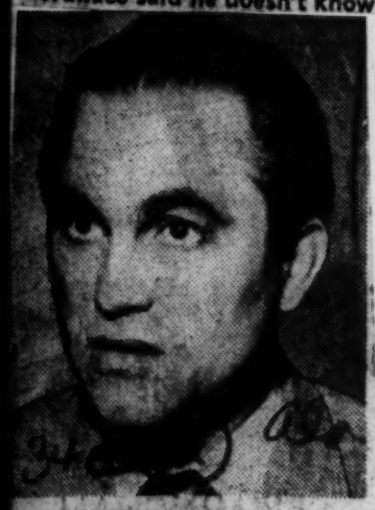
Gubernatorial Candidate George Wallace's answer to the integration problem is to "out-litigate 'em and out-legislate 'em."

Speaking on "Alabama Press Conference" yesterday over WABT-TV and WAPI, the Barbour County Circuit Judge told interviewers Fred Taylor of The Birmingham News and Leroy Associated Press that Alabama can win the integration battle with our heads."

The 39-year-old judge said the Alabama Legislature can pass laws to prevent integration in all Alabama schools.

Wallace told the interviewers he was Gov. James Folsom's South Alabama campaign manager during Folsom's last campaign and said he would have been an "ingrate" if he hadn't helped Folsom. He mentioned he support Folsom gave his trade school bill" when he was a member of the Legislature.

Wallace said he doesn't know



'OUT-LITIGATE 'EM' — George Wallace.

who Folsom now is backing.

On other issues, Wallace said:

"I've got to study the fiscal picture" on taxes. "At this time I'm against any additional taxes."

On the loyalty oath—"no objection."

On old age pensions—"A living" for old persons. He called some promises candidates are making "cruel" because they are beyond possibility.

On reapportionment, he wants "fair" reapportionment with "small counties protected" and "additional representation" for larger counties.

"Reapportionment can be done, it's not an impossible task," he said.

On schools—the state has to "grapple" with the problem. He said "We've got to move toward the Southern level at least." He called loss of accreditation by state schools and departments a "shame and a disgrace."

He said he "appreciates labor's backing."

Rep. George Hawkins of Etowah County will be the next candidate for governor interviewed on the program.

'Tell It All Or Tell It None'

WITH about seven weeks of the campaign left, it is time for the candidates to get specific on the issues. And one of the major issues is, or should be, the Folsom administration.

Nothing could convey to the people of Alabama more clearly what to expect of the next governor than to be told by each candidate how he rates the actions and inactions of J.

The truth is, of course, many of the candidates would prefer not to discuss the Folsom Administration. They don't want J's open support, but neither do they want J silently exerting himself against them, particularly with money raising.

Essentially, every candidate runs on a program for expanding, perpetuating, retaining or modifying the kind of state government that exists.

That government is now that of J. Do the candidates approve or disapprove of what has been done?

SO FAR, the Folsom Administration has been as little discussed by the candidates as though it existed in another state.

The Folsom gang is split in its choice of candidates. Nobody seems to know for whom J himself will vote.

His most persistent and determined counselor, Executive Secretary Ralph Hammond, is for Todd. O. H. Finney and Pitt Tyson Maner are for Faulkner. Jimmy Jones, the Selective Service director, supports George Hawkins. Larue Horn, revenue director, and Frank Boswell support George Wallace.

Naturally the Folsom gang is going to light somewhere and few indeed are the politicians in our history who have repudiated the support of any but the most unsavory politicians.

CALL the Folsom Administration good or bad, it is no matter. The candidates will find Alabama listening if they will reveal their own viewpoint towards the administration. Thus will we know whether to expect more of the same.

A sound place for each candidate to start would be to disclose whether he voted for or against J in 1956 when he ran against Charlie McKay for Deocratic national committeeman.

DO THE candidates approve or disapprove of the manner in which J and Bill Drinkard allowed lumbermen buddies to cut timber in state forest preserves?

Do they approve of J's averaging $9,500 a month at one point to pay the expenses of him and family in the Executive Mansion ?

Do they approve of the $12,000 motor boat purchased with tax money for the water sport of the Folsom family at their Guntersville Lake summer home; and flying 17 pals to Houston in a National Guard plane for a football game?

Was J acting with their approval in October, 1957, when he vetoed a brace of segregation bills, some reasonable and some idiocies?

The persons he has appointed in each county to register new voters? His policy on Negro voting?

His pledge to use the National Guard in Student Lucy-type situations?

PRESUMABLY a man qualified to discharge the duties of governor of Alabama has informed himself on whether there has been graft in the Folsom Administration? Has there or not?

J approves the Alabama loyalty oath for candidates, the one that binds them to support Adam Clayton Powell or Soapy Williams if nominated for the presidency. How do the candidates feel about that?

In two years, Alabama will send a delegation to nominate a Democratic candidate for President. Presumably the governor will head the delegation. J favors the left such as Truman and Williams. What would the candidates do?

Folsom's practice of using highway funds for ward heeling purposes?

NEVER mind going to jail to preserve segregation; arresting the FBI to preserve segregation; or every man a highway patrolmen to preserve segregation. Enough of that corn!

As David Bibb Graves had it, "Tell it all, or tell it none."

Give us your Folsom position. That will speak louder and more eloquently than anything else you can say.

Mayhall stand on segregation is 'for always'

JASPER, Ala., April 1—(AP)—Chairman Roy Mayhall of the State Democratic Executive Committee said today "I have always been for segregation, am for segregation today and will be for segregation tomorrow and every day."

Mayhall said he had made that statement in reply to a questionnaire sent to candidates for state office by the Alabama Assn. of Citizens Councils, a pro-segregation group.

The party chairman is a candidate for a new four-year term on the State Committee which will be elected in the May 6 Democratic primary and the June 3 runoff.

MAYHALL

Mayhall's telegram to newsmen announcing his stand didn't mention the party loyalty oath about which the Citizens Councils are questioning candidates.

But he has been a staunch supporter of the oath which binds candidates to support the party nominees in the general election. Some candidates for the State tial elector that year will have Committee have said they will to pledge their allegiance to the oppose readoption of the loyalty Democratic Party's presidential ticket before it is chosen.

Fifteen Seek Places On Mobile, Ala. Democratic Executive Committee

MOBILE, Ala. — (NNPA) — A total of 15 colored persons are seeking places on the Mobile County Executive Democratic committee.

In two heavily Negro-populated wards, Negroes face no white competition. Five places on the 84-seat county committee are assured Negroes. In three other wards they face white opponents.

Negro voting strength in Mobile county is estimated at over 8,000. Two Negroes, Alex Herman, nationally known fraternal leader and insurance executive, and Clarence Montgomery, barber, have completed a four-year term. They were the first of their race to be so chosen in the last 60 years.

In Alabama, the Democratic party is the only political party with any strength. Nomination by this group in the primary to be held early in May is equivalent to election.

An Editorial—

The News Endorses George Wallace

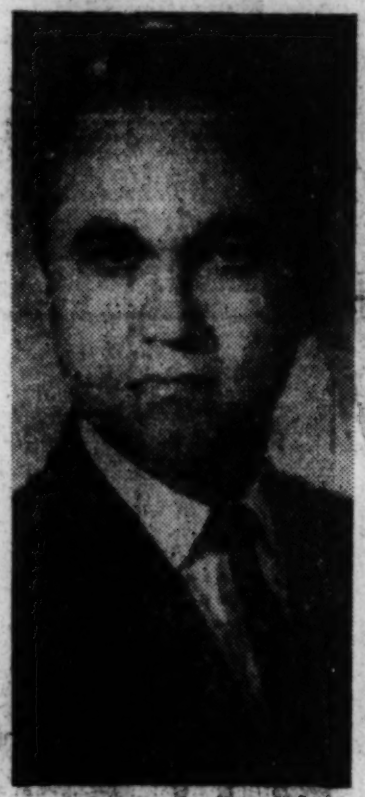
THE BIRMINGHAM NEWS favors George Wallace for the Democratic nomination for governor of Alabama in the second primary June 3.

Without seeking to disparage other candidates in a 14-man race, this newspaper supported Jimmy Faulkner in the first primary. Now that the choice is between two men—Attorney General John Patterson and Judge Wallace—we endorse Wallace.

JUDGE WALLACE is a man of exceptional ability and energy, having, we believe, an intense desire to serve the people well as the state's chief executive.

He has shown remarkable capacity to accomplish the things he sets out to do. In the Legislature, in party activities, as a circuit judge, as a state-wide campaigner, he has achieved impressive results. He is a man of strong individuality and convictions, long an outstanding figure in Alabama political affairs.

Though he will not be 39 until August 25 of this year, he has had wide experience in public activities. He knows the high importance of working constructively with others and this understanding and unusual qualifications for applying it effectively contribute much to his fine abilities to get things done.



GEORGE WALLACE

JUDGE WALLACE is well aware of the great problems facing the people of Alabama — in our economy, in education, in racial relations. He has definite ideas about how to deal with these problems. He is a man of action who can be counted on to work vigorously toward his goals.

He has demonstrated remarkable qualities of leadership.

He has a high, and yet realistic vision as to how this state and its people can go forward in all phases of our life.

In the making of his own career, he has given impressive evidences of both his purposes and his powers.

His nomination and election would, we believe, hold good promise for the people of Alabama.

Three Anti-Loyalists Are Leading In 4th District, Runoffs Are Slated For 10

Three States Righters were nominated as members of the State Democratic Executive Committee from the Fourth Congressional District, but 10 other candidates must run it off for the other five committee posts from the district.

These 10 include five States Righters and five Loyalists.

Among them are three Talladegans, Sam Venable, Sr., States Righter; Tom Cooley and Curtis C. Gauntt, Loyalists.

The other runoff candidates are Travis L. Arnold, Earl V. Atkinson and John W. Walker, Jr., Loyalists; M. Alston Keith, John W. Lapsley, R. H. Monk and Albert J. Winfield, States Righters.

Those elected in the first primary are Robert M. Alton, Jr., Walter S. Givhan and Jerre W. Reynolds.

States Rights candidates, who oppose the controversial party loyalty oath, won 29 seats on the State Democratic Executive Committee, and national party loyalists won 23 places in the May 6 voting.

The official returns of the May 6 voting were canvassed at Montgomery yesterday.

Two candidates will compete for each of the 20 remaining places on the 72 member committee.

All candidates seeking seven of the regular party regulars, guaranteeing the loyalists of winning at least that many more places. At least one more seat is certain for the states righters by the same token.

States Righters Leading Narrowly

20 Party Seats In Alabama To Be Decided In Runoffs

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 13. — (UP) — The official canvass of votes cast in last Tuesday's primary for candidates to the state Democratic Executive Committee showed Tuesday the states righters hold a narrow lead over the national party loyalists.

The canvass showed states righters won 29 seats to only 23 for the loyalists. This means 20 seats must be determined in the June 3 primary runoff.

In the governor's race, the official tally showed Atty. Gen. John Patterson in the lead with 196,859 votes, and Circuit Judge George Wallace, his opponent in the runoff, 162,435. Third man in the 14-man contest was Jimmy Faulkner of Bay Minnette, with 91,512.

Error In 4th Doesn't Change Primary Results

MONTGOMERY (AP) — An error was discovered in returns from Calhoun County but did not change the lead states righters hold in the fight for control of the Alabama Democratic Executive Committee today.

Officials said an aide entered incomplete returns from Calhoun County in the statewide tabulation instead of the official county vote.

However, a check of the revised returns showed that the three anti-party loyalty oath candidates were elected.

On Alabama Press Conference—

Wallace 'indicts' Patterson for not indicting chiselers

BY FRED TAYLOR
News staff writer

George Wallace, ripping into his opponent, John Patterson, invited him or anyone else to check authenticity of "new facts" charges Wallace has made and said he intends to make in what promises to become a sizzling runoff race for governor.

The Clayton judge, pooh-poohing reports he would bow out of the runoff fight with Patterson, who led by some 25,000 votes in the 14-man first primary, also made the attorney general anew for failing to seek indictments against "crooks and chiselers."

AND HE RAPPED Patterson again for failing to go to the aid of University of Alabama in the Arthurine Lucy case, which Wallace pointed out was the only integration case which has occurred in this state.

Judge Wallace said, "Mr. Patterson has made statements all over Alabama that 25 per cent of $365 million a year the state spends, or $91 million, has been going down the drain into pockets of crooks and chiselers.

"If he knows this," added Wallace, "He should have somebody behind bars. Mr. Patterson ought to go before the Montgomery County Grand Jury and indict the entire administration—every single person involved."

THE CLAYTON JUDGE added that "if Mr. Patterson will tell me who is getting the graft, I'll see that the Grand Jury gets the information."

Wallace said he had had several breaks with the Folsom administration, after he had supported Gov. James E. Folsom in 1954, asserting that Folsom had him "thrown out" of a national convention of Young Democrats in Oklahoma.

WALLACE SAID Folsom did not support him in the first primary and "is not supporting me in the runoff," adding that the Folsom-backed candidate failed to make the runoff.

Judge Wallace made these and other declarations on Sunday's WABT-WAPI "Alabama Press Conference," public information program sponsored by The Birmingham News and the two stations.

Atty. Gen. Patterson, who conferred with campaign leaders in Birmingham over the week-end, has not yet announced his speaking schedule for the runoff.

But intimations were that he probably would hit the campaign trial again Friday or Saturday.

PATTERSON HAS BEEN invited to appear on Alabama Press Conference next Sunday.

Wallace went to Mobile today to confer with campaign leaders there through tomorrow. His headquarters here said he would meet with supporters in Blount, Marshall, Jackson, Cherokee, Etowah and other counties the rest of the week.

Wallace said Patterson has not brought or attempted to bring a single indictment against "the crooks and chiselers he says are draining off 25 cents of each tax dollar."

"He (Patterson) seems to feel we ought to talk about the Folomites, but not put any of them in jail," added Wallace.

WALLACE, WHEN ASKED what he would do as governor if the state had another Authurine Lucy case, said:

"I would see that the state took prompt legal action. I would see that the attorney general intervened. If the attorney general refused to intervene, I would have the governor's legal adviser act."

Wallace, who has support of Citizens Councils, said he is not a member because a circuit judge is not eligible to join, but added that he approved their objections "because they are for segregation and I am for segregation."

WALLACE SAID "I do not have the support of the Ku Klux Klan," adding that "they're supporting John Patterson." He said the Klan supported Patterson in the first primary.

Wallace reemphasized that he would have no part in any smear campaign, in lashing out at those he said waged a "smear campaign against me."

HE BRANDED SILLY and asinine charges that he was a draft dodger, a pinko and Communist and tied in with Phenix City gangsters.

"I don't know any gangsters," said Wallace. "According to my opponent, all the gangsters have been cleaned out of Phenix City.

Wallace pointed out that he carried his home county of Barbour, getting 4900 votes to 600 for the combine opposition, with Patterson receiving 345.

But he pointed out that in Patterson's home county of Russell, which has Phenix City as county seat, Patterson got only 2700 votes to 3700 for the combined opposition, including 2800 votes Wallace received in that county.

Wallace added that Patterson says the gangsters are against him, saying "if that's so, then that makes 3700 gangsters."

THE CLAYTON judge said that so far as he knew the 3700 persons are good people. "And so far as I'm concerned, those who voted for Patterson are good people too."

Wallace said "I am not linked with any loan concerns in Alabama or out of Alabama," adding that "I don't own any stock in a loan company."

As to charges that he was a draft dodger, Wallace cited the fact that he served more than three years in the armed services, including flying combat missions over Japan.

And so far as addressing Mont Eagle School in Tennessee, he said his critics got mixed up on that. "I didn't address the Mont Eagle School. It was the Georgia Legislature that I addressed. And I was introduced by Georgia's Gov. Marvin Griffin, who said that if he could vote in Alabama he would vote for George Wallace for governor."

Questioning Wallace were Rex Thomas, chief of The Associated Press bureau at Montgomery, and this reporter, with WABT-WAPI News Editor Charlie Davis as moderator.

Two are named to high posts by Patterson

BY FRED TAYLOR
News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 15—Gov.-Elect John Patterson, rapidly shaping his cabinet for the incoming administration that will begin with his inauguration Jan. 19, Saturday announced two more selections for key state posts.

Joseph G. Robertson of Birmingham, one of Patterson's main assistants in the attorney general's office and who traveled with him constantly during and since the gubernatorial campaign, was named executive secretary to the governor. This had been anticipated, since Robertson already is serving as executive assistant to Patterson as attorney general.

TAYLOR

Ralph R. Williams, Tuscaloosa attorney and former newspaper man, who was a member of the University of Alabama law school faculty several years and who likewise was one of Patterson's most active campaigner, was appointed director of the State Industrial Relations Department.

Choice of Williams for this post also had been predicted for months.

In making these two additional appointments to bring to seven the number of cabinet selections made in recent days, the 37-year-old Patterson continued to show a decided preference for men approximately his age or even younger.

Robertson is 33 and Williams is 39.

Each will be paid $10,000 a year.

OF THE SEVEN cabinet officers announced for Patterson's regime, four are from North Alabama, one hails from Eastern Alabama, one comes from the western part of the state and one from South Alabama.

The governor-elect earlier named former State Conservation Director Earl McGowin, Chapman lumberman and veteran legislator, as director of the State Docks at Mobile; Opelika Police Chief Floyd H. Mann to head the State Department of Public Safety.

Guntersville Atty. Ralph Smith Jr., former county judge, to become his legal adviser; Col. Henry V. Graham, Birmingham real estate man and veteran National Guard officer, as adjutant general and head of the State Military Department, and former State Sen. Joe S. Foster Jr., Huntsville business man and American Legion leader, to direct the State Civil Defense Agency.

Phenix City cleanup

ROBERTSON, a veteran of World War II and the Korean War, is one of Patterson's closest friends and helped with the Phenix City cleanup after the slaying of the governor-elect's father, Albert L. Patterson.

A native of Birmingham, Robertson was graduated from Phillips High School. He attended Birmingham-Southern College and The Citadel and was graduated from University of Alabama in 1948 with a BA degree in economics and business administration.

Robertson entered the Army in 1943, served in the Army Air Corps for two years and was discharged in 1945 to enter the U. S. Military Academy. From there he went to University of Alabama.

In 1951, he was recalled to active duty in the U. S. Air Force and served with the Fifth Air Force in Korea. He was a first lieutenant when discharged and is now a captain in the Alabama Air National Guard. He was administrative assistant at Sumpter Smith Air National Guard Base in Birmingham from October, 1952, until January, 1955.

Business experience

ROBERTSON has had varied business experience, having been claim adjuster in Birmingham and Pensacola for division of General Motors, and a salesman for Drennen Motor Co. He is a member of Montgomery Lions Club and Alpha Tau Omega Fraternity.

A native of Birmingham, Robertson is a son of O. L. Robertson Sr. and the late Amy E. Robertson. He has one brother, O. L. Robertson Jr. A member of St. James Methodist Church at Montgomery, Robertson is married to the former Joyce Christine Barker, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. H. L. Barker of Carrollton, Ga. They have three children, Joyce Christine, 6; Joseph Barker, 2, and John Lawrence, five months.

Phenix City native

WILLIAMS, a practicing attorney, was a member of the University of Alabama law faculty from 1949 to 1953. He is a native of Phenix City where he attended public schools and was graduated in journalism and law from the University of Georgia.

Candidates vie for backing in June runoff

BY FRED TAYLOR
News staff writer

While maneuvering went on behind the scenes for support of candidates eliminated in the first primary, John Patterson and George Wallace were getting set today for campaign runoff slugging for governor in a second primary June 3.

Atty. Gen. Patterson held a lead of 30,962 votes over Judge Wallace, with unofficial returns from 3048 of the state's 3313 boxes in Tuesday's Democratic primary showing:

Patterson 175,404
Wallace 144,442

Both Wallace and Patterson and their campaign leaders were hopeful of lining up the support of Jimmy Faulkner of Bay Minette, who ran third; State Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd of Russellville, who placed fourth, and Laurie Battle of Birmingham, former Ninth District congressman, who ran fifth, along with the others in Tuesday's 14-man race.

IN A NIP-AND-TUCK race for Second District congressman, the veteran Rep. George Grant of Troy apparently had finally won renomination over State Rep. Wilbur Nolen of Montgomery. Unofficial returns showed Grant with a 1085-vote lead.

Rep. Albert Rains of Gadsden, another veteran congressman, won easy renomination Tuesday over R. H. Hardin, also of Gadsden.

Judge Wallace, after thanking those who supported him, declared he would "take the wraps off" in the runoff.

"June 3 will find us on top," added the Clayton judge. "I have not had the advantage of $10 million worth of free publicity, but I am going to wage the most aggressive fight for the governor's office that this state has ever seen.

"The time has come when we can deal with the issues involved, and that's exactly what I'm going to do."

PATTERSON, who left Birmingham for Montgomery late yesterday, issued a statement saying:

"I feel very gratified over the returns that have come in in the governor's race. I want to sincerely thank all the people of Alabama from all walks of life for their support in my race for governor.

"I also want to thank them for the confidence that they have expressed in me and my program of good government and law enforcement."

He added that "I wish to express my gratification to all of my workers and supporters for their splendid and untiring work."

OTHER TOTALS in the governor's race were:

Faulkner	82,886
Todd	53,136
Battle	37,111
George Hawkins	22,166
Jack Owen	19,454
Karl Harrison	11,288
Billy Walker	10,401
W. E. Dodd	4434
Shearen Elebash	1245
Ralph Price	806
Winston Gullatte	753

STATE SEN. Albert Boutwell of Jefferson held a wide lead over State Sen. E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa, runnerup in the race for lieutenant governor. Returns from 2771 boxes showed:

Boutwell	117,301
Skidmore	121,663
Engelhardt	89,973
Butler	35,805
Carter	31,138

RETURNS FROM the same number of boxes showed these results in other statewide races:

FAULKNER, Todd, Hawkins and Owen expressed gratitude for the support given them.

Faulkner said "I was disappointed in the results of the election, of course, but I appreciate the many wonderful friends who worked day and night for us. And I want to thank them from the bottom of my heart."

"I hope we will all join hands and work for the best interest of Alabama, added Faulkner.

Todd said "I want to express my sincere appreciation to the many people who worked and voted for me. And I want to congratulate Atty. Gen. Patterson and Judge George Wallace on their successful campaigns, and to commend them and the other candidates for governor for the treatment they accorded me."

"I'm extremely proud that I carried my home county of Franklin, which gave me more than 65 per cent of the vote—the largest majority given to any of the candidates for governor by his home county," added Todd.

"I feel that we made a very successful race and, if we had had a little more time, we certainly could have made the runoff.

"But there's always another day, and I look forward confidently to the future."

HAWKINS SAID "I want to thank my friends and supporters for their wonderful effort during this campaign. We have run a straight-forward race, one which I believe reflects credit on the loyal campaign workers who supported me."

"I congratulate the candidates selected by the people in this primary, and I thank the people of my home county of Etowah and throughout the state for their confidence in me," added Hawkins.

Owen said "I want to thank the many friends who have helped me. We did everything we knew to do that was honorable, and the will of the people just wasn't to elect me governor.

Owen, president of the Public Service Commission, added that "I have no apologies to make to anybody. We ran the best race we knew how to run."

MRS. ANNE L. CONWAY, Birmingham real estate woman, who ran a strong third in the six-candidate race for secretary of state, congratulated the two front-runners, State Rep. Pete Mathews of Clay and Mrs. Bettye Frink of Birmingham, and said:

"Many friends have expressed disappointment at my not being in the runoff. Due to a serious foot injury, which kept me in the hospital until March 13, I was not able to start my state campaign until April 14. I covered only a part of the state, being unable to go to Mobile and other South Alabama counties."

She added that "I wish to thank my friends, my family and my supporters for their vote and influence in my behalf. I am happy to have made such a good race in such a short time and am grateful for the amazing number of votes I received.

"It has been a wonderful experience for me. It has been possible to meet people I would never have met. I don't consider this a defeat, as I have gained so much that cannot be taken away from me. It has been a privilege."

Segregation Candidate To Oppose Demo

MONTGOMERY, May 9 (AP)—John Frederick Duggar III, an architect who lives at nearby Hope Hull, has qualified as a candidate for governor representing the Alabama Segregation party.

He filed his qualifying papers with the secretary of state so that his name will go on the ballot in the November general election opposing other candidates for that office.

Duggar will challenge the Democratic Party nominee for governor.

The Secretary of State's office said the Segregation Party officially qualified this year after an earlier try that was delayed because of a technicality.

Officials of the group, including Duggar, as chairman and John C. Edgerton of Montgomery, executive secretary, served notice [illegible] caucus of party [illegible] of the Democratic primary [illegible] the party motto, "Audemus [illegible] the party requires. "Audemus jura nostra defendere," appears under the emblem.

Albert Boutwell Wins Great Support

The response of the people of Alabama to the campaign of State Sen. Albert Boutwell, running for lieutenant governor, has been very impressive.

This, we believe, is because throughout Alabama rank and file voters realize that he is a quiet, dedicated man, one who has the interests of the state as a whole much in mind, although it happens he comes from one of the more populous counties.

Sen. Boutwell has had enormous experience in the state legislature. Such experience is invaluable, of course, to the man who, as lieutenant governor, would be the presiding officer of the upper house.

Further, the man who is the presiding officer must have a full knowledge of the various differences which mark our state representatives' interests. It would be naive to say that there are not such differences. What we need for effective government on the legislative level is a commonsensical approach to resolving any differences. The question which follows is obvious: Is Albert Boutwell the kind of tried and proved legislator who knows how to get along with his associates, and produce sound legislation beneficial to the whole state?

His total record is one of marked emphasis on statewide matters. We believe a vast majority of Alabamians will recognize this, and act accordingly when next they cast ballots, in the June 3 primary runoff.

Mr. Boutwell has shown, in the conduct of his campaign, an adherence to dignity. He is the kind of man who simply, even modestly, lays the issues out on the table to be seen by all. He stands, himself, openly to be watched and judged.

With Albert Boutwell as lieutenant governor, we would be assured a man who is devoted to our people's welfare, and clearly resolved, as a member of our state's government, to do all possible to improve the condition of all Alabamians.

Wallace Fires Patterson Blast

Charges Eyes Shut To 'Corruption'

BY JOAN SWIFT

If John Patterson knows about millions of dollars in graft going into "the pockets of crooks and chiselers" in Montgomery, he should have somebody behind bars," Judge George Wallace said yesterday.

The Barbour County judge who is in the run-off for governor with Atty. Gen. John Patterson, spoke on "Alabama Press Conference" over WAPI and WAPI-TV.

Patterson campaigned strongly on a clean-up-the-graft-in-Montgomery basis, and Wallace has indicated by his first two appearances since last Tuesday, that he is going to harp on the corruption issue.

Wallace said, according to Patterson's figures, more than $40 million has gone into the "pockets of crooks and chiselers" in the last three and a half years.

"Mr. Patterson ought to go before the Montgomery County Grand Jury and indict the entire administration, every single person involved," Wallace said.

"If Mr. Patterson will tell me (who is getting the graft) I'll see that the grand jury gets the information."

Wallace also said he has had "several breaks" with the Folsom administration.

He said he supported Gov. Folsom in 1954, (he was one of Folsom's campaign managers) but at a national meeting of the Young Democrats later the governor "was responsible" for having him "thrown out."

He said he hasn't seen Folsom since 1955 and that Folsom supported a candidate who lost in the primary.

He didn't name the candidate.

Wallace also claimed that Patterson has the support of the Ku Klux Klan.

First, Wallace said the Ku Klux Klan wasn't supporting anybody, but, when he was asked if he would "repudiate" the support of the Klan, he said it is supporting his opponent, Atty. Gen. John Patterson.

"You know that, Mr. Taylor you know that, Mr. Thomas," he told Interviewers Fred Taylor of The Birmingham News and Rex Thomas of the Associated Press.

Wallace said the Klan supported Patterson in the primary and is supporting him in the run-off.

Patterson has been invited to appear on the program next Sunday.

Wallace has been campaigning for the run-off vote since Friday, and he repeated the strong point of his Friday speech in answer to a question yesterday.

After the program, The Post-Herald asked Wallace to name the Klan units he said are working for Patterson, but he declined to do it.

"I'll stand on what I said on the program," he said.

Wallace emphasized his "no smear" pledge, and called the smear sheets that have come out against him "silly" and "assinine."

He mentioned some of the sheets as calling him a Communist, a draft dodger, and tied in with Phenix City gangsters.

Wallace said he doesn't know any gangsters, is a disabled veteran, and the Communist smear is "silly, the most assinine rumor I ever heard."

He said he isn't being supported by loan sharks and has no connection with any loan operators.

He explained that his often-quoted statement about throwing FBI agents in jail if they attempt to check the voting records in his judicial circuit really means he will refuse to allow the Civil Rights Commission access to the records and make agents go to court to get permission to see them.

The run-off election will be June 3.

Watson Is Given Flattering Vote By "Write-Ins"

Despite the fact that his name was not on the ballot due to omission of his name from the list of candidates furnished the printer, Henry N. Watson received the flattering vote total of 1,482 for circuit clerk in Tuesday's general election.

Absence of his name from the ballot was noted early in the day Tuesday and word was passed to the various boxes. Friends of the popular circuit clerk "wrote in" his name for a total only a few hundred short of the total vote for the

Despite a bloc vote in two Tuskegee boxes for the Republican candidate, Macon County swung a heavy majority behind Atty. Gen. John Patterson for governor in the general election Tuesday. Official figures for the voting released Wednesday night showed:

Patterson (D)	1,490
Longshore (R)	357
Jackson (I)	13

The heavy tide for the Democratic ticket swept a number of county boxes unanimously into the Patterson column. Aside from the bloc vote in the two Tuskegee boxes, the Republican and Independent candidates for governor received a total of only 63 votes over the county.

The heavy Republican vote came in Box 5 and Box 6 of Beat 1, where most of the Negro votes are cast in the county. Box 5 went 177 to 39 against Patterson while Box 6 was lost by a vote of 140 to 37.

The general election Tuesday sent into office only two new county office holders, Grady Rogers for the Alabama House of Representatives and W. W. Gowan as member of the Board of Education.

Returned to office for another term were Probate Judge William Varner, Circuit Clerk H. N. Watson, Sheriff Preston Hornsby, Board of Revenue members F. C. Thompson and C. A. Huddleston and Board of Education member Wiley D. Ogletree.

The election also sent to the State Senate L. K. (Snag) Andrws, of Union Springs, to succeed Sen. Sam Engelhardt. Macon and Bullock Counties share a state senator and alternate in providing a candidate.

AMENDMENTS ARE REJECTED IN COUNTY

Macon County voters soundly rejected all three proposed constitutional amendments submitted in a referendum Tuesday along with the general election. All three of the proposed amendments were of local application for three designated counties.

No. 1 was rejected 517-490; No. 2 by 890-178 and No. 3 by a vote of 652-365.

A Joint Statement

THIS PHOTOGRAPH of six robed Ku Klux Klansmen entering the State Capitol was taken on Nov. 27, 1956. Montgomery remembers the afternoon the Klansmen paraded up and down Dexter Avenue and had the night rally at the speedway.

The visit of the Klan on this occasion to the Capitol has no great significance and The Advertiser isn't trying to kid anybody into believing it does. The photo simply shows six oafs making a swaggering display of themselves. We reprint the photo simply to illustrate a point.

Let Alabama make it plain right now that it does not want a revival of the Klan with its violence and political domination.

Alabama could make this plain if—

George Wallace and John Patterson would make a joint statement that neither wishes a single Klan vote.

That would be an unusual procedure, but it would effectively jolt the Klan's ambitions to regain political control of Alabama.

ON AUG. 18, 1957, The Advertiser remarked:

At this time the Kluxers are unconfident and sheepish, made so by the force of public disesteem and contempt. The ready response of law enforcers will confine them to their grotesque burning of crosses in remote pine barrens out where the toads hop in the dewy sand and grass, and the carrion crows roost overhead.

It is not The Advertiser's belief that the Klan is yet an immediate dangerous threat. The brains have not yet moved in and taken over.

But Klansmen are less sheepish than they were. An example of this is the statement on Pg. 1 today of Mr. Edward G. Cothran, of Greensboro. He is telling the world that he's a Klansman and "proud" of it.

SEVERAL GENERATIONS of young people have grown up since the 1920s and they do not know what the Klan was and that at one time the Klan had half our politicians kissing the hems of their white robes.

It is well that these young people now understand what the Klan was and the importance of repudiating its reeking tradition of violence and hatred for many groups. To illuminate this, we will cite an excellent book, The Fighting South, published in 1943. Its author is John Temple Graves of the Birmingham Post-Herald. Graves is not disturbed by the political activity of the Klan in this race, but here is what he wrote in his book in 1943:

. . . The Ku Klux Klan which rode the South in the 1920s was a breaker of the laws, a betrayer of the rights of men, a vehicle of prejudice and lust . . . Wife beaters, fornicators, atheists, communists, Negroes who were uppity, labor leaders, Jews, Catholics—everyone who did not conform to what the Klansmen . . . thought to be the law of Southern living was a target for attention.

It was an even more hateful anarchy than existed elsewhere in that period, of course, and nearer to what Hitler was making in Germany. Respected citizens everywhere in the South joined the Klan in the 1920s. No one could aspire to political office without belonging, even if, like Hugo Black, his real opinions would have named him for persecution rather than membership.

Engelhardt Named Chief Of Highways

Former State Sen. Sam M. Engelhardt Jr. of Shorter, veteran legislator and noted segregation leader, was appointed Wednesday director of the State Highway Department in the new administration.

The long anticipated appointment was announced by Gov.-elect John Patterson.

The 46-year-old Engelhardt has been closely associated with Patterson since the latter's nomination for governor June 3, and had actively supported Patterson in his runoff campaign.

Engelhardt, the 13th member of the cabinet to be appointed, will be paid $15,000 a year as head of the big department. It is the highest paid cabinet post, second only to the governor's salary of $25,000 a year.

NEW APPROACH

The appointment of the prominent merchant-farmer-ginner represents a new approach in Alabama's road building program. In the past the director of the Highway Department has in most cases been an experienced highway engineer, usually a career employe of that agency.

Engelhardt has had no experience in highway or bridge construction. However, sources close to Gov.-elect Patterson have indicated the incoming chief executive preferred an experienced businessman in this post rather than a highway engineer.

Engelhardt was born in Montgomery in March, 1912, but has spent most of his life at Shorter where he received his early education. He was graduated from Washington and Lee University Lexington, Va., in 1934.

As a member of the House of Representatives during the Persons Administration, Engelhardt first became known as an outspoken segregationist.

Following the U.S. Supreme Court's school desegregation decision in 1954, Engelhardt became increasingly active in seeking ways and means to preserve segregation.

As a member of the State Senate, Engelhardt sponsored the School Placement Law, Macon County Aboliton amendment Tuskegee gerrymandering bill and numerous other pro-segregation proposals.

He was the first executive secretary of the Alabama Assn. of Citizens' Councils, resigning this job in January, 1958, to make an unsuccessful race for lieutenant governor.

Engelhardt is married to the former Miss Sara Miller Bonner of Camden, she being a daughter of former State Sen. Miller Bonner and a niece of former Gov. B. M. Miller. They are the parents of two sons and two daughters.

Engelhardt is a member of the Farm Bureau, Citizens' Council and is a Baptist.

Engelhardt's appointment left but six unfilled cabinet posts — Finance Director, Pensions and Security Commissioner, press secretary, director of selective service, Planning Board and Industrial Development director and director of the Department of Publicity and Information.

WALLACE OPENS UP NORTH ALABAMA HANDSHAKING TOUR

As did Black, judge says—

Patterson rolls with Klan's wave—Wallace

BY FRED TAYLOR, News staff writer

More fireworks crackled in the gubernatorial runoff today, with George Wallace charging John Patterson is "rolling with the new wave of the Ku Klux Klan and its terrible tradition of lawlessness."

"The last time the Ku Klux Klan elected a politician in Alabama, his name was Hugo L. Black," declared Judge Wallace, as he campaigned at Huntsville, Athens and other heavy-voting North Alabama areas. "The Klan's new candidate is John Patterson."

Atty. Gen. Patterson, who flew back to Montgomery last night from California, where he was quoted as disclaiming any connection with the Klan or any knowledge of Grand Dragon Robert Shelton of Tuscaloosa, was on a handshaking tour of Wetumpka and other Elmore County areas today.

PATTERSON SAID, "This is amazing. I am not a member of the Ku Klux Klan. I have never been a member. I don't know anyone named Shelton."

Judge Wallace's campaign gained new support, with the Rev. Billy Walker, Baptist minister and first primary candidate for governor, swinging his support to the Clayton jurist.

In endorsing Wallace, the St. Clair County pastor charged that Atty. Gen. Patterson had waited too long to accuse anyone of wasteful spending.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL, who ran ahead of Wallace in the first primary, renewed his charges of waste in the state government, saying that his lead in the May 6 election showed "the people are weary of political favoritism and the chiseling system."

Walker announced he would speak for Judge Wallace at meeting of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers tonight at Sheffield.

The Baptist minister said during his campaign for governor he received information that $90 million a year in state funds is being wasted. Patterson made a similar charge.

"And yet," declared Walker "Mr. Patterson, as our state's highest legal officer, did not reveal this truth until his campaign for governor needed the fuel on the fire."

The Pell City clergyman said the attorney general has been in office three and one-half years but took no criminal action to accuse anyone of stealing the state's money.

PATTERSON, as attorney general, has filed civil suits challenging some purchasing policies of Gov. James E. Folsom's administration.

Walker declared, "We need a new governor, and he must not be promoted from the ranks of the present administration."

Judge Wallace, who met with a courtroom jammed with supporters at Gadsden last night, asserted Patterson "has been secretly wrapped in a bed sheet with the grand dragon of the Klan."

Wallace referred to Black, now a U. S. Supreme Court justice, having been elected to the U. S. Senate from Alabama with Klan backing in 1926. Black admitted he had once been a member of the Klan.

"If the Klan should now succeed in electing Patterson governor," added Judge Wallace, "that triumph may well lead to the revival of the Klan as the controlling political force in Alabama. The Klan seeks to reclaim the political domination of our state it had when it elected Hugo L. Black."

PATTERSON SAID, "There will be no deals and no steals in my administration," as he pressed his bid for votes in the June 3 runoff.

"The Patterson administration will be dedicated to doing the job the people want done with honesty and efficiency," he added. "I shall make frequent reports to the people, on whom I am counting to stand by my side and help me get the job done."

Patterson said if any law violations should crop up during his administration, he would "cooperate to the hilt with Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion (Democratic nominee for this post) to make certain that the law is strictly upheld."

"I have had little cooperation from the present administration in the continuing fight my department has made to stop up loopholes and evasions and halt the wanton waste of the taxpayers' money," he said. "An aroused public opinion can always lick the politicians. Clearly, the people are with us and we shall complete the job on June 3."

Albert Rosenthal, Birmingham attorney, emphasized today he had never taken any part in a campaign in behalf of John Crommelin in the latter's three races for U. S. Senate or for governor.

Charlie Meriwether, state campaign manager for Patterson, who said he had helped run Crommelin's campaign as an independent candidate against Sen. Lister Hill in 1950, had referred also to helping Rosenthal direct the 1954 campaign for Albert L. Patterson, father of John Patterson, for attorney general.

JUDGE WALLACE ripped into Patterson on the Klan issue after Klan Leader Shelton paid a visit to Patterson's state headquarters in the Molton Hotel and chatted with Maurice Patterson brother of the attorney general.

Shelton is grand dragon of U. S. Klans of Georgia, Alabama division. The Associated Press quoted from a letter, signed by "John Patterson" and soliciting votes for him, which stated: "A mutual friend of ours (Shelton) has suggested that I write you."

The Clayton judge said "Patterson chatters about the gangster ghosts of Phenix City, while he himself is rolling with the new wave of the Klan and its terrible tradition of lawlessness. Look in that bed sheet and find the triplets—Patterson, the Klan and Boss Crump."

W. E. DODD, millwright and dairyman of Genery's Gap, who ran 10th for governor in the first primary, came out in support of Patterson in the runoff and expressed appreciation for the vote he received May 6.

"I believe John Patterson can do the job better by not being encumbered by too many mules, big and litte, so let us all give him a helping hand."

PATTERSON ADDED that "the people are weary of political favoritism and the chiseling system, as shown by the fine endorsement they gave to my program of honesty and decency in government in the first primary."

"The taxpayers of our state are thoroughly fed up with political spendthrifts and nest-feathering 'palace guardsmen.' There will be none during the Patterson administration."

He said that huge sums would be saved to pay adequate old-age pensions, better salaries for teachers and for improved public health and other essential state services.

Patterson predicted that he would double his first primary vote in the runoff in a majority of counties. He led in 47 counties.

Patterson headquarters said a straw poll of the Childersburg Merchants Assn. showed "nine out of every 10 present picked John Patterson to be the next governor."

JUDGE WALLACE'S runoff campaign got more boosts from Ed Mauldin of Leighton and Dr. L. H. Clemmons of Cullman, two of A. W. Todd's leaders in the first primary, and from a Railroad Brotherhood local in Mobile.

Todd, state agriculture commissioner, ran fourth in the first primary for governor.

The Mobile Railroad Brotherhood, in announcing its support of Wallace, repudiated the endorsement of Patterson by the Alabama Joint Legislative Council of Railroad Brotherhoods. The council represents 21 brotherhoods.

THE PRESIDENT of Mobile Lodge No. 557, brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, said the council's endorsement of Patterson was "emphatically repudiated" by the Mobile group. The lodge has more than 600 members, he said.

Judge Wallace also got the endorsement of The Crimson White, University of Alabama student publication, stating editorially that records of both candidates had been studied and:

"Our decision is that we like George C. Wallace. We feel confident we have chosen the person most qualified to serve Alabama as its next governor."

CANDIDATE FOR LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR DEMOCRAT

Negro Will Run In Democratic Primary For Lieut. Governor

Another Has Qualified To Run For Legislature In Jefferson

BIRMINGHAM (AP)— Perry (Tiger) Thompson, a Bessemer Negro, pans to qualify today to run for lieutenant governor of Alabama in the Democratic primary.

He wuold be the first member of his race to run for the office in more than 30 years and probably the first since Reconstruction Days.

Thompson, an announcer for a Bessemer radio station, is 48 and a former middleweight prize fighter.

"I'm going to win this race. I can lay my hands on almost 100,000 votes now."

He said the racial issue "... is really no issue at all" and added "I'm much more interested in the state's economy and better schools."

In addition to his radio work, Thompson is head of a public relations firm. He is married and the father of four children. He said he is a 1935 graduate of Xavier University at New Orleans.

Another Negro, Arthur B. Tiddle, 49, qualified yesterday for the May 6 Democratic primary as a candidate to the state Legislature from Jefferson County. Tiddle is a motion picture projector operator.

DEMOCRATIC PARTY MEMBER

Negro Seeks Office To Bring 'Closer Relations Of Races

BIRMINGHAM, March 3 (AP)—A Negro candidate for lieutenant governor of Alabama today said he is running for the office "because I believe I can bring both races closer together."

Perry L. (Tiger) Thompson, a radio announcer, entered the race for the Democratic nomination shortly before the qualifying deadline last week. He is the first Negro to seek statewide office in Alabama in 56 years.

Thompson's entry in the May 6 party primary was challenged by Atty. Frank J. Mizell Jr. of Montgomery, a member of the state Democratic Executive Committee. Mizell said Thompson should be questioned to see if he supports the principles of the state party.

The state committee recently adopted a resolution calling for continuation and enforcement of al laws relating to racial segregation. The party primary ballot also carries as a slogan, "White Supremacy."

Thompson said in answer to questions:

"I want to make it plain that I'm a member of the Democratic Party and it is Southern gentlemen like Mr. Mizell who confuse people and create fear.

"I'm running for the office of lieutenant governor, not because I'm a Negro, but because I believe I can bring both races closer together. If we take segregation and integration problems in this state and add a little common sense they can be worked out to satisfy everybody.

"You know the Southern politician used the anti-lynch law to get into office for 40 years and God and the people changed that. Now they are using integration and segregation to continue that type of campaigning.

"People from both races all over the state of Alabama are sending wires and letters pledging their support. I'm going to win this race because I have the help of all God-fearing people on my side.

"Now we should be thinking more about the welfare and the people of Alabama. I want to quote from history, 'While Nero played the fiddle, Rome burned.'

"While the politicians go around Alabama hollering 'Nigger,' the welfare of Alabama is burning down."

Southern congressmen for years have successfully fought efforts to enact federal anti-lynching legislation.

The Governor Save One

THE CANDIDATES for lieutenant governor make it a more fascinating race in some respects than that for governor.

The lieutenant governor has two chief duties: presiding over the sessions of the Alabama Senate and appointing its committees and (2) discreetly but keenly keeping an eye on the health of the governor and the amount of his air travel.

Candidates for lieutenant governor are:

"Tiger" Thompson, Bessemer Negro, graduate of Xavier University, former pugilist and now radio announcer. Whence and why came Thompson into the race is not yet known. The chances are that his candidacy is displeasing to Dr. King and other Negro leaders. The box returns in the case of Thompson will be interesting for the light they throw on whether he gets the vote of his people, a large part or little of the vote. The King leadership might campaign against Thompson to avert an example of Negro bloc voting.

A third one is State Senator Sam Engelhardt of Macon County, who begins his White Citizen Council speeches, "Hello, white folks."

Yet another is State Senator E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa, who is more identified with the education fund filibuster and marriage to organized labor than with any viewpoint on race relations.

Finally, there is State Senator Albert Boutwell of Jefferson, one of the hardest working, most seasoned and versatile of our legislators. He is genial and never says anything crude or showy about race relations, but is nevertheless the chief sponsor of the most effective legislation Alabama has enacted to sidestep the Supreme Court school ruling.

There is no reason for hasty prophecies about the course of this race. One only is ventured. If there is a runoff and "Tiger" Thompson is eliminated, the two candidates running it off will not engage in the usual cajolery and maneuver to win the endorsement of the eliminated.

Perry Thompson—

Negro candidate announces stand

Perry L. Thompson, Negro candidate for lieutenant governor, said today that "segregation is being used as a political football" in Alabama.

In announcing his platform, which he said included "the 10 Commandments of the Holy Bible," Thompson said, "I will promote better race relations between all mankind in the great state of Alabama."

Thompson, who is a Bessemer radio announcer and former prizefighter, is the second member of his race to run for lieutenant governor in Alabama since 1902. A Negro ran that year and received one vote, which was cast in his home county.

The Bessemer Negro, who is 48, declared himself against the right-to-work law and said, "I am for equal aid to all accredited schools in the state."

Thompson urged that the aged needy be "properly cared for" and said, "I am for raising the Alabama compensation law and unemployment benefits to $40 per week."

Negro Disc Jockey Qualifies For Lieutenant Governor Race

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Feb. 28 (AP)—Perry L. (Tiger) Thompson, a Negro from Bessemer, qualified today for lieutenant governor of Alabama in the May 6 Democratic primary.

He is the first member of his race to qualify for a statewide office in many years.

Judge Roy Mayhall of Jasper, state Democratic Executive Committee chairman, said Thompson submitted papers and posted the $100 qualifying fee during the day.

Thompson, 48, is an announcer for a Bessemer radio station and owner of a public relations firm. This is his first race for political office.

The former middleweight prizefighter said he would work for greater economy in state government and "promote better race relations."

He said he favors the right to work law, an increase in unemployment benefits and equal aid to all accredited schools.

Thompson said the nickname, Tiger, came from his association with boxing. He said he fought in more than 200 amateur and professional bouts from 1937-46.

He is married and the father of four children. He said he is a 1935 graduate of Xavier University at New Orleans.

Peter A. Brannon, director of the state Department of Archieves and History, said Thompson may be the first Negro to seek a statewide office in Alabama since 1902.

Brannon said Ad Wimbs, a Negro from Hale County, ran for governor in 1902. Wimbs polled one vote, presumably his own since it was cast in Hale County.

running for lieutenant governor may play an increasingly important part in the fight over Alabama's bitterly contested Democratic Party loyalty oath.

Perry (Tiger) Thompson's role in the coming Democratic primary has already become the focal point for renewed charges that the loyalty pledge works as a gag rule against some white Democrats.

Thompson, a Bessemer radio announcer and public relations man, is one of six candidates seeking the nomination for lieutenant governor in the May 6 primary—and the June 3 runoff if no one gets a majority on the first ballot.

The controversial loyalty oath has developed into the major issue in the campaign for the 72 places on the State Democratic Executive Committee to be filled in the primaries. The committee runs party affairs in the state.

DEMOCRATS loyal to the national party have been in control since 1950 and each two years since then have pushed through a pledge of allegiance which binds candidates to support the party.

If they win again this year, presumably the loyalty oath will be readopted for the 1960 presidential election. It would compel candidates running in the primary to pledge their support to the party's national ticket.

The oath also disqualifies prospective candidates who voted Republican in the 1956 election as well as those who refrained from voting for anyone for presidential elector.

Because of that, the so-called States' Rights faction argues that many white Democrats are ineligible to run for office this year even though a Negro candidate has been accepted under the party rules.

FRANK MIZELL JR., a Montgomery attorney seeking another term on the state committee, has challenged party Chairman Roy Mayhall of Jasper to disqualify Thompson. Mizell has persistently opposed the loyalty oath within the committee, although he had to sign it to run this year.

The Montgomery committeeman says Mayhall has the authority to challenge Thompson's qualifications under a resolution adopted by the state committee reaffirming its belief in segregation as a party policy.

Replying, the party chairman offered to hold hearings if Mizell or any other committee member offered "legal evidence" to question Thompson's right to run in the primary.

Mizell left no doubt that he and others in the anti-loyalty oath faction hope to use Thompson's candidacy to win support in the election.

"THIS IS AN ISSUE people can understand," the attorney explained. "The people have been misled before by labels such as loyalist. Now the real effects are coming to light."

Mizell said he is particularly concerned about voters who "couldn't stomach the racial policies of either major party" in 1956 and refused to vote either for Democratic or Republican presidential electors. Under the loyalty oath, they are disqualified as candidates the same as if they had voted Republican.

The loyalty pledge is an outgrowth of the famed party revolt in 1948 when Alabama's presidential electors, all Democrats refused to vote for Harry Truman, the Democratic nominee, because of his racial program. They gave their support instead to the States' Right ticket.

Alabama Politics Buzzing With Record 755 Candidates

14 Seeking Governorship While 6 Run for Lieutenant Governor

By FRED TAYLOR
Staff Writer, The Birmingham News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 8—Alabama political campaigns, which get hotter and more hectic year by year, have a record 755 candidates entered for state public and party offices to slug it out in the May 6 and June 3 Democratic primaries.

Both the race for governor, with 14 qualifiers, and that for lieutenant governor, with six running, fell one candidate short of tieing the record for entrants in these tussles in former years.

There also were 313 candidates seeking Democratic nomination to 106 House seats in the legislature, with 81 fighting for 35 state Senate posts. And there were many other aspirants for state and county offices.

Campaigning already was becoming rough and noisy, with the entrance of a Negro in the lieutenant governor's race bringing on sharp exchanges between Judge Roy Mayhall of Jasper, chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee, and Frank Mizell Jr., Montgomery lawyer and committee member.

Mizell, who opposes Alabama's Democratic loyalty oath for candidates (which Judge Mayhall favors), called on the committee chairman to disqualify Bessemer Negro Perry L. (Tiger) Thompson unless he agrees to support party "racial segregation principles."

The Democratic Party in Alabama prints the words "white supremacy" over the crowing rooster emblem at the top of primary election ballot forms. And the state committee, in readopting the party loyalty oath for candidates by a 56 to 2 vote recently, also went on record again strongly for maintaining segregation.

Second Negro

Thompson, 48-year-old Bessemer radio announcer and former prize fighter, will become the second member of his race to run for lieutenant governor, if he is permitted to qualify, in this state since 1902. The Negro aspirant that year received only one vote.

Thompson said, "Segregation is being used as a political football in Alabama," adding, "It is Southern gentlemen like Mr. Mizell who confuse the people and create fear."

Another Negro, Arthur B. Tiddle, Birmingham motion picture machine operator, has filed as candidate for a seat in the legislature from populous Jefferson County. He became the second Negro to do this since the War Between the States. The first was Arthur Shores, Birmingham Negro attorney, who ran for one of Jefferson's seven seats in the House of Representatives four years ago and polled 4,000 votes less than one half the total Negro vote in the county) of more than 73,000 votes cast in that election.

Chairman Mayhall said he would call public committee hearings to decide whether the Negroes would be permitted to qualify "if any legal objection is made to the two Negroes who have filed to become candidates."

Mizell shot back that such a hearing would be "unnecessary and expensive," adding that under state laws and committee rules Judge Mayhall is empowered to reject Thompson's candidacy.

The state chairman then pointed out that four years ago five Negro candidates were entered without protest in Democratic primaries in Jefferson, Montgomery and Mobile, with two being elected to county Democratic committee posts in predominantly Negro precincts in Mobile County.

While the controversy raged over the Negro aspirants, a total of 175 candidates qualified for the 72 places on the state party governing body in another bitter fight over retention or repeal of the loyalty oath for candidates. Slates of opposing candidates were lined up in all nine congressional districts, with eight committeemen to be elected from each.

The loyalty pledge readopted by the Democrats bars as candidates in the May 6 and June 3 primary elections those who supported the Eisenhower-Nixon ticket in 1956.

ALABAMA

Patterson Takes Lead For Alabama Governor

Knowland-Brown Race In California May Be 1960 Indicator; Montana, South Dakota Vote

By The Associated Press

Attorney General John Patterson, son of a slain crusader against vice, piled up a steadily increasing lead for the Democratic nomination for Alabama Governor last night.

States' rights Democrats led in six of the nine contested seats on the Alabama state Democratic Executive Committee with the fate of the bitterly disputed party-loyalty oath at stake.

The states' righters needed only four of the nine committee places to gain control of party machinery and the majority necessary to throw out the oath that in the past two presidential elections bound Alabama to the national Democratic Party.

Patterson, making his first state-wide race for public office, ran ahead of Circuit Judge George Wallace in the Democratic runoff primary.

Returns from 1,932 of the 3,154 boxes gave Patterson 180,842 votes and Wallace 146,214.

34 House Seats at Stake

In another of yesterday's primaries, Republican United States Senator William F. Knowland and Democratic State Attorney General Edmund G. "Pat" Brown strove for governorship nomination in California.

The West Coast contest involved potential indicators for the 1960 presidential race.

Two other primaries were held yesterday—in South Dakota and Montana.

In all, candidates were chosen yesterday for three governor, two U. S. Senate, and 34 U. S. House seats.

California Foes Cross-Filed

An estimated 4,000,000 Californians seemed certain to give each contestant in the Knowland-Brown scrap his own party's nomination. But each also was seeking his opponent's party nomination under the state's unique cross-filing system.

It was unlikely that either would take both major party nominations, as Knowland did as a Senate candidate in 1952. But whoever comes out on top in the total vote would undoubtedly be tabbed by politicians as the favorite to win in November.

Some California polls did not close till 8 p.m. (10 p.m. Louisville time).

Nixon Backs Knowland

Vice-President Nixon had given Knowland strong backing. Brown had accused Knowland, minority leader of the Senate, of seeking the governorship as a springboard for the White House.

The Democrats had a 7-to-5 edge in voter registration. Democratic leaders forecast that Brown would top Knowland's total vote by 500,000.

Knowland was the only Republican on the gubernatorial ticket. Brown had only token opposition on the Democratic side.

California voters also settled a contest for the U. S. Senate Republican nomination. Retiring Governor Goodwin J. Knight was favored to win over Mayor George Christopher of San Francisco. Representative Clair Engle was the lone Democratic candidate in the senate race, but he and Knight cross-filed.

N.A.A.C.P. Brought In

Patterson admitted acquaintance with the Klan grand dragon in Alabama, Robert Shelton of Tuscaloosa, but insisted he didn't know Shelton was a K.K.K. leader.

Wallace charged that his opponent welcomed support of the Klan. The Montgomery Advertiser reproduced a letter bearing Patterson's name and describing Shelton as a "mutual friend." Another newspaper, the weekly Greensboro Watchman, said the attorney general had several political conferences with the grand dragon.

Patterson, who became attorney general after his anti-vice-crusading father, Albert L. Patterson, was slain at Phenix City, accused gangsters and racketeers of campaigning against him for governor.

The attorney general also charged that the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People poured money into the campaign in hope of defeating him.

Montana Campaign Quiet

Montana voters—a record 289,851 were eligible—had little to stir them as they picked candidates for one Senate and two House seats. All Democratic incumbents, Senator Mike Mansfield and Representatives Lee Metcalf and [illegible] Anderson, were due to win renominations, Anderson without opposition.

Fighting for the G.O.P. nomination to oppose Mansfield were Mrs. Blanche Anderson, Helena widow, and Lou Welch, 31-year-old steel-plant worker.

South Dakota's primary featured a three-way race for the G.O.P. nomination for governor. Chief contenders were Lt. Governor Roy Houck and Attorney General Phil Saunders. Saunders took an early lead. State Representative Charles Lacey was the third candidate.

Ralph Herseth, a farmer, was unopposed for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination. Republican Governor Joe Foss was unopposed for a House nomination.

SLAP AT EISENHOWER

Patterson Says Alabama Repudiated Race Policy

By BOB INGRAM

Governor-elect John Patterson said Wednesday his landslide victory in the general election was a repudiation of the Eisenhower Administration's racial policies by Alabama voters.

Patterson had been a heavy favorite to win in this Democratic state, but the margin of his triumph was a crushing blow to the Republican Party in Alabama which in recent years had shown some signs of strength.

With returns from Tuesday's election still incomplete, Republican gubernatorial nominee William L. Longshore Jr. found himself hardpressed to corral a measly 12 per cent of the total vote.

Returns from 2,232 of the state's 3,062 boxes gave Patterson 188,029 votes. Longshore was far back with 26,888 while Marvin Jackson, running as an independent, had received 1,275.

This was a far cry from the governor's race four years ago when GOP nominee Tom Abernethy received 26.6 per cent of the total vote and set the Republicans to talking of a two-party system in Alabama. The voters put a stop to that talk Tuesday.

The rout of the Republicans would have been worse had it not been for the Negro vote.

The GOP slate polled nearly a third of the vote in Macon County, a county not known to be a Republican stronghold. A Macon official said most of the Republican votes came from the vicinity of Tuskegee Institute, a Negro college.

The same pattern was evidenced in Birmingham, both predominantly Negro. In Mobile the four boxes won by the Republicans have a mapority of Negro voters.

The Republicans failed to carry a box in Montgomery County, but the boxes where they made the most respectable showings were where Negro voting was heaviest.

State Sen. Sam Engelhardt of Macon, segregation leader, interpreted the Negro bloc vote for the GOP as being an endorsement of President Eisenhower's racial policies and a protest against Democratic nominee Patterson and his strong stand in support of segregation.

While the Democrats margin of victory was enormous, the winning party could get little consolation from the turnout. There had been predictions of a record vote in protest to Eisenhower, but this failed to materialize.

Lawyer, police chief named—

First cabinet choices made by Patterson

BY FRED H. TAYLOR, News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 8—Gov.-Elect John Patterson Saturday formally announced selection of Guntersville Atty. Ralph Smith Jr. for his legal adviser and Opelika Police Chief Floyd Hutton Mann to head the State Public Safety Department in the incoming administration.

These were the first cabinet choices announced by Patterson since his election Tuesday and were expected to be followed by a series of other appointments to key administrative posts in the next few days.

He earlier had named former State Conservation Director Earl McGowin, Chapman lumberman and five times a member of the Legislature, as the incoming director of the State Docks at Mobile. McGowin was conservation director during the administration of former Gov. Gordon Persons.

In announcing the selection of a public safety director and legal adviser, Gov.-Elect Patterson said:

"I have the utmost confidence in Ralph Smith and Floyd Mann. These two men will make outstanding public servants, and the people of Alabama are indeed fortunate in having these two men to serve them. I am looking forward to four years of pleasant association with them."

Reports had persisted for weeks that the 33-year-old Smith, widely known attorney and former county judge at Guntersville, and the 38-year-old Mann, likewise well-known veteran law enforcement officer, would be named to these places.

Each job pays $10,000 a year.

Prestwood talked

INDICATIONS were growing that Patterson would choose Asst. Atty. Gen. Alvin T. Prestwood of Montgomery (formerly of Andalusia) to head one of the state's most important governmental divisions—that of the Department of Pensions and Security.

This is the old State Welfare Department. And the director of this department will have a vital role in helping Patterson provide aid for the aged needy in a program in which he pledged to pay $75-a-month old-age pensions.

And there appeared to be little doubt that the new governor, who will be inaugurated Jan. 19, would appoint Tuscaloosa's Harry H. Haden, University of Alabama faculty member and tax authority, as director of the highly important State Department of Revenue.

Hayden has taught a number of attorneys who will be members of the incoming Legislature.

Managed campaign

SMITH, who has practiced law at Guntersville since 1950 and who was judge of the county court there from 1951 to 1953, was Patterson's campaign manager in Marshall County.

He has been a close friend of the incoming governor since their student days at University of Alabama.

In recent weeks, Smith has been a special assistant attorney general in charge of investigation of contracts made by the outgoing administration.

He will succeed former State Rep. E. C. Boswell of Geneva as legal adviser to the governor.

Smith attended Albertville High School, where he played football, and Snead College at Boaz, Tulane University and University of Alabama, where he was a member of Alpha Tau Omega Fraternity.

The new legal adviser to the governor served three and one-half years in the Navy during World War II, most of the time in the Pacific area. He entered service as an apprentice seaman and was honorably discharged as a quartermaster second class.

Smith is married to the former Barbara Rains of Fort Payne and they have two daughters, Rachel, 7, and Rebecca, 5. He is a lay reader in the Episcopal Church, of which his wife also is a member.

Special training

MANN, who has been police chief of Opelika since 1950 and who has undergone special training four times at the FBI National Academy, is a native of Tallapoosa County, where the incoming governor also was born.

He will succeed Bill Lyerly as the state's public safety director. As such, his duties will include supervision of the Highway Patrol, drivers' license division and the criminal investigation branch of the State Department of Public Safety.

Mann began his law enforcement career as an officer at the Republic Steel Corp. plant at Gadsden. He became a patrolman at Alexander City after his honorable discharge from the Air Force at the end of World War II.

Having served 39 months, Mann flew 27 missions in the ETO with the Eighth Air Force as a tail gunner on a B17 heavy bomber. He was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross, four Air Medals, three Presidential Citations and two Battle Stars and was a technical sergeant when discharged in 1945.

Active in church, civic, fraternal and veterans' organizations, Mann is a member of Opelika First Baptist Church, serving presently as superintendent of the young people's department.

He is a Mason and Shriner, being on the board of directors of the East Alabama Shrine Club, and also is a member of the Knights of Pythias. He is a director of Opelika Lions Club, member of the American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars, district vice president of the Alabama Sheriffs and Peace Officers Assn., and past president of Alabama Chapter, FBI National Academy Associates.

Mann is married to the former Grace L. Dodd of Fort Worth, and they have five children, Paul, 12; Lane, 9; Deanna, 7; Kay, 4, and Patsy Ann, 2.

Other cabinet posts

IT HAS LONG been considered a certainty that Charles M. Meriwether, public relations director of a Birmingham drug concern and Patterson's state campaign manager, would become state finance director in the new administration. The holder of this post is usually looked upon as assistant governor.

And it is equally certain that Joseph G. Robertson, one of Patterson's main assistants in the attorney general's office, will become his executive secretary in the governor's office.

And Patterson has all but announced the selection of Col. Henry V. Graham of Birmingham, veteran National Guard officer, as the new adjutant general, and former State Sen. Joe Foster of Huntsville as the next state civilian defense director.

Recently at Huntsville, Patterson told a Democratic Party rally that Foster "will have a very prominent part in my administration."

Gov.-Elect Patterson soon is expected formally to announce the appointment of Meriwether, Robertson, Graham and Foster to these posts, as well as to make the following other selections:

Job for Engelhardt

FORMER STATE SEN. Sam Engelhardt Jr. of Macon, veteran member of both House and Senate and former employe in the State Highway Department, as state highway director.

John C. Curry, Montgomery banker and former state revenue commissioner under former Gov. Frank Dixon, as director of the State Department of Commerce and superintendent of banks.

Asst. Atty. Gen. Ted Rinehart, formerly of New York, who served in the Army with Patterson, as director of the State Planning and Industrial Development Board.

Ralph R. Williams, Tuscaloosa attorney and former newspaper man, as director of the State Department of Industrial Relations.

Robert L. Jones, executive of a Montgomery insurance company and formerly of Phenix City (he is a longtime close friend of the Patterson family), as state insurance superintendent.

Claude D. Kelly of Atmore, long active in work in behalf of game and timber conservation, as director of the State Department of Conservation.

Edward J. Azar, Montgomery attorney and Patterson's campaign manager in Montgomery County, as state ABC administrator.

Olin Brooks, Birmingham railroad man and legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Trainmen, as state commissioner of labor.

FERRELL APPOINTMENT CITED

Governor Attacks 'Folsomism' Issue

Gov. James E. Folsom Sunday said the late Albert Patterson had personally asked him to appoint the man who was later tried for his murder.

Arch Ferrell was appointed circuit solicitor in Phenix City, the governor said, on the basis of a personal letter from Patterson, father of Atty. Gen. John Patterson who is now running for governor.

Folsom emphasized that he had in the past cooperated in appointment requests from both the elder Patterson and George Wallace, present gubernatorial candidate.

The revelation concerning the Ferrell appointment was part of a sharp defense of his record by the governor, apparently stung by talk of "Folsomism."

Ferrell was acquitted of the gang-style slaying of Patterson, then attorney general nominee of the

Albert Fuller, a former Russell County deputy sheriff was convicted of the June 18, 1954 slaying, which touched off the clean-about by his administration, and said:

"If this be Folsomism, make the most of it. I hope that the next governor will do half as much for the people of Alabama."

Folsom again declined to endorse either candidate for governor.

He mentioned the connection with his first ... tion of ... and ...

In a statement issued through his press secretary, Ed Brown, the governor enumerated accomplishments he said were brought house to house, in two campaigns for Congress. I have run several times for governor and Congress, and have canvassed the town twice, house to house, and never got enough votes to dust the bottom of a ballot box, and I didn't need any then."

Folsom went on to add that:

"The law firm of George Wallace was represented in my first administration by one George Wallace. I also took most of his recommendations for local appointments.

"The candidate I voted for is out of the race," Folsom said. "I have religiously tried to stay out of the race, and will continue to do so."

Defending his administration, the Folsom statement asserted:

"I don't know what 'Folsomism' is, but I herewith give the record of my two administrations. I have worked hard, have done the best of my ability, and am proud of the record."

The accomplishments he listed were as follows:

A $50 million bond issue for highways, with resultant expansion and improvement of the state road system.

Creation of the Industrial Development Dept.

Increase of the appropriation for education from $80 million to $113 million.

Passage of a competitive bid bill which he supported.

"A never-ending battle" for legislative reapportionment.

Patterson Hits Press, Folsomism

Candidate Follows Pre-May 6 Pattern; Skirts Klan Issue

By BOB INGRAM
Advertiser Staff Writer

HUNTSVILLE — John Patterson made his first speech of the runoff campaign here Saturday night where he blasted the Folsom administration and the big city newspapers for opposing good government.

A crowd of several hundred people gave the gubernatorial candidate an enthusiastic reception in his 28-minute speech at the Optimist ball park. Patterson's speech followed a barbecue given in his honor by local supporters.

Rather surprisingly, Patterson made the same address that he used so extensively and successfully during the primary campaign. There had been some speculation that having waited so long to speak during the second primary, Patterson might come up with something different. However, he did not.

SMEAR CAMPAIGN'

The attorney general made no reference whatsoever to the recent development connecting him with the Ku Klux Klan, but he came close when he made a brief reference to the smear campaign" which he claimed was being used against him.

I have run a clean campaign, I have done no mud-slinging, and I don't believe I have mentioned any of my opponents by name, Patterson declared. I do not like dirty or mud-sling campaigns and before I get down in the gutter with them, I'll go home."

The crowd vigorously applauded this statement.

It was a confident Patterson who spoke here Saturday night as he flatly predicted a tremendous victory by a tremendous vote on June 3."

NO BIG MULES

"I expect to get the largest vote a candidate has received for governor in a long time," Patterson predicted. "I have no professional politicians, no big mules; nobody's for Patterson but the people."

Patterson appeared to speak with renewed vigor in his attack on misspending by the present administration. While he never mentioned Gov. Folsom by name, he was, nevertheless, bitter critical of the present state administration.

"I am sick and tired of them buying airplanes, Cadillacs and cattle ranches for political favorites and paying the way for folks to take trips all over the world," Patterson said. "I am sick and tired of it, and I know that you are too."

Patterson said by stopping up the holes in the treasury he would give the aged $75 a month, raise the pay of teachers to equal the national average, build more schools and roads without adding another dime in taxes.

'OPPOSED BY PAPERS'

The attorney general said his crackdown on misspending was even opposed by the "big city newspapers."

"There are some big city daily newspapers that are more interested in politics than law enforcement and good government," Patterson said. "They are obviously the tools of professional politicians and big business."

Patterson said there was no greater champion of the free press than himself, but added "I can think of nothing worse than a newspaper slanting the news on Page 1 to plant ideas that aren't so."

Patterson got the best reaction from the crowd while he was discussing the issue of racial segregation. When he reminded them he had "run the NAACP back to New York" the crowd responded with a tremendous cheer.

Hitting the other campaign issues lightly, Patterson repeated he was "a strong believer in reapportionment," and also promised an expanded school and road building program.

Campaign Workers Engage In Rivalry

ATTALLA — A behind - the - scenes tussle cropped up here Saturday as campaign workers for two gubernatorial candidates clashed in friendly opposition.

As public address systems announced the impending arrival of Judge George C. Wallace, workers for Atty. Gen. John Patterson were busily putting stickers on bumpers. As one Wallace sound car made its way through a downtown intersection a motor caravan of Patterson supporters drowned out the announcements with blaring horns and shouts.

Scurrying Patterson campaign workers, many of them high school students, also busied themselves with the same tactics at Albertville. Standing at each intersection of the main streets of town the youths stopped cars and attached bumper stickers and handed Patterson cards through the open windows.

The same rivalry was also apparent in Guntersville and Boaz.

More Folsom leaders booted in state purge

Voters booted more Folsom legislative leaders out of office in yesterday's Democratic runoff election, completing a purge that began in the first primary election May 6.

The onslaught sent House Floor Leader Joe Dawkins of Montgomery down in defeat to join Speaker Rankin Fite and Senate President Protem Broughton Lamberth, who were ousted last month.

FITE FAILED by three votes in his bid for renomination to the House from Marion County. Lamberth was defeated in his effort to move from the Senate to the House to represent Tallapoosa County there.

Dawkins, completing his second consecutive term in the House, was outdistanced by a politically unknown Montgomery lawyer, Alfred Goldthwaite, who pegged his campaign principally on the issue of "Folsomism."

The veteran Montgomery legislator has been Gov. James E. Folsom's floor leader for much of his second term in the House. More recently, he was elected chairman of the Alabama Education Commission created to make a long-range study of school needs.

Joining Dawkins in defeat yesterday were other administartion supporters such as Sen. Neil Metcalf of Geneva, running for the House against Rep. Roland Faulk, and Rep. Emmett Wood, who has served three terms in the House from Washington County.

Wood once worked as a special investigator for the governor.

OTHER INCUMBENTS who usually voted with the administration were caught in the runoff purge, too. Among them were Rep. James Dement, seeking renomination in Limestone County, and Rep. J. B. Burkhalter of Cherokee County, who sought to move over to the Senate.

Wood lost to A. D. Britton Jr. Dement was defeated by Granville N. Turner. Burkhalter ran second to George E. Godfrey.

Some administartion supporters survived. Rep. James A. Branyon defeated Jack M. Nolen in Fayette County by a colse margin.

An anti-Folsom Senate veteran, E. O. Eddins, had difficulty winning his battle for renomination in Marengo County. His opponent was Edward W. Dunkard.

ONLY ONE member of Mobile County's delegation will be back. Rep. John Murphy won his runoff contest with Willard Oswald. Rep. John Tyson lost to Will G. Caffey Jr., in his campaign to switch from the House to the Senate.

Two of the four Jefferson County incumbents who made the runoff were renominated, two were defeated. Reps. J. K. (Jess) Edwards and Walter Emmett Perry Jr., were successful. Reps. James G. Adams Jr., and Paschal P. (Pat) Vacca lost.

Rep. Joe Goodwyn of Montgomery, author of the Goodwyn school tax amendment rejected by the voters in 1955, survived an attack by Ramon Farnell, the same candidate he defeated in a runoff four years ago.

Tyson was the second incumbent legislator defeated in the some race this year. Sen. Garet Van Antwerp, an administration man, was eliminated in the first primary when he ran for renomonation.

FORMER STATE Finance Director Fuller Kimbrell of Fayette, a member of Folsom's cabinet until he resigned to run for Senate, was defeated last month. So was Press Secretary Ed Brown, who tried for the Senate from Montgomery County.

A former Alabama star was nominated for the Legislature yesterday while another was defeated.

Holt Rast, all-Southeastern Conference end in his college days, won in Jefferson County. Wililam Ray (Billy) Cadenhead, a former Crimson Tide halfback, lost in Lauderdale County.

Running for Lieutenant Governor

Negro Candidate Throws Fear in Alabama Election

Pittsburgh Pa.

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—White politicos are busy wondering how they can grab the "Tiger" by his tail in the forthcoming Democratic primary election.

The "Tiger" involved is one, Perry Thompson, whose bid for the candidacy of Lieutenant Governor in the state of Alabama has thrown consternation into the ranks of the state's white Democrats.

Another worry facing the politicos is that if they succeed in grabbing the "Tiger" by his tail whether or not they can let it go because of the loyalty pledge which they adopted in 1950.

The knotty situation has found party chairman Roy Marshall of Jasper being challenged to disqualify Thompson as a Democratic candidate.

It seems as though six men are in the running for the spot in question in the May 6 election and in the event no one wins a clear majority, a special run-off election will take place on June 3. In any event, the "Tiger" has at least a so-called "Chinaman's chance" of winning.

FRANK MIZELL JR., a Montgomery attorney who is running opposite Thompson, is the gentleman who has thrown the white Democrats into a dither. Mizell says that Thompson could be disqualified on the grounds that the party believes in segregation as part of its policy.

Mizell heads up a faction of state's rightists who in 1948 refused to cast electors ballots for Harry S. Truman because of his espousal of integration. In 1950, the "loyalists" took over the party's reigns in 'bama and every two years have succeeded in ramming through a pledge of allegiance which binds party members to the support of victorious candidates.

As a result of this ruling, many white states' righters cannot seek office under the Democratic party's banner, even though a Negro is allowed to run under party rules. Mizell and his supporters are using the "Tiger's" candidacy as a basis for getting support from white voters throughout the state.

Negro Quits Political Race In Alabama

BESSEMER, Ala. (AP)—Negro radio announcer Perry L. (Tiger) Thompson withdrew Monday as a candidate for lieutenant governor of Alabama, he said he might run for governor in 1962.

Courier P.12-B

"I am not withdrawing because of any pressure," said Thompson. "I just don't have time to complete my campaign over the state."

Wed 3-19-58

Thompson became the first member of his race to seek a statewide office in Alabama in 56 years when he filed as a candidate in the May 6 Democratic primary.

Montgomery Ala

He said his decision to withdraw was based partly on "untrue statements made by some of the newspapers in the small cities over the state. They said I was for the right to work law, but I'm against it.

"I still think I could be elected if I could get around the state and shake hands," Thompson said. He added he received some "mild threats" after qualifying for office, "but I received more encouragement than threats."

"I'll be back, said Thompson. "I'm not giving up. I'm going to start campaigning now for the election four years from now."

Negro Pulls Off Race For Lt. Governor

BESSEMER, Ala. (AP)—The first Negro to qualify for statewide office in Alabama since 1902 withdrew yesterday, leaving the race for lieutenant governor to five white candidates.

Tue 3-18-58

Thompson had qualified as a candidate in the Alabama Democratic Party primary May 6. Another Negro is a candidate for the House of Representatives from Jefferson (Birmingham) County.

"I still think I could be elected if I could get around the state and shake hands," the former Negro candidate said. He added that he had received some "mild threats" but "more encouragement" after he announced as a candidate.

Birmingham Ala

The remaining candidates for lieutenant governor, all white, are State Sen. Albert Boutwell, Birmingham; Robert T. Butler, Montgomery; Asa E. (Ace) Carter, Birmingham; State Sen. Sam Engelhardt of Macon County; and State Sen. E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa.

Engelhardt resigned as executive secretary of the Alabama Association of Citizens Councils to make the race. Carter has headed the North Alabama White Citizens Council.

The 1902 Negro candidate received only one vote, and that was cast in his home county.

Bessemer Negro enters lieutenant governor race

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 1—(AP)—The first Negro to run for statewide office in 56 years entered the race for lieutenant governor Friday.

Perry L. (Tiger) Thompson of Bessemer was one of two members of his race who qualified Friday for the upcoming Democratic primary.

The second was Arthur B. Tiddleman of Birmingham, who filed for a Jefferson County seat in the House of Representatives.

The sister of Gov. James E. Folsom and member of his cabinet also were among those qualifying Friday.

In her first political race, Mrs. Ruby Folsom Ellis became a candidate for secretary of state. Finance Director Fuller Kimbrell entered the race for the State Democratic Executive Committee.

Sidney P. Van Antwerp of Mobile filed for a First Congressional District place on the committee. He is the brother of State Sen. Garet Van Antwerp of Mobile. Also qualifying as candidates for the committee were Earl V. Atkinson of Sylacauga in the Fourth and Frank A. Massa of Mobile in the First.

A Montgomery man, Donald McKay, qualified for Place No. 1 as judge of the 15th Circuit (Montgomery County). Judge Walter B. Jones, who has filed for renomination, has held the office 38 years.

CANDIDATES MUST file with party chairman Roy Mayhall at Jasper before midnight Saturday night. Following that, they have five days to comply with the corrupt practices law and qualify also with the secretary of state.

Thompson, making his first try for political office, is the owner of a public relations firm and an announcer for a radio station in Bessemer.

The nickname, Tiger, came from his career as a middleweight prize fighter, he said. From 1927 to 1936, he explained, he fought in more than 200 amateur and professional bouts.

If elected, he promised, he will "promote better race relations" and work for greater economy in state government. In addition, he said, he favors equal aid to all accredited schools, an increase in unemployment benefits and the right to work law.

THOMPSON WAS graduated from New Orleans' Xavier University in 1935.

In 1902, Ad Wimbs, a Hale County Negro, received one vote for governor, said Peter A. Brannon, director of the State Department of Archives and History. Thompson is believed to be the first Negro to seek a statewide office since then.

Mrs. Ellis is the second member of the Folsom family to enter the primary. Fred Folsom, a nephew, is running for the State Democratic Committee from the Seventh District. The governor is ineligible to succeed himself.

Six candidates including Mrs. Ellis have so far qualified for the office of secretary of state and Mrs. Ellis, an employe of the State Civil Defense Department, said she will resign her job to campaign. Starting with the next term, in January, 1959, the four-year job pays $8000 annually.

Now a resident of Montgomery, she was born in Elba, as was the governor. She is the mother of two college students.

AMONG those filing for the Democratic Committee was Frank Bunkley of Mobile, who served as chairman and administrator of the State Liquor Control Board during the first Folsom administration and later was appointed Mobile County tax collector.

Bunkley, now a Mobile real estate man, is running in the First Congressional District.

Others qualifying for the committee were:

Second District—J. B. Nix Jr., of Evergreen, Circuit Solicitor C. J. Kettler of Luverne.

Third District—Edward M. Jones of Opelika.

Sixth District—W. L. Orr Sr., of Montevallo, John Herbert Edmund Dunnavant of Tusacloosa.

Seventh District—Robert G. Werner of Cullman, James R. Smith Jr., of Cullman.

Ninth District—Earl T. Rogers of Morris, William C. Barber of Birmingham, seeking reelection.

QUALIFYING FOR NOMINATION to public office on the next to last day for filling for the May primary were:

Rep. James G. Adams Jr., of Birmingham for renomination to the House of Representatives in Jefferson County.

Rep. George W. Hodges Jr., of Ashville for solicitor of the 30th Circuit (Blount and St. Clair Counties).

Robert D. Vann Jr., of Huntsville for House Seat No. 2 from Madison County.

W. Hugh Sims of Talladega Rt. 5 for Talladega County House Place No. 2.

Negro's Candidacy May Affect Bitterly Contested Oath Fight

The fact that a Negro is running for lieutenant governor may play an increasingly important part in the fight over Alabama's bitterly contested Democratic Party loyalty oath.

Perry (Tiger) Thompson's role in the coming Democratic primary has already become the focal point for renewed charges that the loyalty pledge works as a gag rule against some white Democrats.

Thompson, a Bessemer radio announcer and public relations man is one of six candidates seeking the nomination for lieutenant governor in the May 6 primary— and the June 3 runoff if no one gets a majority on the first ballot.

The controversial loyalty oath has developed into the major issue in the campaign for the 72 places on the State Democratic Executive Committee to be filled in the primaries. The committee runs party affairs in the state.

Democrats loyal to the national party have been in control since 1950 and each two years since then have pushed through a pledge of allegiance which binds candidates to support the party.

If they win again this year, presumably the loyalty oath will be readopted for the 1960 presidential election. It would compel candidates running in the primary to pledge their support to the party's national ticket.

The oath also disqualifies prospective candidates who voted Republican in the 1956 election as well as those who refrained from voting for anyone for presidential elector.

Because of that, the so - called States Rights faction argues that many white Democrats are ineligible to run for office this year even though a Negro candidate has been accepted under the party rules.

Frank Mizell Jr., a Montgomery attorney seeking another term on the state committee, has challenged party Chairman Roy Mayhall of Jasper to disqualify Thompson. Mizell has persistently opposed the loyalty oath within the committee, although he had to sign it to run this year.

The Montgomery committeeman says Mayhall has the authority to challenge Thompson's qualifications under a resolution adopted by the state committee reaffirming its belief in segregation as a party policy.

Replying, the party chairman offered to hold hearings if Mizell or any other committee member offered "legal evidence" to question Thompson's right to run in the primary.

Mizell left no doubt that he and others in the anti - loyalty oath faction hope to use Thompson's candidacy to win support in the election.

"This is an issue people can understand," the attorney explained. "The people have been misled before by labels (such as Loyalist). Now the real effects are coming to light."

Mizell said he is particularly concerned about voters who "couldn't stomach the racial policies of either major party," in 1956 and refused to vote either for Democratic or Republican presidential electors. Under the loyalty oath, they are disqualified as candidates the same as if they had voted Republican.

The loyalty pledge is an outgrowth of the famed party revolt in 1948 when Alabama's presidential electors, all Democrats, refused to vote for Harry Truman, the Democratic nominee, because of his racial program. They gave their support instead to the States Rights ticket.

Opposition From Own Race Greets Candidate Thompson

By GEORGE PRENTICE

A Negro candidate for lieutenant governor said yesterday he would campaign in the interest of both [illegible] are that he already has met strong opposition within his own race.

Perry L. (Tiger) Thompson, 48-year-old radio announcer and public relations man from Bessemer, said he was receiving support from both white and Negro residents of the state.

Negro leaders in Montgomery and Birmingham said, however, there is some doubt that Thompson will receive the support he seeks among Alabama's Negroes.

As many as 200 telegrams and letters came into the radio station at Bessemer as late as Monday, Thompson said, most of them encouraging him to stay in the race.

Thompson, who won the nickname "Tiger" during his career as a boxer in the '30s, was optimistic about his chances in the May 6 primary.

After a meeting of Negro leaders in Birmingham early this week, however, there was some talk that Thompson may have overstepped "the bounds of reason."

"We feel that the man is not prepared for the office he is seeking," said one Negro observer, "but he has the right to run."

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Birmingham Negro integration leader, said Thompson was not known to Negro organizations in Birmingham prior to his announced candidacy. He said there were no plans on the part of organized Negro groups to back the man.

"Just because he is Negro is not sufficient reason for us to offer our unqualified support," he said.

A Negro spokesman close to the Rev. Martin Luther King here said, "Thompson's plans apparently call for a solid Negro vote, but it isn't going to materialize that way."

"We feel that in this case the Negro vote might be wasted on an unqualified man," he said. He declined to be identified.

Thompson said he expected "the worst during the heat of the campaign."

"Up to this time I've received no threats and there have been no attempts at violence, but I anticipate that type of opposition."

...he said.

The Negro candidate said, however, that his acquaintances through labor union work "know I'm no radical."

"I don't think the problem of segregation - integration can't be worked out if common sense is used," he continued.

Referring to recent objections to his candidacy, Thompson said he is not "running because I am a Negro but because I can create better relations between the races."

Asked how he would stand on the question of Democratic Party principles which call for maintenance of segregation in Alabama, Thompson said, "if the Democratic Executive Committee asks those questions I'll answer them."

Frank Mizell Jr. of Montgomery this week asked that party leaders quiz Thompson on the question of segregation.

"Mr. Mizell is a good Southern gentleman who can confuse the South's people and create fear," said Thompson.

Mizell Asked To Cite Grounds For Protest

Alabama chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee said yesterday he would set "public hearings" on protests against potential Negro candidates "if there are any legal grounds."

Judge Roy Mayhall of Jasper, in a telegram to Frank Mizell Jr. of Montgomery, said:

"If you wish to protest certification of Thompson (Bessemer Negro) as a candidate for lieutenant governor, please forward legal grounds for protest to me immediately and I will set the matter for public hearing."

The telegram was in answer to a letter by Mizell in which the Montgomerian protested the qualification of Perry L. (Tiger) Thompson as candidate for the office of lieutenant governor. Thompson is a Negro radio announcer and public relations man from Bessemer.

Mizell, a member of the state committee, described the situation as "tragic." He accused Mayhall of accepting qualification papers from Negro candidates when a party loyalty oath "prohibits good white Democrats from seeking office."

Mizell said he was aware of U.S. Supreme Court rulings which forbid barring of candidates because of their color.

He charged Mayhall, however, with the responsibility of requiring candidates to subscribe to state party principles which affirm the beliefs in segregation of the races.

Mizell long has been an outspoken opponent of the party's loyalty oath and is a strong proponent of "States Rights" principles.

Judge Mayhall branded Mizell's letter a "breeder of dissention."

"Letters such as Mizell's are written for the purpose of creating diversion and dissention in the Democratic Party," Mayhall declared.

Passive Resistance In Bessemer

Hold. Behold.

There is something quite amature in the state of Denmark.

We remark you, sir, the race for lieutenant governor.

Tiger apparently is practicing passive resistance on Dr. King, for he has rejected his efforts to make him retire from the race.

Tiger Thompson Runs

Sixty - six years after Ad Wimbs of Hale County ran for governor in 1902, a candidate of color qualified last week to run for lieutenant governor in the May 6 Democratic primary.

Perry L. (Tiger) Thompson of Bessemer, a 48-year-old former boxer, and now a public relations consultant, submitted the necessary papers and paid his $100 fee to the state democratic chairman.

Significantly, his opponent will be State Senator Samuel Englehardt, the the White Citizens Council architect of the scheme to abolish Macon County to prevent the election of colored officeholders.

Thompson may not be elected, but we think his candidacy will not be in vain if it serves to instill renewed political confidence in Alabama's one-third population of color.

With the watchful eye of Uncle Sam halting unlawful interference with the right to vote and 11 counties with colored populations greater than white, democracy and justice decrees there should be hundreds of officeholders in Alabama on city, county, state and even Congressional levels.

And we predict there will not be another 56-year interval before it comes to pass.

Negro Running for Lieutenant Governor

Ex-Fighter Enters Ala. Political Ring

BIRMINGHAM — Staking his hopes on "100,000 votes," a former middleweight prize fighter has entered the race for the nomination as a Democratic candidate for lieutenant-governor in the May 6 primaries.

The candidate is Perry (Tiger) Thompson, a 1935 graduate of Xavier University in New Orleans, who claims to have fought in more than 200 amateur and professional bouts between 1927 and 1936.

Thompson is already staking a claim to victory on the basis of what he thinks will be a record Negro vote. He says: "I'm going to win this race. I can lay my hands on almost 100,000 votes now. Most of the candidates are making a political football out of the racial issue. It's really no issue at all. I'm much more interested in the state's economy and better school.

"I've got a lot of friends behind me and I'm going to make a real race of it."

Thompson is currently an announcer for a radio station in Bessemer, is married and the father of four children. In addition, he runs a public relations firm. He is 48 years old.

Thompson says that he will campaign in every county in Alabama.

Another Negro has also tossed his hat in the ring. Arthur B. Tibbie, a motion picture projector operator here, has already qualified to run for the State Legislature from Jefferson County. He will run for office in the Democratic primary.

One of Thompson's four opponents will be State Senator Sam Englehart, the architect of the bill which cut Tuskegee's Negro population away from the city of Tuskegee via a gerrymandering operation. Thompson was feared in Bessemer.

Birmingham, Ala. Announcer Out Of State Race

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. —(INS)— A 42-year-old Birmingham radio announcer withdrew Monday from the State's Lieutenant Governor's race "because of too much outside work."

Perry L. (Tiger) Thompson, who lives in nearby Bessemer, announced that he intends to seek the State's Governship in the 1962 election.

Thompson was the first Negro to seek election in the state since 1902.

Another Negro, Arthur Tiddle, is seeking a post in the State Legislature from Jefferson County—Birmingham. He has been duly qualified and is on the ballot.

Thompson said:

"There has been no pressure on me to stop running. I just don't have time to complete my campaigning. I would like to go around the state and shake everybody's hand. I'll do that in four years because I intend to run for Governor."

Thompson claimed he "still could be elected."

Loyalty Oath Row Gets New Impetus

BY CLARKE STALLWORTH

The sputtering fight over Alabama's loyalty oath got some new fuel yesterday as a Montgomery man blasted Democratic Party officials for allowing Negro candidates to qualify for office while the loyalty oath bars white Democrats from qualification."

Frank J. Mizell Jr., a member of the State Democratic Executive Committee and an outspoken opponent of the loyalty oath, said the situation was "tragic."

His statement came shortly after Perry L. (Tiger) Thompson, a Negro radio announcer from Bessemer, qualified for lieutenant governor.

In a letter to Judge Roy Mayhall of Jasper, state Democratic chairman, Mizell said he was aware of rulings by the U. S. Supreme Court which forbid the barring of a candidate because of his color.

But, he said, "There is nothing to preclude the Democratic Party of Alabama from requiring a would-be candidate to subscribe to and uphold the philosophy and declared principles of our Democratic Party in Alabama."

Mizell asked that Thompson be questioned by Mayhall on segregation principles.

"The Democratic Party of Alabama believes in the continuation and enforcement of all laws relating to racial segregation . . . (and) continued, unremitting and total opposition . . ." to any legislation contrary to this, he said.

In its January meeting, the State Democratic Committee adopted a resolution calling for continuating and enforcement of all laws relating to racial segregation. The party primary ballot carries a slogan: "White Supremacy."

Questioned about his support of Democratic Party philosophy, Thompson said yesterday:

"I want to make it plain that I'm a member of the Democratic Party and it is Southern gentlemen like Mr. Mizell who confuse people and create fear.

"I'm running for the office of lieutenant governor, not because I'm a Negro, but because I believe I can bring both races closer together.

"You know the Southern politician used the anti-lynch law to get into office for 40 years and God and the people changed that.

"Now they are using integration and segregation to continue that type of campaigning.

"Now we should be thinking more about the welfare and the people of Alabama. I want to quote from history, 'While Nero played the fiddle, Rome burned.'

"While the politicians go around Alabama hollering, 'Nigger,' the welfare of Alabama is burning down."

One announced candidate for governor said he didn't qualify because of the loyalty oath. "I will not sign the loyalty oath," said Sam L. Chesnut Jr., "I am an Alabama Democrat."

Gessner T. McCorvey, former chairman of the state Democratic committee, said over the weekend that "a number of good men" have qualified to run for the state committee on an anti-loyalty oath platform.

At the University of Alabama, Leonard Wilson, former University student and later Citizens Council official, said he had qualified to run for the state committee from Walker County.

Wilson, who was expelled from the University after the Autherine Lucy incident, is now a student at Baylor.

Meanwhile, the campaign for governor went on, with speeches by at least three candidates yesterday.

Candidate A. W. Todd, speaking in Scottsboro yesterday, said he would propose a minimum cotton acreage allotment of 25 per cent of total cultivated land for farmers tilling less than 100 acres.

Todd said he would lay the proposal before the U. S. Senate Agriculture Committee in Washington today. He left Scottsboro for Washington by plane immediately after his speech.

He advocated the establishment of a system of junior colleges in each Congressional district of Alabama.

He said he would recommend some action be taken by the U. S. Congress to help cotton ginners, warehousemen, and oil mill operators who have been hit by the land bank program.

He added that any farmer allotted eight acres or less cannot raise cotton at a profit. "Every business has its point of diminishing return. With the farmer that point is eight acres," he said.

In Birmingham, before an alumni dinner of the Birmingham School of Law, Candidate Karl Harrison of Columbiana said he would not "play politics" in selecting a director of the "often neglected" State Conservation Dept.

He said a thorough and complete conservation program must be executed immediately for the protection of state forests, and he said steps must be taken to conserve and make plentiful for the future Alabama fish and game, while providing adequate hunting and fishing now.

Harrison will address the Alabama Foresters Assn. at Tuscaloosa tonight.

Candidate Laurie Battle of Birmingham, in a Lafayette speech yesterday, said he "will see that exemptions on feeds, seed, fertilizer and the other things now exempted are left as they are so farmers will not pay sales tax on these things."

"And I stand solidly against any new taxes," he said.

No. 2 Race Shapes As The 'Liveliest'

2 Citizen Council Aides, A Negro And Pair Of Senators In Field

BY IVAN SWIFT

The slate of candidates for lieutenant governor in the May 6 primary has shaped up as probably the most interesting on the ballot, with two Citizens Council leaders, a Negro, and two popular state senators in the running.

Asa Carter, executive secretary of the North Alabama Citizens Councils, filed for the spot last week-end. He followed Bessemer Negro Radio Announcer Perry (Tiger) Thompson.

Earlier qualificants for the post were Sam Engelhardt Jr., who resigned as executive secretary of the Alabama Citizens Councils to make the race, State Sen. E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa, State Sen. Albert Boutwell of Birmingham, and Robert T. Butler of Montgomery.

Carter ran a poor race for Birmingham city commissioner in the May 7 primary, when he got less than 2000 votes. He and Engelhardt, although both Citizens Council leaders, are completely disassociated and conduct rival organizations.

Early last year after Carter was arrested in connection with the shooting of two men at a Ku Klux Klan meeting, Engelhardt issued a public statement noting there is no relationship between his council and Carter's.

Thompson, the Negro candidate for the post, probably is the first Negro to file for a statewide office since 1902 when Ad Wimbs of Hale County filed—and got one vote.

Both state senators seeking the lieutenant governor's job are widely known and strong contenders.

The list of candidates for the seven Hous seats from Jefferson County ended up with 36 seekers, but three members of the last slate aren't trying to return.

The governor's race will have 14 runners, according to the last tally as the qualifying period ended.

And at least two of them will be in Scottsboro today for "First Monday."

Rep. George Hawkins and Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd will speak to the crowds that meet in Scottsboro the first Monday of every month to swap articles.

Karl Harrison, Jack Owen, John Patterson and Laurie Battle have been hitting the North Alabama area hard in an early vote try.

Owen will be in Talladega and Coosa Counties today.

Sam L. Chestnyt Jr., changed his mind about qualifying, saying he would not file because of the loyalty oath. He said he will run as an independent in the November election.

The candidates for governor still are tossing the old-age pension issue around, with those in the $40 to $50 area berating the $70 and $80 offers others are making.

So far, all the candidates have been keeping the electioneering clean. They've been talking about their own plans and not their opponents' personalities.

But as May 6 slides up, the campaigns are expected to get warm.

Crommelin Blasts State Newspapers

Gubernatorial candidate John G. Crommelin Monday attacked the state's major newspapers as a part of what he termed, "the Communist-Jewish conspiracy" to promote integration in the South.

He named three of the state's largest newspapers — Montgomery Advertiser, Birmingham News and the Mobile Press Register — as element "stirring friction between white Christians of the North and white Christians of the South."

Crommelin said Hall was a member of the National Civil Liberties Union — an organization which he said had communist affiliations.

Another candidate for governor, C. C. (Jack) Owen, Monday proposed removing the office of state veterinarian from the State Department of Agriculture.

Owen, speaking at Tuscaloosa, suggested putting the office under a state livestock sanitary board, thus removing it from politics.

He said the proposed board would include a representative of each of the livestock and poultry industries of the state and one representative of the Alabama Assn. of Veterinary Medicine.

Owen, president of the Public Service Commission, is making his second race for governor.

Owen Would Deputize All For Segregation

Gubernatorial Candidate C. C. (Jack) Owen said yesterday he "would deputize every white man in Alabama as a highway patrolman to preserve segregation."

Speaking on "Alabama Press Conference" over WABT-TV and WAPI, the candidate told Interviewers Fred Taylor of the Birmingham News and Rex Thomas of The Associated Press he would "take any and all steps to preserve segregation."

Owen, president of the Alabama Public Service Commission and an unsuccessful candidate for governor four years ago, said if he found out President Eisenhower was about to activate the Alabama National Guard he would "dismiss" the Guard.

Owen said he would follow up the dismissal by deputizing Guardsmen as highway patrolmen and "have those same Guardsmen preserve law and order."

He called segregation the paramount issue in the campaign for the May 6 primary election, adding that he has "a record on that matter, not just a promise."

Owen referred to the Alabama Public Service Commission order replacing segregation signs in bus and train waiting rooms after they were removed by court order.

And he said if he is elected governor and the Legislature votes a bill abolishing Macon County, "I'd sign it in a minute."

He said the State Supreme Court has had a telephone rate hike issue before it for about 22 months and "they have had ample time to make a decision."

Owen's commission ruled against the rate increase and he said if the court finds for the commission every telephone subscriber in Alabama will get a refund.

He also said:

He is a "loyal Democrat" and believes in the loyalty oath.

He also believes, he said, in retaining the right-to-work law.

"Bringing industry to Alabama is the salvation of the state." He wants a man in each county to represent the governor and work to bring industry into his county.

Concerning his financial backing, Owen said "I am a tool of no one."

'MANY DEPUTIES' — C. C. Owen

Next week Atty. Gen. John Patterson, also a candidate, will be interviewed on the program.

Bumper Crop Of Candidates Offer For Spring Primaries

The largest field of candidates for county officers in many years this week settled down to steady canvassing for votes in the Democratic primaries set for June 6 and May 3. This near record number of aspirants had offered for office despite the fact that some county offices involve six-year terms and are not at stake this year.

The largest number of candidates is for Macon County's place in the Alabama House of Representatives. Five are seeking to succeed Rep. Jack Rodgers, who is not a candidate for re-election.

In the race are Vester D. Martin, of Shorter; James M. Rea, of Notasulga; Grady Rogers, David Jenkins and Joe Pattillo, of Tuskegee. With the field so widely split, observers considered that a run-off is certain in this race.

Three candidates are in race for the probate judgeship, where the veteran incumbent, Judge William Varner, has two opponents. Seeking to succeed Judge Varner are William C. Hare, local attorney, and Robert Howard, business man.

Three candidates likewise are seeking the place on the Board of Revenue now held by F. Conyers Thompson, who is seeking re-election on his record. His opponents are Rudolph E. Burks and R. Harold Segrest, both of Shorter.

Waymon King, former deputy sheriff and more recently a sergeant on the Tuskegee Police Force, is waging a campaign for the office of sheriff, seeking to unseat Sheriff Preston Hornsby.

Two places on the Board of Education are open this year and candidates run at-large for the posts. Dr. Wiley D. Ogletree and A. B. Hope, incumbents, are seeking re-election and have as opponent W. W. "Bill" Gowan, of Chesson.

The contest for the office of probate judge is the first in the county in more than 20 years. Judge Varner first took office when appointed to fill the unexpired term of Judge D. E. Laslie, who died in 1937. He has been elected to succeeding terms without opposition since that time .

C. A. Huddleston, who is seeking re-election to the Board of Revenue from District 1, and Henry Watson, candidate to succeed himself as clerk of the Circuit Court, are without opposition.

Patterson Vows To Keep Gangsters Out of Phenix

PHENIX CITY, Ala.—Atty. Gen. John Patterson promised a hometown crowd Thursday night than gangsters will "never again" run Phenix City if he is elected governor.

It was Patterson's first appearance as a gubernatorial candidate in the once-wild racketeering mecca where his anti-vice crusading father, Albert L. Patterson, was slain four years ago.

The elder Patterson was shot down the night of June 18, 1954 after winning the Democratic nomination for attorney general on a promise to clean up the vice dens which had long made Phenix City notorious. John Patterson became attorney general in his father's place.

The murder touched off an unprecedented vice cleanup that sent several gambling bosses to prison or jail. The former chief deputy sheriff in Phenix City, Albert Fuller, was convicted of Patterson's slaying and got life in prison.

The younger Patterson said in a prepared campaign speech:

"As governor, I will see to it that your elections, your jury boxes and your voting lists remain free and honest, for these are the vital spots where the underworld can do deadly harm.

"During my administration there will be no room for gangsters to operate in this state. I don't want to ever have to live again in a town where you have to carry a pistol when you go downtown to get your mail and where you have to worry about someone putting dynamite up under your house where your wife and children are sleeping."

15 Negro Candidates Seek Posts On Mobile Executive Committee

MOBILE, Ala.—(NNPA)—A total of 15 Negro candidates are seeking places on the Mobile County Executive Democratic Committee. In two heavily Negro-populated wards, Negro face no white competition. Five places on the eighty-four seat county committee are assured Negroes. In three other wards they face white opponents.

Negro voting strength in Mobile County is estimated at over 8,000. The Negroes, Alex Herman, nationally known fraternal leader and insurance executive and Clarence Montgomery, barber, have completed a four-year term. They were the first of their race to be so chosen in the last sixty years.

In Alabama the Democrat party is the only political party with any strength. Nomination by this group in the primary to be held early in May is equivalent to election.

BAR TO NEGRO CANDIDATE AIM

Alabama to Consider Restricting Primary

By REX THOMAS

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 18 (AP)—Party leaders will be asked in effect next week to bar Negro candidates for the Democratic primaries in Alabama this spring unless they agree to abandon their fight for racial integration.

The state Democratic executive committee, meeting here Saturday, also will decide on readoption of the controversial party loyalty oath which disqualifies Eisenhower Democrats as candidates.

National committeeman Charles W. McKay Jr. of Sylacauga said today he still intends to seek approval of a segregation pledge binding candidates to support the principle of segregation upon which the Democratic party was founded."

Asked if the effect of that would be to bar Negroes as candidates, McKay replied, "Not at all. Any of them who wanted to run could do so by signing the pledge along with everyone else."

May Be Disqualified

But if they refused to take the oath, the Talladega county legislator said, they would be disqualified. McKay is a member of the Alabama House of Representatives.

The national committeeman disagreed with committee chairman Roy Mayhall's expressed fear that adoption of the proposed segregation pledge might invite the courts to nullify the party elections.

Mayhall, a circuit judge from Jasper, said earlier this week that he doubted the wisdom of such an oath. He reasoned that the courts might intervene on the same theory that the supreme court outlawed the Texas white primary several years ago. Texas Democrats refused to allow Negroes to vote in the party elections before the court held the restriction unconstitutional.

The Alabama party chairman apparently was thinking of what might happen if a Negro sought to qualify as a candidate, refused to sign the segregation pledge and then went into court.

Cites Court Ruling

McKay said he is not worried because, he explained, "the courts have held that a party can fix its own rules and regulations." He recalled that the loyalty oath itself, disqualifying Democrats who voted Republican in the presidential election, was upheld by the U. S. supreme court.

"If the Democratic party has a right to impose the loyalty oath," he continued, "it has the right to impose other conditions as it sees fit."

McKay argued that the state committee could refuse to call a primary and nominate candidates instead by convention "And then it could ask them any questions it wanted to," he added.

Mayhall said he was not opposing the segregation oath but that he was concerned about its advisability. Whether a fight will develop at next Saturday's meeting remains to be seen.

Predicts Compromise

One committee member predicted, however, that a compromise might be drawn up Friday night at a caucus of party officials.

Meanwhile, Mayhall and McKay both are advocating renewal of the party loyalty oath which grew out of the famed revolt in 1948 when Alabama's 11 presidential electors, all Democrats, refused to vote for Harry Truman and supported the States' Rights ticket.

Since then, all candidates running for presidential elector as well as all others have been compelled to sign a pledge to support the national party's presidential ticket.

That is not too significant at this time because there is no presidential election this year.

To Prepare for Primary

But the pledge also goes back to the 1956 election and requires candidates to swear they did not oppose or vote against the Democratic slate of Adlai Stevenson and Sen. Estes Kefauver.

That is important because it disqualifies any Democrat who voted for President Eisenhower and Vice-President Richard Nixon in the election 14 months ago.

Along with settling those two issues, the committee next Saturday will adopt rules and regulations for the May 6 primary and the June 3 runoff.

Voters casting ballots in the party election will nominate candidates for governor, lieutenant governor, the Legislature, all nine places in Congress, and scores of lesser state and district offices.

They will elect a new 72-member state Democratic committee.

Kicks off campaign

Owen promises segregation as is

BY FRED TAYLOR
News staff writer

CROSSVILLE, Ala., Jan. 18—President Jack Owen of the Public Service Commission, one of Alabama's strongest segregationists, teed off here Saturday in his second campaign for governor with a pledge to "see that segregation is maintained" in this state.

Owen, addressing a barbecue rally crowd sponsored by North Alabama backers at this Sand Mountain agricultural experiment station, declared:

"If I'm elected your governor, no National Guard troops will ever be called out to force integration like they were at Little Rock."

OWEN CITED HIS RECORD as public service commissioner as proof of his stand for segregation. He pointed to a Public Service Commission order instructing railroads and buslines to restore signs designating waiting rooms for white and Negroes.

JACK OWEN
. . . Opens campaign.

"Today our trains, buses, waiting rooms and schools are still segregated," he said. "That's the way you want it. That's the way I want it. And that's the way it's going to stay."

Owen promised more support for schools in Alabama "even if we have to put some more taxes on the big fellow."

"We can't afford to stand idly by and let our state and nation become endangered just because we are not educating our children," he added.

He said that if additional taxes are necessary for the schools, "they should be borne by somebody able to pay and not by the little man who doesn't have high-priced lawyers lobbying for him down there in Montgomery."

However, Owen added that "I've got an idea we've got enough taxes already on the books. And if the folks who are able paid a fair share, we might be able to get along without any more."

OWEN'S RALLY here followed that of State Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd Friday night at Russellville.

Reports out of Montgomery indicated that Supreme Court Chief Justice J. Ed Livingston was just about ready to enter the governor's race.

And a score of other avowed or prospective gubernatorial candidates plumped hard for support, as the State Democratic Executive Committee prepared to meet at Montgomery next Saturday to set machinery in motion for the May 6 primary election. A runoff primary will be called for June 3.

ALABAMA NEGRO TO RUN FOR STATE LEGISLATURE

Birmingham, Ala., Feb. 3 (AP)—Arthur B. Tiddle, Negro motion picture machine operator, said today he would seek election to a Jefferson County seat in the state Legislature.

Tiddle, who is 49, is the second member of his race to ever seek election to the House from Jefferson. Attorney Arthur D. Shores made the race four years ago but polled only 4,000 votes.

Tiddle said he is not a member of the NAACP and is not being sponsored by any group.

He said he had been a qualified voter since 1955 and is a member of the Motion Picture Machine Operators Local No. 236A, which he said was an all-Negro group.

He said, "I plan to openly and frankly discuss every problem facing the people . . . and to present my views concerning them."

Richmond Flowers To File For Attorney General Race

State Sen. Richmond Flowers of Dothan announced yesterday that he would qualify Monday as a candidate for attorney general in the May primary.

Flowers' formal statement brought to an end speculation as to what state office the Dothan attorney might seek. At one time he had seriously considered running for lieutenant governor.

Flowers' entry raised to three the number of candidates seeking to succeed Atty. Gen. John Patterson. Rep. Charles W. McKay of Sylacauga, Democratic National Committeeman, and MacDonald Gallion of Montgomery qualified late in January.

In his formal statement of candidacy Flowers vowed he was "unalterably for segregation."

"I will not only join with the attorneys generals of other southern states, but will take the lead in resisting federal court proceedings and in instituting court action to help maintain our way of life in Alabama and the South," Flowers decided.

A veteran of the U.S. Army during World War II, including service in the Pacific, Flowers is now serving his first term in the state Senate. He has been one of Gov. James E. Folsom's leaders during the current administration.

In 1955 he was voted the best orator in the Senate, and in 1937 was named by the Capitol press corps as the outstanding freshman member of the Senate.

John Patterson pledges $75 old age checks

BY FRED TAYLOR
News staff writer

NEW SITE, Ala., Feb. 11 — Atty. Gen. John Patterson promised $75 a month old-age pensions, pledged to preserve segregated schools and declared "I will eliminate graft and corruption in our state government" as he opened his campaign for governor at a rally here.

Addressing a crowd estimated at more than 1200 in the New Site School auditorium last night, Patterson outdid all other gubernatorial candidates in the May 6 Democratic primary race when he said:

"As your governor, I will see to it that those who qualify for old-age pensions in this state will be paid at least $75 per month and more if it can possibly be done."

Several of the other candidates have come out for $50 monthly payments to the aged needy, with State Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd promising $60.

PATTERSON POINTED out that the national average for old-age assistance payments is $55 and said he would not be satisfied with bringing Alabama's payments up to that.

PATTERSON WARNED that "any attempt to integrate the schools of this state would cause violence, disorder and possible bloodshed, and would destroy the school where such an attempt was made."

"As your governor, I will see to it that there will be no mixing of the races in the public schools and other public facilities of this state," emphasized Patterson, adding that there are means available" to legally prevent integration."

HE POINTED OUT that the state already has laws giving officials the right to close a public school to prevent violence.

"However, to make sure, and to spell out this right, I will seek passage of a law requiring the governor to close any public schools where federal troops are used to force race-mixing," he added. "No public school can function at the point of a bayonet."

But in making his segregation promise, Patterson said "we must see that the children of this state, both white and colored, receive an adequate education. The white and colored pupils should have equal school facilities, but they must be segregated."

Patterson referred to the former situation at Phenix City when he declared he would enforce the laws fairly and impartially, adding "I have known from personal experience that gangsters and public officials cannot be partners in decent government."

"During my administration here will be no room for gangsters to operate in this state," Patterson added.

PATTERSON SAID he would support programs for school teachers, farmers and organized labor, adding "labor will get a square deal with my administration. I will not allow labor to be kicked around or abused."

He stressed that "our obligation is to the children of this state" and that "our teachers and our public schools deserve higher salaries." He said that more classrooms are needed.

Emphasizing the need for industrial growth, Patterson said "I shall do everything in my power to bring Alabama the kind of industries to promote health economic growth."

HE PROMISED to expand and develop waterways and docks facilities and said "I will see that our farm-to-market road building program is expanded to meet the needs of our rural communities."

Patterson also declared he would work to "enlarge and develop our state health and hospital program."

PATTERSON ADDED that by "stopping up holes in the public treasury" the state would have enough money without any more taxes to increase old-age pensions and expand other programs.

Concerning the need for maintaining segregation, Patterson warned that "there's a move to register a lot of Negroes for block voting. It's time the white people got together and voted as a block to protect ourselves."

Patterson's grandmother, Mrs. R. D. Patterson, 93, of near Dadeville, got a big hand when she was introduced by her grandson. Also with him at the rally were his wife, son, Albert L. III, 8; daughter, Babel, 4, and his mother, Mrs. Albert L. Patterson.

Negro Qualifies To Seek Lt. Governorship In Ala.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 1 (AP)—Perry L. (Tiger) Thompson, a Negro from Bessemer, has qualified to run for lieutenant governor of Alabama in the May 6 Democratic primary.

He is the first Negro to qualify for a statewide office in many years.

Judge Roy Mayhall of Jasper, State Democratic Executive Committee chairman, said Thompson submitted papers and posted the $100 qualifying fee during the day.

Thompson, 48, is an announcer for a Bessemer radio station and owner of a public relations firm. This is his first race for political office.

The former middleweight prizefighter said he would work for greater economy in state government and "promote better race relations." He said he favors the right-to-work law, an increase in unemployment benefits and equal aid to all credited schools.

Thompson said the nickname, Tiger, came from his association with boxing. He said he fought in more than 200 amateur and professional bouts from 1927-36.

He is married and the father of four children. He said he is a 1935 graduate of Xavier University at New Orleans.

Negro to Seek Alabama Office

BIRMINGHAM, (Ala.), Feb. 28 (AP)—A Birmingham Negro announced last night he will enter the race for lieutenant governor of Alabama, opposing three segregationist candidates.

The new candidate is Perry (Tiger) Thompson, 48-year-old radio announcer. He predicted he would win the May 6 Democratic primary on a platform of better schools and good government.

One of the white candidates is Sam Engelhardt, a state senator who sponsored the gerrymandering of Tuskegee, Ala., to disfranchise practically all of the town's Negro voters.

Thompson also will be running against State Sen. Albert Boutwell, author of a school placement act, and R. T. (Bob) Butler of Montgomery.

Mizell Asks Mayhall Oust Negro Entry

A sharp exchange between the chairman and a member of the State Democratic Executive Committee reached a new peak yesterday when the chairman was challenged to exclude a Negro candidate from the party primary.

The challenge was made by Frank Mizell of Montgomery, a committee member who has protested the entry of Perry (Tiger) Thompson, a Bessemer Negro, as a candidate for lieutenant governor.

Mizell called on Committee Chairman Roy Mayhall of Jasper to use his power to reject Thompson's candidacy.

The Montgomery attorney had made this request Monday, to which Mayhall replied that he would call a public hearing if requested to do so.

Mizell, in his reply yesterday, said such a public hearing "is unnecessary and expensive."

"You, as chairman, are authorized and empowered to reject this candidate," Mizelle added.

Mizell also took issue with a charge by Mayhall that the local attorney was causing "dissention" in the party.

"No," Mr. Mayhall, the infamous loyalty oath which you enthusiastically promoted in 1954 and 1956 is the cause of dissension and frustration among the white people who want to be loyal to the Democratic Party in Alabama but who are forced not to be loyal to integrationists like Kefauver and Adlai," Mizell declared.

Wallace Invites Patterson To Discuss Issues

BY CLARKE STALLWORTH

Judge George Wallace yesterday challenged Atty. Gen. James Patterson to discuss the issues of the governor's race "face to face" on a statewide television hook-up.

"The voters of Alabama want to know and have a right to know where each of us stands on segregation, law enforcement, the issue of clean-up and corruption in government, and our past records, even to the point of our law firms and whom they have represented in the past."

Wallace issued a similar challenge to debate on law enforcement during the campaign for the first primary on May 6.

Rep. George Hawkins of Gadsden accepted Wallace's challenge, but Wallace did not meet him in a debate.

Said Wallace from Mobile:

"I do not ask for a debate; I am asking for a frank public discussion. The voters have a right to have the air cleared, to hear from us personally, where we stood yesterday, where we stand today, and where we will stand tomorrow.

"I invite the other candidate to meet me at the time he might name for a full public discussion of these matters."

Patterson, who led the primary voting for governor with 196,859 votes, will meet Wallace in a June 3 run-off election for the Democratic nomination. Wallace ran second with 162,435.

Meanwhile, in Birmingham, Laurie Battle issued a statement. Battle ran fifth in the governor's race with 38,955 votes.

Said Battle:

"I plan to devote my attention to my family and private affairs now, and will not be politically active in either (Patterson's or Wallace's) camp during the gubernatorial run-off.

"I am not interested in any cabinet position or any political office. I am looking for a private job to take care of my family.

"If necessary, I will sell my house to pay my campaign debts. We ran a hard, clean campaign and I sincerely hope some contribution was added to our political life in Alabama.

"I am deeply grateful for the unselfish assistance given me by so many wonderful volunteer workers. Of course they are completely free to support the candidate of their choice."

In the Patterson-Wallace run-off, it began to look like another colorful campaign of hillbilly singing and stumping across the state.

Wallace will have Grand Ole Opry Star Minnie Pearl and Hillbilly Singer "Little Jimmy" Dickens with him, and Patterson audiences will be able to listen to Rebe Gosdin and his Sunny Valley Boys.

In Birmingham, a new campaign headquarters for Patterson was set up at 1010 20th-st,

George Peach Taylor, Birmingham attorney, will direct operations at the new campaign headquarters.

"The new office became necessary as a result of huge throngs of friends and supporters who have poured in from every section of the state," said Charles Meriwether, state campaign manager.

The office on 20th-st, s, will be the Jefferson County "Patterson for Governor" headquarters. Meriwether said state campaign headquarters would remain in the Molton Hotel.

Meriwether also said a Patterson headquarters would be set up in Bessemer to contact voters in the western section of the county.

Meriwether said that more than 7000 persons had thronged into the Molton since Patterson led the ticket May 6.

Labor Group Holds Fast With Wallace

The president of the Alabama Labor Council said Friday that its endorsement of George C. Wallace for governor in the primary election was still in effect for the runoff.

Barney Weeks, head of the AFL-CIO Council, recalled that the group had endorsed Wallace, Jimmy Faulkner, A. W. Todd, Karl Harrison and George Hawkins in the primary.

Wallace was the only labor-endorsed candidate to make the gubernatorial runoff. The group did not support John Patterson, the other runoff candidate.

Weeks said that to make any changes in the endorsement he would have to call another statewide meeting of the Committee of Political Education. He said no such meeting was contemplated.

"We have taken no additional action," Weeks said, "and none is contemplated according to my information at this time."

Klan Rule Fear Voiced By Wallace

Warning Follows Expose Of Patterson Link To KKK Head

Circuit Judge George C. Wallace warned Thursday that the election of Atty. Gen. John Patterson as governor in the June 3 primary might result in the revival of the Ku Klux Klan as the "controlling political force in Alabama."

Wallace, who is opposing Patterson in the gubernatorial election, issued his statement following

A Mobile railroad brotherhood local Thursday repudiated endorsement of John Patterson by the Alabama Joint Legislative Council of Railroad Brotherhoods and gave its support instead to George Wallace. The council, which represents 21 railroad brotherhoods, had announced its endorsement of Patterson.

J. B. Leachmak, president of Mobile Lodge 557, Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, said that the Mobile group had "emphatically repudiated this endorsement." He said the lodge has more than 600 members.

ing a disclosure in The Advertiser Thursday that Patterson was being supported by the KKK.

"The state of Alabama learned through documentary evidence published in The Montgomery Advertiser this morning that John Patterson has the active support of the Ku Klux Klan and welcomes it," Wallace said. "Alabama learned this morning that its attorney general has been secretly wrapped in a bedsheet with the Grand Dragon of the Klan and refers to him in writing as 'friend.'"

"The last time the Ku Klux Klan elected a politician in Alabama his name was Hugo L. Black," Wallace continued. "The Klan's new candidate is John Patterson."

Wallace said if the KKK should succeed in electing Patterson governor "that triumphs may well lead to the revival of the Klan."

"Patterson chatters about the gangster ghosts of Phenix City while he himself is rolling with the new wave of the Klan and its terrible tradition of lawlessness," Wallace added. "Patterson's state campaign manager, Charles Meriwether, was exposed today as an old China hand in the notorious Crump machine of Memphis, Tenn. Look in that bedsheet and find the triplets Patterson, the Klan and Boss Crump."

While Wallace continued to hammer away on the KKK issue, Patterson was en route back to Alabama to open his runoff campaign.

The attorney general arrived in Montgomery by plane Thursday night from Los Angeles, Calif., where he had appeared on a television program honoring Hugh Bentley of Phenix City.

Patterson's only comment on the KKK charges was made in Los Angeles where he was quoted as saying he did not know "anybody named Shelton." This was in response to the charge that KKK Grand Dragon R. M. (Bobby) Shelton was working for Patterson.

The attorney general kicks off his campaign Friday with a "hand-shaking" tour of Elmore County. Leaders in Patterson's campaign have indicated the attorney general will spend most of his campaign on similar hand-shaking tours and making informal appearances throughout the state.

Wallace Asserts Patterson Win May Revive Klan

George C. Wallace said in a statewide television address Friday night that if John Patterson is elected governor the Ku Klux Klan "will have achieved a success that might attract many thousands of new members."

"If Mr. Patterson is elected, there will be a revival of the Klan," Wallace warned. "My opponent's election would put starch in all those dirty bedsheets."

Making his second major address of the runoff campaign for governor, Wallace was sharply critical of Patterson's affiliation with the KKK.

Turning to another issue, Wallace noted that Patterson's campaign manager, Charles Meriwether of Birmingham, "now admits that he is a former member of the famous Crump machine in Memphis, Tenn."

"There you have it, my friends—Boss Crump, and the Grand Dragon of the Klan—both working like Trojans to put Mr. Patterson in power as governor," Wallace added.

Atty. Gen. John Patterson, under heavy attack for his political connections with the Ku Klux Klan, issued the first statement Friday since those attacks began while on a hand-shaking tour of Elmore County.

Patterson repeated the charge that state funds are being wasted, adding:

"During the next four years we are going to take the huge sums that have been going down the drain and use them for adequate pensions for our aged citizens, better salaries for our state teachers, improved health facilities and other essential state services."

He made no mention of the Klan issue.

HIT HARDEST

It was on the Ku Klux Klan issue that Wallace hit hardest in his address. And he issued a ringing challenge to Patterson to answer several questions relating to the KKK. Wallace said:

"To clear that (the issue) up, let John Patterson tell the people the following:

"1. That, if elected, he would steadfastly oppose repeal of the 1949 Anti-Masking law.

"2. That he would never appoint a Klansman to public office.

"3. Tell Alabama that he was mistaken when he told the Los Angeles Times Wednesday that he didn't even know a man named Bob Shelton (the Grand Dragon of the KKK)."

"Let us watch closely to see what Mr. Patterson will tell us about this," Wallace added.

The candidate said the KKK in Alabama is "controllable" at present.

STILL DISCREDITED

"It is still discredited by the crimes and brutalities it committed as it rode the night in the past," he continued. "But if my opponent is elected with Klan support, Alabama will be faced with a revival of the Klan."

"The Klan wants what it had in the 1920's—political power extending from Alabama to Oregon," Wallace continued. "The Klan wants to grow until it makes every office seeker in Alabama doubt that he can be elected without the Klan's seal of approval."

"And right here, let me remind you that the last time the Klan elected a man in Alabama, that man was Hugo L. Black, now a justice of the United States Supreme Court," he recalled. "That was a generation ago, and Alabama is still paying the price. And today, the heir and assign of Hugo Black's former Klan support is John Patterson."

Wallace said he knew that "many fine, upright men and women" were supporting Patterson and that he understood that they will "have a hard time believing or understanding what has come to light."

'HUMAN NATURE"

"It will be just human nature to try to explain it away, or to say that it's true but that my opponent didn't know what he was doing—like when he would up owning stock in a loan shark operation," Wallace said.

The candidate said he thought "mothers and wives have a very special interest in the future of the Klan."

"There are a lot of pistol-toters and toughs among Klansmen, although all Klansmen are by no means bad," Wallace said. "If the Klan commences to grow, if its candidate for governor is elected, don't you suppose that joining the Klan will have a new appeal? This means a lot of young but misguided Alabamians might join up and get in trouble amidst the pistol-toters and whip-lashers riding the night."

CHIDED PATTERSON

Wallace also chided Patterson for leaving the state during the runoff campaign. The attorney general appeared on a television show in Los Angeles Wednesday night, the same night the story broke regarding the Klan.

Referring to this, Wallace noted that "Mr. Patterson, with only two weeks of the campaign left, was so confident that he had the election won that he was out in the state of California."

'SO SURE'

"As a matter of fact, my opponent is so sure that he's got your vote sewed up that he hasn't considered it necessary to make a single speech to you since May 6," Wallace continued.

TV Panel Invites Runoff Candidates

A question-and-answer panel series for runoff candidates for the three statewide offices will be presented by a local TV station beginning Sunday, May 18, and continuing through Sunday, June 1.

The panel, composed of four local citizens, will question the candidates on issues pertinent to the office they are seeking, Bill Henry, WSFA-TV news commentator said. The 30-minute program will begin at 2 p.m. each Sunday.

Henry, who will serve as moderator for the panel, said the station had received commitments from all the candidates except gubernatorial candidate John Patterson.

He said Patterson's headquarters was contacted during the past week, but as yet had not replied.

The series calls for secretary of state candidates Betty Frink and Charles Matthews to appear on the first program. Candidates for lieutenant governor, Albert Boutwell and E. W. Skidmore, will appear on the May 25 program. The schedule also calls for gubernatorial candidates John Patterson and George Wallace to appear June 1.

Serving as panelists for the three programs will be the Rev. T. H. Thrasher, Carl Reed, Marie Futrell, and John Davies.

Fate Of State 3rd Party May Hinge On Spring Primaries

By REX THOMAS
AP Staff Writer

The fate which might develop in Alabama two years hence may be determined in the Democratic primaries this spring.

And the strong party loyalty oath readopted a week ago by the outgoing State Democratic Executive Committee may be a deciding factor.

Besides picking the Democratic nominees for governor and other state and lesser offices, in the May primary and the June 3 runoff, the voters will elect a new committee to govern party affairs for the next four years.

The 72 members of the new committee—eight from each congressional district--will write the ground rules for the 1960 presidential race in Alabama.

MANY DISQUALIFIED

Democrats who voted the Republican ticket in the 1956 election are disqualified as candidates in the primaries this year. So are those who voted Democrat but still 'openly and publicly" opposed the party's nominees, or those who refused to vote for the Democratic presidential ticket and marked their ballots only for other offices.

Those who do seek office in the primaries this year must bind themselves to go along with the Democratic Party in the general election in November.

Theoretically at least, the newly elected state committee will be composed of Democrats sworn to allegiance to the national party.

But there may be some who will try to repeal the loyalty pledge in 1960. One reason for that would be to leave the presidential electors free to support an independent southern ticket.

Unless the oath of allegiance is changed, candidates running for elector two years from now must pledge support of all Democratic nominees, including the presidential and vice presidential candidates chosen at the national convention.

Without the oath, they would be free to support a third party as the electors did in 1947 when they voted for the Thurmond-protest against Harry Truman's racial policies.

They hoped that year, as some do now, to keep both the Democratic and Republican presidential nominees from getting a majority of the electoral votes, thus throwing the election into the House of Representatives.

ELECTORS FREE AGENTS

Actually, the loyalty pledge cannot keep an elector from voting for an independent presidential candidate. The courts have held electors are free agents with the right to vote for anyone they choose.

The late W. F. Turner of Montgomery signed the oath in 1956 but still cast his electoral vote for Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones of Montgomery for president and Sen. Herman Talmadge of Georgia for vice president.

But by signing the pledge in the primaries, candidates at least promise to support the national party. And if they repudiate that pledge, they can be read out of the party.

STALLWORTH

With May 6 only 15 days away, the expected fireworks in Alabama politics began to pop yesterday.

Developments:

State Sen. Sam Engelhardt and State Sen. Albert Boutwell—both running for lieutenant governor—slammed into each other on the question of segregation legislation.

Judge George C. Wallace, before a huge crowd at a homecoming rally in Clayton, took note of what he called the "smear artists" working against him, but said he wouldn't be drawn into a name-calling contest.

State Rep. George Hawkins, whose knuckles were rapped last week by Gov. James E. Folsom, scheduled a statewide television broadcast to "reply" to the governor.

In Lawrence County, Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd said liquor advertising should be outlawed "because it contaminates the minds of young people."

Mayor H. H. Dees of Atmore defended George Wallace's right to claim credit for the Industrial Development Act passed by the Legislature in 1951.

Laurie Battle, ex-Congressman from Birmingham, scheduled a television speech and rally in Montgomery tonight. A spokesman said the rally "will not be a staged rally carefully programmed for best television effects . . . it will be an easy-going old-fashioned political rally . . . where the featured attraction is the candidate's speech."

The Boutwell-Engelhardt fight broke out when Engelhardt accused Boutwell of hanging back on segregation legislation. But Boutwell retorted that Engelhardt's proposal would have been thrown out by the U. S. Supreme Court.

Said Engelhardt in Montgomery:

"The surest way to block integration is to cut off money to the schools . . . but Boutwell didn't join our side until 1957 when the private school plan was passed."

Engelhardt said he sponsored an amendment in 1953 to cut off state funds for integrated schools, but the measure was tabled with both Boutwell and State Sen. E. W. Skidmore—another candidate for lieutenant governor—voting to table it.

Boutwell said in Birmingham that the Senate "very wisely" tabled the amendment because it was "unconstitutional and would have been useless" as offered.

Boutwell said the amendment was not offered by Engelhardt, but was sponsored "by the senator from Wilcox" and was similar to the Virginia school placement law which recently was declared unconstitutional by the U. S. Supreme Court.

At his homecoming in Clayton, Wallace ripped into his opponents in the governor's race for contending that the Industrial Development Act was not his own.

He pointed out that he introduced, sponsored it, and got it passed, and that names of the co-sponsors (Harrison and Hawkins) were added later.

Stores in Barbour County were closed for the rally. Former Gov. Chauncey Sparks introduced Wallace at the rally.

Hawkins, Folsom's floor leader in the House, isued a statement last week saying there would be "new faces" in his cabinet if he is elected governor, and that he would have no "holdovers." Some people took this as a slap at Folsom.

Folsom came back with a statement, saying if any of his cabinet members had any had any thoughts of trying to stay in office under another governor, "they will automatically be fired."

Then Harrison joined the act, saying he had proposed the "new faces" thing first.

Hawkins came back over the week-end, promising a response to Folsom, but, ignoring Harrison.

So, tomorrow night, comes Hawkins' "answer" to Folsom, over a statewide telecast originating from Birmingham.

The Atmore mayor, Mr. Dees, bore down on the Industrial Development Act, which Wallace calls "The Wallace Act."

Dees said virtually everyone has referred to the law as the Wallace Act "except two candidates for governor who at this late date found that they had their names added to the authorship, obviously because they know the Wallace Act was a popular one."

In North Alabama, Mr. Todd leveled his blast at "large Sunday corporation newspapers," asserting that the papers were representing "a large group of Wall Streeters rather than the common man, thus they are backing candidates in this race repersenting the same people."

Besides passing a law forbidding liquor advertising in newspapers, Todd said he would make it unlawful for liquor companies "peddling their goods in this state" to have agents in Alabama.

Schedules of some of the candidates today:

WALLACE—Brundidge at 10 a.m., Luverne at 11:30 a.m., Brantley at 1 p.m., Greenville at 3 p.m., Georgiana at 4:30 p.m., and Monroeville at 7:30 p.m.

PATTERSON—Livingston at 9 a.m., York at 10 a.m., Demopolis at 11:15 p.m., Linden at 1:15 p.m., Butler at 2:45 p.m., and Chatom at 4:30 p.m.

OWEN—Lafayette at 10 a.m., Roanoke at 11:30 a.m., Camp Hill at 1 p.m., Heflin at 3 p.m., and Oxford at 4:30 p.m.

FAULKNER—Double Springs at 9 a.m., Moulton at 10:30 a.m., Landersville at 11:30 a.m., Mount Hope at noon, Russellville at 1:30 p.m., Cherokee at 3:30 p.m., and Lexington at 7:30 p.m.

HAWKINS—Phenix City at 9 a.m., Eufaula at 10:30 a.m., Dothan at 12:15 p.m., Geneva at 1:45 p.m., Enterprise at 2:40 p.m., Elba at 3:40 p.m., Opp at 4:35 p.m., and Florala at 5:30 p.m.

BATTLE—Speeches in Greenville, Andalusia and a rally in Montgomery, plus a television speech in Montgomery.

Hopefuls press for votes—

Wallace deplores bomb try; Faulkner in N. Alabama

BY FRED TAYLOR
News staff writer

Expansion of the Wallace Industrial Act to include counties as well as municipalities in a broad new program to help build up the state's economy was called for today by Judge George Wallace as he spoke to big crowds in heavy-voting North Alabama.

And Jimmy Faulkner was headed back to the ballot-rich North Alabama areas for a 7:30 night rally at Florence before taking off on a 51-stop "Faulkner Victory March" through the state in the final week of the gubernatorial campaign before next Tuesday's voting.

"MORE INDUSTRY is one of the solutions to our farm problem," declared Judge Wallace. "And I believe that the expansion of the Wallace Industrial Act to include counties, along with municipalities, will provide thousands of jobs for rural Alabamians."

Judge Wallace also expressed shock at the attempt to dynamite a Jewish synagogue in Birmingham yesterday, saying, "This act is deplorable and particularly so because it was aimed at the destruction of a place of worship."

He called for apprehension of those responsible and said they should "be punished with the maximum penalties provided by our laws in Alabama."

FAULKNER, whose "Victory Caravan" will move from "the fresh waters of North Alabama" where he was born to the "salt waters of the Gulf area" where he now lives, pledged in a TV speech in Birmingham last night to "put the full force of the governor's office behind reapportionment," if he is elected.

"Some talk about reapportioning the Legislature but they are not really for it," declared Faulkner, "except to try to get votes with."

When the caravan, made up of several hundred automobiles, rolls out of Florence tomorrow morning it will swing through much of North Alabama toward Gadsden for a 7:30 night rally. It will sweep on to Mobile for a night rally Thursday, back to Montgomery for a rally Friday night and then to Birmingham for an all-night gospel-singing meeting in Municipal Auditorium. The Blackwood Brothers and Statesmen Quartet will be with the caravan throughout the "Victory March."

Faulkner, who was runner-up to Gov. James E. Folsom four years ago, predicted his election, with his headquarters here saying he "never stopped running for governor after the 1954 election."

Faulkner asserted in his TV talk that most of the 200,000 posters his workers had placed along highways throughout the state had been torn down by "political enemies."

"I just told our friends not to worry about putting any more up because we don't have the money to throw away, and as long as there are hoodlums around ready to tear them down, there's no real purpose in putting them up."

The Bay Minette candidate said his supporters had been concentrating on automobile bumper stickers, but charged that "the opposition is now tearing them off."

JACK OWEN, president of the Public Service Commission, whose stock continued to rise as a gubernatorial candidate, again hit hard for reduced telephone rates, declaring a vote for him "very well might mean lower telephone rates for everybody and an average refund check of more than $35 for every telephone customer."

judicial, to give him the necessary stature for the job and the leadership qualities that Alabama needs at this crucial time."

Four years ago, Owen said, Southern Bell Telephone Co. was denied a rate increase by the Public Service Commission. However, he said the case was appealed by the company to Montgomery Circuit Court, which held that until the Alabama Supreme Court ruled on the case, the rate boost could be collected, with the money held in escrow.

He said the rate increase already collected amounts to more than $22 million, which Owen is insisting be refunded to the telephone users.

"Why is the Supreme Court waiting so long to rule on this case?" asked Owen. "Could it be that the court wants to see how interested voters are in this question? If so, a vote for Jack Owen will be a definite indication to the court that you want lower telephone rates and that you want your refund check."

Owen declared that, if elected, he would "ask the Supreme Court to rule on the case immediately."

Two more papers declare for Wallace

Two more newspapers—The Atmore Advance and The Walker County Times published at Jasper—have endorsed Judge George Wallace for governor.

In urging election of the Clayton Circuit Court judge, The Times said "George Wallace is the man of the hour for the South. Not yet 40, George Wallace has already stamped himself as the man who can lead the South's fight in national conventions and other nationwide activities."

The Atmore paper said, "The young, aggressive Wallace, in our opinion, has the experience in public affairs, both legislative and judicial, to give him the necessary stature for the job and the leadership qualities that Alabama needs at this crucial time."

Hometown paper endorses McKay

State Rep. Charles W. McKay Jr. got a boost in his race for attorney general from his home town newspaper, The Sylacauga Advance, which endorsed his candidacy by declaring:

"The attorney general's office requires a man whose prime concern is the protection of the interests of his clients, the people of Alabama. Charles McKay will do just that."

The editorial stated McKay, who defeated Gov. James E. Folsom for Democratic national committeeman, has rendered "outstanding" service in the Legislature.

ed governor, he would "take whatever steps necessary to see that telephone rates are lowered, regardless of the courts."

LAURIE BATTLE, who concentrated his campaign for governor in his home bailiwick of Jefferson yesterday, promised Alabama voters an "hour-glass" state government as part of his "moral and political revolution," if he is elected.

"I'm going to turn the Capitol upside down, shake it, use a vacuum cleaner on it, and when I put it back together again it will be transparent," declared Battle.

The former Ninth District congressman said "I am going to bring a degree of democracy to statement government that this state has never seen before."

Battle went to Mobile today for a 6 p.m. TV address and JOHN PATTERSON, whose campaign for governor got a boost from the endorsement of The Birmingham Post-Herald also pushed his vote bid in heavy-populated North Alabama.

Speaking in the industrial Tri-Cities, Patterson declared that as governor he "will fight to the utmost any attempt to hamstring or hurt organized labor in any way."

Patterson was introduced by Hugh Robertson, a Tri-Cities labor leader. The crowd was estimated by Circuit Clerk Charles Young at more than 1000 persons. Patterson added that he would fight any attempt by the federal government to curtail TVA and would "make an all-out effort to push through reapportionment."

Declaring he is a firm believer in strict competitive bidding on all state purchases, the attorney general said "political favoritism is costing the people of Alabama millions of dollars."

GEORGE HAWKINS, pressing his quest for votes at Huntsville and in upstate regions, continued to pound away on his program for legislative reapportionment.

Hawkins said Alabamians repeatedly rejected the 67 senator plan. He said he considers it "dead" as a reapportionment method.

He said a fair reapportionment plan could gain public acceptance. But to put it through, he said, "we'll need a North Alabama governor with the know-how."

A. W. TODD, zipping along on a 20-stop speaking schedule in pushing his bid for the governorship, hit back at those who criticized him for sending telegrams to U. S. Sec. of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson and for making trips to Washington to make personal protests.

"My protests have saved Alabama farmers 250,000 acres of cotton allotments," declared Todd. "If the agriculture commissioners before me had sent some protests, we'd have more acre as alloted for cotton in this acres alloted for cotton in this humble farmer one acre of cotton, it will be worth 100 telegrams a day."

Todd, who was campaigning through Central Alabama, said some of his opponents charged "the reason I have done a good job as state agriculture commissioner is that I have been running for governor. I say to them, if so, maybe the agriculture commissioners before me should have been running for governor, too."

SHEAREN ELEBASH, who brought his campaign for governor back to Birmingham with a TV speech last night, stressed "survival and security" as the two most important problems facing Alabamians.

He said, if elected, he could enter the governor's office "without any entanglements."

"Survival depends on our being able to stand up to the Communists without and within," declared Elebash. "We've got to be aware enough and trained Communist-lined organizations, such as the NAACP, and to contribute trained minds—military and non-military— to fight our natural enemies."

Elebash said the problem of security means our ability to provide jobs and markets.

TODAY'S GUBERNATORIAL candidates schedules:

HARRISON — South Alabama and Montgomery area.

OWEN—Dothan.

PATTERSON—Tuscumbia, Cherokee, Red Bay, Russellville, Phil Campbell, Haleyville, Double Springs and Jasper.

TODD—West Blocton, Centreville, Maplesville, Clanton, Thorsby, Jemison, Calera, Columbiana, Hayneville, Leeds, Odenville, Pell City, Lincoln, Talladega, Sycamore, Sylacauga and Childersburg.

Wallace sweeps another straw poll

Judge George Wallace led for governor in a straw poll of the Albertville Lions Club, getting 15 votes to 7 for Jimmy Faulkner. Patterson got 5; Owen and Todd 2 each and Crommelin, Battle, Hawkins and Walker 1 each.

The New Campaign For Governor Begins

THE Montgomery Advertiser is nothing if not candid.

Therefore: John Patterson has almost every advantage on paper at this stage that a candidate can have.

Patterson has one obvious disadvantage. That disadvantage is that his opponent is one of the best campaigners in recent Alabama political history—a gamecock in every way.

THE people have, by their vote in the first primary, narrowed their choice to Patterson and Wallace.

The final choice has not been made.

WALLACE faces an uphill fight (just as both he and Patterson faced to overcome Faulkner to win the runoff positions).

Wallace knows that. But being a gamecock, he will simply fight harder. If the front runner in the first primary always and inevitably won in the runoff, there would never be any reason to have a runoff and there would be no provision in the law for it.

New issues will be introduced in the runoff. With 12 of the candidates eliminated, the people will get a much better look at both Patterson and Wallace. We expect that presently Alabama will make some discoveries about both men.

That's never a mistake.

Let us have at it.

Wallace Says Folsom Did Not Give Him Support

By The Associated Press

The runoff candidates for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination swung actively into their second campaigns Monday.

"A complete overhaul of the insurance business in Alabama" was promised by Circuit Judge George Wallace.

Atty. Gen. John Patterson told campaign workers at Decatur Monday "Our strength since the first primary has grown by leaps and bounds, and we are gaining by the hour."

The attorney general added, "The vote that the citizens of Alabama gave me was convincing evidence that the will of the whole people is for honesty and decency in government, maintainance of our racial way of life, resolute action against the loan sharks, the grafters and corruptionists ,and advancement of our state on every front."

Speaking at the annual convention of the Alabama Assn. of Insurance Agents in Birmingham, Wallace said that if elected his first order of business would be a review of Alabama's insurance laws.

"If I am elected," he continued, "my administration will be known as the Wallace administration. It won't be known by any past governor's name."

The Clayton jurist added he doesn't know who received Gov. James E. Folsom's support in last Tuesday's primary, but "I know he did not support George Wallace . . . "

Alabama Governor's Race In Smut-and-Smear Stage

Rough Campaign Tactics Crop Up In 14-Man Fight for $25,000 Job

By FRED TAYLOR
Staff Writer, The Birmingham News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., April 12—Alabama's gubernatorial campaigns always get rough in the stretch drive and the present one, which has only three weeks to go before May 6 Democratic primary balloting, is running true to form.

Already the 14-man tussle for the $25,000-a-year governorship—that's what the job will pay when a new governor takes over at Montgomery next January—has reached the smut-and-smear and name-calling stage. The governor now gets $12,000 year.

The daily newspapers, particularly the Birmingham News, are being assailed by some of the candidates, notably by State Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd.

Todd has blasted what he calls "the big corporation newspaper," taking exception to published reports, based on opinions voiced by seasoned observers throughout the state, that he's running third or fourth instead of first, as he claims.

Jimmy Faulkner, runner-up to Gov. Folsom four years ago and generally considered the man to beat in the present race, has pounced on one editor—Ed Field of the Selma Times-Journal.

Faulkner, who is a veteran newspaperman and publisher of the highly successful weekly Baldwin Times at Bay Minette, in addition to other publishing, radio and business activities, whammed Editor Field because of editorial criticism of Faulkner carried in the Selma paper, which is supporting Judge George Wallace of Clayton, also a very strong contender for the governorship.

Faulkner, who is a former president of the Alabama Press Assn., lauded newspapermen generally, saying that "99 per cent of them are ethical."

Judge Wallace, who has proved to be one of the most effective campaigners ever to hit the hustings in Alabama, is fighting mad over "smear and smut" spreaders seeking to cut down his strength.

One of the scatter-sheets circulated against Wallace charged him with being "wishy-washy" on the segregation issue.

The Clayton jurist, who prides himself on his stand to maintain segregation—even threatening to jail FBI agents and other federal operatives if they "start nosing around in my circuit"—declared that "if the Brownell brownshirts come down here with bayonets on the ends of their rifles to enforce integration in our schools, they'll be pointing them at empty school buildings."

Laws on Books

Alabama already has enacted laws, including an amendment to the state constitution, empowering any local school board to close a school if threatened with tensions or violence, much less the threat of occupation by federal troops.

Aside from Faulkner, Wallace and Todd, other gubernatorial aspirants among those in the top bracket for the governorship are John Patterson, attorney general; Jack Owens, president of the public service commission; and Karl Harrison, Columbiana attorney and veteran legislator.

The other gubernatorial candidates are Laurie Battle of Birmingham, former Ninth District congressman; George Hawkins, Gadsden attorney and legislator; Shearen Elebash, Montgomery businessman and entertainer; retired Admiral John Crommelin of Wetumpka; Winston Gullatte, Selma insurance man, who ran four years ago; the Rev. Billy Walker of Crotwell, a Baptist minister; W. E. Dodd, Bessemer millwright and dairyman, and Ralph Price, Louisville insurance salesman.

ALABAMA

Jack Owen pushes for right-to-work

BY FRED TAYLOR
News staff writer

Gubernatorial Candidate Jack Owen continued to draw bigger crowds and get louder applause as he pounded hard his all-out support of the right-to-work law in Northeast Alabama today, while the 13 other aspirants beat the bushes for votes in other areas.

Addressing a rally estimated at more than 1000 persons at the Florence Courthouse last night, Owen pledged to "use the full influence of the governor's office" to push to completion a Tennessee-Tombigbee waterway link. He declared this would "bring new wealth to the Tri-Cities and all the other cities and towns of this area, as well as to all of Alabama."

OWEN, president of the Public Service Commission, told the crowd the right-to-work law "does not hurt organized labor and acutally helps the working man by attracting more industries to create more jobs and more payrolls."

John Patterson's campaign for governor got a boost from the weekly Greene County Democrat, which endorsed his candidacy and declared that gangsters and loan sharks want to defeat him. The paper said "Nobody is for John Patterson, except the people" and asserted that "the so-called professional politicans" are against him.

Patterson, who renewed his attacks on "vice and corruption," in a swing through the Black Belt yesterday, today pushed his campaign in St. Clair County.

JIMMY FAULKNER, runner-up to Gov. James E. Folsom four years ago, said there is less likelihood of a runoff in this year's gubernatorial election, with 14 men running, than there would be with as few as five aspirants in the race. The Democratic primary election is May 6.

Faulkner made the statement as he pushed ahead with the second day of campaigning in heavy-voting Jefferson County and predicted he will be Alabama's next governor.

"If there were only five candidates running, almost everybody could tell you who they are," he added. But with 14 running, not many people can tell you who all of them are.

"Forty per cent of the people are going to vote for the winner, and I can give you a good idea of who that will be May 6. I don't intend to sound like I'm boasting, but I say with all sincerity that I'm going to be your next governor."

SEVERAL of the gubernatorial candidates, along with scores of aspirants for other state and local offices, addressed a big turnout at a barbecue rally last night at Geneva.

And all the candidates for governor, together with those for other offices, have been invited to a statewide political rally being sponsored by the Decatur Junior Chamber of Commerce. It is set for 4 p.m. Saturday (tomorrow) in the Morgan County Coliseum at Decatur. Leonard Hudson, Decatur druggist, is rally co-chairman.

GEORGE WALLACE, Karl Harrison, Shearen Elebash, John Crommelin and Ralph Price were the gubernatorial candidates addressing the Geneva rally, which attracted a crowd estimated at approximately 3000. It was sponsored by the American Legion and the Geneva County High School senior class.

Price was booed and jeered when he accused Judge Wallace, strong segregationist, of seeking the Negro vote.

Wallace, who spoke immediately after Price, emphasized that "All of my public life I have devoted myself to helping the mentally ill of this state. I shall continue to aid the mentally ill."

The Clayton judge earlier had hit hard again at "smut and smear" spreaders.

BOTH JUDGE WALLACE and State Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd were criticized by Price, who also assailed the Folsom administration.

Hawkins declared much of the current governor's race "has been conducted like a carnival." His offer to debate the issue of law enforcement with Judge Wallace, he said, "could clear the air and provide an opportunity to bring before the people issues of critical importance."

Harrison told the crowd he is campaigning "the most democratic way," describing his method, which the people seem to like, as "the walking, handshaking, man-on-the-street" type.

Later in a TV speech at Dothan, Harrison urged "Alabama move quickly to aid its forgotten citizens—the mentally ill." He said the present plight of the mentally ill and mentally retarded in this state is "shocking."

"THERE IS LITTLE blue sky on the horizon either," added Harrison, who is chairman of the Legislature's interim health committee, which is making a study of the mental health problem in Alabama. "The obsolete buildings, outmoded facilities and overcrowded and inadequately staffed institutions which serve our mental patients will remain this way, unless bold action is planned and executed."

Another of the gubernatorial aspirants—the Rev. Billy Walker, Baptist preacher, sent a telegram to Judge Wallace saying he would like to debate the issue of law enforcement with him. He said he would like to debate this and "the entire segregation issue" with the Clayton judge, who has campaigned hard on this issue.

WALKER URGED the debate, if held, be carried on a state-wide TV network and offered to share expense of such program.

Elebash said "the office of governor is not for sale." He asserted that some of the other candidates in their race are obligated by large sums of money they are spending on their campaigns.

LAURIE BATTLE pressed his campaign today into Etowah County, holding "open house" from 2 to 5 p.m. in the Reich Hotel at Gadsden. He also addressed the Gadsden Civitan Club, predicting "I expect to lead the ticket May 6."

"My sound, forward-looking and comprehensive program and the overwhelming response my campaigning is receiving all over the state, gives me every reason to believe I will do so," said Battle.

A 100-car motorcade will escort Battle from Gadsden to Anniston for formal opening of campaign headquarters there Saturday morning and an area-wide rally.

Todd, addressing a big turnout at Waterloo High School last night, bore down hard on the reapportionment issue and jabbed at Black Belters. C. T. Wilson, school principal, estimated the crowd at 2800, which he said was the largest ever gathered there.

"Some of my Black Belt opponents in this race come to North Alabama and say they are interested in reapportionment," said Todd. "I say I am much more than merely interested."

FAULKNER, campaigning with the Blackwood Brothers, spoke in East Lake and Woodlawn this morning, with a speech set for West End at 12:30 p.m. He had other talks scheduled for Powderly at 1:30 p.m.; Ensley at 2:45 p.m. Five Points West Shopping Center, 4:30 p.m. and a 7:30 night rally at Tarrant City Hall.

Faulkner will go to Talladega County Saturday, with appearances set for Childersburg at 10 a.m.; Sylacauga at 11:30 a.m.; Goodwater at 1:30 p.m.; Ashland at 3 p.m.; Talladega at 4:30 p.m. and a 7:30 night rally at Anniston.

OWEN — Cherokee, Barton, City and Leeds.
Schedules of the other guber-natorial candidates today were: Underwood. Battle—Tanner. Hawkins—Tuscaloosa. Patterson—Odenville, Springville, Ashville. Ragland, Pell City and Leeds. Wallace—Tuscaloosa area. Price—Sampson, Opp, Andalusia and Bradley.

Governor Aspirants Pressing Campaigns In North Alabama

"With the limitless natural resources in Alabama we can develop this into the richest industrial state in the nation," Agriculture and Industries Commissioner A. W. Todd said Saturday.

Todd launched his campaign for governor through Central Alabama. He pointed to his record in office as "a small example of the big things I will do when I am elected governor."

He said that the State Industrial Planning and Development Board of which he is a member, has brought new industries into the state which in all have meant a capital investment of $1,328,110,000. New jobs for 15,616 have been created.

Todd has a rally at Sheffield scheduled Monday night.

Rep. Karl Harrison meanwhile warned against "the election of an inexperienced but big promise-maker as governor."

"I have not run around the state shouting a bunch of impossible-to-fill promises but have offered my record of accomplishments in evidence that I will continue to press forward with a vigorous program which will make Alabama a better place to live in," said Harrison.

UNMATCHED RECORD

"Twelve years in the Alabama House and Senate gives me an unmatched record in knowing not only what our state needs most but how best to answer these needs through a workable legislative program."

Harrison will be in North Alabama this week.

Rep. George Hawkins promised an audience at Geraldine that if elected governor he will "reapportion not just your legislature, but the state benefits that come from your tax dollar."

"The populated areas are carrying the tax load," he said in the North Alabama appearance, "but Black Belt politicians aren't giving you your fair share of the benefits."

"No governor from outside the populated sections of the state—and that includes not just north Alabama, but the wiregrass and the cities—has ever fought for reapportionment," Hawkins declared. His schedule for this week calls for 58 speeches.

Atty. Gen. John Patterson, also stumping through North Alabama, said he has proved as attorney general that he will fight organized crime and will preserve segregation laws in Alabama.

Patterson said he has stopped the National Assn. for Advancement of Colored People from operating in the state.

"I have fought continuously against loan sharks, gambling and illegal spending by the state government," he declared.

ORGANIZED VICE

"I will stamp out organized vice and crime wherever it exists or attempts to raise its head. Also, I will get the taxpayer his money's worth for the taxes paid and I will have an honest administration."

The gubernatorial candidate will be in Scottsboro Monday and DeKalb County Tuesday. He will attend the state Parent-Teacher Assn. meeting at Tuscaloosa Wednesday.

Circuit Judge George Wallace promised a crackdown on lottery racketeers in a week-end speech at Clanton.

"My name is on the bill as sponsor of the only measure passed in Alabama that ever put a single gangster out of business," Wallace said, "and that includes Phenix City gangsters."

EXPRESSWAY SYSTEM

Former U.S. Rep. Laurie Battle meanwhile promised Alabama a multi-million dollar system of expressways, hardtop roads "and more jobs for every section of the state."

Battle scheduled a Saturday night barbecue at Gardendale, north of Birmingham. He said his program "will be financed with the help of the multi-billion dollar federal highway program and will require a minimum outlay of capital by the state."

"It is a program designed to get Alabama in gear with the supersonic age and help stop needless slaughter on our highways," Battle added.

Patterson Renews Blast At Folsom

Atty. Gen. John Patterson continued his verbal onslaught against the Folsom administration here Saturday night but made no mention of "underhand activities" in his opponents' camps.

Patterson had said earlier in the week had implied that such information would be forthcoming at the Montgomery rally, and similar reports were made by spokesmen in his campaign headquarters.

The campaigning attorney general, however, stuck primarily to the general text of speeches he has delivered during the past few weeks of his bid for the governorship.

He accused the administration of Gov. James E. Folsom of wasting, "20 to 25 cents of each taxpayer's dollar." "It is being wasted, squandered . . . thrown to the winds," he declared.

The Alabama treasury, Patterson told a crowd gathered on the steps of the state capitol, reminded him "of a water bucket with holes in the bottom."

"You have to dip like mad to get a drink before it all runs out," he said. "That's our state treasury."

He said state funds were being used to buy fancy cars, air planes, yachts, cattle ranches and trips around the world for "friends of the administration."

"We need to cut out the padded contracts and the commissions paid on jobs done by political favorites," he continued. "With that done we'll have enough money in the state treasury to take care of higher teacher's salaries, higher old age pensions, better schools and roads."

Newspapers, he said, had criticized him for proposing $75 monthly payments to the aged. "Those same people were the ones who said we couldn't run the NAACP (National Association for the Advancement of Colored People) out of the state, and told us we couldn't beat loan sharks in a lawsuit because they were too powerful, but we did it," he said.

Patterson stood about two feet to the right of the bronze star marking the spot where Confederate President Jefferson Davis was sworn into office.

He paid tribute to the Southern leader and said he was humbled by the thought of standing on the "spot where Davis took his oath of office."

Patterson said gangsters and the NAACP were "pouring funds into the campaign against me."

The "gangsters and racketeers," he said, were putting money into the campaign, "because they know we'll run them out of the state," and that the NAACP stand came "because they know how I stand on segregation."

Motorcades were escorted into Montgomery from Dothan, Birmingham, Selma and Tuscaloosa police said.

Numbered in the crowd were Lamar Murphy, cleanup sheriff from Phenix City; Newt Rains of Cullman, former Folsom liquor salesman appointee and organizer of the "strawberry pickets," during Folsom's last campaign; and former State Sen. Joe Foster of Huntsville.

New Voters Register On Final Day

As expected, there was a rush of prospective new voters before the Talladega County Board of Registrars Monday.

This is the last day that registration boards in Alabama open their doors to prospective registrants before the May 6 primary.

About 50 persons had contacted the local board seeking to register in the first hour and a half the board was open, said Mrs. Thomas Cooley of Talladega. Mrs. Cooley is a board member.

Of the estimated 50, two were Negroes, Mrs. Cooley said.

Shealey Limbaugh of Childersburg is chairman of the county board of registrars.

Alabama Runoff Slated Tuesday

Wallace Claims Patterson Has KKK Support

TO SELECT GOVERNOR

By WILLIAM O. TOME
United Press International Staff

BIRMINGHAM, May 31.—Alabama Democrats determine the state's governor for the next four years in a runoff primary Tuesday and also will vote on a controversial loyalty oath carrying possible national implications for 1960.

Atty. Gen. John Patterson and Circuit Judge George Wallace, survivors of a 10-man field in the May 6 Democratic primary, are matched for the party gubernatorial nomination in this predominantly Democratic state to succeed Gov. James E. Folsom.

The loyalty oath battle is between its supporters among candidates for the state Democratic Executive Committee and their opponents, or states' righters. The oath demands a pledge of allegiance to both state and national party candidates and is opposed on grounds it could commit Alabama to supporting a pro-civil rights presidential candidate.

The states rights faction has won 32 of the 72 committee seats and is assured of another while the loyalists are sure of taking 29, leaving 10 in doubt.

Other Candidates

Voters will also choose a new lieutenant governor, with State Senators Albert Boutwell of Birmingham and E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa in the running, and a new secretary of state with State Representative Charles Mathews of Ashland paired against pretty housewife Bettye Frink of Birmingham.

The runoff will be the windup of what became an increasingly bitter campaign with Judge Wallace accusing his opponent of having Ku Klux Klan support.

Mr. Patterson, making his first actual race for statewide office—he had been nominated without opposition for attorney general—has concentrated since the primary on hand-shaking his way about the state, ignoring Wallace's charges.

The youthful attorney general, who like his opponent has not yet reached 40, admitted he knew a Robert Shelton of Tuscaloosa, who has been described as a Ku Klus Klan leader but denied he knew Shelton was affiliated with the Klan.

Other than that statement, Mr. Patterson has steered away from making any comment on Judge Wallace's accusation.

Judge Wallace, who managed Governor Folsom's campaign in 1954, made his pitch for anti-Folsom votes by stating that he had "broken" with the Governor three years ago and would eject any Folsom followers from office if elected.

Each has promised to uphold segregation during the next four years, which may be the most eventful in Alabama history as far as the race issue is concerned.

Cites NAACP Action

Mr. Patterson, who led the field in 46 of Alabama's 67 counties during the primary, points to his action in having the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People barred from operating in the state. That case is now under appeal to the United States Supreme Court.

Judge Wallace at one time said he would jail any FBI agent who might look into possible civil rights violations in his home county.

The loyalty oath, which has drawn almost as much interest as the race for the gubernatorial nomination, could affect Alabama's actions in the next presidential election year.

Should the states righters win, they could conceivably make their disapproval of any liberal Democratic candidate known by a revolt similar to that of the Dixiecrats in 1948, although they have disavowed any intention of bolting the party.

House record shows

Wallace has stiffened views on segregation

BY HUGH W. SPARROW, News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 1—Circuit Judge George Wallace, now running for governor in a substantial measure on a segregation platform, apparently has stiffened his views on the subject since he was in the Legislature.

During his service as Barbour County House member in 1951, the official House journal reveals, Judge Wallace voted to kill a pro-segregation amendment to the education appropriation bill.

The amendment was offered by Sen. Sam Engelhardt, and was backed by the Black Belt's House members almost to the man. Judge Wallace voted to table the amendment.

Amend Sec. 15 of H. B. 263 by adding the following:

"Provided, that if the Supreme Court of the United States renders any judgment or decision which effectually nullifies the requirements of Art. XIV of the constitution respecting separate schools for white and colored children this act shall be of no further force or effect, and it shall be unlawful for any person or officer to allot or pay any appropriation made herein after such judgment or decision has been rendered.

"On motion by Mr. Harrison of Shelby, the amendment offered by Mr. Engelhardt was laid upon the table; yeas 66, nays 25."

THE JOURNAL went on to identify those voting for and against the motion to table. Judge Wallace's name was listed among the 66 favoring tabling.

Late in January, 1951, the Legislature was called into special session. It was to consider legislation setting up a joint legislative committee to make a top-to-bottom investigation of the release of hundreds of hardened criminals from Alabama prisons on pardons and paroles in 1949 and 1950.

When the investigating committee bill finally reached the House floor, according to the journal, Judge Wallace became active.

He waged a stubborn, but losing, fight first to block passage of the bill and later on to weaken it.

The bill, however, was passed. An investigation which brought to light full details of the sordid story of the so-called pardon and parole scandals of 1949-50 was conducted.

Later on, during the regular session, the House passed a bill recommended by the investigating committee. It sought to strengthen the pardon and parole law so that a repetition of what happened in 1949 and 1950 could not happen again.

Judge Wallace, the record showed, voted against the bill.

DURING THE PAST 30 or more years many new and increased taxes have been imposed. But during the same period there has been but one bill passed giving the general public the benefit of a tax reduction. That was in 1951 when the Legislature passed the bill reducing the automobile license tag cost to $3.

Judge Wallace voted against the bill when it came up for House passage.

THE RECORD discloses also that when the House was considering the bill increasing the sales tax from 2 to 3 cents, Judge Wallace sought to put over several amendments. Some of them proposed to earmark certain amounts of the proposed new revenue for salary increases for classroom teachers.

When the bill itself came up for a final vote, Judge Wallace voted against it.

A previous story listed his voting on important or key measures in the 1949 and 1950 sessions.

This article deals exclusively with how Judge Wallace voted in 1951, which was his last session as a lawmaker.

Voting records of other candidates who have served in the Legislature will be given in later articles. They include former Sen. Jimmy Faulkner of Baldwin, Rep. George Hawkins of Etowah, and Rep. Karl Harrison of Shelby.

The voting record of Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd, when he represented Franklin, Marion and Colbert Counties in the 1951 and 1953 Senate, already has been given.

THE JOURNAL shows that Judge Wallace answered present on each opening roll call during the 1951 organizational and special session, and also during the regular session.

Bills he offered were, in some instances, similar to those he sponsored in 1947 and 1949.

He sponsored again legislation providing educational benefits to certain disabled veterans and dependents and survivors of veterans.

He offered bills prohibiting numbering of ballots, authorizing confiscation and destruction of pistols after a person has been convicted of carrying concealed weapons and prohibiting possession and transportation of lottery paraphernalia.

JUDGE WALLACE voted to raise pay of most of the Persons administration cabinet officers from $5700 to $10,000.

During the regular session Judge Wallace was present but did not vote on a resolution which would have raised pay of legislators from $20 to $25 a day.

He did not vote on a motion to elect members of the Building Commisison and members of the Committee on Public Accounts.

Judge Wallace voted to increase the gas tax in Montgomery 1 cent a gallon. He refrained from voting on H. 33 providing for the arrest and eradication of contagious and infectious diseases of animals.

He did not vote on a bill making a pscial appropriation of $10,000 for the Milk Control Board, or on H. 189 providing for payment of license taxes on a monthly declining basis.

He voted to reduce the powers and duties of justices of the peace. Although present, Wallace did not vote on H. 36 amending the Constitution to provide a state bonus for World War veterans.

The judge did not vote on S. 18 regulating operations of livestock markets, and he refrained from voting on H. 241 promoting the poultry industry.

On a House Joint Resolution calling for relief from federal income taxation he refrained from voting.

When the House was considering a bill raising pay of all county commissioners, Judge Wallace voted for an amendment increasing the amount of the boost. When the bill came up for passage he did not vote.

He voted for all amendments to H. 325 regulating insurance brokers and salesmen. On the bill itself he voted "no."

Judge Wallace voted for H. 274 doubling cost of automobile drivers' licenses and he tried to get the House ways and means committee to make an immediate report to the House on H. 511, adding a 3 per cent tax on the retail price of alcoholic liquors.

Along with 72 others, Judge Wallace voted acceptance of a major amendment to H. 277 increasing and extending the powers of the barber commission. But on passage, he refrained from voting.

Also he did not vote on H. 427 proposing a heavier penalty for those found guilty of driving motor vehicles while under drivers' license suspension.

THE JUDGE did not vote on H. 61 providing legal counsel for the chief examiner of public accounts, or on H. 169 requiring all foreign corporations doing business in Alabama to maintain an office in this state.

On a bill requiring the listing in each county of all persons receiving public assistance Judge Wallace refrained from voting on it. Also he did not vote on H. 178 requiring parental consent for sons under 21 to wed.

A bill exempting from the sales tax merchandise sold by vending machines received a favorable vote from Judge Wallace.

On H. 773 proposing to reimburse ABC Board members of a former administration on a financial claim he did not vote.

Along with Reps. Hawkins of Etowah and Fite of Marion, Judge Wallace sponsored an amendment to the educational appropriation bill earmarking $600 each for across-the-board annual pay increase for school teachers.

Later he voted aye on an amendment sponsored by Reps. Miller and Hawkins of Etowah—along with virtually the entire House—giving teachers an annual pay increase of $300 a year.

ON ANOTHER OCCASION Judge Wallace voted against tabling HJR 95 calling for a "thorough investigation" of the financial poliices of the Auburn and University of Alabama athletic departments. The resolution lost, 57 to 15.

On H. 908, exempting certain property from ad valorem taxation, Judge Wallace did not vote on an amendment exempting property of fraternal organizations.

During consideration of S. 413, Judge Wallace offered an amendment providing for a House of 173 members with no county having fewer than two members nor more than 14.

On H. 918, another bill relating to legislative reapportionment, Judge Wallace refrained from voting. Also he did not vote on H. 245, tightening the law on drivers licenses.

Judge Wallace voted against HJR 122 calling on Alabama's congressional delegation to oppose efforts of the Price Stabilization Office in Washington to reduce price of beef cattle.

He voted against pay raises for deputy circuit solicitors and the state superintendent of education. He did not vote on the bill raising pay of circuit solocitors.

Judge Wallace voted against an appropriation for the Alabama Real Estate Commission.

He was present but did not vote on H. 444, requiring the immunization of dogs against rabies.

Also he failed to vote on S. 284, increasing pay of court reporters.

Bills increasing pay of circuit judges and abolishing bills of exception received a negative vote from Judge Wallace.

Judge Wallace refrained from voting on H. 754 exempting from taxation crushed limestone when used for fertilizer. He did not vote on a bill making it a special offense to sell infected hogs.

Judge Wallace voted against indefinite postponement of S. 385 outlawing bargain sales of cigarets. He later refrained from voting when the bill was passed.

14 IN ALABAMA RUNNING FOR GOVERNORSHIP

Predict June Runoff for Primary Leaders

Birmingham, Ala., May 4 (Special)—A near record field of 14 candidates for governor is entered for the Alabama Democratic primary Tuesday. A runoff June 3 for the two leaders in the primary is considered almost a certainty.

In 1954 Gov. James E. Folsom squeezed in without a runoff against a similarly bulky field, but none of the present candidates are conceded the vote getting abilities of the 6 foot 8 inch Folsom.

A governor may not succeed himself.

Considered front runners in the race for the nomination that is tantamount to election are James Faulkner, a weekly newspaper publisher; George Wallace, a circuit judge; John Patterson, state attorney general, son of Albert Patterson, whose assassination touched off the Phenix City gambling and vice cleanup in 1954, and A. W. Todd, state commissioner of agriculture who was handpicked by Gov. Folsom for that post in 1954 after the Democratic nominee had died.

Among other candidates is Karl Harrison, a state representative who was administration floor leader in the House during the 1951-55 term of Gov. Gordon Persons.

The field also includes State Rep. George Hawkins of Gadsden, who has a pro-labor voting record; Laurie Battle of Birmingham, who gave up a seat in Congress to run unsuccessfully against Sen. John Sparkman in 1954; Jack Owen, chairman of the Alabama Public Service commission, and Adm. John Crommelin [ret.].

All Back Segregation

There are few issues in the campaign. On the question of segregation the candidates differ only in degree, all being for it.

Patterson, as attorney general, has kept up a steady legal attack upon the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. He also gained public notice by a series of injunction suits against alleged loan "shark" practices in the state and has fought alleged abuses in state buying by members of the Folsom administration.

Todd has devoted as much time to attacking Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson as he has to telling the voters what he plans to do for the state.

Adm. Crommelin has been attacking what he calls a "Jewish-Communist" conspiracy to take over the nation.

Committee Race Hot

Rivals for the nomination for lieutenant governor are E. W. Skidmore, Albert Boutwell, and Sam Englehardt, all state senators. The latter two are ardent segregationists.

There are heated races for election Tuesday to the state Democratic executive committee. The issue is whether to retain or discard the "loyalty oath" that put on Alabama Democrats the obligation to support any national party ticket or platform. With opposing slates in each congressional district, the outcome appears to be a toss-up. It is sufficiently close, however, to draw Sen. Sparkman back to the state to bolster the pro-oath adherents.

Registration all over the state has increased in the last year and about 900,000 voters are on the rolls. Negro registration has increased faster than white registration but registration records make accurate figures for the races difficult to reach.

Patterson, Labor Differ

The state AFL-CIO has indorsed all of the leading candidates for governor except Patterson. He reportedly told labor leaders that he would not pledge himself to call for repeal of the state's right-to-work law if he was elected, declaring that to be a matter for the legislature to deal with.

Altho Gov. Folsom announced last year that he and his wife were going on a tour of the Holy Land during this year's campaign, he has stuck pretty close to the state.

However, he is apparently taking no active part in the campaign.

Folsom defends his selection

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 26 Gov. James E. Folsom, in a prepared statement issued Sunday night, said he appointed Arch Ferrell of Phenix City as circuit solicitor on the recommendation of the late Sen. A. L. Patterson.

Folsom's statement also listed what he described as 10 accomplishments of his administration and stated, "The candidate I voted for is out of the race. I have religiously tried to stay out of the race and will continue to do so."

Folsom said he doesn't know what his critics mean by Folsomism but that he considers it no reflection on his two administrations.

"I have worked hard, have done the best of my ability and am proud of the record," he said.

HE STRESSED particularly in his statement aid to old people and a multi-million-dollar road building program.

"If this be Folsomism, make the most of it," he said. "I hope the next governor of Alabama does half as much for the people of Alabama."

The governor said he appointed Ferrell on the written recommendation of Patterson who served in the Legislature during Folsom's first term.

Patterson was shot to death outside his Phenix City law office shortly after winning the Democratic nomination for attorney general in May, 1954. He had campaigned on an anti-vice platform.

His murder touched of a vice cleanup campaign that ran most of the gamblers and vice leaders out of Phenix City.

Ferrell later was tried and acquitted on a charge of killing Patterson. Former Deputy Sheriff Albert Fuller was tried for the same crime and convicted. He is now serving a life sentence.

Former Atty. Gen. Si Garrett who was just going out of office at the time and who supported Patterson's opponent in the election, was also indicted on a charge of murdering the former senator but he has never been tried.

Plans For The Run-Off

What plans do our political action leaders have for spurring the fullest turnout of voters for the June 3 run-off? This question we cannot answer. Obviously apathy, indifference, and complacency have set in.

It should be made clear that the run-off of the first Democratic Primary is important. Also it needs to be stressed that almost every election of public officers in Alabama provides hardly more than a choice between the lesser of evils. To a degree this is the case with life itself.

Our group has come about the ballot the hard way. No opportunity should be missed to use it no matter what the situation. To realize this is to do more than the voter's civic, patriotic, and social duty. Democracy works best when voters use their ballots in the biggest numbers.

It is true that the innovation of ragtime politics into Alabama has reduced campaigning almost to a festival of singing. The harps of hate are sounded by those who cater to ugly emotion. It is left to the voters to put sense into the campaign.

Our civic and community leaders need to attack the creeping indifference toward the June 3 run-off. To do this they should consider door-to-door campaigning. The run-off should not be allowed to go by default.

The June 3 run-off has developed into an importance which overshadows the earlier primary. A way must be found to get this over to the voters and get them to vote in the run-over primary.

How can our civic and community leaders approach the problem of solving apathy toward the run-off? First, the run-off of the initial primary carries the same essentials. Those elected in the Democratic primary in Alabama have it made insofar as the general election. Hence the voters job is in the Democratic primary if he wants to make himself heard, felt and considered. Make no mistake about this.

No voter wastes his ballot when he casts it. On the contrary the only voter who wastes his ballot is the one who doesn't use it.

JUDGE REPORTS $41,299

Wallace, Patterson File Campaign Expense Lists

Judge George C. Wallace reported Monday to the secretary of state that he had expended $41,299 in the primary campaign for governor in which he qualified for the runoff.

John Patterson, who led the ticket May 6, reported his total in first election expenses was $29,482.

Both candidates for governor filed post-election expense accounts Monday, indicating the total amount expended and amount contributed to them in the first primary. They must later report on their runoff expenses and contributions.

Wallace, running up May 6, claimed expenses of $29,001 and contributions of $27,501 on his post-election report. These totals, in addition to the amounts reported on the pre-election itemization, brought Wallace's total expenses to $41,299 and total contributions to $40,501.

Patterson, in addition to reporting considerably less in expenses, also reported fewer contributions. His pre-election report listed $26,292 in expenses to which was added $3,189 Monday for the total of $29,482.

He reported total contributions of $31,771.

Among Wallace's major expenses was $9,000 paid to the Jim Denny Artist Bureau, presumably for the services of entertainer Minnie Pearl. Previously, $1,200 had been paid this same organization.

Other major Wallace expendi-

If it exists—

Wallace vows he'll jail corrupt

BY CLANCY LAKE, News staff writer

ATHENS, Ala., May 20—"If you elect George Wallace your governor and he finds that they have been stealing 25 cents out of every dollar at Montgomery, someone is going to Kilby Prison."

This is what the Barbour County judge, who is running off a Democratic primary for governor June 3 with John Patterson, attorney general of the state, told North Alabama crowds yesterday and last night.

LAKE

"Some folks should be in Kilby right now, if the chief law enforcement officer of the State of Alabama's statements are true," the Barbour judge told large turnouts in Tuscumbia, Florence and Athens.

"IF YOU ELECT me your governor I will find out if there has been stealing of state funds, and I pledge you, no matter who they are, they will be indicted and sent to Kilby Prison," the Clayton jurist said.

"I don't know whether there has been stealing or not," Judge Wallace said. "I haven't been in a position to find out. But I will find out if I am governor. If John Patterson's charges are true either the new attorney general or the governor's legal aid will see that indictments are brought and someone goes to jail."

He was applauded heavily on his pledge to "send someone to jail." He also drew applause with his statements on TVA, reapportionment, and a promise that at least one half of his new cabinet would be made up of North Alabamians.

The Clayton judge, at each stop, has reviewed Atty. Gen Patterson's statements that 25 cents out of each dollar sent to Montgomery has been stolen. Wallace said this amounts to more that $91 million a year.

"IF THAT IS RIGHT, someone should have been doing something about it, and it should have been my opponent, who is the chief law enforcement officer of the state," Wallace said.

Judge Wallace told the crowds that "enemies of TVA are fighting George Wallace." he said he helped raise money for citizens of TVA during the Dixon-Yates [illegible].

He repeated his pledge to seek reapportionment of the state Legislature and said, "If I'm not elected you are not going to have reapportionment during the next four years."

The judge promised "special dollar consideration" in highway and road construction in the hilly and mountainous sections of Alabama. He said it cost more to build roads in those areas and "they should not be penalized because of it."

WALLACE DREW heavy applause with his promise to maintain segregation in the schools through peaceful means.

The judge made scheduled stops at Huntsville this morning, New Hope at 2 p.m., Scottsboro at 4 p.m. Bryant at 5:30 p.m. and the Plainview School at Rainsville at 7:30 p.m.

Tomorrow he will be at Centre at 9 a.m., Piedmont at 1 p.m., Jacksonville at a time to be announced, Anniston at 3:30 p.m., and at a Talladega barbecue some time after that.

In Primary Campaign—

Wallace Spent $41,299; Patterson $29,482

MONTGOMERY, May 19 (AP)—Circuit Judge George C. Wallace reported today he had expended $41,299 in the primary campaign for governor in which he qualified for the runoff.

John Patterson, who led the ticket May 6, reported his first election expenses totaled $29,482.

Both candidates for governor filed post-election expense accounts with the secretary of state's office today, indicating the total amount expended and the amount contributed to them in the first primary. They must later report their runoff expenses and contributions.

Wallace showed expenses of $29,001 and contributions of $27,507 on his post-election report. These totals, in addition to the amounts reported on the pre-election itemization, brought Wallace's total expenses to $41,229 and total contributions to $40,592.

Patterson's pre-election report listed $26,292 in expenses to which was added $3189 Monday for the total of $29,482.

He reported total contributions of $31,771.

Among Wallace's major expenses was $9000 paid to the Jim Denny Artist Bureau, presumably for the services of entertainer Minnie Pearl. Previously, $1,200 had been paid this same organization.

Other major Wallace expenditures included Tennille and Tuttle, $5500; Charles R Bryant Agenty, $3200; Lowery-Premier Co., $4358; Dale Stone (organist), $2000; telephone $2257; and miscellaneous expenses, $1020.

Major contributors to Wallace were Norman Smith, $2000; John Gadd, $1000; Al Lingo and J. A. Carter, $500 each; J. B. Curtis, $250; Ed Lowder, H. L. Adams, Charles E. York and F. W. Freeman, $200 each, and the following $100 contributors:

Patterson Bids For Farm Vote In Handshaking Tour

By BOB INGRAM

Atty. Gen. John Patterson made a bid for the farm vote Thursday as he carried his handshaking tour into Franklin County.

In a statement issued from his Birmingham headquarters, the gubernatorial candidate warned that "Alabama cannot be prosperous if our farm people are not making a profit."

"I want to assure you that, as your governor, I will work continuously to improve the living and working conditions of the Alabama farmer and see that he has a market for his products and that he gets a fair price for his products," Patterson said.

His pitch for the farm vote came 24 hours after George Wallace had directed his attention to the same group. Wallace had promised to create a State Marketing Board with the chairman to have cabinet status.

Patterson's handshaking tour carried him into Russellville, Phil Campbell, Cherokee and Red Bay Thursday. Friday he will make a similar tour of Marshall County which will be climaxed with his first runoff campaign speech in Albertville Friday night. He speaks to a meeting of the Poultry Producers Assn. Saturday he will tour Madison County and speak at a rally in Huntsville Saturday night.

In another development Thursday, the Decatur Daily reported it had polled both gubernatorial candidates and found them both pledged to legislative reapportionment.

In a questionnaire sent out by the newspaper, both candidates were asked a series of questions relating to legislative reapportionment, both insisting they favored such legislation.

Two of the questions proposed specific formula for reapportionment, spelling out how much representation each county would have. Wallace announced his approval of these plans while Patterson said he favored reapportionment but could not endorse either plan until he had time to study them.

"I want to assure you that I will support and use the full power of the governor's office to push the passage of any measure or constitutional amendment to bring about a reapportionment of the Legislature," Patterson said.

BACK TO COURT

Patterson Renews Fight Against NAACP Friday

Montgomery Advertiser p-5B

BY REX THOMAS

Atty. Gen. John Patterson, newly nominated for governor, goes back into court next Friday in a renewed attack on what he calls racial agitators in Alabama.

He will try to show that the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People is still active despite a two - year - old court injunction which ordered the NAACP to stop doing business in the state.

Jun. 6-15-58

Meanwhile, the attorney general is waiting for a ruling in still another court suit against Negro leaders—his request for a permanent injunction in the mass boycott of white merchants at Tuskegee.

Montgomery Ala.

The new attack on the NAACP will be heard in Montgomery where Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones in 1956 enjoined the Negro organization from operating in Alabama and fined the NAACP $100,000 for refusing to produce its membership lists and other records.

In his original complaint, Patterson accused the Negro group of doing business in Alabama without registering as an out-of-state corporation.

He also charged the NAACP with fomenting attacks on segregation laws, and said, "we cannot stand idly by and raise no hand to stay these forces of confusion who are trying to capitalize upon social factors for private gain or advancement."

The injunction order and heavy fine have been appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court.

Two months ago, Patterson went into court again, accusing the NAACP of continuing to function under a different name. He identified the new organization as the Alabama State Coordinating Assn. for Registration and Voting.

The attorney gentral asked the court for contempt citations against two organizers of the co-ordinating association, W. C. Patton of Birmingham and William P. Mitchell of Tuskegee. Patton was state president of the NAACP at the time of the injunction two years ago.

Patterson said the "stated purpose of the association is to act for the NAACP while it is banned in Alabama."

The attorney general has submitted his case against still another Negro organization, the Tuskegee Civic Assn., in an announced effort to stop the year-old boycott in Tuskegee.

Circuit Judge Will O. Walton, who heard the testimony, has the matter under advisement. Meanwhile, a temporary injunction issued last year is still in force pending a decision on the state's request for a permanent restraining order.

The injunction prohibits members of followers of tht TCA from using force, threats or intimidation to keep other Negroes from trading with white merchants in Tuskegee.

Patterson sought to show in court that the civic association was leading the boycott, but officers of the organization denied it.

The boycott began last year in protest against passage of a legislative act which virtually put a stop to Negro voting in Tuskegee where white residents are outnumbered 7-3.

By rearranging the boundaries, the Legislature left 400 Negro voters outside the city limits. The 600 white voters there were unaffected by the change.

Education Woes Facing Patterson

Montgomery Advertiser p-3B

BY BOB INGRAM

When John Patterson sits down for the first time in the governor's chair next Jan. 19, he will automatically inherit what is perhaps the most familiar of all state problems — the chronic financial ills of education.

Education is already in a bad way in Alabama, financially, and every indication is that its condition will be even worse next January.

Jun. 6-15-58

It's well nigh impossible to place the blame of education's troubles at anybody's feet. The 1957 Legislature perhaps went overboard in appropriating $117 million for education this year and $119 million next year; revenue officials missed the mark in predicting school taxes would yield that much; and finally, education leaders may have been over-eager in asking for that much.

Montgomery Ala.

But the question at stake is not who is to blame but instead how the problem can be solved. And Patterson is the man who will be expected to solve it.

Last week, for the second consecutive year, the school appropriation was slashed. Finance Director Ed Pepper ordered a $10 million cutback after it became obvious the school taxes now imposed would not yield the $117 million appropriated.

A year ago it was the same story, but not quite so drastic. The proration put into effect then was 2.75 per cent, which in dollars and cents meant that education got 97.5 cents for each dollar appropriated.

What the situation will be for the 1958-1959 fiscal year, which begins Oct. 1, is pure speculation. But state revenue officials admit privately that they cannot conceive of the school taxes producing the $119 million which the Legislature appropriated to education.

And this is where Patterson will come into the picture. The pinch expected in the coming year will probably not be felt until after Patterson takes office and teachers will be looking to him for an answer.

Patterson was nominated governor without ever getting very specific about the needs of education. In fact, his only statement on the question was that by "plugging up the holes in the treasury" he could put Alabama's schools on par with those in adjoining states.

The stopper applied in these same holes, Patterson promised, would also bring about $75 a month for Alabama's aged needy as well as finance an expanded road building program.

Patterson did say he planned to give consideration and study to the report on education now being prepared by the Alabama Education Commission (created by the Lackey-Edwards bill.)

This commission, which numbers among its members an impressive array of business, labor, education and lay talent, has been at work on its report for months. Still undisclosed is what it will recommend toward providing the additional funds which education insists it needs.

Patterson's Mum On Cabinet Jobs

Montgomery Advertiser p-3B

By Bob Ingram

JOHN PATTERSON, the strong but silent type i politics, must be laughing up his sleeve at th wild speculation going on about who will do wha n his administration.

Jun. 6-15-58

The quieter Patteron gets about his appointments, and to date he's shown a remarkable talent for doing just that, the wilder the speculation will get.

Montgomery Ala.

It's quite likely Patterson himself doesn't know as yet who he will name to the various cabinet and legislative posts of leadership. But while he waits the speculators are having a field day.

INGRAM

First, there's the choice plum of House Speaker. This is one of the most vital spots in any administration, one which Patterson will not fill until he is absolutely sure of his man.

Although Patterson himself may not know this, the race for speaker has been boiled down by the "experts" into a three-man field. The runners are Sen. (Rep.-nominee) Joe Smith of Phenix City, Rep. Virgis Ashworth of Centreville and Rep. Charles Adams of Alexander City.

Late Converts

ACTUALLY only two of these men were with Patterson all the way. Adams favored Faulkner in the primary, Gilchrist was Morgan County campaign manager for Karl Harrison, and Hanby went along with his hometown House college, George Hawkins.

However, all three joined nobody but the people in the second go round.

Ashworth and Smith were with Patterson all the way. They will be entitled to veterans' preference, and this bonus might make the difference.

Oakley and his paper were the first to come out for Patterson. No stranger to state political maneuverings, Oakley is very close to the next governor. And one of his claims to fame is that in his editorial endorsement of the attorney general he used the phrase that "nobody's for Patterson but the people." This slogan played no small part in Patterson's smashing victory.

Oakley says he wants nothing in Montgomery, but it's no secret he would like to see his Centreville cohort, Ashworth, as speaker of the House.

Smith, a capable member of the present Senate, was equally as strong for Patterson. His brother, attorney Roy Smith, was a big contributor to the Patterson campaign fund.

Too Close To Home

AND SMITH is possibly better equipped to be speaker, or to phrase it in reverse, Ashworth might be better suited for floor eader. The only disadvantage to Smith being speaker is that most governors shy away from having a home town associate in this position.

Adams, despite his arrival in the Patterson camp only for the econd coming, is nonetheless a strong candidate for the speaker-hip.

His long suit is his legislative experience in which he has eniority over both Smith and Ashworth who are freshmen. Adams s also an able, clever maneuverer, which is a must for the peaker.

While the names of Hanby and Gilchrist have also been mentioned, it seems doubtful at this stage that either is in line for speaker. The same holds true for Rep. Emmett Oden of Russellville, one of the first men to be mentoned.

Oden was with Todd in the primary, but worked in Patterson eadquarters during the runoff. For that matter, so did Bullock County Rep. M. B. McLendon. These men will certainly be active for Patterson in the House, but neither is likely to be peaker.

Sen. Ralph Jones of Monroeville, who served as a page in he House in 1911 and will serve in that body next year, was also nentioned at one time as a speaker possibility. But Jones, while dmittedly flattered, he indicated he doesn't expect to take such n active role.

The question of Senate leadership is completely up in the ai. K. (Snag) Andrews of Union Springs, nominee to the Senate will certainly be a Patterson power. In his shadow will be Sen. E. O. Eddins of Marengo, Sen. Roland Cooper of Wilcox and Sen. Walker Givhan of Dallas.

Carvel (Bud) Woodall of Tallassee also a Senator-to-be and a ormer member of the upper chamber, may be in the front ranks of the Patterson group in the Senate.

Another newcomer to the Senate will be Yetta Samford of Opelika, who will unquestionably be a Patterson spokesman. He s a close personal friend of Patterson's. They were law school classmates.

Kaul For Conservation

AS TO THE cabinet posts, the most frequently mentioned possibility—and one which has won nothing but praise—has been hat of Rep. Hugh Kaul of Birmingham as Conservation Department director.

Kaul gave up his House seat from Jefferson County this spring after 20 years of outstanding service. Having been connected with he timber industry for years, and profitably so, Kaul has a deep nterest in conservation. Of equal importance, he was a Patterson man.

Former State Sen. Bruce Henderson of Wilcox, twice a candidate for governor himself, has been mentioned as a possible cabinet member. Initially he was listed for the key Finance Director's job but of late his name has been connected with the Revenue Department.

If Henderson is offered a post, it's likely to be head of the Revenue Department. The choice Finance Director plum is Charles Meriwether's for the asking, or so say those who claim o know.

Meriwether, for those who have forgoten, is the mysterious narvel who directed Patterson's campaign.

Sen. Sam Engelhardt of Macon is in line for something, but just what is anybody's guess. His endorsement of Patterson late in he runoff didn't hurt either Patterson or himself.

Brooks For Labor

OLIN BROOKS, a representative of the Railroad Brotherhoods in the Legislature, reportedly has the Labor Department director's seat locked up tight.

Patterson promised from the stump way back in the days he was stumping that he would appoint "good organized labor men" to the Labor Department and Industrial Relations Department posts.

Brooks certainly meets the qualifications outlined by Patterson.

No mention has been made to this point of Joe Robertson's role in the new administration. It has been taken for granted hat Robertson will be executive secretary. He is currently Patterson's administrative assistant.

One-time Adj. Gen. Walter J. (Crack) Hanna may figure in Patterson's cabinet. After going on active duty for Faulkner in he primary, Gen. Hanna jumped on the Patterson bandwagon in he second primary.

Former Highway Director Guerry Pruett has also been linked with the Patterson people. And a place will probably be made n the Highway Department for County Engineer Blake Livingston of Blount, who worked overtime in Patterson's behalf.

Hunter Phillips, the pistol-packing Opelika man, certainly earned a Patterson letter during the campaign. His name hasn't been associated with any particular position but probably most any under the dome is his for the asking.

Seeing Double

THERE'S BOUND to be some confusion when the new House convenes in 1959. Included in the membership are two Reynolds, two Lockes, two Smiths, two Jones, two Johnsons and a Johnston, a McLendon and a McClendon, and worst of all, two Adams named Charlie . . . with one election just completed, talk of another has already started.

Rep. Joe Dawkins of Montgomery, defeated in a bid for reelection, has already been mentioned as a potential candidate for either mayor or police commissioner in next Spring's city election. Dawkins insists he's not interested and has no intention of running for any city office.

Patterson Erects Wall Of Silence

ALBERTVILLE, Ala. — Patterson took a step perhaps unprecedented in Alabama political history here Friday when he declared he would make no further statements to the press during the final 10 days of the runoff.

Patterson's decision to erect this wall of silence between himself and the press was announced from this city atop Sand Mountain, where he met a group of Marshall County poultry producers Friday night.

The attorney general resumed his campaign of silence after claiming that newspapers against him would twist whatever he said to misrepresent him, either by misquoting or misleading headlines.

Presumably the Patterson press boycott includes newspapers which are supporting him, such as the Birmingham Post-Herald.

DETERMINED SILENCE

Patterson had maintained a determined silence during the runoff campaign until confronted by an Advertiser reporter in Clanton Wednesday and asked point blank about his relationships with Grand Dragon R. M. (Bobby) Shelton of the Ku Klux Klan.

When the story of the Patterson-KKK link first broke in The Advertiser the attorney general was in California for a television appearance. Asked for comment by a Los Angeles Times reporter, Patterson claimed he "didn't know anybody named Shelton."

However, when interviewed Wednesday in Clanton, Patterson insisted he had been asked "if I knew a Klansman named Shelton and I said I did not."

But he reversed himself again here Friday, telling a Birmingham News reporter that he had told the Los Angeles newsman that he did know Shelton.

Patterson's edict of no meeting with the press was in full force here Friday night. While his meeting with the poultry dealers had been publicized earlier as a campaign speech—his first of the runoff—the event here at the Country Club was sealed off from the press.

'SOME MISUNDERSTANDING'

John H. Livingston, Albertville poultry dealer, said there had been "some misunderstanding" about the meeting.

"This was to be a private gathering where we could sit down and talk with Patterson and see where he stands," Livingston explained. "I don't know how the publicity got out that this was to be a public meeting."

Livingston said he and two other men were financing the dinner and meeting and after consulting with them he called back to announce that the dinner would not be open to the press. It was not known, however, whether Patterson had anything to do with the decision which closed the door to reporters.

Patterson spent all of Friday in Marshall County on a handshaking tour and will move into Madison County Saturday where he speaks to a rally at the Optimist Ball Park at 7 p.m.

FRIDAY SPEECHES

In speeches Friday the candidate said that the lessons he learned from his slain father have made him determined to take "strong, effective" action to remedy school problems if he becomes governor.

He recalled that his father, the late Albert Patterson, was a school teacher before he turned to law practice.

"From him," the candidate said, "I learned and took to heart the vital truth that 'an educated citizenry is a state's greatest asset' . . . when I become governor I will launch a program of strong, effective action to solve the urgent problems of our schools and colleges."

The elder Patterson was killed June 18, 1954, after winning the Democratic nomination for attorney general on a promise to ride Phenix City of its vice, John Patterson ultimately became the state's chief legal officer in his father's place.

Patterson said he will "Put first things first" in his educational program, such as increased teacher salaries. "We must recognize," he said, "that it takes good teachers to make good schools. We cannot continue losing ours to other states who can pay them more."

He also promised an expanded building program and more financial help for institutions of higher learning.

400,000 are expected to go to polls

BY FRED TAYLOR
News staff writer

Backers of Atty. Gen. John Patterson and Circuit Court Judge George Wallace were confident of victory Saturday as they brought their runoff bids for governor within 48 hours of Tuesday's second Democratic primary voting climax.

Birmingham

Patterson and his supporters, bolstered by bandwagon riders, banked on his first primary lead of 34,424 votes to help carry him to victory.

BUT BACKERS of the hard-hitting Judge Wallace, who has been waging a slashing, bare-knuckles campaign, feel he has a good chance of overtaking the front-running Patterson.

TAYLOR

Judge Wallace, 38, a former legislator from Barbour County, and Patterson, 36, who has served three and one-half years as attorney general, are the two youngest candidates ever to fight it out for the Alabama governorship in a runoff. They landed in the runoff by leading a field of 14 candidates in the May 6 first primary.

400,000 vote seen

MORE THAN 618,000 votes were cast in the first election. But with many local races already have been settled over the state, observers believe the second primary turnout will be considerably less — probably ranging from 350,000 to 400,000.

Alabama Democrats also will decide two other statewide races in the runoff.

One is that between State Sen. Albert Boutwell of Jefferson and State Sen. E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa for lieutenant governor. Both are attorneys.

Here again, supporters of both were hopeful of victory.

Sen. Boutwell led Sen. Skidmore by 53,973 votes in the five-candidate first primary race.

Frink vs. Mathews

THE OTHER statewide runoff was between State Rep. Pete Mathews of Clay, and Mrs. Bettye Frink of Leeds.

Rep. Mathews, Ashland attorney, led her by more than 10,000 votes in a six-candidate first primary race.

Supporters of Mathews likewise were confident of runoff victory, as were those of Mrs. Frink.

Boutwell statement

SEN. BOUTWELL said that "Continuation of my service on the House-Senate committee to preserve segregation on all fronts in Alabama is the big reason why I hope the people of our state will honor me with their vote Tuesday for lieutenant governor."

Boutwell was co-author and chief sponsor of the "freedom of choice" amendment to help assure that segregation will be maintained in Alabama schools.

Sen. Boutwell also helped rewrite and steer through the student placement law. Concerning this, he said:

"Although three federal judges, in a unanimous decision on May 9, upheld the Alabama School Placement Law, we must remain alert, watchful and ready to meet further attacks on our way of life."

Boutwell grateful

He added that "my friends throughout the state assure me that the lead of 53,973 votes which our people gave me in the first primary will be substantially increased in the run-off election. For this, I am deeply grateful."

"As lieutenant governor," continued Sen. Boutwell, "I will work closely with our next governor to maintain sound, thrifty and progressive government in Alabama. In appointing committees of our state Senate, I will seek as members those who have shown their dedication to our state's continuing advancement and their sincere concern for the welfare of all citizens."

SEN. SKIDMORE, whose campaign was interrupted two days ago by death of a brother-in-law in Tennessee, was due back in Alabama Saturday night to push his bid for votes.

Skidmore, who is strongly opposed to the right-to-work law, again got the backing of the Alabama Labor Council (AFL-CIO), which had endorsed him in the first primary. The labor organization lauded the Tuscaloosa senator as "a leader in the fight for better schools, in support of a better hospital program and in the fight for a more equitable tax program."

Sen. Skidmore has pounded Sen. Boutwell for his support of the right-to-work law, calling Boutwell "a tool of big Birmingham corporations, which would like to gain control of the state government through the lieutenant governor's chair."

In whamming away at Boutwell, Skidmore said "the lieutenant governor's rave cannot be considered a battle of personalities, but rather a battle to decide whether the working man and the farmer are going to have their say, or whether the big utility corporations, which are backing my opponent, are going to use the office of lieutenant governor to hige their rates and do as they see fit."

Governor's race

IN THE GUBERNATORIAL runoff, charges of renewed Ku Klux Klan political activity in behalf of Patterson have been made by Judge Wallace.

Grand Dragon Robert Shelton of Tuscaloosa was found visiting Patterson's Molton Hotel headquarters, but he dodged a a reporter and photographer.

It also was revealed that Patterson used Shelton's name in a letter soliciting voter support and referring to Shelton as a "mutual friend."

Patterson, who at first was quoted as denying that he knew Shelton, later acknowledged an acquaintance with Shelton, but insisted he did not know he was a Klan leader.

The attorney general also renewed his charges that "law violators, racketeers, gangsters or whatever you want to call them," were opposing him.

Wallace Continues To Attack 'Lax' Defense Of Integration

By GEORGE PRENTICE
Advertiser Staff Writer

CHILDERSBURG — Judge George C. Wallace Friday continued his blast at what he termed "laxness" in the legal defense against integration in Alabama.

In the only two cases where integration became a reality in the state, Alabama failed to defend itself, he said.

"The only man in Alabama government who could have come to the defense of his state did not even offer to do so when buses were integrated in Montgomery and Autherine Lucy enrolled at the University of Alabama," he said.

That man, he said, was "Atty. Gen. John Patterson," his opponent in the race for governor.

Wallace spoke Friday at Opelika, Dadeville, Alexander City, and Childersburg before going on to Birmingham where he was scheduled to appear before television film cameras.

The Clayton jurist also charged his opponent with "failure to indict, prosecute or jail the many persons he says are guilty of stealing money from the state treasury."

"If it isn't too late when I get to Montgomery, I will see that someone is prosecuted—if they are guilty of the crimes my opponent says they are."

In answer to charges made in what Wallace described as a "Smear sheet," the judge appealed to voters to maintain peace and fair play in the governor's race.

He had been accused, he said, of being an integrationist because he put a Negro on probation, and because he voted against a school abolition bill in the Legislature in 1951.

The probation, granted in his Third Judicial Circuit court, was a deserved "grant of freedom," he said. The school abolition bill, according to the judge, provided for closure of all educational facilities if "even one little school 300 miles from here were threatened with integration."

Such a bill, he said, would destroy Alabama's school system "and we do not want to let that crowd bring destruction to something we've worked so hard to build."

Wallace was received warmly at all of his stops Friday, some of them in his opponent's home territory. Several hundred people were gathered at each stop to hear him speak.

Before speaking at Alexander City, the judge stopped off at Avondale Mills where he shook hands with mid-day shoppers at the mill's business center.

He was preceded to the speaker's stand at each stop by Grand Ole Opry's Minnie Pearl and Curley Brooks and his Western Rockers. During the past few days, under the boiling hot sun, entertainers have taken a literal beating as they laid the groundwork for the speaker.

Crowds Friday were considerably larger than they had been earlier in the week as many persons from the rural areas came to town to close out the week.

Wallace has received ovations for his references on the integration charges, and for his accusations against the handling of "state treasury leakage."

Among other things, he continued to propose reapportionment of the state Legislature, programs for higher educational standards and better facilities, better working conditions for the laboring man, and increased pensions for the aged.

He again attacked the editorial endorsement by South Magazine of Patterson. The publication was described as "anti-labor, anti-TVA, and anti-everything that you and I stand for."

"South Magazine in Birmingham hates every man who works. It has fought the benefits of working man for years," he said.

Wallace again told his audiences that he would use the prestige of the governor's office in getting federal assistance to invoke portions of the Reciprocal Trade Act "to save the state's textile industry."

Wallace will speak Saturday at Guntersville, 10 a.m.; Albertville, about noon; Boaz, 2 p.m.; Attalla, 4:30 p.m., and at a night rally at 7:30 p.m. in Gadsden.

Cloudy, Mild Election Day Set For State

Alabama's Democratic voters go to the polls Tuesday to nominate a new governor and a score of lesser state, district and county officers.

The primary climaxes a months-long campaign which provided more entertainment than excitement.

The election day weather forecast calls for partly cloudy skies, mild temperatures, but with scattered thundershowers expected late in the afternoon.

3,261 ELECTION BOXES

In anticipation of a turnout of more than 600,000 votes, a record 3,261 election boxes will be in use throughout the state. Most of the polling places will be open from 8 a.m. until 6 p.m., but in big Jefferson, where more than 75,000 votes are expected, the booths will be open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.

The 14 candidates seeking the gubernatorial nomination for governor closed out their campaigns Monday, many of them using television for a last-minute bid for support.

But the voters will have more to concern themselves with than the crowded governor's race. They will also nominate candidates for lieutenant governor, attorney general, agriculture commissioner, state superintendent of education, secretary of state, treasurer and auditor.

In addition, seats in Congress in two Alabama districts are contested, and a new 72-member State Democratic Executive Committee is to be elected.

PARAMOUNT ISSUE

Racial segregation has been the paramount issue in the governor's race, as well as in the campaigns for several other state offices.

All 14 candidates for governor have pledged to retain racial segregation, but each has come up with a different formula on how this tradition shall be maintained.

Amid all the segregation talk, there has been a growing concern that Alabama's Negro voters may play a key role in the governor's race. With the votes split among the candidates, the Negro bloc vote for one man could prove a decisive factor.

The Montgomery Improvement Assn., a Negro group which promoted this city's long bus boycott, estimated a year ago that there were 53,000 Negroes registered to vote in Alabama.

CANDIDATES FOR GOVERNOR

Candidates for governor are: Laurie C. Battle of Birmingham, Retired Adm. John Crommelin of Wetumpka, W. E. Dodd of Bessemer, Shearen Elebash of Montgomery, Jimmy Faulkner of Bay Minette, Winston Gullatte of Selma, Karl Harrison of Columbiana, George Hawkins of Gadsden, Jack Owen of Montgomery, John Patterson of Phenix City, Ralph (Short) Price of Louisville, A. W. Todd of Russellville, the Rev. Billy Walker of Cropwell and George C. Wallace of Clayton.

Candidates for the other state offices include:

Lieutenant governor — Albert Boutwell of Birmingham, R. T. (Bob) Butler of Montgomery, Asa (Ace) Carter of Birmingham, Sam Engelhardt of Shorter and E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa.

Attorney General — Richmond Flowers of Dothan, MacDonald Gallion of Montgomery and Charles W. McKay of Sylacauga.

Agriculture Commissioner — R. C. (Red) Bamberg of Uniontown, J. C. Gentle of Birmingham and Crawford Roquemore of Montgomery.

Superintendent of Education—I. J. (Ike) Browder of Gadsden, Floyd Dotson of Montgomery and Frank R. Stewart of Centre.

Secretary of State—Anne Conway of Birmingham, Ruby Folsom Ellis of Montgomery, Bettye Frink of Leeds, Roy T. King of Montgomery, Charles (Pete) Mathews of Ashland and Eloise Stuart of Montgomery.

Treasurer—Agness Baggett of Montgomery, R. A. (Bob) Davison of Montgomery and Carl Griffin of Montgomery.

In additon to all the state, congressional and party races, the voters will also fill a number of county offices as well as all 141 seats in the Alabama Legislature.

Off The Bench

By Judge Walter B. Jones

New Day In Alabama

TUESDAY more than 560,000 Alabama Democratic voterse went to the polls and in 3,154 ballot boxes and voting machines in the state's 67 counties gave John Patterson, Alabama's battling attorney general, more than 312,000 votes, the largest number ever given a candidate for governor. He led his opponent by more than 64,000 votes.

JONES

Alabama's Democratic Party made her brilliant attorney general her gubernatorial nominee. In January he will be the 44th citizen of Alabama to become governor, and enter upon the duties of the commonwealth's highest office, a mit leader to grace the exalted office held in former historic days by statesmen of the make of John Gayle, Clement C. Clay, Benjamin Fitzpatrick, John A. Winston, Thomas Hill Watts, George Smith Houston, Thomas Goode Jones, Emmett O'Neal, and Frank M. Dixon.

John Patterson has been in public office in Alabama only a few years, hardly four, but during this time the people of Alabama have come to know him as an able, honest and fearless servant of the people. He has dedicated himself and all his great talents to unselfishly serving the people of his state.

When he came into this high office it was in disrepute among the people of Alabama. The office had sunk about as low as it could. John Patterson worked day and night, he gave the best of himself to the duties of the office, he studied carefully the legal problems confronting the state and handled by the office, and in a short time he had restored the office to the confidence and esteem of the people.

MR. PATTERSON surrounded himself in the office with able and competent associates. He picked for his assistants lawyers of character and ability, lawyers devotedly interested in their work. They were loyal to their chief, they loved to work with him, they shared his enthusiasm for good government, and soon the evil forces in Alabama, the grafters in the state government, the corrupters of public officials, the abusers of publim funds, the ward-heelers and the loan sharks were fleeing for cover.

John Patterson will be a governor of whom the people of our state can be proud. He will take itno the governor's office things long absent —difgnity, intelligent work for the public, and a keen sense of the proprieties of this high office. The public and private life of the governor will be one which will win the respect and good will of all his people, and to which they can point with a just pride and happiness.

There will be no clowning in the office. There will be no waste of the public funds. There will be entire devotion to the affairs of the public. The governor will be faithful in attendance upon his office. He will be where the people of the state, hacing public business to attend to, can find him, and deal with him as their governor. Montgomery will really be the capital of the state again.

We must always remember that the actions and example of the governor of a state set the tone and atmosphere of the entire administration. It can be good or bad depending on how the governor conducts himself in office. People like an honest and courageous leader, and when all Alabama's state officials look up and see John Patterson at their head leading his state and his people in the paths of dignity, decency, honesty, and law abidingness, they will follow with him, and Alabama will enjoy one of the best and most useful state administrations it has ever had.

The Patterson administration will always guide its course by the polestar of honesty and efficiency. It will cheerfully abide by the laws of the state, ad will insist that others do the same.

THE attofney general made a clean and gallant campaign for the Democratic nomination. All the big money was in the camps of his opponents, and all the experienced politicos, with a rare exception, were lined up against him. He wasa sort of amateur in politics, but he knew this: The nomination would come from the people if he got it, so he resolutely set out to take his campaign to the people of the state, the voters of his party.

He personally saw and shook hands with thousands and thousands of voters, and in the run-off his sole way of campaigning was not to get out on the stump, not to get in the safety of the inclosed TV and radio stations, but to get out on the streets, out in the business houses, the offices and the manufacturing plants, one thesidewalks, out in the plowed fields of the farms, just anywhere he could find a voter, shake hands with him, see and be seen, and talk the campaign issues out face to face, man to man.

I started to tell a fellow what I thought were some of the mistakes I made during my campaign for circuit judge, but he cut me short: "Judge, you don't make any mistakes when you win."

John Patterson waged the kind of campaign that had a wonderful appeal to the voters. It was bold, sincere and without mud-slinging. He never worried to answer the ridiculous charges made against his candidacy. He knew that to answer one charge was to invite another. He knew that invention is a libeler's exhaustless capital. He knew, too, that the people of Alabama were acquainted with his record in the attorney general's office, and so making the unkind and absurd charges against him was like pouring water on a duck's back.

One of the Patterson campaign slogans was: "Nobody but the people are for Patterson," and for the good of Alabama we are thankful that the people of the state turned out to honor him and send him to the governor's office.

John Patterson will make Alabama the kind of governor our great state and her people are entitled to. Wisdom, decency, honesty and statesmanship will come in January to the handsome old building which sits at the head of Dexter Avenue.

Judge Jones Urges Third Circuit Court For County

Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones this week urged that the Legislature create a third judgeship for Montgomery County and called for a "long overdue revision" of state laws of criminal procedure.

JONES

Judge Jones was a guest speaker before the East Montgomery Exchange Club.

In urging an additional judgeship here, Jones pointed out that Jefferson County has 12 Circuit Court judges and Mobile, the state's second largest city, five.

Montgomery County's two judgeships are held by Judge Jones, who presides over the civil docket, and Judge Eugene W. Carter, who presides over the criminal docket. The two judges share duties in hearing equity cases.

A frequent special judge of Circuit Court criminal cases who has been suggested as a third judge here is Horston Foster.

In calling for new criminal laws, Judge Jones said, "While crime increases steadily our criminal laws are full of loopholes for the criminal and afford little protection for the law-abiding man."

Judge Jones was introduced by Ed Azar.

Wallace Asks Patterson To Take Stand

By The Associated Press

Another challenge has been issued to Atty. Gen. John Patterson by Circuit Judge George Wallace, his runoff opponent for the Democratic nomination for governor.

The two candidates will meet in a June 3 runoff election.

In a weekend talk at Red Bay Wallace asked that Patterson publicly announce his stand on leglisative reapportionment, education, agriculture and the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The jurist promised that if elected he will "submit a constitutional amendment to reapportion the Legislature." And, he added, "if the legislature fail to act at their first regular session, I will call them back into special session."

Speaking at Oneonta and Haden Saturday, Patterson said that if elected one of his chief aims would be inland waterway development. He promised to "work with every ounce of energy at my command inland waterways docks and harbors.'

A study of election laws was favored by both State Senator E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa and his runoff opponent, State Senator Albert Boutwell of Jefferson County.

A statewide reidentification of voters was advocated by Skidmore. He said this would not require reregistration. The Tuscaloosa Senator also urged stiffer penalties for violations of election laws.

Boutwell said the lieutenant governor's position as chairman of the lebislative committee which has control of the Department of Examiners of Public Accounts is one of the most important duties of the state's second highest office.

Wallace Gets Endorsement Of Advertiser

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Montgomery Advertiser Monday endorsed Circuit Judge George Wallace for governor in the May 6 Democratic primary.

"This now looks more and more like Judge George Wallace's year," The Advertiser said in an editorial. "The signs are that the people are at this moment decisively swinging in behind Judge Wallace as their choice. . . .

"The Advertiser belives that this is a reasonable choice."

"Wallace has been "seasoned at every level of leadership and responsibility," the editorial continued. "He has played his part upon the national stage, and learned much as he went along."

The Advertiser recalled that the Clayton, Ala., judge refused to walk out of the Democratic National Convention in 1952 "but remained to nominate Sen. Richard B. Russell (of Georgia) for President."

Four years later, the editorial added, Wallace represented Alabama on the platform committee of the Democratic convention "and acted as the right hand of Gov. J. P. Coleman of Mississippi."

"Their tactics in watering down the civil rights plank were so effective," the editorial continued, "that the NAACP and Walter Reuther left Chicago in wrath, publicly accusing the Wallace committee of locking them out of their meeting place. . . ."

The Advertiser concluded that the young jurist has served a full apprenticeship at every level of government—county, state and national—and is thereby well qualified to take up the seals of office as Alabama's chief magistrate."

The Advertiser supported former State Sen. Jimmy Faulkner four years ago. Faulkner, the runnerup that year, is a candidate again this time.

Bill to limit term of office is criticized

Birmingham News
Birmingham, Ala.
7-3-58

BY FRED TAYLOR, News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., July 3—Two members of the incoming State Senate today frowned on a controversial proposal certain to kick up more argument when it is introduced in the Legislature early next year to prohibit any Alabama governor from serving more than two terms.

And Gov. James E. Folsom—at whom the proposed restrictive measure apparently is aimed—said "If they'd make the terms of Alabama governor successive, I think that'd be a great idea."

34a(2)

However, Gov. Folsom pointed out that the proposed constitutional amendment outlined by State Sen. E. O. Eddins of Marengo, could not effect him any way, unless it could be made retroactive.

The chief executive explained that the measure could not be made retroactive and still be valid, even if it were passed.

STATE SEN.-NOMINEE Larry Dumas of Jefferson, who is anything but a Folsom supporter, had this comment when asked about the proposal:

DUMAS

"I think that too many restrictions on expressions of the will of the people are unnecessary."

Dumas also pointed out that the present constitutional provision preventing an Alabama governor from succeeding himself in office had been placed in the Constitution specifically to keep a governor from building up a political machine and perpetuating himself in office.

SEN. EDDINS, who was recently renominated to a third consecutive term, cited the fact that the U. S. Constitution was amended in recent years to bar any president from serving more than two terms.

"I think that if we are going to limit our president to two terms then we should limit Alabama governors to two terms," said Sen. Eddins.

In apparent refrence to Gov. Folsom, the Marengo senator added that his proposed constitutional amendment "would prevent any governor from building up a political machine to help put him back into power in Alabama every other term."

State Senator-Nominate John E. Gaither of Cleburne, who was an administration supporter during Folsom's first regime, when asked about Sen. Eddins' plan, said:

GAITHER

"I think that if you're going to restrict a governor from serving more than two terms, then some consideration should be given to restricting those who spend most of their adult lives in the Legislature."

Gaither was referring to some of the Black Belters who have served several terms in the House and Senate.

The late Bibb Graves was the only other Alabama governor ever elected to two terms after the length of chief executive terms was increased from two to four years.

GOV. FOLSOM, who is serving his second term, is considered almost certain to run again in 1962. Some believe Folsom not only has a third term in mind, but is looking beyond that to a possible fourth term.

Large Turnout Expected In County Runoff Voting

About the same number of Talladega Countians are expected to vote in the run-off Tuesday as voted in the first Democratic primary, local observers said today

The polls will open at 8 a. m. and be in operation until 6 p. m. at Talladega and Sylacauga. In the rural areas the hour will be 8 a. m. to 5 p. m.

There are 18,625 registered voters in Talladega County.

As only approximately 12,243 voted in the first primary, officials said the run-off vote should be only slightly smaller, perhaps 2,000 to 1,000 votes

Boxes will be received Tuesday night by Sheriff John Robinson in the basement of the Courthouse.

The same officers will hold the election as were appointed by the Democratic Executive Committee for the May 6 balloting.

Police Chief Leon Curlee announced that his entire force will be working Tuesday to insure order at the polling places.

City and county officers cooperated in the May 6 election to make sure the balloting was orderly.

Absentee votes totaling 241 were cast, approximately the same number 257 as in the earlier election, said Register M. R. Joiner.

The county's voters will choose a circuit judge, a sheriff, a state representative and a member of the county board of education Tuesday.

State offices at stake are governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state and memberships on the state Democratic Executive Committee.

Intermediate Judge Henry Hurst and Attorney William C. Sullivan are in the run-off for circuit judge.

For sheriff, Luke Brewer and James Costner are contending.

For the state house, Dr. Ashley Camp and Jerry Worthy are the candidates.

P. A. Bachelder and J. B. Boykin are vying for membership on the board of education.

Alfred Turner, district commissioner of district one, is opposed in the run-off by Howard Bussey.

Vying for the Democratic Executive Committee from this district are Travis L. Arnold, Thomas Cooley, Robert M. Alton, Jr. and Albert J. Winfield.

Arnold and Cooley favor the loyalty oath while Alton and Winfield are opposed to it.

Patterson Rally Set For New Site

NEW SITE, Ala., June 18.—(UPI)—More than 5,000 people are expected to attend an "old fashioned" homecoming June 28 for Atty. Gen. John Patterson, Democratic nominee for Governor, it was reported Wednesday by V. I. P. (Billy) Vickers homecoming committee chairman.

The celebration will be held at the New Site Community Park about 14 miles east of Alexander City from 2-5 p.m.

Mr. Patterson, who won over Circuit Judge George Wallace in the June 3 primary runoff, was born in Goldville in Tallapoosa County, Sept. 27, 1921, about three miles from the New Site community.

Handshaking tour—

Wallace working for votes in city

BY TRUDY CARGILE, News staff writer

Circuit Judge George C. Wallace was meeting the people with a hand-shaking tour in Birmingham today.

The gubernatorial candidate was up early to greet workers at the Tennessee Coal and Iron Division of U. S. Steel during the shift change at 6:30 a.m.

From there he moved on to the TCI office building, then took time to greet folks at the Lloyd Nolin Hospital. At 9:30 he was at the Bessemer Courthouse and at 11, Five Points West.

HIS AFTERNOON tour was to take in the area of North Birmingham during which he planned to greet workers at Hayes Aircraft Corp. at the 3 p.m. shift.

Other points on his tour for the afternoon include Woodlawn, East Lake and Roebuck Plaza.

Tonight he will deliver his only speech of the day at 7:30 in the Warrior City Park. From there he will return to fill a spot on Channel 13 at 10 p.m.

Wallace's met-the-people campaign today was a continuation of a hand-shaking period which began Sunday at two open houses — in Homewood and Mountain Brook.

AT THE HOMES of Mrs. W C. Sterrett, 10 Lakeshore-dr. and Julian Yates, 3301 Spring Hill rd. the candidate and Mrs. Wallace greeted hundreds of caller between 3-7:30 p.m.

Mrs. Wallace, looking chic and rested despite her long travels with her husband, stood in receiving lines at both residences with Judge Wallace and their hosts and hostesses to greet callers.

The Barbour candidate is expected to resume his day and night speaking schedule in South Alabama after today.

From Mobile, where he will begin the last leg of the long journey toward the Democratic general election on June 3, Wallace will work his way toward Montgomery where he plans to stay for final returns.

Both candidates get TV invitations

Both Atty. Gen. John Patterson and Judge George Wallace, runoff opponents for governor in the June 3 second primary, have been invited to appear on "Alabama Press Conference" next Sunday.

Wallace Plans Unit To Lure New Industry

BIRMINGHAM (Special to The Advertiser)—George C. Wallace Sunday proposed a plan for a "Committee of 100" to bring new industry to Alabama.

The candidate for governor said the committee would function under the Wallace Industrial Act which he offered.

Judge Wallace outlined his plan as follows:

The committee would be formed by recruiting the most able men in the state in the field of attracting industry. All sections would be represented on the committee.

BUSINESS LEADERS

Business leaders would be recruited to render special assistance to such existing agencies as the Industrial Development Board. The committee itself would be charged with responsibility for taking positive action toward inducing plants to move to Alabama, and to employ Alabama people.

The governor himself would serve as an active leader on the Committee of 100, making his power and influence available to it for the purpose of wooing industry.

Voluntary contributions from all over Alabama would finance the work of the committee.

The committee would help organize efforts made all parts of the state to attract industry.

Wallace pointed to the value of such a committee in procuring a balance of agriculture and industry in Alabama. "Such organization of effort is mandatory in this duty of nation-wide competition to get and to keep industries," he said.

"Every city, county, and state in all sections of this nation is actively campaigning to take advantage of the great decentrelization program now under way."

Boutwell Reports $2,545 Expenses

State Sen. Albert Boutwell of Jefferson County Wednesday reported he spent $2,545.25 in his successful runoff campaign for the Democratic nomination for lieutenant governor.

In a post election report filed with the secretary of state, Boutwell reported contributions totaling $1,307.50. A pre-election accounting listed $278.50 received.

Expenses totaling $1,260.25 and $1,285 respectively were listed in his pre and post election reports.

Boutwell's runoff opponent in the lieutenant governor's race State Sen. E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa, said he spent a total of $6,274.19 in the two primaries, and had received $3,240 in contributions.

His post election report showed $190 in contributions and $348.90 expended. These were in addition to previously reported $3,090 in contributions and $5,925.29 in expenses.

State Rep. Pete Mathews of Clay County, unsuccessful runoff candidate for secretary of state, reported no additional contributions or expenses. His pre-election report had listed contributions of $550 and expenses of $1,135.20.

Candidates End Alabama Drives

Patterson, Wallace Appear At Scottsboro

400,000 TO VOTE TODAY

By United Press Correspondent

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., June 2.—Atty. Gen. John Patterson and Circuit Judge George Wallace wound up their separate campaigns together in the Northeastern corner of the state, 24 hours before the voters will decide the Democratic nominee for Governor in a primary runoff.

400,000 Votes Seen

Both youthful candidates, descended on Scottsboro, celebrating its traditional trade day, to pursue some of the 400,000 Alabama Democrats expected to cast ballots in hot, muggy weather Tuesday.

Mr. Patterson stuck to his handshaking approach which has marked his campaign ever since he headed the 14 candidates in the May 6 primary while Mr. Wallace urged in a speech that the voters consider the issues the new governor will face in the next four years.

The attorney general planned to go either to Montgomery or come here before returning to his Phenix City, home to vote. Judge Wallace had a television appearance at Dothan before a final election eve appeal over a 12-station radio network Monday night.

The gubernatorial race plus two other statewide races, for lieutenant governor and secretary of state, and a party loyalty oath dispute, were expected to draw a considerably smaller vote to the polls than the record 618,000 last month when a flock of local and legislative races also attracted interest.

Mr. Patterson, who has campaigned on a pledge to keep "gangsters" out of Alabama, led the field in the primary by 34,424 votes but failed to gain a majority while Mr. Wallace came in second.

First Statewide Races

The 36-year-old attorney general, making his first statewide race as is his 38-year-old opponent, changed his tactics for the runoff from speaking appearances to personal contact with the voters, letting his campaign headquarters issue most of his statements.

Mr. Patterson has refused to reply to charges that he associated with the Ku Klux Klan other than to say he knew reputed Klan leader Robert Shelton of Tuscaloosa but was unaware of his Klan affiliation.

Seeking the lieutenant governor's post were State Senators Albert Boutwell of Birmingham, dean of the upper house, and E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa, known as a pro-labor candidate.

Alabama Votes On Governor, Loyalty Oath

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — The white-robed spectre of the Ku Klux Klan shared political attention with the recurring issue of Democratic party loyalty Monday on the eve of Alabama's second election in 28 days.

Because none of the 14 candidates for the Democratic nomination for governor got a majority of the votes on May 6, the voters will choose between the top two contenders in a runoff primary Tuesday.

On the same ballot, they will elect 17 members of the State Democratic Executive Committee who, with the 55 committeemen chosen last month, will decide the fate of the bitterly contested party loyalty oath which now ties Alabama to the national party in presidential elections.

In nominating a candidate for governor in the wake of charges of revived Ku Klux Klan political activity, the voters will choose between Atty. Gen. John Patterson and Circuit Court Judge George Wallace.

Patterson, 36, led the field in the first primary. Wallace, 38, was the runnerup.

The attorney general, son of the slain antivice crusader, A. L. Patterson, has been accused of campaigning with the support of the Klan, once a powerful political factor in Alabama.

The Montgomery Advertiser and the weekly Greensboro Watchman —and Wallace, too—have charged that Patterson has been associated with the Grand Dragon Robert Shelton in the campaign.

Replying, Patterson acknowledged acquaintance with Shelton but denied knowing he was a Klan leader.

The fight over the Democratic loyalty issue centers around the struggle between states fighters and national party loyalists for control of the state committee.

If the states rights candidates gain a majority of the 72 seats, they are pledged to repeal the oath which requires a vow of allegiance to the national party before anyone can run in the Democratic primaries.

Polls open at 8 a.m. (CST) throughout the state. They close at 5 p.m. in rural areas without voting machines; an hour later in the cities and in all communities where machines are used, and at 7 p.m. in Jefferson County (Birmingham).

Washington Fete Given Patterson

WASHINGTON (AP) — John Patterson, Democratic nominee for governor of Alabama, was guest of honor Thursday night at a cocktail party and buffet dinner in the Mayflower Hotel. Earlier in the day he conferred with the Alabama congressional delegation.

Host at the dinner was the Meadow Corp., a Montgomery, Ala., construction firm represented by Emory Folmar and Henry Flinn. Folmar said the purpose was to enable Patterson and his aide to become acquainted with the congressional aides.

It was an informal affair, with no speeches.

Patterson and his party conferred with the Alabama congressmen at a luncheon at the Capitol. It was a private affair, limited to members of congress, Patterson and his aides.

Patterson told reporters he discussed Alabama problems. He said he asked the congressmen to help make his administration, beginning in January successful. The Democratic nomination in Alabama is tantamount to election.

He said he pledged his support to efforts of the congressional group but declined to elaborate on his comments at the luncheon.

He said he discussed the school situation, segregation, the state welfare program, highways, tidelands, rivers and harbors, and general law improvement.

Accompanying Patterson to the luncheon and dinner were Joe Robertson of Montgomery, his executive secretary; Charles Meriweather, of Birmingham, his campaign manager; Henry Cardwell of Alabaster, Folmar and Flinn.

Patterson plans to leave for home Saturday. He plans to spend Friday visiting the various Alabama congressional offices.

Wallace Files Expense List Of $48,868

Judge George C. Wallace reported Tuesday to the secretary of state that he spent $48,868 in his unsuccessful race for governor in the May 6 and June 3 primary elections.

Wallace's expenses were almost offset by $47,862 in contributions. The total amount expended him in the primary and runoff campaigns was but $1,132 below the $50,000 maximum allowed by law.

The report filed by Wallace Wednesday only included expenses and contributions received in the final weeks of the runoff campaign. On that report he claimed $5,002 in expenses and $4,120 in contributions.

Listed as contributors were Rep. McDowell Lee, Rep. Sim Thomas, M. C. Hunt and Foy Halstead, $500 each; John Daniel and Luther E. Little, $250 each; and $1,620 in miscellaneous small donations.

Expenses included $1,200 to Tennille and Tuttle, a local advertising firm; $1,200 to the Jim Denny Artist Bureau which provided Minnie Pearl; $600 to organist Dale Stone; $720 in travel and hotel expenses.

The $1,200 paid to the artist bureau brought to $12,000 the amount reported paid for the services of Minnie Pearl, the Grand Ole Opry entertained who accompanied Wallace through most of his campaign.

Bonds Forfeited On Negroes Charged With Poll Violations

Bonds of three Negroes charged with violating Alabama elections laws during the May Democratic Primary were ordered forfeited Monday by Circuit Judge Eugene W. Carter and new warrants for their arrests issued after the trio failed to appear for arraignment proceedings.

A. H. Huffman, 45 of 810 Union Cr.; Fannie Allen Neal, 38, 2652 Rutland St.; and Rufus [illegible] Lewis, 50, 810 Bolivar St. were charged with standing too close to polling places and fined $25 and costs each in Recorders Court.

They were arrested at polling places at Hamner Hall, city hall and the county courthouse after election officials reported they were standing within 30 feet of the polls, police said.

The cases of the three defendants were listed on Monday's docket along with those of persons indicted by the Montgomery County Grand Jury which reported last week.

Alabama Editors Are Saying

"The Barbour Bantam"

The Selma Times-Journal

OF THE current governorship campaign it truthfully can be said that voters are being offered a wide range of choice among acceptable candidates.

Of course, six of the qualified candidates are nondescripts or inconsequents, but among the eight regarded as possible contenders, there are six who could render acceptable service as governor.

Each of these has qualifications, just as each has weak points, and the problem facing the voters is to decide which offers the best hope for sound, progressive government at a time when Alabama is crossing the threshhold of an era of great industrial expansion, even while facing the grave problem of racial strains.

In an effort to clarify this problem, let us consider the various contending candidates in alphabetical order.

LAURIE BATTLE, former congressman from the Ninth District (Jefferson County), would make a good governor. A man of high moral convictions and of exceptional executive ability. Battle would give Alabama strong and honest government.

His greatest weakness as a candidate is inability to establish close contact with the rank and file of the voters. Many of those who analyze the issues and judge future performances on the basis of the past find Battle highly appealing as a candidate, but the masses of the people seemingly do not, and until he undergoes a change of personality or finds an issue peculiarly his own, statewide precedence is likely to continue elusive for him.

He also has made what may prove to be a serious mistake by advocating reduction of the state sales tax at a time when more money must be had for our schools, because more and more voters are coming to the realization that this levy is the best means by which those who benefit most from free education can be made to bear a reasonable share of its costs. This applies especially to our Negro citizenry, many of whom would be home virtually free in the matter of helping to finance public education without the sales tax.

JIMMY FAULKNER, newspaper and insurance executive, has come a long way by his own abilities and perseverance, but during the process he has developed a frightening tendency toward dickering and dealing. In fact, there are large numbers of informed people who fear that Faulkner has promised so many things to so many people that he would be too tightly bound by commitments to render the kind of service as governor of which he really is capable.

This particularly is true of residents of the Black Belt, who are showing increasing signs of resentment of the cold-blooded fashion in which Faulkner has "written off" support from this section in a calculated bid for votes from more populous areas.

Speaking in such sections of the state, Faulkner has described the Black Belt as reactionary and "living in the past," and has called for emasculation of its political powers in favor of "more aggressive" areas.

Faulkner knew, of course, that in following these tactics he was sacrificing some strength built in the past, but it is doubtful that he accurately estimated the full repercussions from this policy.

Black Belters are proud people, and the Times-Journal is confident that they knowingly are not going to be party to such downgrading, and that many of those who were inclined to support Faulkner no longer intend to do so.

REP. KARL HARRISON, of Shelby County, is another able man in the governorship race, but the question is, why?

He cannot have much hope to win because he has attracted little attention, but it may be that he is attempting to hold together the framework of the Gordon Persons organization for a more serious try later.

REP. GEORGE HAWKINS, of Etowah County, is the candidate of some of the labor bosses of Alabama, but it appears that his popularity does not extend into th rank and file of workers, except the more radical elements.

A confirmed Folsomite and another outspoken foe of the Black Belt, he is not likely to attract much support in this section. In fact, it is doubtful that he can make a substantial showing on a statewide basis, and he possibly was put into the race for run-off trading purposes.

JACK OWEN, chairman of the Alabama Public Service Commission, seems to be making about the same kind of race for governor that he did last time.

An efficient public servant of good intent, Owen apparently cannot realize that while the people of this state are satisfied with his work as head of the commission, they are not enthusiastic about the prospect of having him as their governor.

If Owen only could be content with the substantial honors the people are willing to concede to him, he and his friends would be a great deal happier and he could look forward to a long career of public service without having to worry too much about periodical campaigning.

JOHN PATTERSON, attorney general of Alabama, has made an enviable record in challenging loan shark operations, combatting the NAACP, and fighting corruption in government, but he displays a political immaturity which seriously has weakened what started out to be a strong campaign.

Patterson's recently-exposed connection with a loan firm operating in conflict with the law offers an example of this immaturity, because he allowed himself, through sheer neglect of his personal affairs, to become tarred with the same stick he was waving at others.

Now he has learned by bitter experience that the first requirement of a crusader is administration of his own affairs in a manner beyond any kind of reproach.

He will learn other things as he gains more seasoning, and it is reasonable to expect that the future offers him the prospect of a substantial political career.

A. W. TODD, commissioner of agriculture by virtue of Folsom bribe and pressure, seems to us to be the most-objectionable and least-qualified contending candidate in the race. When Todd prevailed upon Gov. Folsome to buy for him the agriculture commissioner nomination from a subservient Democratic Executive Committee, despite unwillingness to seek the post from the voters on his own merits, he gave the people of Alabama an accurate gauge of his caliber.

Since thus slipping into office through the back door, he has accomplished little or nothing for the farming and industrial interests of the state, because he has been too busy advancing his own political ambitions.

By constant use of the Farmers Bulletin for political propaganda, he has managed to convince numbers of our sorely-pressed agriculturalists that he can solve their crop acreage and price ills. In consequence, he is going to poll substantial bloc votes among Tennessee Valley cotton growers and Wiregrass peanut planters. Happily, however, farmers less hard-pressed and in a position to view Todd in his proper perspective, recognize his inability to accomplish anything materially constructive, and they are not being fooled by his wild tirades against Farm Secretary Ezra Benson.

Nor are informed city voters inclined to give serious consideration to a candidate who offers nothing better than continuation of the same kind of costly and inefficient government under which they now are suffering.

GEORGE WALLACE, circuit judge of Barbour County, convinces the Times-Journal that, of all the candidates in the race for governor, he has the strongest grasp upon matters of major state concern and the most ability to handle them efficiently.

What this diminutive jurist lacks in physical heft, he more than makes up in brain power and high courage of strong convictions.

A fighter by nature and blessed with the ability to inspire public confidence, George Wallace has forged to the front in the governor's race in a manner which reminds us of nothing so much as a fiery bantam cock taking over a hen yard despite the clumsy maneuverings of dismayed Dominica roosters.

While all the other candidates have given lip service to maintenance of segregation, Judge Wallace has demonstrated by positive action that he stands ready to meet any outside challenge to our social order, and his sound legal mind offers Alabamians their best hope for staunch statehouse defense against outside encroachments.

Judge Wallace speaks the language of our people, and they can be confident that their public affairs would be safe in his hands.

The Times-Journal hopes that the voters will recognize the opportunity to obtain splendid service in the governorship offered by the candidacy of George Wallace, and that they will give him a testimonial of confidence in the first primary which will settle the issue beyond all doubt.

Owen Vows To Continue Segregation

Gubernatorial candidate Jack Owen said here Wednesday night in a television address that when he is elected governor "I will take whatever steps are necessary" to assure the continued separation of the races.

Making his first bid for support in the Montgomery area, Owen said he had learned, "not to my surprise" that segregation is the No. 1 issue in the current campaign.

"If necessary, I will dismiss the National Guard and then deputize them along with every other white man in Alabama as members of the Highway Patrol," Owen added.

Owen also reiterated his early support of the right to work law, insisting he believed in "freedom of choice" in labor as well as in other matters.

Meanwhile, a number of candidates will turn their eyes toward Birmingham Thursday where the influential Alabama Education Assn. opens its annual convention.

One of the first candidates to make a pitch for the school teacher vote was Jimmy Faulkner, who does not plan to go to Birmingham.

On a stumping tour of the Wiregrass, Faulkner came out with an 18-point school program, which included a minimum 20 per cent raise in teachers' salaries and a multimillion dollar bond issue to finance school construction.

Following the same line was George Wallace, who is stumping north Alabama. He said Wednesday that school problems will be the "first order of business" when he is elected governor.

Candidates Will Speak At Notasulga

All Macon County candidates in the May 6 Democratic primaries have been invited to attend an open meeting of the Macon County White Citizens Council to be held at Notasulga Monday, April 14, at 7:30 p. m.

The meeting will be held in the auditorium of Macon County High School and each candidate will be alloted time to address the gathering.

For the primaries this year Macon County has 18 candidates seeking county offices and all are expected to be present for the Notasulga meeting.

Sponsors of the open meeting have invited the public to attend and hear the platforms of the various aspiranta for public office.

Alabama-Citizens Council Leader Sees Ballot Key To Integration

Little Rock, Ark. March 25 — An Alabama state senator proposed last night that every Southern state appoint a special attorney general for the express purpose of fighting integration.

Sen. Sam M. Engleharot told a meeting of the Capital Citizens Council here that Southern states must "cooperate and coordinate" and put up a "solid front all down the line to remain free, independent and segregated."

The senators outlined measures taken in Alabama to restrict Negro voting and termed the ballot box "the key to the whole question of segregation."

"If you had an unlimited number of Negro votes you can imagine what would happen not only at Central High School but in every grade school, high school and college in Arkansas," Engelhardt said.

Engelhardt formerly was executive secretary of the Association of Citizens Council of Alabama but he resigned the post recently when he announced as a candidate for lieutenant governor.

The senator, who represents Macon County, is sponsor of a state measure to redistrict Tuskegee, the county seat, in order to keep Negroes from voting in the city. The measure would abolish Macon County if necessary to avoid Negro voting control.

McKay alleges Phenix 'sharks' for Gallion

By The Associated Press

State Rep. Charles W. McKay today asserted that a "loan shark" group is supporting one of his opponents for attorney general "to the limit."

The statement was pointed at Atty. MacDonald Gallion, who as an aide to Gov. Gordon Persons was a key figure in the clean-up of Phenix City.

McKAY

McKAY AND GALLION are two of three candidates for the Democratic nomination for attorney general. The third aspirant is State Sen. Richmond Flowers.

Gallion resigned as chief assistant attorney general to enter this race.

Gallion said in a statement published yesterday that a full-scale campaign to defeat him is being pushed by "Phenix City gangsters, punks and hoodlums." He also asserted that the campaign against him was organized by "The vicious-type loan shark operators who grow rich on the misery of the poor and desperate."

McKAY, WHO is Democratic national committeeman from Alabama, quickly took issue with the statement of Gallion.

"One of my opponents claims that 'Phenix City gangsters, punks and hoodlums' are making an all-out effort to beat him," said McKay. "I ask him this: Are there not two sets of 'gangsters, punks nad hoodlums' in Phenix City and does he not have the support of one of them? Is he talking about the set supporting him or the other set?"

McKAY'S STATEMENT continued, "My opponent also states that he is a victim of a campaign of 'vicious-type loan shark operators.' I know for a fact that one of the loan sharp groups is supporting him to the limit. Which set is he talking about?

"I have no support from any of these groups and do not want it. My only obligation is to the people of Alabama, to make them the best attorney general in history and, if elected, I will do just that."

Political Banners On Bus Benches Quickly Removed

Some of the most striking political advertising seen in Montgomery during this campaign sparkled and then disappeared last week following a head-on encounter with city regulations.

From 50 to 60 park-type benches located at bus stops throughout the city last week burst out with fresh Jimmy Faulkner slogans.

"We were swamped with protesting telephone calls," one city official said.

Seems the signs were on benches on city property which the commission insists must not be used for political advertising.

The advertising agency which owns the benches and regularly contracts for non-political ads was advised and within hours the signs were removed.

Some of the signs had survived for less than a day.

BUT LAW OVERLOOKED

Patterson Considered As Senate Candidate

Some enthusiastic followers of Atty. Gen. John Patterson, excited about the way he won his race for governor, are talking him up as a candidate for the U.S. Senate.

But they're overlooking an obscure section of the State Constitution which makes the incoming governor ineligible to run for the Senate or any statewide office until 1964.

Section 116 says "The governor shall not be eligible to election or appointment to any office under this state, or to the Senate of the United States, during his term, and within one year after the expiration thereof."

Although the 36-year-old attorney general hasn't actually been elected yet, he won the Democratic nomination in the June runoff primary and that's tantamount to election in traditionally Democratic Alabama.

Patterson's term as governor will end in January, 1963. Barring a vacancy through death or resignation, the next Senate race after that will be in 1966.

So for all practical purposes, the new goverpor couldn't run for the Senate for at least three years after he left office.

There's no reason to believe Patterson has even been approached as a potential Senate candidate. The talk, to whatever extent it exists, has developed among some of the people who helped him win the nomination for governor.

Nevertheless, it's an interesting and little known restriction on the political activities of a candidate once he is elected to the state's highest office.

Purpose of the limitation is simple: It prevents a governor from resigning under an agreement to have the lieutenant governor as his successor appoint him to the Senate pending the next election, or to some state job.

It dates back to the constitutional convention in 1901 and provoked long debate on the convention floor before it was written into the organic law.

While the idea that Patterson may someday turn to the Senate may be just so much talk, there is historical precedent for invoking the constitutional restriction.

The late Bibb Graves was confronted with pressure to get himself appointed when Hugo Black left the Senate in 1938 to take his seat on the Supreme Court.

Franklin D. Roosevelt himself, in the White House then, reportedly asked Graves about his taking Black's place, but was told it couldn't be done. Graves ultimately appointed his wife to the Senate.

Again, when Sen. John Bankhead died in 1946, there was talk that Chauncey Sparks, who was governor then, might succeed him. Sparks himself quieted the rumors by pointing to the constitutional barrier.

Nor is the governor the only state official tied down by the constitution in that manner.

Judges on the appellate and circuit courts are prohibited from holding any but judicial office during the terms for which they are elected.

A judge can run for governor, for example, only once every 12 years, since he is eligible only when his term expires at the same time the chief executive's runs out.

Jurists are elected for six-year terms and the governor for four years. Consequently, their tenures start together only once in a dozen years.

Judge Wallace goes to the grass roots

Typical American Scene—Judge George C. Wallace, candidate for governor of Alabama, goes out among the voters to shake hands and pass out campaign cards in a manner traditional in this country since its founding. With the judge is his pretty wife, Lurleen, at the Albertville courthouse.

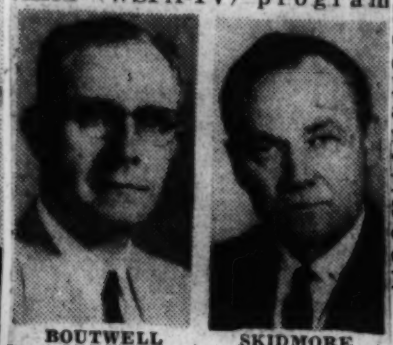
Lieutenant governor's race vies for spotlight

BY FRED TAYLOR, News staff writer

The Boutwell-Skidmore runoff race for lieutenant-governor, although overshadowed by the tussle for the governorship, can be expected to grab some of the political spotlight in the last two weeks before second primary balloting June 3.

Both frontrunner State Sen. Albert Boutwell and runnerup State Sen. E. W. Skidmore were pressing hard for votes in their bids for the state's No. 2 office.

Both will appear at 2:30 p.m. Sunday on a Montgomery television (WSFA-TV) program with Sen. Skidmore announcing a strategy rally for 7:30 Monday night at Bankhead Hotel.



BOUTWELL SKIDMORE

SEN. SKIDMORE, endorsed earlier by the Alabama Labor Council (AFL-CIO), Saturday got the backing of the Old Age Pension Assn., Inc., headed by George W. Beasley of Gadsden.

Sen. Boutwell, co-author and chief sponsor of the "freedom of choice" constitutional amendment ratified by Alabama voters to help assure segregation will be maintained in Alabama schools, helped draft and steer through the revised version of the state's pupil placement law.

"Let me emphasized again that I'm not seeking any credit—I just want results to make certain that we continue to have segregation," declared Sen. Boutwell.

STATE SCHOOL Supt. Austin Meadows, who took the stump to fight the "freedom of choice" amendment approved overwhelmingly by the state's voters Aug. 28, 1956, had criticized The Birmingham News and The Montgomery Advertiser for reporting that Sen. Boutwell was author of the placement law.

Legislators pointed out that although Sen. Boutwell did not write the original placement bill, he was responsible for rewriting the measure which finally became law.

It had been introduced by State Sen. Sam Englehardt Jr., of Macon, first primary candidate for lieutenant governor. Both Senate and House adopted a resolution naming the placement bill the Englehardt, Boutwell, Richardson, Martin and Ramey Bill. The other three are State Reps. Reginald Richardson of Hale, W. L. Martin Jr., of Greene and Charles Ramey of Hale.

Sen. Skidmore likewise supported both the "freedom of choice" amendment and the student placement bill and has repeatedly declared himself strongly for maintaining segregation in the schools.

MEADOWS, IN opposing ratification of the "freedom of choice" amendment, appeared with Sen. Boutwell on a Birmingham television program to argue against its approval by the voters.

Placement law upheld

A THREE-JUDGE Federal Court panel, comprised of Judges Richard T. Rives, Seybourn H. Lynne and Hobart H. Grooms, recently upheld the student placement act.

The "freedom of choice" amendment, which embraces nine changes in the State Constitution and which provides for closing any school where attempts are made to force integration, has not come under attack in the courts.

This amendment was drafted by a House-Senate committee, of which Sen. Boutwell was chairman, with the aid of a special group appointed by the State Bar Assn., after many months of study.

Boutwell and other senators pushed through to passage several enabling acts to implement the "freedom of choice" law, which the Jefferson senator and other attorneys are confident will stand up under court attack.

IN A TV SPEECH during the first primary campaign, Sen. Boutwell said:

"In fairness to my three legislative opponents, they cooperated fully in passing these laws."

He was referring to Skidmore, Engelhardt and former State Rep. Robert T. Butler of Clay.

Skidmore endorsement

BEASLEY, PRESIDENT of the pension association endorsing Sen. Skidmore, said it did so "in view of your past work with us, your understanding and your ability, your sincerity of purpose, and in view of the fact that our Legislature works from committees and their recommendations."

He pointed out that the lieutenant governor would appoint standing committees in the Senate to consider legislation.

It also was pointed out that the Tuscaloosa attorney sponsored measures to help provide additional funds to aid the aged needy during the two terms he has served in the Senate.

Bankhead rally

BRUCE THRASHER, North Alabama campaign manager for Skidmore, said about 450 invitations had been sent to supporters over the state for the Bankhead rally.

Sen. Boutwell, who was shown by the official tabulation to have received 197,854 votes in the first primary to 143,881 for Sen. Skidmore, said he had campaigned in all 67 counties during the first primary race.

"I have already revisited a number of these counties," added Boutwell, "and I plan to go into as many of the others as possible during the last two weeks of this runoff campaign.

Mrs. Frink cancels speaking schedule

MRS. BETTYE FRINK of Leeds, runnerup to State Rep. Pete Mathews of Clay for secretary of state in the first primary, announced Saturday she was cancelling runoff campaign speaking engagements for the next few days because of the death of her father.

He was Lester Haynes, 53, of Talladega. Funeral services will be conducted at 3 p.m. Sunday at Branchville Presbyterian Church in St. Clair County.

Mrs. Frink had been scheduled to appear on a Montgomery TV program with Rep. Mathews Sunday afternoon.

Wallace Hits Race Inaction Of Patterson

By GEORGE PRENTICE
Advertiser Staff Writer

LANETT — Integration's only invasion of the state of Alabama at Montgomery went undefended by the attorney general," Judge George Wallace said in Lanett Thursday.

Wallace pointed to the integration order on the city buses in the capital city as an example of a "lack of diligence" on the part of the attorney general's office.

WALLACE

"The only state officer who could have done something to add the weight of Alabama legal authority to the fight against integration did not even enter the battle," he said.

Wallace said had he been the attorney general he would have "been in there fighting."

Making the same statement in a speech earlier in the day at Pepperell, just outside Opelika, Wallace received a long and loud ovation. He spoke there to several hundred mill workers from the nearby textile plant.

Wallace also charged that Attorney General John Patterson had failed to enter the controversial Autherine Lucy case at the University of Alabama.

"Again, had I been attorney general, it would not have been necessary to hire private attorneys to defend the state, or any part of it, against the threat of integration," he said.

Turning again to the matter of "leakage" in Alabama's state treasury, Wallace said "if there has been as much stealing in the Folsom administration as my opponent claims somebody should be in jail."

INDICTMENTS LACKING

"My opponent tells you that 25 cents of every tax dollar has been stolen by the Folsom administration. That's $400 million in the three and a half years that he has been attorney general.

"Yet not one single indictment has been returned, not one investigation ordered," he said.

If the statute of limitations has not run out by the time he is elected governor, Wallace said he would see to it that any members of the administration guilty of such a crime served penitentiary sentences.

He explained that the law provides time limits under which any law violator can be prosecuted.

Wallace continued to stress his record in the state Legislature and asked for voter support on the grounds that he had for years helped the aged, sought industrial expansion for Alabama, fought for higher educational standards, and continually sought better health standards.

BEGAN AT ASHLAND

He began his day Thursday at Ashland and spoke at Roanoke, Lafayette and Pepperell before coming to Lanett.

Wallace credited people of the Third Congressional District (which includes Pepperell) with having put him in the race for governor.

"Had you not elected me delegate to the national convention, given me an opportunity to become known statewide, I would probably not be in the race today," he said.

Smear sheets, according to Wallace, are declaring that he voted against a school segregation measure in 1951. He explained that the measure provided for abolition of the state's school system if "even one little school faced the threat of integration."

The measure was defeated by the state Legislature with the help of most of the candidates who sought the office of governor in the first primary. Among those who voted against the proposed law were George Hawkins, A. W. Todd, Karl Harrison and Jimmy Faulkner, he said.

CITES RACIAL AIMS

"Also among those in that group were the two men between whom you must choose for your next lieutenant governor," he said (Sen. Albert Boutwell and Sen. E. W. Skidmore).

His aim is not to destroy Alabama's school system but rather to provide a system by which integration can be combatted from district to district "wherever it threatens," he said.

He said peace must be maintained between the races at all costs. However, segregated schools and a segregated way of life is the only way to maintain peace, he said.

"Not one person in the state of Alabama will have his throat cut or suffer injuries for the sake of segregation if I am elected governor," he concluded.

Wallace Friday will speak in Opelika at 10 a.m.; Dadeville, 1 p.m.; Alexander City, 2:30 p.m.; and Childersburg, 4:30 p.m.

Gallion Reaffirms Hands-Off Race Policy, Denies Okaying Use Of Name

By BOB INGRAM

Atty. Gen.-Nominee MacDonald Gallion emphatically insisted Monday he was taking no part in the gubernatorial runoff campaign between John Patterson and George Wallace.

And Gallion denied having authorized the use of his name in a newspaper advertisement supporting Patterson in the runoff.

Meanwhile, both Patterson and Wallace continued their contrasting campaigns with the election but one week away.

Patterson spent Monday in the Tri-Cities area of northwest Alabama, shaking hands but issuing no statements. Neither local nor state headquarters in Birmingham knew where Patterson would be for the remainder of the week.

Wallace spent all day Monday in Birmingham, with his schedule calling for a stump swing through south Alabama Tuesday and Wednesday.

He will speak in Greenville, Andalusia, Evergreen, Brewton and Bay Minette Tuesday, and spend all day Wednesday in Mobile.

The advertisement Gallion referred to in his statement appeared in the May 22 issue of the Fort Payne Times-New Era, a weekly, referring to the "Patterson-Gallion team," It read in part:

"You have elected John Patterson's assistant, MacDonald Gallion, to be your attorney general for the next four years — When you elect John Patterson to serve by his side as your governor for the next four years you will have a team working together. They have come a long way together as state attorney general and assistant attorney general. They, as attorney general and governor of this great state will make you proud to be called an Alabamian."

"I know absolutely nothing about the ad," Gallion said. "In fact, this is all news to me. I did not authorize the use of my name in such an ad; I don't know a thing about it."

"I definitely have not taken part in the runoff and I don't intend to; I'm keeping a hands-off policy," Gallion said. "In fact, I've been out of the state almost constantly since the primary. I was ready for a rest so I've been down in Florida."

Gallion denied reports that he had conferred with Patterson in Florida.

"I've seen John Patterson one time since the election, and that was when I went by my old office in the Judicial Building to pick up some things there I had left [illegible]. It happened that John was there too, and I bumped into him on the elevator."

Gallion said he planned to leave the state again either Tuesday or Wednesday on a "personal business trip" and that he would be gone until after the runoff election.

"My position will remain as it has been this far — I don't intend to take sides in the governor's race," Gallion added.

Wallace, Patterson Keep Up Hot Pace In North Alabama Campaign For Votes

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Atty. Gen. John Patterson and Circuit Judge George Wallace, keeping up the hot pace toward the June 3 runoff, took their campaigns for governor to the Birmingham area Sunday.

Patterson greeted voters at his Jefferson County headquarters where an estimated 5,000 persons shook his hand during a three-hour period. He planned to continue his hand-shaking tour of north Alabama Monday.

The attorney general, who led Wallace in the May 6 Democratic primary, was endorsed Sunday by the Shelby County Times-Herald of Montevallo and the Jefferson County Truck Growers Assn.

Jack Tanner, president of the Birmingham Farmers Market and the county farmers' organization, issued a statement predicting that Patterson will carry about 62 of Alabama's 67 counties in the runoff.

"After careful study, this organization has decided that Patterson will be the best friend of the farmer during the next four years," Tanner said.

In its endorsement editorial, the Shelby County Times-Herald said it believed in the Patterson slogan of "No Deals And No Steals." It added:

"This newspaper does not believe that a Patterson administration would be a Ku Klux Klan administration. That argument is one of the Wallace-constructed scarecrows."

Wallace, meanwhile, spoke in Attalla and berated persons whom he said distributed smear sheets outside the Gadsden City Hall as he spoke inside earlier in the day.

He said the alleged smear sheets were "half-truths and outright lies," and added that some imply that he is linked with racketeers.

"I never saw a racketeer in my life. I never lived in a town which a racketeer ruled, and my law firm has never had a gangster as its client," he declared, apparently referring to Patterson's home town of Phenix City.

Talking on the race issue, Wallace asked his audience why Patterson had not entered the Autherine Lucy case and the Montgomery bus boycott case.

The Clayton, Ala., circuit judge also promised that if elected he would give hill counties "special dollar consideration" because road building is more expensive in mountainous areas.

He planned to remain in Birmingham Monday with a speech at Warrior and a statewide television address scheduled Monday night.

Handful Causes Race Fuss, Says Patterson

John Patterson said Monday night in a filmed television address that Alabama's racial troubles had been caused "by a handful of race agitators."

"It has been just a handful of them that came into the state that caused all our trouble," Patterson said.

Recalling that he had "put the NAACP out of business" in Alabama two years ago, Patterson said "Alabama cannot afford to be divided on the race question."

Patterson also called for a "stepped-up road building program" if elected governor, adding that "I believe in building roads."

Admits Robert Shelton known to him—

Patterson about-faces on knowing Klansman

34a(2) agt

BY TRUDY CARGILE, News staff writer

CLANTON, Ala., May 21—Gubernatorial Candidate John Patterson today said that he knows Tuscaloosan Robert Shelton and had met him several times, but denied knowing that Shelton is a leader in the Alabama Ku Klux Klan.

Patterson, questioned by reporters during his sidewalk campaign tour in Central Alabama, was then asked: "Are you seeking Klan support?"

TRUDY CARGILE

The attorney general of Alabama replied:

"I will answer you this way. If any person in Alabama, if a member of any organization in Alabama believes in John Patterson, what he stands for—and good government, I solicit his vote."

PATTERSON last Thursday, while in California for an appearance on a television program, told a California newspaper:

"This is amazing. I am not a member of the Ku Klux Klan. I have never been a member. I don't know anyone named Shelton."

filed 5-21-58

Shelton was a visitor in the Patterson campaign headquarters in Birmingham a week ago today, but avoided reporters and left the building before he could be questioned.

Birmingham

PATTERSON'S OPPONENT in the gubernatorial runoff, Judge George Wallace, repeatedly has charged in the past few days that Patterson is backed by the Ku Klux Klan of Alabama and has predicted a wave of racial violence if Patterson is elected.

Ala.

Patterson's relationship with Shelton was revealed in a letter written March 19 by Patterson in which he referred to the Klan leader as "our mutual friend" and stating that he was asking the support of the letter's receiver on the suggestion of Shelton.

The letter was reproduced in The Birmingham News of last Friday.

Charles Meriwether, Patterson's campaign manager, when questioned regarding Shelton's visit to the office, replied: "Who is Shelton? I don't know him. What does he do?"

MAURICE PATTERSON, the attorney general's brother, when asked whether Shelton had been a visitor to the headquarters replied: "Yes."

Campaigning in Chilton County yesterday, Patterson promised that if he is elected no violence in any form will be tolerated in Alabama.

He said he intends to make Alabama a model of good law enforcement by working closely with law enforcement agencies.

In person-to-person campaigning, Patterson is asking the voters not to "lose sight of the real issue in this race for the governorship." He said his campaign is based on the needs of the people and nothing is more important than the welfare of the people."

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL said his lead in the gubernatorial race in the May 6 primary showed the voters are concerned "with the several basic issues . . . the need for good law enforcement, the need for help in our school system and institutions of higher learning, the need to maintain our segregated way of life and the need to cut out graft in state government."

Meanwhile the City Commission of Patterson's hometown, Phenix City, announced it is endorsing Patterson's candidacy.

Mayor Leonard Coulter said, "A man of John Patterson's caliber will raise Alabama in the eyes of the nation."

Although he had already canvassed parts of Wetumpka and Tallassee on Monday, Patterson returned there Tuesday morning and to continue on those towns and the outlying suburbs of Carrville and East Tallassee.

IT WAS LATE yesterday before he was able to reach Clanton. Workers traveling with him pointed out that Patterson is attempting to stop at all crossroads along the way.

This brought him to a halt in Marbury, Verbena, and at service stations and rural stores along the route to Clanton, delaying his intended arrival time several hours.

A special "Mary Jo Patterson Day" was to be observed by Patterson's supporters in Macon County today. The candidate's wife was to be honored with a special luncheon in Tuskegee.

News P.15

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL said yesterday he has not released an exact schedule through his headquarters for this reason. He does not want to alert any town that he will arrive at a particular hour when time on a hand-shaking basis is hard to determine.

filed 5-21-58

In Chilton today, Patterson said he hoped to visit Maplesville in the early hours then return to Clanton and continue his rounds among businesses and offices in the downtown area.

Birmingham

From Clanton he plans to continue his tour with stops at Thorsby, Jemison and areas in Shelby County.

Ala.

Thursday, if his schedule is not disrupted, he will head into Franklin County.

Two speaking engagements are on tap for the attorney general at the week-end. The first is scheduled for Albertville at 7:30 p.m. Friday and the second in Huntsville Saturday. Barbecues in his honor have been planned in both places.

Patterson KKK Supporter Denies He's Boss In Hale

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

By BOB INGRAM

Edward G. Cothran of Greensboro told The Advertiser Saturday that he was a member of the Hale County Ku Klux Klan and that he worked for John Patterson.

Ltr 5-18-58

Mr. Cothran's statement came during a telephone interview following the receipt of a registered letter to The Advertiser from him in which he denied being "head" of the KKK in Hale County or being Patterson's campaign manager. He was identified as such in a story in The Advertiser Thursday.

The telephone interview was recorded by Cothran.

After opening the conversation with a warning that "I want you to know I am recording this conversation," Cothran repeated what he had said in his letter: That he was not head of the KKK in Hale and that he was not Patterson's campaign manager.

Asked specifically if he was a member of the Klan, Cothran replied:

"Yes, I am a member, and I'm proud of it."

When asked if he knew Grand Dragon R. M. (Bobby) Shelton of Tuscaloosa, Cothran replied:

"I know Bobby well."

Cothran said he did not know who was Patterson's campaign manager in Hale County.

"As far as I know he didn't have a campaign manager," Cothran said.

He admitted paying for a number of advertisements in a Hale County weekly newspaper, The Greensboro Watchman, in support of Patterson.

"I spent $17.60 for the ads," Cothran said. "I did it because I felt Mr. Patterson was a good man."

Asked if he secured approval

from some Hale County Patterson worker before submitting the ads, Cothran said he did not.

"I just did it on my own," he explained.

Returning to the subject of the KKK, Cothran was asked who was the head of the Hale Klan. He refused to say.

Ltr 5-18-58

When asked specifically about several men identified by name, in each instance Cothran replied:

"I just wouldn't say."

Later, on the same subject, Cothran explained that "I didn't say I didn't know who the head of the Klan was, I just said I wouldn't say."

Ltr 5-18-58

During the interview, Cothran asked a question himself.

"I want to ask you one question," he said. "Will you tell me if that letter (referring to the letter bearing Patterson's name in which he referred to Grand Dragon Shelton as "our mutual friend") came from Wynn Coleman or Hamner Cobb?"

Cothran was told that the letter did not come from either of the two men mentioned. Coleman is Hale County tax collector, Cobb is editor and publisher of the Greensboro Watchman.

The complete text of Cothran's letter, written to Editor-in-Chief Grover C. Hall Jr., of The Advertiser, is as follows:

"Dear Sir:

"An article by Bob Ingram who is on The Advertiser staff in your May 15 issue states that I am Hale County Campaign Manager for John Patterson and also head of the Hale County Ku Klux Klan. This is a definite untruth. I am not now, nor have I ever been John Patterson's campaign manager; and I am not now nor have I been head of the KKK in Hale County.

"I am a supporter of John Patterson and have given of my time to work for him because I believe he is the most honest, sincere and capable man for the job and because he is the only man who has proven his stand on segregation by action. This is my personal opinion and has nothing to do with any organization.

"As to the statement that KKK members are supporting John Patterson, I wish to add that as a matter of fact a number of Klan members are actively supporting George Wallace for governor.

"Since you took the liberty of trying to smear John Patterson and r e on the front page of your paper I would appreciate your publishing this letter there also to correct your errors.

"Sincerely yours, Edward G. Cothran (signed)."

Waterway aid promised state by Patterson

BY MIRIAM HILL
News staff writer

HAYDEN, Ala., May 17 —Atty. Gen. John Patterson, in his first speech since the May 6 Democratic primary, Saturday pledged that development of Alabama's inland waterways would be one of his chief aims if he is elected governor.

Patterson was a platform guest and spoke briefly to the throng of North Alabamians who gathered at ground-breaking ceremonies of the Warrior River Electric Cooperative Assn.'s latest development at Gordon Dam.

"Whatever role I may play in the future of this state," Patterson declared, "you can rest assured I will be working with every ounce of energy at my command for the expansion of our inland waterways, docks and harbors."

He said he was [illegible] honor and a privilege to be included in the ground-breaking ceremonies.

"SUCH DEVELOPMENT," he added, "will mean more jobs, increased revenue for city and state treasuries and a higher standard of living for all our people.

"A higher standard of living for us all," he declared, "will be uppermost in my mind when I am elected governor."

Rousing ovation

PATTERSON RECEIVED a rousing ovation when introduced to the huge crowd that gathered for the outdoor program. When the ceremonies were over, he was surrounded by admirers of all ages, who wanted to wish him well and shake his hand.

A pretty blond teen-age girl informed him that "You were the winner in a poll of my class."

A sun-burnt man in faded blue overalls shook his hand vigorously and declared: "I voted for you in the first election, and I'm looking forward to voting for you again in the next one."

Patterson refused to comment on charges made by Circuit Judge George Wallace that the attorney general has the backing of the Ku Klux Klan.

Patterson led the Clayton judge by some 34,000 votes in the May 6 Democratic primary election.

'More aid to needy

CONTINUING HIS hand-shaking tour of the state, the attorney general earlier pledged that when he takes office as governor in January, he will push through "a strong, forward-looking program," aimed at solving the health problems of the people off Alabama.

"With the money saved in my administration of clean, decent government," he declared, "we will be able to give more aid to the needy sick people.

"I am also concerned by the lack of space in our hospitals," he added, "and the need for expansion of our medical training facilities in Alabama. We will all work together to push our state out front in these categories. I know it can be done."

Patterson further declared that "the schools of Alabama must and will be given help during the next four years.

"We've had enough words on this subject of what ought to be done to raise teachers' salaries and build more classrooms," he said. "I believe that the time has come for some action, because we can't afford to let our children and young people grow up without making the best sort of education available for them."

Way ahead in polls

MEANWHILE, PATTERSON was shown running far ahead of Wallace in a straw poll taken by the Hartselle Kiwanis Club. Patterson got 25 votes to six for Wallace, with two members not voting.

In Childersburg, Editor E. E. Rozelle of the Childersburg News reported that in a straw poll of the Childersburg Merchants Assn. this week, "nine out of every 10 present picked John Patterson to be the next governor of Alabama."

Patterson said Saturday that reports from all over the state indicate that "in the June 3 run-off we will double our vote in a great majority of the counties and win by a tremendous majority."

The attorney general will continue his hand-shaking tour in Central Alabama Monday and Tuesday, visiting Chilton and other counties in that area.

Wallace Challenges Foe To Make Record Public

By GEORGE PRENTICE
Advertiser Staff Writer

ATTALLA — Judge George C. Wallace shook an indignant finger at a handful of "smear sheets" Saturday and issued an indirect challenge to his opponent to bare his record for public appraisal in the race for governor.

Wallace asked his listeners to carefully scrutinize issues in the current campaign and separate for themselves the "smear from fact."

Holding aloft a fistful of printed sheets, which he said bore untrue claims against his candidacy, Wallace said he had nothing to hide from the public.

"These, and many of you have seen them, say I am a draft dodger, an integrationist, a Communist and the beneficiary of racketeer support," he said.

Wallace said the sheets had been distributed by the thousands over the state of Alabama and at each stop in his stumping tour Saturday a show of hands indicated the public was aware of the distribution.

At a night rally in front of the court house in Gadsden, Wallace said such smear sheets had been passed out, on one occasion, as he was delivering his campaign speech inside Gadsden City Hall. The incident occurred during the campaign prior to the May 6 Democratic primary, he said.

"And they (his opponent, Atty. Gen. John Patterson) talk about running a clean campaign," he said.

"I am not a draft dodger. I am a disabled veteran of the Pacific Theater in World War II; you know I have never been a Communist; and I certainly am not an integrationist," he said.

The charge of "integrationist," Wallace said, stems from a time in his court when he put a Negro youth on probation. "Certainly I put him on probation, he was a 17-year-old Negro youth in my court on a traffic charge. He deserved probation," he said.

Wallace, a resident of Clayton, is judge of the Third Judicial Circuit.

And I don't know any racketeers," he continued. "I have never represented any gang in my law practice, and I have never lived where there were any racketeers."

Wallace said that in the case of the Negro, he had "had the courage to put the youth on probation when he deserved it."

"And any man who does not have the courage to hand down just decisions from his court bench, whether the subject is white or colored, does not deserve to be governor of Alabama," he said.

Wallace again chided his opponent for not having entered the state's two integration cases —the Montgomery bus case and the Autherine Lucy enrollment at the University of Alabama.

He invited members of his audience at each stop to ask him any question about his record or his campaign. "You have a right to know the record of any man in public life," he said.

He offered to appear on television, radio or at any other public gathering to answer such questions "as the public might want to ask."

The repeated, back - handed challenge, was an apparent dig at Patterson's announced silence with the press on campaign matters.

Wallace again declined to offer more than $60 maximum old age pension, "because it would be impossible to obtain more."

Federal government participation stops at the $60 level, he explained.

"I will not lift the hopes of our old people with a promise such as my opponent has made only to crush them to earth again because they cannot be fulfilled," he said. "To give the old people of Alabama $75 a month we would have to levy nearly $50 worth of additional taxes."

Wallace said he would give counties in the hill area of the state "special dollar consideration for their road building program."

He said construction of highways in mountaineous areas is more costly than it is in the plains.

He again promised improved educational standards and better facilities, higher teacher salaries, expanded industrialization and a strong defense of the Tennessee Valley Authority. He also attacked, as he has during the recent days of the campaign, the endorsement of Patterson by South magazine.

The judge told several hundred people at the Gadsden rally that only by maintaining segregation "can Alabamians know peace."

"Peace must be preserved, because once violence errupts no lives in the state will be safe," he said.

The Gadsden audience offered the Clayton judge a warm reception. He was interrupted by applause about a dozen times.

Turning his attention to this industrial area's heavy force of organized labor, Wallace pointed to the fact that "not more than 25 members of organized labor can be found in my home county. But if you will check, you will find that despite that fact, I never once cast a vote against the working man during my six years in the legislature," he said.

He spoke at Guntersville, Albertville, Boaz and Attalla before going to Gadsden for the night rally.

Sunday he is scheduled to meet with campaign supporters at a tea in Birmingham. He will remain there Monday for a day of hand-shaking.

Patterson Wins Race For Alabama Governor

By The Associated Press

Alabama voters yesterday named Attorney General John Patterson, son of the man whose death led to the smashing of the Phenix City vice ring four years ago, as the Democratic candidate for governor.

The nomination is tantamount to election in Alabama.

With 2,394 of the state's 3,154 voting boxes counted, Patterson held a lead of 233,964 to 179,346 over his runoff rival, Circuit Judge George C. Wallace. Most of the missing votes were in areas where Patterson was leading.

The Alabama votes were the earliest counted as four states held primaries. The others were California, Montana, and South Dakota.

Knowland's Foe Strong

In California, a serious Democratic challenge to Republican Senator William E. Knowland's bid for governor took form in early but indicative primary returns.

In the race strictly for party nominations, Democratic Attorney General Edmund G. Brown held a 3-to-2 lead over the Senate minority leader in their total vote from both parties. Both candidates cross-filed.

The 53-year-old Brown was polling Knowland on the Democratic ticket by better than 2 to 1—significant in view of the fact that Knowland will need Democratic support to win in November. Democrats outregistered Republicans by 990,000.

Knight Edging Christopher

At the same time, the second-term attorney general was gaining roughly a third of the Republican votes. If the trend continued, Brown would easily hit the 500,000 plurality predicted by some of his supporters.

With fewer than 2,000 of the 2,363 precincts reporting, the total in both parties stood to 102,352 against 72,318 for Knowland.

The tally by parties:

Republican, 1844 precincts—Knowland 53,931; Brown 16,250.

Democratic, 1,805 precincts—Brown 86,102; Knowland 18,387.

Governor Goodwin Knight, who pulled a tumultuous switch after Knowland announced for governor, appeared well on the way to the Republican nomination for the United States Senate. He was leading Mayor George Christopher of San Francisco by about 3 to 2.

A huge Democratic vote, however, put the Democratic candidate, Representative Clair Engle of Red Bluff, far out in front of Knight in total votes on both party tickets. Engle had no Democratic opponent.

Early returns strongly suggested that no candidate for state-wide office would sweep both party nominations, as is possible under California's cross-filing system.

Nixon Backs Knowland

Vice-President Nixon had given Knowland strong backing. Brown had accused Knowland, minority leader of the Senate, of seeking the governorship as a springboard for the White House.

The Democrats had a 7-to-5 edge in voter registration. Democratic leaders forecast that Brown would top Knowland's total vote by 500,000.

In the contest for seats on the Alabama State Democratic Executive Committee, the voting trend was in favor of the states' rights Democrats, who favor repeal of the loyalty oath that binds Alabama to national-party nominees. They led in enough contests to give them 37 members of the 72-man committee.

Folsom Can't Succeed Self

Patterson, 36, was making his first state-wide campaign. He became attorney general after his father, Albert L. Patterson, had won the Democratic nomination for that office in 1954. The elder Patterson was assassinated before he could carry out his pledge to clean out the vice dens which had made Phenix City notorious.

His son charged during the gubernatorial campaign that gangsters and racketeers, fighting to come back, were "working like mad" to defeat him.

Governor James Folsom was not eligible to succeed himself.

N.A.A.C.P. Brought In

Patterson admitted acquaintance with the Klan grand dragon in Alabama, Robert Shelton of Tuscaloosa, but insisted he didn't know Shelton was a K.K.K. leader.

Wallace charged that his opponent welcomed support of the Klan. The Montgomery Advertiser reproduced a letter bearing Patterson's name and describing Shelton as a "mutual friend." Another newspaper, the weekly Greensboro Watchman, said the attorney general had several political conferences with the grand dragon.

Montana Campaign Quiet

Patterson charged that the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People poured money into the campaign in hope of defeating him.

Montana voters—a record 289,851 were eligible—had little to stir them as they picked candidates for one Senate and two House seats. All Democratic incumbents, Senator Mike Mansfield and Representatives Lee Metcalf and Leroy H. Anderson, were due to win renominations, Anderson without opposition.

Fighting for the G.O.P. nomination to oppose Mansfield were Mrs. Blanche Anderson, Helena Widow, and Lou Welch, 31-year-old metal-plant worker.

In first returns from South Dakota, Attorney General Phil Saunders took an early lead in the three-way race for Republican nomination for governor. In 95 of 1,969 precincts, Saunders had 3,128 votes to 1,165 for Lieutenant Governor Roy Houck and 871 for State Representative Charles Lacey. The winner meets Democrat Ralph Herseth, unopposed in the primary.

Assassin's Bullet Zooms Young Patterson To Top

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

An assassin's bullets shattered the solitude of John Patterson's political anonymity and skyrocketed him in four brief years to the threshhold of the governorship of Alabama.

The young Army veteran had no thought of seeking public office until his father, Albert L. Patterson, was shot down outside his Phenix City law office four years ago.

A stubborn determination to carry out his father's promise to rid Phenix City of its vice dens brought young Patterson out of obscurity and put him in the attorney general's office without opposition.

His father had won the Democratic nomination for the office on a pledge to clean up racket-ridden Phenix City. He was slain 17 days later.

The younger man displayed a political adeptness that led ultimately to the Democratic nomination or governor. He was nominated in a runoff primary yesterday after a campaign in which he, like his father before him, promised to keep Alabama free from gangster domination.

Patterson isn't the governor-elect yet. He faces a Republican opponent, W. L. Longshore Jr., of Birmingham, in the general election in November. But Democratic nomination for statewide office, is traditionally tantamount to election in Alabama.

The Democratic nominee, who at 37 next January will be the youngest elected governor in the state's history, is a serious-minded, hard-working lawyer who finds little time for recreation except an occasional hunting trip.

QUICK TEMPER

He has a quick temper and, in his limited political experience, has yet to learn to ride with the punch when opponents start roughing him up. During the governor's race, he lambasted newspapers which accused him of accepting Ku Klux Klan support.

But his lack of political experience might prove helpful, too, since he isn't bound by precedent. He went through the four weeks of the runnoff for example, with hardly a campaign speech.

He concentrated instead on handshaking visits to one community and another. And he won.

DRESSES CONSERVATIVELY

Patterson despite his youth wears conservative, almost somber clothes. His favorite dress is a black suit, white shirt and dark solid color tie.

His career as attorney general was highlighted by attacks on state spending, small loan companies and the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People. His campaign for governor was pegged at a great extent on a promise to keep on doing those things.

He had returned from duty as an artillery major in the Korean War only a short time before his father was murdered on June 18, 1954. The letterhead of the Patterson law firm bore the legend, "we sell our services but not our souls."

BORN AT GOLDVILLE

The governor-to-be whose $10,000 a year salary as attorney general will jump to $25,000 in the new office, was born at Goldville in Tallapoosa County. He attended public School at Rockford, Opelika, Alexander City and Phenix City and received his law degree from the University of Alabama.

His wife, the former Mary Jo McGowin of Clanton, is one of the most beautiful women in public life in Alabama. The Pattersons, married in 1947, have an eight year-old son, Albert III, and a daughter, Barbara Louise, five.

J Birds Looking For A Roost

By Bob Ingram

LIKE A SCHOOL of fish suddenly startled, prominent figures in Gov. James E. Folsom's administration have scattered in all directions in the current gubernatorial campaign.

INGRAM

Folsom has repeatedly insisted he intends to stay completely clear of the race, and to date he has made good on that promise, at least publicly. What he has done privately, or plans to do in the future, is debatable.

It is no secret Folsom has been ardently courted by several of the candidates, all of whom covet his undercover support but who do not want his public endorsement.

This approach of "be for me, Big Jim, but don't publicly endorse me" hasn't pleased Folsom. He doesn't like or understand that kind of politics.

Ironically, much of the pressure on Folsom to take a more active part in the campaign has come from the very group he has instructed to stay out of politics—his own cabinet.

Those who have joined the Jimmy Faulkner camp, and numerically they are the strongest, have reminded Folsom that George Wallace and A. W. Todd have reportedly said unkind things about him in recent months.

Remember '54

THE WALLACE group, in turn, has pointed out that the little judge was a strong supporter of Folsom in '54. They have further reminded Folsom that it was Faulkner who tried his best to be elected governor in 1954 at Folsom's expense. In those days Folsom liked to refer to the Baldwin candidate as "old Dollars for Decency." At the time, that was not meant to be interpreted as a compliment.

The type of campaigns now being waged by most of the candidates indicates rather clearly that none of them wish to incur the wrath of Folsom.

The only exception has been John Patterson, and he can afford to be brash. He wouldn't get Folsom's support anyway.

But the others—Wallace, Faulkner and Todd in particular—have cautiously refrained from saying anything which might displease his excellency.

Not only might they jeopardize their hopes of securing his private support, but they could also alienate the affections of Folsom cabinet members who have joined their respective households.

As mentioned earlier, the Folsom leaders have fragmented on the '58 race for governor. Some have become quite open in their support of a particular candidate, others are evasive.

J Birds For Faulkner

FAULKNER has attracted to his camp such big-game Folsomites as Docks Director Knox McRae, Conservation Director Bill Drinkard, Civil Defense Director Pitt Tyson Maner, and the Finney brothers of Albertville—O. H. and Bob. The former was Folsom's executive secretary during a part of the current administration.

In addition, Pleas Looney is also an active Faulkner supporter. A former director of the Industrial Development Board, Looney is now associated with Folmar & Flinn, two of Faulkner's favorite sugar daddies.

The present industrial development director, Rex Trubey gave out a "no comment" when asked of his gubernatorial affiliations. But as it was Looney who was largely responsible for Trubey inheriting the cabinet post, there is reason to believe the latter leans toward Faulkner.

Also running a broken field is Fuller Kimbrell, recently resigned as finance director and now a candidate for the state Senate.

Kimbrell seeks to represent a senatorial district which includes Faulkner's home county of Lamar. He would be in a delicate position in his own race should he support anyone other than Faulkner. While he has refused to say openly in which direction he plans to go, the Faulkner people will be disappointed if he's not with them.

It is not likely that they will be disappointed, but Kimbrell is certain to confine any such activity to behind the scenes.

J Birds For Wallace

JUDGE WALLACE, despite his key role in Folsom's campaign in 1954, has not attracted as many Folsom leaders as has Faulkner.

In the Wallace camp are Revenue Commissioner LaRue Horn, Ass't. Revenue Commissioner Frank Boswell (prison director in the first Folsom administration), legal advisor E. C. (Bud) Boswell and Montgomery attorney Charles Pinkston, holder of the honorary title of chief of staff for Folsom.

Insurance Superintendent Jimmy Horn has also been linked with Wallace, an association he emphatically denies.

"I am a merit system employe on leave of absence without pay," Horn explained. "As such I am prohibited from any political activity. I am staying out of the governor's race."

Another Folsomite reportedly in the Wallace camp, but unconfirmed, is ABC Board member Clarence Evans of Mobile. There has been talk, but again no conclusive evidence, that Highway Director Herman L. Nelson also looks upon Wallace with some favor.

Sen. Broughton Lamberth of Tallapoosa, in a race of his own for the House, insists he is staying out of the governor's race. If he weren't staying out, he too would be active for Wallace.

Agriculture Commissioner Todd, who owes his very political life to Folsom, has not secured the services of very many Folsom cabinet members.

Executive Secretary Ralph Hammond, who in a dreamy sort of way likes to imagine himself not in politics, has been closely identified as a quiet Todd booster. This identification he has denied.

However, Hammond's father-in-law, Jim Leak of Arab, has placed his full trust in Todd. Hammond will most probably follow suit.

House Speaker Rankin Fite of Marion, also involved in a race of his own, has been politically associated with Todd in the past. He is expected to vote for Todd but probably will not be an active supporter.

'Neutral'

A NUMBER of other Folsom stalwarts, contacted for comment, remained firmly on the fence.

Pensions and Security Director J. S. Snoddy insisted he was "absolutely neutral."

"I get half of my pay from the federal government, so I can't afford to get involved in politics," Snoddy said. "I've got a lot of good friends running for governor. A lot of good men are in the race. But I'm staying out of it."

The only clue in Dr. Snoddy's case is that he was a practicing physician in Franklin County for a number of years. That is Todd's home county.

ABC Administrator Melvin Dawkins of Montgomery also claimed he was not involved in the governor's race.

"I am taking no part whatsoever in the race for governor," Dawkins said. "The only race I am interested in is that of my brother. I intend to do what little I can to help him."

Brother Joe is a candidate for reelection to the House from Montgomery County.

Waiting For Folsom

ED PEPPER, the new finance director, and Public Safety Director Bill Lyerly could have harmonized on their statements. They both said practically the same thing.

"My man didn't qualify," Pepper said, in joking reference to Folsom. "I'm not committed to anyone."

"I'm supporting whoever the governor supports," Lyerly declared emphatically. "But the governor says he's not for anybody. I'm not going to kill his vote."

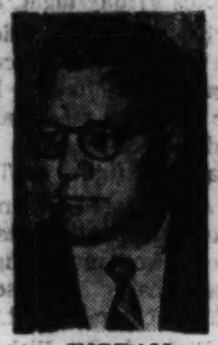
REP. GEORGE Hawkins of Gadsden, floor leader for Folsom in the House, has picked up but little support from prominent figures in the present administration.

Frank Long, one-time legal advisor, is supporting Hawkins, as are James Jones and Rowan Bone. Jones, head of the Selective Service Department, is a hometown friend of Hawkins. Bone is also a Gadsden resident. He also served as Folsom legal advisor before his appointment to the Court of Appeals, a position he later lost in an election.

Patterson's Mum On Cabinet Jobs

By Bob Ingram

JOHN PATTERSON, the strong but silent type in politics, must be laughing up his sleeve at the wild speculation going on about who will do what in his administration.



INGRAM

The quieter Patteron gets about his appointments, and to date he's shown a remarkable talent for doing just that, the wilder the speculation will get.

It's quite likely Patterson himself doesn't know as yet who he will name to the various cabinet and legislative posts of leadership. But while he waits the speculators are having a field day.

First, there's the choice plum of House Speaker. This is one of the most vital spots in any administration, one which Patterson will not fill until he is absolutely sure of his man.

Although Patterson himself may not know this, the race for speaker has been boiled down by the "experts" into a three-man field. The runners are Sen. (Rep.-nominee) Joe Smith of Phenix City, Rep. Virgis Ashworth of Centreville and Rep. Charles Adams of Alexander City.

Late Converts

ACTUALLY only two of these men were with Patterson all the way. Adams favored Faulkner in the primary, Gilchrist was Morgan County campaign manager for Karl Harrison, and Hanby went along with his hometown House college, George Hawkins.

However, all three joined nobody but the people in the second go round.

Ashworth and Smith were with Patterson all the way. They will be entitled to veterans' preference, and this bonus might make the difference.

Oakley and his paper were the first to come out for Patterson. No stranger to state political maneuverings, Oakley is very close to the next governor. And one of his claims to fame is that in his editorial endorsement of the attorney general he used the phrase that "nobody's for Patterson but the people." This slogan played no small part in Patterson's smashing victory.

Oakley says he wants nothing in Montgomery, but it's no secret he would like to see his Centreville cohort, Ashworth, as speaker of the House.

Smith, a capable member of the present Senate, was equally as strong for Patterson. His brother, attorney Roy Smith, was a big contributor to the Patterson campaign fund.

Too Close To Home

AND SMITH is possibly better equipped to be speaker, or to phrase it in reverse, Ashworth might be better suited for floor leader. The only disadvantage to Smith being speaker is that most governors shy away from having a home town associate in this position.

Adams, despite his arrival in the Patterson camp only for the second coming, is nonetheless a strong candidate for the speakership.

His long suit is his legislative experience in which he has seniority over both Smith and Ashworth who are freshmen. Adams is also an able, clever maneuverer, which is a must for the speaker.

While the names of Hanby and Gilchrist have also been mentioned, it seems doubtful at this stage that either is in line for speaker. The same holds true for Rep. Emmett Oden of Russellville, one of the first men to be mentoned.

Oden was with Todd in the primary, but worked in Patterson headquarters during the runoff. For that matter, so did Bullock County Rep. M. B. McLendon. These men will certainly be active for Patterson in the House, but neither is likely to be speaker.

Sen. Ralph Jones of Monroeville, who served as a page in the House in 1911 and will serve in that body next year, was also mentioned at one time as a speaker possibility. But Jones, while admittedly flattered, he indicated he doesn't expect to take such an active role.

The question of Senate leadership is completely up in the air. L. K. (Snag) Andrews of Union Springs, nominee to the Senate will certainly be a Patterson power. In his shadow will be Sen. E. O. Eddins of Marengo, Sen. Roland Cooper of Wilcox and Sen. Walker Givhan of Dallas.

Carvel (Bud) Woodall of Tallassee also a Senator-to-be and a former member of the upper chamber, may be in the front ranks of the Patterson group in the Senate.

Another newcomer to the Senate will be Yetta Samford of Opelika, who will unquestionably be a Patterson spokesman. He is a close personal friend of Patterson's. They were law school classmates.

Kaul For Conservation

AS TO THE cabinet posts, the most frequently mentioned possibility—and one which has won nothing but praise—has been that of Rep. Hugh Kaul of Birmingham as Conservation Department director.

Kaul gave up his House seat from Jefferson County this spring after 20 years of outstanding service. Having been connected with the timber industry for years, and profitably so, Kaul has a deep interest in conservation. Of equal importance, he was a Patterson man.

Former State Sen. Bruce Henderson of Wilcox, twice a candidate for governor himself, has been mentioned as a possible cabinet member. Initially he was listed for the key Finance Director's job but of late his name has been connected with the Revenue Department.

If Henderson is offered a post, it's likely to be head of the Revenue Department. The choice Finance Director plum is Charles Meriwether's for the asking, or so say those who claim to know.

Meriwether, for those who have forgoten, is the mysterious marvel who directed Patterson's campaign.

Sen. Sam Engelhardt of Macon is in line for something, but just what is anybody's guess. His endorsement of Patterson late in the runoff didn't hurt either Patterson or himself.

Brooks For Labor

OLIN BROOKS, a representative of the Railroad Brotherhoods in the Legislature, reportedly has the Labor Department director's seat locked up tight.

Patterson promised from the stump way back in the days he was stumping that he would appoint "good organized labor men" to the Labor Department and Industrial Relations Department posts.

Brooks certainly meets the qualifications outlined by Patterson.

No mention has been made to this point of Joe Robertson's role in the new administration. It has been taken for granted that Robertson will be executive secretary. He is currently Patterson's administrative assistant.

One-time Adj. Gen. Walter J. (Crack) Hanna may figure in Patterson's cabinet. After going on active duty for Faulkner in the primary, Gen. Hanna jumped on the Patterson bandwagon in the second primary.

Former Highway Director Guerry Pruett has also been linked with the Patterson people. And a place will probably be made in the Highway Department for County Engineer Blake Livingston of Blount, who worked overtime in Patterson's behalf.

Hunter Phillips, the pistol-packing Opelika man, certainly earned a Patterson letter during the campaign. His name hasn't been associated with any particular position but probably most any under the dome is his for the asking.

Seeing Double

THERE'S BOUND to be some confusion when the new House convenes in 1959. Included in the membership are two Reynolds, two Lockes, two Smiths, two Jones, two Johnsons and a Johnston, a McLendon and a McClendon, and worst of all, two Adams named Charlie . . . with one election just completed, talk of another has already started.

Rep. Joe Dawkins of Montgomery, defeated in a bid for reelection, has already been mentioned as a potential candidate for either mayor or police commissioner in next Spring's city election. Dawkins insists he's not interested and has no intention of running for any city office.

Patterson wins 64,000 edge in furious race

BY FRED TAYLOR
News staff writer

One of the youngest men ever chosen governor of Alabama — 36-year-old Atty. Gen. John Patterson — swept aside Circuit Judge George Wallace to win the nomination in the Democratic runoff primary by a majority of more than 64,000 votes.

Patterson's selection in yesterday's balloting climaxed his swift rise to political heights in this state.

FOUR YEARS ago, he had been picked by the State Democratic Executive Committee for attorney general to take the place of his father—anti-vice crusader Albert L. Patterson—who was slain in crime-ridden Phenix City after he had been nominated by the voters as top state law enforcement officer.

Patterson pledged in the campaign to continue the fight against organized crime. And he promised to wage war on "corruption" in the state and to preserve segregation.

With 3076 of the state's 3181 boxes tabulated, Patterson was shown with 304,644 votes to 239,946 for Judge Wallace of Clayton, a former Barbour County legislator.

WHILE PATTERSON was defeating Judge Wallace, State Sen. Albert Boutwell of Jefferson was nominated for lieutenant governor over State Sen. E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa by a lopsided margin.

And Mrs. Bettye Frink, pretty 25-year-old Leeds housewife and mother of two small sons, edged out State Rep. Pete Mathews of Clay for secretary of state.

While the more than 500,000 Alabama Democrats—a surprisingly large turnout for a runoff primary — were deciding the three statewide races, they also were balloting on control of state party machinery.

There was a 10-candidate runoff for five committee seats in the Second District and a four-man runoff for two seats from the Fourth District.

Alabama bolted the national party ticket of Truman and Barkley in 1948 to give its 11 electoral votes to the States' Rights ticket of Thurman and Wright.

Patterson, who will become 37 before he takes office next January as the state's chief executive, would be the youngest governor Alabama has had in more than 100 years.

HIS TERM as attorney general has been marked by court action against the NAACP, which brought a state court ban against the racial group. Judge Walter B. Jones of Montgomery Circuit Court, who made the ruling, also fined the NAACP $100,000 for its refusal to produce names of its members.

Next January, when the new governor takes office, the job will become one of the highest paid of any public office in the nation.

THE GOVERNOR'S salary which, presently is $12,000 a year, was raised by the Legislature to $25,000, beginning with the new term.

In addition, the governor has $60,000 a year allowed for executive mansion expenses, plus $250,000 annually in two emergency funds. The governor can spend these funds as he sees fit, as long as it is used for public purposes.

Patterson, who was graduated from high school in Phenix City, entered the Army in 1940 and was discharged a major in 1946. After getting a law degree from University of Alabama in 1949, he was recalled to active duty during the Korean War from 1951 to 1953.

HE HAD BEEN practicing law only a short time when his father was killed in 1954. A Methodist, he is married and has two small children — a son and daughter.

Judge Wallace, who landed in a runoff with Patterson when they led a field of 14 candidates in the May 6 first primary, congratulated Patterson on his victory in a wire last night which stated:

"Congratulations on your victory today. I pledge you my full, wholehearted support for a better Alabama."

PATTERSON HAD LED Wallace by 34,424 votes in the first primary. And both registered wide gains in the runoff. Patterson had received 196,859 votes in the election, with Wallace getting 162,435.

Wallace added that "I am very appreciative of the fine vote given me in this Democratic system in which the Alabama voters have had the final choice. I wish the victor much success. I want to thank the people who worked with me. It has been the high point of my life to run for the office of governor of Alabama.

"I HAVE NO REGRETS. I conducted the best campaign I knew how and had an opportunity to make many new friends over the state.

"The people have made their choice, and I pledge my support to Mr. Patterson during the next four years. I will continue the fight to maintain social and educational separation of the races."

PATTERSON SAID:

"This has been a bitter campaign, but I have no ill will toward any person. I want the cooperation of all the people of Alabama for the next four years.

"Again I wish to thank all the people of the state from the bottom of my heart for the confidence they have expressed in me."

He added that "I now call on all the people of Alabama who believe in good government, regardless of who they supported in this campaign, to join with me in furthering the cause of sound, progressive government in Alabama.

"The men and women who will work with me in my administration will be citizens of unquestioned character, ability and experience."

PATTERSON SAID he soon would begin discussing with newly nominated House and Senate members plans for organizing the incoming Legislature.

But he said he first would attend a convention of attorney generals at Chicago and then get a few days rest before embarking on this task.

The Birmingham News broke its own record last night for speedy coverage of the runoff primary. With a News reporter at every polling place in Jefferson County, and with the aid of tabulating machines from Monroe Calculating Machine Co., virtually all boxes were recorded in less than two hours after the polls closed.

Results in the various races were fed to radio and TV stations by courtesy of The News in order to serve readers as quickly as possible.

Patterson Lists Funds

Atty. Gen. John Patterson said it cost him $3,000 to win the Democratic nomination for governor, but most of it was someone else's money.

Winding up his expense account which candidates are required to file with the secretary of state, Patterson said he received $36,450 in campaign contributions.

The attorney general previously reported expenses of $29,482 and donations totaling $31,771 for the first primary May 6. He spent the additional $8,712 and received $4,679 in the June 3 runoff.

Among the previously unreported contributions he received, Patterson said, were $500 donations from Marshall Durbin of Birmingham and from O. G. Skinner of West Point, Ga. Other contributions were smaller.

CANVASSING OFFICIAL VOTE FROM JUNE 3 PRIMARY
James Beeland, Judge Mayhall, Charles Pnkston and J. W. Lovelace

NAACP foe wins in Ala.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—Young Attorney General John Patterson won the Democratic nomination for Alabama Governorship last week by a record vote, over his runner up, Circuit Judge George Wallace.

The 60,000 colored votes in the state had no effect on his victory or defeat, however, because they were cast neither for him or for his opponent, who ran on a strict segregationist ticket.

The reason colored voters refused to back Patterson was that two years ago, as Attorney General, he fostered several suits against the NAACP, getting the state Branch an injunction of $100,000 and compelling it to cease operations in Alabama.

PATTERSON was accused of campaigning with the known support of the Ku Klux Klan but denied that he is a Klansman or knowingly associated with Klan leaders.

The voters also nominated veteran State Sen. Albert Boutwell of Birmingham for Lieutenant Governor and Mrs. Lurleen Frink of Leeds for Secretary of State.

The 25-year-old blonde housewife thus preserved a tradition of feminine superiority in Alabama politics. No female candidate has ever been defeated to statewide office when opposed by a feminine contender.

RETURNS from 3,186 boxes in the Lieutenant Governor's race gave Boutwell 310,400 votes and his opponent, Sen. E. O. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa 236,636.

Mrs. Frink had 253,838 votes from 3,185 boxes and Rep. Charles (Pete) Mathews of Oakland had 236,749 for Secretary of State.

Patterson to give labor cabinet rank

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 24—(AP)—Atty. Gen. John Patterson said yesterday he would name a representative of organized labor to head the state Labor Department when he becomes governor.

Patterson and MacDonald Gallion spoke to the 29th annual convention of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen's southern division here.

The gubernatorial nominee also promised he would give labor "a square deal."

GALLION SAID "I feel the present Republican administration is letting the country down by sending funds to construct railroads abroad when the railway industry at home is in a crisis."

In addition, he endorsed some points of the Smathers bill for railroad aid. The measure is now pending in Congress.

The convention of the association's ladies auxiliary is being conducted at the same time.

Business meetings have been scheduled today by both groups.

The conventions end tomorrow.

Four Years Of Pattersonism

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—We are on the eve of of more Pattersonism.

Right now Pattersonism seems to be the ignoring of facts, figures and accomplishments.

Pattersonism also means the mirage of $75 a month for all of our fine old people, although our educational system stands in shambles and we rank 48th in the nation in education.

Pattersonism means reapportionment of the legislature with Bruce Henderson and other Black Belters standing guard and declaring it shall not pass. Henderson backed Pattersonism in the recent election.

After four years of Patterson I am afraid we will be as disgusted with it as we are at this time with Folsomism.

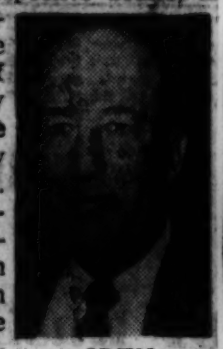
USUALLY KNOWN IN ADVANCE

Patterson's Leaders In Legislature Remain Nameless Amid Speculation

By BOB INGRAM

Gov.-nominee John Patterson is expected to begin a series of meetings with members of the new Alabama Legislature in the near future, but still lacking is any knowledge as to who he will name as his legislative leaders.

While the president pro-tem of the Senate and the Speaker of the House are elected by the members of the respective bodies, in practically every case the occupants of these two key posts are handpicked by the governor.



ODEN

Unlike previous administrations when it was known far in advance who the legislative leaders would be, there has been a dearth of speculation about Patterson's regime.

One of the first names mentioned as possible speaker of the House was Rep. Emmett Oden of Franklin. Oden was an active Patterson supporter during the runoff.

However, Oden's record on small loan legislation is in sharp contrast to Patterson's record. Practically every measure introduced during the present administration to curb loan companies was dispatched to the House Business and Labor Committee where they all met the same fate—a quiet death.

And the man most responsible for this was the committee chairman, Rep. Oden.

Also mentioned as speaker has been young Rep. Bob Gilchrist of Morgan. He went all out for Patterson in the runoff after serving as Karl Harrison's campaign manager during the primary in Morgan County.

The name of Rep. Charles Adams of Tallapoosa has also been mentioned frequently as having the inside track for the speakership. A veteran member of the House, Adams was renominated May 6. One of the men he defeated was Sen. Broughton Lamberth, Folsom's Senate leader.

GILCHRIST

SMITH

JONES

Two members of the present State Senate who have been nominated for the House also have been suggested as possible occupants of the speaker's rustrum—Sen. Joe Smith of Russell and Sen. Ralph Jones of Monroe.

Smith, a home town associate and close personal friend of the incoming governor, could be the choice. One of the more outstanding members of the present Senate, this experience would be of consideravle benefit to Smith in the House.

Sen. Jones, himself a veteran lawmaker, is well equipped to be speaker should Patterson give him the nod. Jones was an active Patterson supporter in the past election.

Even fewer names have been mentioned as Patterson leaders in the Senate. One who may play a big role is Sen.-nominee L. K. (Snag) Andrews of Union Springs.

A former member of the Senate, Andrews quietly worked for Patterson during the campaign although he was listed as a contributor to George Wallace's campaign fund.

Andrews has represented some of the same groups in Birmingham which supported Patterson in the campaign and his wealth of legislative experience would make him a formidable floor leader in the Senate.

Many Folsom holdovers—

Patterson won't get his way without argument

BY REX THOMAS

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 11—(AP)—Unless he finds a way around it, the incoming governor will have to depend on several Folsom appointees in getting his "good government" program started.

Conceivably, it could have a vital bearing for the first two years, at least, on Atty. Gen. John Patterson's promise to raise the old age pension level to $75 a month after he becomes governor.

Despite the inherent power of the executive office, some of the major functions of the state government are controlled by supervisory boards. And several of them will be dominated at the outset by members appointed by outgoing Gov. James E. Folsom.

Perhaps the most significant in light of Patterson's old age pension program is the state Board of Pensions and Security, which has a strong veto power over welfare payments if it wants to use the authority.

TECHNICALLY, the Pensions and Security Department

MRS. TAYLOR

cannot spend a penny of its money without approval of the board in adopting a budget for each year's operations.

Patterson may find a way to get control of the welfare board—other incoming governors have. But unless he does, he will find himself depending on the votes of five Folsom appointees and one holdover from the Gordon Persons administration.

Persons faced a similar problem when he took office in [illegible]. But for one reason or another, enough board members resigned to give him a majority. The same thing may happen when Patterson goes into office next January.

WHITMIRE

SWEARINGEN

expire in August, 1959, and the new governor will replace them. But holdover appointees will remain in the majority until the terms of ex-State Sen. Tom Blake Howle of Anniston and Dr. J. J. Walls of Alexander City run out in 1961.

Mrs. C. F. Halstead of Montgomery and O. H. Finney Jr., of Albertville, the other two board members, stay on until 1963, unless, of course, they decide otherwise.

NOTHING in the law says the governor can remove welfare board members after they have been confirmed by the State Senate.

The board also appoints the welfare commissioner, who administers the pension program.

Since the precedent has been set, however, there is little reason to believe Patterson will have trouble getting control of the board early in his administration if he is determined to do it. The governor's office can find powerful inducements to resign.

FINNEY

By the same token, barring resignation or death, Folsom appointees will dominate the State Personnel Board until March, 1961. The term of O. D. Coston of Bessemer, appointed by Persons, expires next March, but Rex Edwards of Gadsden stays on until 1961 and Louis Oppert of Dothan for two years after that.

A VACANCY comes up next June in the Pardon-Parole Board when the term of Persons-appointed Mrs. Frances Robinson of Prattville runs out. The Rev. W. H. Swearingen of Phil Campbell serves until 1961 and Sam Esslinger of Florence holds on until 1963.

The governor doesn't have a free hand in filling Parole Board vacancies. He must choose from a list submitted by the lieutenant governor, chief justice of the State Supreme Court and presiding judge of the Court of Appeals.

Patterson will get immediate control of the State Liquor Control Board because all three serve at the pleasure of the governor.

The terms of all 10 members of the State Docks Advisory Committee which has much to say about the development of shipping facilities in Alabama will expire next September. The new governor will replace them.

Three states righters win committee posts

BY HUGH W. SPARROW
News staff writer

Jefferson County voters yesterday elected three more candidates for membership on the State Democratic Executive Committee who are opposed to the "loyalty" oath which binds the state Democratic Party closely to the national party.

Counting four others elected in the May 6 primary, the Ninth District, which includes Jefferson, will be represented on the state committee by seven so called "states rights" or antiloyalists and one member pledged to retain the loyalty rule.

Under the rule, in effect since 1930, when it was used to prevent nomination of the late Gen. J. Thomas Heflin, persons who supported party nominees in the previous general election are ineligible as Democratic candidates.

THE THREE candidates opposed to the loyalty rule who were victorious yesterday are: Lawrence E. McNeil, who received 52,832; Barron Bethea, 48,623, and John Golden, 48,471.

Tom Ellis and Raymond Weeks, both loyalists, polled respectively 37,697 and 36,901 votes.

Anti-loyalists elected May 6 include:

Mike Bagwell, James E. Simpson, Sidney W. Smyer Jr., and Earl D. Rogers.

George Lewis Balles Jr., was the loyalist elected in the same balloting.

ALTHOUGH the newly elected candidates opposed to the loyalty oath were not willing as yet to speculate as to the one to be elected state chairman next January, one member elected May 6 was outspoken in favor of electing J. Frank Mizzell, Montgomery attorney and long-time states righter.

Mr. Smyer declared, moreover, he felt the honor rightly should be bestowed on the Montgomerian.

IN OUTLINING his views concerning future policy Mr. McNeil said:

"It has been my idea as member of the committee to give the people of Alabama the broadest possible selection of candidates to choose from in the forthcoming elections. We will strive to have candidates qualified who will reflect all shades of opinion and therefore allow the people to make the final decision."

"The people have at long last taken over the party," declared Mr. Bethea. "That's exactly how I wanted it."

SAID MR. GOLDEN:

"The people of Alabama are determined that the power of the party in Alabama shall remain with the people. They are tired of Northern Democrats and left wingers controlling the Democartic Party of Alabama.

Alabama Voters Turn To Young Candidates

By FRED TAYLOR
Staff Writer, The Birmingham News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 7—Both Alabama Democrats and Republicans placed heavy accent on youth in nominating candidates for governor to oppose each other in the November general election.

Fred Taylor

First the Republicans picked 33-year-old William L. Longshore Jr., Birmingham attorney, to run for chief executive at the head of a GOP state ticket. He was nominated along with candidates for lieutenant governor and other state offices, at the quadrennial Republican State Convention held in Birmingham last weekend.

Longshore is the youngest gubernatorial candidate the Republicans have ever chosen to do battle with the Democratic standard-bearer in this predominantly Democratic state.

Then the Democrats, in last Tuesday's runoff primary, turned out in record numbers for the second time within four weeks to nominate youthful Atty. Gen. John Patterson for the governorship.

Although a youngster, so far as Alabama gubernatorial candidates go, Patterson, at 36, is three years older than Longshore.

ALABAMA

Patterson, who will become 37 before he takes office next January, if he again is able to do the expected and defeat GOP-er Longshore, would become the youngest governor Alabama has had in more than 100 years.

Incidentally, the man Patterson beat—Circuit Judge George Wallace of Clayton—is only 38.

Also in the same runoff election, Democratic voters placed an even stronger accent on youth by nominating a 25-year-old Leeds housewife and mother of two small sons—Mrs. BETTYE FRINK—to the $9,000-a-year job of secretary of state. She defeated a bachelor, State Rep. Pete Mathews of Clay, who is nearly twice her age.

It was in choosing a lieutenant governor that Alabama Democrats stuck pretty much to custom, so far as election of major public officials is concerned. They nominated veteran State Sen. Albert Boutwell, 53-year-old Birmingham lawyer, over another legislative veteran—State Sen. E. W. Skidmore, Tuscaloosa attorney, of about the same age.

While youth played no particular part in their victory, even though some of their candidates were fairly young, States' Righters, after months of long bitter campaigning, finally won control of the state Democratic Party machinery. This apparently insured repeal of the loyalty oath for candidates binding Alabama to the national party.

Anti-loyalty oath candidates won five more seats in the runoff to clinch 37 places on the 72-member State Democratic Executive Committee, which sets party rules. And they had a chance to grab off two more in close races in South Alabama, the outcome of which must await official tabulation early next week.

Thus it became certain that the spelled-out loyalty oath requiring candidates qualifying in Democratic primaries to pledge support to the national party nominees for president and vice president will be repealed before the 1960 presidential election.

The Week in Alabama

Next January, when the new governor of Alabama takes office, the job will become one of the highest paid of any state office in the nation. The chief executive's salary, which presently is $12,000 a year, was raised by the Legislature to $25,000 annually, beginning with the new term. In addition, the governor has $60,000 a year allowed for executive mansion expenses, plus $250,000 annually in two emergency funds, which the governor can spend as he sees fit, as long as it is used for public purposes. . . . Birmingham's famed Committee of 100, which has helped lure scores of new industries to Birmingham and many other cities and towns in Alabama, reports a sharp pick-up in interest in the Birmingham district by national industrial firms. Some announcements are expected soon regarding plans of some of the industrial giants to locate new plants in this state. . . . One of the problems that has plagued Jefferson County high schools are fraternities and sororities. Now Mountain Brook Mayor Dave Hamilton and others are trying to get the county board of education to lift its ban on these student social organizations.

Mother Elected Judge

Mrs. James S. Coleman Jr., housewife and mother of Eutaw, whose late father was long time probate judge of Greene County and whose husband was elected an associate justice of the Alabama Supreme Court two years ago, decided she wanted to be a judge herself.

So she proceeded to become a candidate and defeated incumbent Greene County Probate Judge G. D. Seale in Tuesday's election. She will take over her new duties in January.

'Invasion of state rights'—

Patterson blasts civil rights probe

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Atty. Gen. John Patterson, the incoming governor, charged the federal Civil Rights Commission today with an "unwarranted invasion of states rights" be cause of its ordered investigation of Negro voting complaints.

JOHN PATTERSON
. . . Blasts commission

session is necessary "until we see what condition the Highway Department is in next January," when he takes office.

Patterson said in a speech at McIntosh last night that a $50 million bond issue for highway construction will be needed in the next four years. He said it could be done without increasing taxes.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL told The Associated Press today he will call the Legislature into session after he becomes governor "if it is necessary to keep the road program from breaking down or to prevent the loss of federal matching money."

He told a group in his speech last night that $370 million in federal funds will be available to Alabama during his four-year term as governor.

THIS WOULD BE matched by $170 million in state funds, he continued. After operating expenses, the Highway Department would have a surplus of $60 million and to complete the matching funds, the bond issue would be necessary.

The attorney general was guest of honor at a luncheon here yesterday.

Patterson's comment was prompted by the announcement in Washington yesterday that investigators had been instructed to look into charges of discrimination against Negroes in Alabama, Florida and Mississippi.

THE ATTORNEY general said there is "ample procedure to protoect the voting rights under Alabama law," but that he has received no complaints.

He said anyone denied registration as a voter can appeal to Circuit Court, and if turned down there can go on to the State Supreme Court.

"But I don't know of any case except one which has appealed to court since I've been attorney general," Patterson continued. He said a white man, Robin Mullins, went to court in Russell County.

Mullins was ruled ineligible to vote in Russell County during a reidentification of voters there, the attorney recalled. The Board of Registrars questioned whether the man lived in Alabama or Georgia.

But Circuit Judge J. P. Dicks ruled Mullins was a legal resident of Alabama, Patterson said, and entitled to vote there.

PATTERSON SAID the Civil Rights Commission action was unjustified in view of what he termed the absence of complaints filed with the courts or with his office.

Meanwhile, if civil rights investigators are already at work in Alabama — the commission announcement said they had started an inquiry in one of the three states—they went about their business quietly.

A check of state and local officials and Negro leaders showed no one had heard of any investigation being carried on within the state.

The president of a Negro organization at Tuskegee, however, said a committee is reviewing the Macon County Board of Registrars' record for the past year. The group's report, he added, will be used to decide whether any complaints will be filed now.

IN AN announcement from Washington yesterday, the commission said investigations had been ordered into complaints that Negroes had been denied voting rights in Alabama, Florida and Mississippi. However, officials declined to say which state would be the scene of the first investigation.

Chairman John A. Hannah said yesterday in Washington, investigators have been told to look into complaints. Some probers are already at work in one of the states, he said.

Hannah would not designate the state in which the investigators have started work. Saying he did not want to make the probers' job more difficult, he turned away most of newsmen's questions about details.

JOHN A. HANNAH
. . . Orders rights probe

The commission chairman and ts staff director, Gordon M. Tiffany, spoke to reporters after a wo-day closed door session of he commission.

THEY SAID:

1. One of the complaints is a collection of many individual cases.

2. While some of all of the complainants may be members of an organization, like the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, the complaints did not come from any group as such.

3. There so far has been no refusal of cooperation by local authorities—but it is still too early to say there will be no such refusal.

4. The investigators will make a detailed factual report to the commission. That group will then decide whether any further action is indicated.

Race Issue Unity Urged By Patterson

DECATUR (AP) — Gov. Nominee John Patterson said Wednesday the people of Alabama must work together to solve race problems and promised that in the future "we will be after" the agitators.

The attorney general and Democratic nominee for governor made a general review of his future program, but didn't go into the details which had been indicated were in prospect. He addressed the annual meeting of the Joe Wheeler Electric Co-Op membership.

Patterson said he had made no commitments that would hinder him from carrying out "the people's wishes for good government." He added, "I am confident that we will have a splendid legislature."

The attorney general said that encroachment of the federal government on state's rights concerning segregation was one of the problems he would have to face. He said racial trouble was caused by interference from the federal government and a "handful of racial agitators."

"We've put the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People out of business in Alabama," Patterson declared. "This problem cannot be settled by federal troops. The only way is for the people of Alabama to work together to solve it. In the years to come it is going to be the agitators that we will be after."

He promised a program of good law enforcement for the state, and said there would be no room for gangsters in Alabama — a pledge made repeatedly during his primary races.

Patterson said on other matters:

Farm problems—He will work with the people in Washington to get the best possible farm program in Alabama.

Tennessee Valley Authority—"I will work to expand and improve the operation of TVA and fight any attempt to curtail TVA by the federal government or anybody else."

River development and state docks—"We want a good river development and state docks program. The state docks at Mobile operated in the red this last year, and we're going to put it in the black, the way it should be."

Highways—Patterson said Alabama has a good highway program, has had for several years, "and we plan to continue it." He emphasized the importance of the farm-to-market road program. He said he expects that the federal highway system plans for Alabama will be complete during his administration.

Taxes — The nominee said his program will insure that the tax dollars will be used fully to benefit the state.

Welfare program — Patterson said he wanted to see "our senior citizens get enough to live on."

He promised a program of law enforcement for the state, and said there would be no room for gangsters in Alabama—a pledge made repeatedly during his primary races.

He said he would co-operate with R. C. Bamberg of Uniontown, Democratic nominee for Agriculture Commissioner, "to give Alabama a well balanced farm program."

Patterson said he wanted a "concentrated expansion of our docks and rivers development program to bring more industry and increase the market for farm products."

He said he had discussed the farm situation with Bamberg several times and that they would co-operate to create an adequate farm program.

Accompanying Patterson were his wife, State Sen. Sam Engelhardt of Shorter, and Charles Meriwether, his state campaign manager in the recent Democratic primaries.

Patterson said on other matters:

Farm problems—He will work with the people in Washington to get the best possible farm program in Alabama.

Tennessee Valley Authority—"I will work to expand and improve the operation of TVA and fight any attempt to curtail TVA by the Federal Government or anybody else."

TO HALT INTEGRATION—

Todd Would Take No Court Action

BY CLARKE STALLWORTH

Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd said yesterday that—if elected governor—he will take no action to close any school in order to prevent racial integration.

On a campaign trip from Montgomery to Birmingham, he told crowds that he will take no integration cases into court because "we can't win."

But he promised to preserve segregation through action "at the local level."

Some other gubernatorial candidates have advocated closing any school threatened with integration.

The Alabama school placement law authorizes local school boards to close schools if necessary to prevent race mixing, but there is no provision to do it.

Said Todd:

"We can handle our problems on the local level without going to court. If we go into court, we know already that we can't win because we cannot out-litigate the forces of integration."

Ex-Gen. John Patterson took a shot at newspapers in Salem.

Said Patterson:

"Some of the big city newspapers are more interested in politics than they are in good government. I am a firm believer in a free press because I have lived in a town (Phenix City) where the only weapon we had against the gangsters was a free newspaper.

"I can't think of anything worse than for a newspaper to slant the news on the front page in order to help somebody politically."

State Rep. George Hawkins told Walker County audiences yesterday that "a major effort to cripple or weaken the competitive bid bill will be the first order of business if certain candidates are elected governor."

Said Hawkins, who co-sponsored the bid bill in the 1957 Legislature:

"The people who fought against the bid law are all out in support of other candidates, and you can bet your bottom tax dollar there's a reason.

"They hope to go down to Montgomery to pocket more of Alabama's tax dollars, and the competitive bid bill stands in their way. I think you have a right to ask every candidate how he stands on this law. To date, most of the candidates haven't even mentioned it as part of their programs.

"As co-sponsor of the law, I fought for its enactment. As a candidate for governor, I have pledged to strengthen it. It is the one solid achievement in recent legislative history toward eliminating waste and political favoritism in spending your tax money.

"With this law, the political gravy train was derailed. If you want to keep it that way, support a candidate who helped derail it and watch out for those who carry the old crew with them in their campaign travels."

Candidate Jimmy Faulkner denied once again yesterday that he has promised any jobs to anyone if he's elected governor.

Said Faulkner in Boaz:

"I have not made anybody any commitment, any promise, privately or otherwise that I wouldn't make off this platform. If anybody comes up to you and says they understand Jimmy Faulkner has promised so and so a job, you just look back at them and say you are telling a story.

"I will say this, though, that when I do start selecting them it is going to be somebody who supported me because after all, the finest people on earth are supporting me, so why shouldn't I select the finest people on earth to fill these jobs?"

Faulkner also said he helped sponsor a bill "to give you farmers of the state a 3 per cent sales tax exemption on seeds, fertilizers, and insecticides.

"One candidate," said Faulkner, "who claims to be a great friend of the farmer now was in the Senate and didn't even bother to vote for it one way or the other, of course, he wasn't running for governor then."

This was an obvious reference to Todd, the only other gubernatorial candidate who served in the Senate at that time.

Candidate George Wallace visited the State Capitol in Montgomery yesterday, but a scheduled rally on the Capitol steps was washed out by rain. Instead, Wallace spoke in the House chamber to an audience of state employes.

He promised a "better and stronger" retirement system for people on the state payroll.

Wallace also took the occasion to deny that he has offered cabinet jobs to anyone.

Schedules of some of the candidates today:

WALLACE—Tuscaloosa at 10:30 a.m., Fayette at 1 p.m., Winfield at 2:30 p.m., Hamilton at 4:30 p.m., Sheffield at 7:30 p.m.

OWEN—Sumiton at 9 a.m., Jasper at 10 a.m., Cullman at 11:30 a.m., Arab at 2 p.m., Hartselle at 4 p.m.

PATTERSON—West Blocton at 9 a.m., Centreville at 10 a.m., Brent at 11 a.m., Tuscaloosa at 2:30 p.m., and Northport at 4 p.m.

FAULKNER—Athens at 9:30 a.m., Decatur at 10:30 a.m., Hartselle at 11:30 a.m., Cullman at 2:15 p.m., Guntersville at 2:30 p.m., Cleveland at 4:30 p.m., Oneonta at 7:30 p.m.

HAWKINS—Shift change in Gadsden at 6:15 a.m., Fort Payne at 8:30 a.m., Cedar Bluff at 9:35 a.m., Centre at 10 a.m., Piedmont at 10:50 a.m., Jacksonville at 11:30 a.m., Anniston at 12:10 p.m., Oxford at 12:45 p.m., Talladega at 1:40 p.m., Pell City at 2:40 p.m., Ashville at 3:40 p.m., Oneonta at 4:30 p.m., and Bessemer at 7 p.m.

The Passing Throng

By Stuart X. Stephenson

AUBURN OLD GRADS have something to appear serious about.

There was a determined expression on the faces of the men from all over the state who shouldered the responsibility of raising the necessary funds to help Auburn regain its rightful place among the accredited colleges of engineering in the nation.

Maybe it was the word "RESURGAM" which is translated "I Shall Rise Again." Or perhaps the cold, calculating remarks by President Ralph B. Draughon, or the studious, spirited statements of Dean Fred H. Pumphrey all combined to excite the Auburn men to vigorous actino.

They left the Student Union Building in a determined frame of mind, sure of getting all (and more) of the $250,000 needed for the Emergency Appeal Fund. They reminded us of a football team taking the field for the big game. No Tiger team ever took the field with more fight than was in evidence here Friday when the 200 old grads departed on their separate ways with the one major goal in mind—to regain accreditation for their Alma Mater.

THE CAMPAIGN to raise $250,000 from alumni, industry and foundations will solve only part of Auburn's engineering problem. This is admitted on all sides. The real need of the five-year building plan actually is triple the emergency fund figure.

Manpower behind the drive for the quarter-million reads like a "Who's Who" for sure. Roy B. Sewell, successful businessman of Bremen, Ga., is serving as chairman. He is national president of the alumni association. Frank P. Samford, Birmingham, is vice chairman.

On the sponsoring committee are Adolph Weil, C. W. (Bill) Streit, Ed C. Leach, Hugh Agricola, Yetta Samford, George Mattison Jr., Wm. J. Samford, W. W. French Jr., Edward A. Roberts, Dr. A. H. Lisenby, Wm. F. Byrd, Dr. Ralph Draughon, Clyde C. Pearson, Charles F. Davis Jr., Coach Ralph Jordan, Joseph B. Ledbetter, George Johnston Jr., and E. G. Fitzgerald Jr.

Among the alumni present for the "briefing" were two Atlantians by the same name—Herman Jones. The spirit of the entire group reflected the belief that Auburn is tackling first things first.

MACON COUNTY has 697 Todd votes that will either go to Wallace or Patterson — or by the boards. Shorty Price landed one vote in Macon and four kinsmen voted for Winston Gullatte. The final tally of 1,028 to 883 for Wallace over Patterson in Macon puts quite a value on the Todd votes.

Judge William Varner's friends were elated over the election results which found the veteran probate judge leading his combined opposition by more than 600 votes.

Biggest vote getter in the county was State Senator Sam Engelhardt who polled 1,067 votes to 903 for Skidmore and 273 for Boutwell. The runoff for the office of lieutenant governor in Macon will be interesting.

IN RUSSELL COUNTY the anti-Patterson group harps on the fact that the attorney general could barely carry his own county. Sad among the losers in Russell was J. W. (Jabe) Brassell who missed out by 11 votes in the 26th judicial circuit judgeship.

The veteran "Jabe," a familiar figure in the legislature for years, waged a hard campaign for the judgeship. In the runoff are James H. Caldwell, circuit solicitor, and William R. Belcher, an attorney.

ONE STEP across the lobby it is for Joe Smith, state senator of Russell who defeated Jimmy Putnam by 22 votes for seat two in the house of representatives. Putnam served as city clerk of Phenix City for many years.

Rep. Homer Cornett, attorney, was forced into a runoff by Cecil Curtis, attorney and real estate man, for house seat one in the legislature. You have to be on the ground in Phenix City to feel the shocks that run through the political terrain on this side of the Chattahoochee.

THE AROMA of the best barbecue in Lee County will permeate the atmosphere Thursday. The Board of Directors of the State Chamber and many big wheels in business and industry will be assembled to chew and chatter at Dairyland Farms. The occasion is the annual meeting of the C of C Board. They'll never land a finer host than John Lewis Whatley.

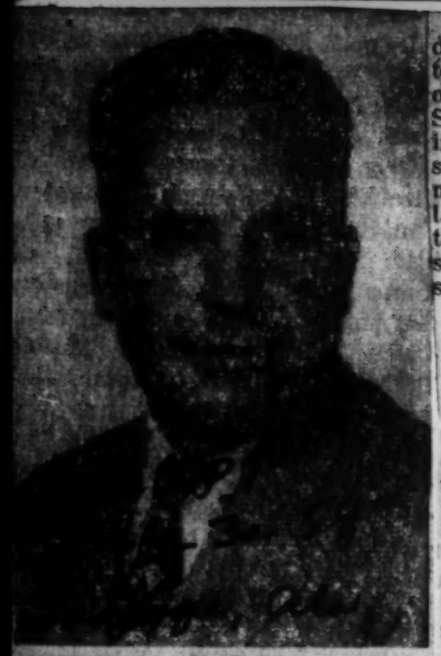
FAULKNER TELLS OF HOTEL THEFT

Kay Minette publisher, Jimmy Faulkner, defeated gubernatorial candidate, said Saturday he was robbed of $852 "in my hotel room in Birmingham."

Faulkner said the money, along with valuable papers in his wallet, was taken from the room while he was bathing.

Among the papers were a pilot's license, and war records, he said.

Faulkner was in Birmingham winding up campaign business at the time.



HORNSBY ELECTED—Sheriff Preston Hornsby, of Macon County, is the new vice president of the Alabama Sheriffs Association, having been selected for the honor at the annual meeting held in Montgomery last week. Sheriff Taylor Wilkins, of Baldwin County, is presisident of the group.

Wallace calls for Patterson to state views

BY CLANCY LAKE
News staff writer

RED BAY, Ala., May 17—Circuit Judge George Wallace Saturday challenged his opponent in the governor's race to tell in a public speech his stand on education, agriculture, the Tennessee Valley Authority and reapportionment for the state Legislature.

The judge wound up a day-long swing through North Alabama late Saturday afternoon.

In his major speech of the day at Russellville, Judge Wallace ripped into what he called John Patterson's "silence on the major issues before the state."

Earlier this week, Wallace had challenged Patterson to a "face to face discussion" of the issues on a statewide television network.

THE CLAYTON JUDGE bore down heavily in talks at Moulton, Russellville and Red Bay on his pledge to reapportion the State Legislature. He said that if he is elected governor he will submit a constitutional amendment to reapportion the Legislature and if the legislators fail to act at their first regular session he will call them back into special session.

Wallace tore into Patterson's claims that he can save 25 cents out of every dollar spent by the state of Alabama. Wallace said Patterson has publicly stated that millions of dollars have been stolen and that he (Patterson) knows hundreds of incidents of stealing.

"But not one person has been indicted. Not one person has gone to jail," Wallace said.

He said that as the attorney general, Patterson is the chief law enforcement officer of Alabama and if any money has been stolen he should have brought those guilty to justice.

Says backers oppose TVA

SOME 600 PERSONS at Russellville gave their heartiest applause to Wallace when he told them, "I don't live there in Montgomery so I don't know everything that is going on. But if I were the attorney general and I knew that millions of dollars had been stolen, I'd have had some folks behind bars in Kilby Prison making little rocks out of big ones."

He also drew applause in Russellville when he told his audience that he had helped raise money for the "Citizens For TVA" during the Dixon-Yates dispute, and he asserted that Patterson is backed by those opposed to the TVA.

After reviewing his pledge to submit a bond issue to the Legislature for a school capital outlay program and better teachers' pay, Wallace asked the crowd, "Have you ever heard my opponent make a public speech about his stand on education? Have you ever heard him tell how he stands on reapportionment? Have you ever heard him express his opinion on TVA? Have you ever heard him tell you what he will do for the farmers? He has not mentioned these issues, but I have talked about them since the first day I started running for office."

Repeats industry pledge

WALLACE IN HIS various speeches Saturday repeated an earlier pledge that if he is elected he will spend several months prior to his inauguration traveling over the nation in an effort to induce various industries to locate in Alabama.

Wallace won applause at all of his speaking points when he said that segregation would always be maintined in Alabama through "lawful means"

He said, "We've got people in this state who want to destroy the peace. Those in authority should maintain segregation—not a lawless group."

GRAND OLE OPRY STAR Minnie Pearl accompanied Wallace Saturday as he resumed his public speaking tour after a 10-day trip over the state to confer with his various campaign workers.

Wallace was slated to be in Birmingham late Saturday night, but planned to return to the TVA area Monday for more speeches.

Alabama Primary Vote Set A Record

Patterson Got 33.5 Per Cent Of Gubernatorial Returns

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP)—Alabama voters cast 618,000 ballots in the Democratic primary last Tuesday topping the previous record election turnout by 23,000 votes.

The official canvass of returns today showed 33.5 per cent of those who expressed a preference for governor voted for Atty. Gen. John Patterson and 26.2 per cent went for Circuit Judge George Wallace.

Patterson, with 196,859 votes, led the field of 14 candidates seeking the Democratic nomination for governor. Wallace was the runner-up with 162,435. They will settle the issue in a runoff primary June 3 since the attorney general failed to get a clear majority.

Far back in third place, was Jimmy Faulkner. He got 91,512 votes.

Four statewide races were decided in the first primary. The rest must be settled in the runoff which puts the top two candidates against each other for each party or public office left in doubt.

Nominated without a runoff were MacDonald Gallion for attorney general, Mrs. Mary Texas Hurt for state auditor, R. C. (Red) Bambert for agriculture commissioner and Mrs. Agnes Baggett for state treasurer.

A runoff will be necessary for lieutenant governor, with State Sens. Albert Boutwell and E. W. Skidmore as the contestants. State Rep. Charles (Pete) Mathews and Mrs. Bettye Frink will run it off for secretary of state, and Frank R. Steart and I. J. Browder were left in a runoff for state superintendent of education.

Congressmen George Grant in the Second District and Albert Rains in the Fifth won renomination. Grant outdistanced State Rep. Wilbur Nolen of Montgomery 27,702 votes to 35,710. Rains defeated Gadsden industrialist R. H. Hardin 57,490 to 16,170.

Wallace Asks For Debate In Alabama

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Circuit Judge George C. Wallace Tuesday night challenged Alabama Atty. Gen. John Patterson to a face-to-face debate on a statewide television hookup.

Wallace, runnerup to Patterson in the race for governor in last Tuesday's democratic primary, issued the challenge while in Mobile for a series of conferences with southwest Alabama supporters.

He said the voters of Alabama have a right to know how each stands on segregation, law enforcement, corruption in government and their past records. Wallace issued this statement:

"I am inviting my opponent to discuss face-to-face on a statewide television hookup the issues of this campaign. I do not ask for a debate: I am asking for a frank public discussion.

"The voters of Alabama want to know and have a right to know where each of us stands on segregation, on law enforcement, the issues of cleanups and corruption in government, and our past records even to the extent of our law firms and who they represent."

An Editorial—

Character, ability and experience well qualify Faulkner for governor

IN THESE DIFFICULT AND PERILOUS YEARS, the people of Alabama critically need the fundamental virtues and capacities in their governor. They will need, in the next four years of a new administration in Montgomery, a governor possessing integrity, ability, wisdom, courage—the all-around qualifications that make for effectiveness, achievement and dignity in state government, for well-being and progress in the state as a whole.

The Birmingham News believes that Jimmy Faulkner possesses such qualifications in high degree. It again endorses him for governor, as it did in 1954. Four years after his first gubernatorial race he is, we believe, still better qualified for the office in experience, maturity and grasp of state problems.

JIMMY FAULKNER, when he was 12, lost his father and had to begin early to deal with problems and responsibilities. That he made his way well—in discharging family duties, in making a living, in building his newspaper business, in political and other public service—impressively attests his character and his abilities.

He knows well that economic problems are basically involved in many of the major difficulties with which the people of Alabama have long contended—and continue to contend. In these days of economic readjustment, that reality is being underscored anew. Mr. Faulkner's emphasis on the need among our people for more "pocket dollars" vividly summarizes his awareness of the urgency of economic progress in the state.

Such progress—bringing better things for hard-pressed farm families, more industries and jobs in cities and towns, and a generally rising standard of living—could greatly lessen our difficulties in many fields. We believe Mr. Faulkner has a deep-seated passion to contribute to such progress, and the ideas and will to be effective to that end as governor.

EDUCATION IS BASIC in seeking economic and all other progress. The improvement of our educational system is outstanding among the challenges we all face. Jimmy Faulkner's mother was a school teacher for many years. The cause of education is very close to his heart. In the State Senate he served with effectiveness as chairman of the Senate Education Committee, and he also was chairman of a joint legislative interim committee on education. He is exceptionally well-informed and deeply concerned about school problems and equipped to do a good job in dealing with them.

RACIAL RELATIONS intensely concern our people. They present complex problems. The great majority of our white citizens are profoundly determined to maintain customs and practices as to segregation which issue from profound conviction and feeling. Mr. Faulkner understands those convictions and feelings and is pledged to uphold them, while at the same time steadfastly and vigorously striving for fair treatment and opportunity for all our citizens, friendly relations between the races, maintenance of law and order, the avoidance of hate and violence. We believe he has the spirit, the understanding, the courage and the ability to lead forward in this troubled area of our common life.

NUMEROUS OTHER MAJOR PROBLEMS confront our people besides those of industry, farm, business in general, education, racial relations. In dealing with all of them, it is the fundamental virtues and capacities that can make for the most effectiveness and service on the part of a governor.

Jimmy Faulkner stands decisively high in these qualifications, and we believe the people of Alabama are fortunate in having the opportunity to choose so well-qualifed a man as their next governor.

Todd Makes Two Talks In County

Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd brought his governorship bid to Macon County Thursday morning, declaring, "It will take a unified effort from the next governor to stop the recession in Alabama." He spoke at both Notasulga and Tuskegee.

Todd, who was successful in obtaining a cottoh freeze last year, said that farming and industrial development could work side by side to develop Alabama.

As commissioner of agriculture and industry, he pointed out that he had obtained laws increasing poultry and dairy production in the state and that he had set up the State Indusrial Planning and Development Board, responsible for 252 new industries to the state in the past three years.

He also blasted professional politicians and large corporation newspapers, as well as large utility companies. His plan for curbing high utility rates would apply a special court made up of circuit judges from across the state, instead of merely in Montgomery County.

Wallace Claims KKK Members Back Patterson

BIRMINGHAM—George Wallace charged in a televised interview here Sunday that the Ku Klux Klan supported John Patterson in the May 6 Democratic primary and also is supporting him in the runoff.

Wallace, the Barbour County circuit judge who faces Patterson in the June 3 runoff for governor, declined to name the Klan units he said are working for Patterson.

"They (the KKK) are supporting my opposition; you know that," Wallace told the panel of interviewers. He refused to elaborate.

Wallace also charged that Patterson should have somebody behind bars to support his claims that millions of dollars in state money got into the pockets of crooks and chiselers."

"CLEANUP" BLASTED

Wallace blasted the attorney general's proposed cleanup of state government.

He told the panel of newsmen that according to Patterson's figures, more than $400 million has gone into "the pockets of crooks and chiselers" in the past three and one-half years.

"Patterson ought to go before the Montgomery County Grand Jury and indict the entire administration, every single person involved," Wallace declared.

INFORMATION TO JURY

The runnerup in last Tuesday's Democratic primary said if "Patterson will tell me who is getting the graft, I'll see that the grand jury gets the information."

Patterson campaigned strongly on a "cleanup government" basis, and Wallace has indicated by his two appearances since the primary that he is going to harp on the corruption issue.

The television program, "Alabama Press Conference," will present Patterson's views in answer to reporters' questions next Sunday.

Patterson says public aroused to state issues

BY TRUDY CARGILE
News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 20—Atty. Gen. John Patterson, emphasizing the issue in the governor's race, asserted today that "nothing is more important than the welfare of the people."

Atty. Gen. Patterson, stumping along in Central Alabama, predicted that "an aroused public opinion will not be denied its desire for good government.

CARGILE

Patterson's campaign today was mostly one of handshaking. As he toured this area and headed for North Alabama tomorrow, Patterson sidestepped any public meetings for this week expect a broiler industry meeting at 7:30 p.m. Friday at Albertville.

"OUR CAMPAIGN has been based on the needs of the people," Patterson said.

"Our campaign has been based on the needs of these people, and the lead established in the first primary clearly shows that the people of Alabama area interested and concerned over several basic issues.

Patterson said:

"Among these are the need for good law enforcement, the need to help our school system and institution of higher learning, and the need to maintain our segregated way of life, and the need to cut out graft and waste in state government, to name only a few."

NO PARTICULAR schedule has been prepared for Patterson, who led the Demo ticket in the May 6 primary, and who faces a June 3 runoff with Circuit Judge George Wallace for the gubernatorial nomination in the June 3 [illegible]

"We are working day and night asking the people of Alabama to join us on June 3 in an overwhelming display of unity," Patterson said.

Patterson headed north after a tour yesterday of Elmore County. Visiting Wetumpka, Eclectic and Tallassee, he made his first active bid for votes there since the May 6 primary.

His only other public appearance in Alabama in the past two weeks was at a dam dedication at Hayden Saturday.

THERE WERE NO speeches during yesterday's tour of Elmore.

Centreville Press endorses Patterson

CENTREVILLE, Ala., May 20—The Centreville Press, Bibb County weekly newspaper, has endorsed John Patterson for the Democratic nomination for governor with the statement that "the first primary definitely established the fact that the people of Alabama are behind the move for honest and decent government."

Special Session On School Needs Is Wallace Plan

By The Associated Press

A promise to call a special session of the Legislature to consider school needs if elected governor, was made Wednesday by Circuit Judge George Wallace.

The consideration of school needs, Wallace said, would be based on a school problem study being made by the Alabama education commission. The report of the commission is to be submitted to next years Legislature.

"I will use every just and legal means at my command to enact the necessary legislation to put into reality the solution to our educational problems as revealed by the study of the AEC . . ." the Clayton judge said in a statement.

Patterson has made no comment on Wallace's challenge to discuss campaign issues in a television broadcast.

Answer Council questions—

Six candidates back modified loyalty oath

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 29—(AP)—Support of six gubernatorial candidates for "a modified Democratic Party loyalty oath" was claimed yesterday by the Alabama Assn. of Citizens Councils.

Replies from candidates for governor and other statewide offices to a questionnaire the organization circulated were made public yesterday.

Candidates for governor were asked, among other things, if they would use their influence for a "modified loyalty oath" that would not bind Alabama office seekers to support candidates of the National Democratic Party who are Negroes or who favor integration.

OFFICERS OF the prosegregation Citizens Councils organization said support for such an oath was indicated on the questionnaires of Laurie Battle, W. E. Dodd, Shearen Elebash, John Patterson, Ralph Price and the Rev. Billy Walker.

The announcement added State Rep. George Hawkins and Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd said they would not go along with it. No answers were reported by the council as having been received from John Crommelin, Jimmy Faulkner, Winston Gullatte, State Rep. Karl Harrison, Jack Owen and Circuit Judge George Wallace.

Under the present Democratic loyalty oath, candidates in the primaries must pledge in advance to support the regular presidential ticket of the party, no matter who might be nominated.

THE CITIZENS COUNCILS officers said another question asked if candidates would support legislation to cut off appropriations and close any school, public park or other institution "where integration is practiced."

Nine candidates promised to support this, the report said.

The announcement said Battle, Dodd, Elebash, Harrison, Hawkins, Price, Walker and Wallace endorsed the proposal.

The only candidate to say he wouldn't support such legislation was Todd, the organization said, and Crommelin, Faulkner, Gullatte and Owen did not answer.

ALL BUT ONE of the five candidates for lieutenant governor gave their support to the proposed "modified loyalty oath," the announcement said.

It was endorsed by State Sen. Albert Boutwell, State Sen. Sam Engelhardt, Robert T. Butler and Asa E. Carter, it said, and State Sen. E. W. Skidmore failed to return the questionnaire.

WILL FOLSOM KEEP HANDS OFF?

FRED TAYLOR
Staff Writer, The Birmingham News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 3—Sharp-eyed Alabama politicos are keeping Gov. James E. Folsom under close scrutiny to see whether he will attempt to throw his political weight behind either of the candidates in the windup of the 14-man race for governor.

Some observers have believed—and still do—that the controversial but politically powerful Folsom might step quietly into the campaign picture in an attempt to tip the scales in favor of one of the aspirants in Tuesday's Democratic primary election.

But there were no visible signs that Gov. Folsom planned to do anything other than what he has insisted he would do—keep hands off the governor's race.

Even so, some of Folsom's lieutenants were lined up in the camps of three of the front-running candidates — Jimmy Faulkner, the 1954 runner-up to Folsom; Judge George Wallace and Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd. The latter, a former state senator, got his present job with Folsom's help.

Cancels Holy Land Trip

Meanwhile Gov. Folsom, who canceled an announced trip to the Holy Land, busied himself as he moved around over Alabama, with an aide emphasizing that the chief executive was "avoiding politics."

He does plan to take Mrs. Folsom and other members of his large family to the World's Fair at Brussels around the middle of June. But that will be after Tuesday's election and the June 3 runoff primary which most observers believe will be necessary to decide who will be the Democratic nominee for Alabama's next governor.

Two of the gubernatorial candidates—Atty. Gen. John Patterson and State Rep. Karl Harrison—had kept up a steady attack on the Folsom administration. Patterson said he was "fed up" with the Folsom regime and Harrison declared that, if elected, he "would not leave a single Folsom tree in a forest of Folsom appointments."

Alabama Democrats Tuesday also will vote on nearly 500 other candidates for various state offices, including those for lieutenant governor, a new 141-member Legislature and decide whether Democratic loyalists or would-be bolters will have control of the 72-member State Democratic Executive Committee.

The Week in Alabama

Alabama Power Co.'s 120-million-dollar Coosa River program "will be the greatest single development that ever came to Alabama. It will mean new industry, new employment, reduced freight rates." This is what U.S. Rep. Albert Rains of Gadsden told a large gathering of industrialists and civic leaders at ground-breaking ceremonies for the huge Weiss Dam near Gadsden. This is first of four projected power projects on the Coosa. . . . The value of Birmingham real estate was pointed out by a circuit court order awarding $220,000 for a block-long, 20-foot strip for an underpass near the downtown business section. . . . Another sign of improving business conditions in Birmingham was the announcement by Lewis F. Jeffers, president of Hayes Aircraft Corp., that new contracts would enable it to call back to work 2,000 persons laid off in last two months. . . . The Coosa River Newsprint Co. at Childersburg will add 600 employes soon when it installs the "world's largest" paper machine culminating a 35-million-dollar expansion program to increase total production 140,000 tons yearly. . . . Reynolds Metals Co. at Lister Hill, in the Tennessee valley is coming out with a new product—textured-finish aluminum, which has a surface similar to sanded sheet and is described as a boon to manufacturers. . . . Use of hillbilly bands, gospel singers and other entertainers and gimmicks has cost several Alabama gubernatorial candidates sizable hunks of cash. Amounts filed in expense accounts by the aspirants with the secretary of state's office ranged from $6,650 to $250. One candidate listed $12,298 as total first primary campaign expenses, without showing what he paid a hillbilly performer.

Hot Dog Week?

Major Jimmy Morgan of Birmingham is ready to proclaim dates honoring the entire "picnic package" after proclaiming May 22-31 as Pickle Week in this city.

"We have had a proclamation honoring the onion and now we need to include mustard and the bun for a complete hot dog."

Patterson Says Honesty And Economy First Needs

Segregation, honest and economical government will be the mainstays of his administration "when I'm governor", Candidate John Patterson said here Saturday.

The state "can't afford four more years of the kind of government we've had," Patterson said. "The people of Alabama want a change. They're tired of the way things are going on [illegible] hill.

"They want good government."

Rebe Gosden and the Sunny Valley Boys entertained the hundreds on the Courthouse lawn with "Let Those Brown Eyes Smile At Me"; "Soldiers Joy"; and "Down Yonder."

Late for his announced speech here, the attorney general explained that his motorcade had got tied up in traffic on the Birmingham highway and was delayed 30 minutes.

Speaking at Lincoln before coming here, Patterson was to go to Heflin for the Broiler Festival after leaving Talladega.

Introduced as "the man with a million friends', Patterson said the professional politicians; the "racketeers and gangsters"; the NAACP and the "big newspapers" are against him.

He promised to sland firm against federal attempts to "ram integration down our throats".

Terming the NAACP the biggest threat against the peace of Alabama, he said he will see that it remains outlawed in the state.

As he has lived in a place (Phenix City) where one had to carry a gun to work and worry about the house being blown up while his family was asleep, he knows the horrors of gangsters taking over, he said.

Patterson said Alabamians already are overburdened and "You're not getting your money's worth".

"You can say that again," came a voice from the crowd.

Of the $1,000,000 daily it takes to operate the state, one-fourth is wasted for "buying yachts, airplanes" and similar things for "somebody's friends", he said.

Fighting for the rights of the people against the professional politicians is "an uphill fight in deep sand all the way", he said.

He compared the state treasury to a well bucket full of holes, and pledged to "plug up the holes when I become governor".

By cutting out graft, the state can pay the old people at least $75 monthly, Patterson said.

Charging that the papers sometimes "slant" the news, Patterson continued:

"The Birmingham News and Montgomery Advertiser are against John Patterson and I can't think of a higher recommendation for a man than that."

As he closed the band struck up "Dixie", and Patterson began shaking hands.

Wallace Vows 'United' Journey Into Mansion

By GEORGE PRENTICE

Judge George C. Wallace, disclaiming "smut and smear" rumors as material for "the gutter," told a jam-packed crowd Monday night at City Auditorium here he would go to the governor's mansion "unfettered and untied," if elected to the executive post.

Speaking on a statewide television hookup in his final appeal for votes in his campaign for governor, said he had made no promises to cabinet posts and asked for voter support on the basis of his record as a fighter against civil rights legislation and for segregation in the South.

Wallace turned his attention on what he termed the "smut and smear" campaign against him, "the latest sheet out says that I dodged the draft."

Wallace then held aloft a medal. "This Air Medal," he said, "I won for combat missions over Japan. I am a member of the Disabled American Veterans, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the American Legion."

Holding large white sheets above his head which represented the "smear" publications, Wallace continued:

"The rest of the charges on this and other sheets like it are just as true as this one. So am going to do with it what you will do with those you have when you go to the polls tomorrow—throw them in the gutter."

As he finished the statement, the papers fluttered through the spotlight to the floor. Wild applause and cheers greeted the demonstration.

Wallace was interrupted by applause, cheers and rebel yells about 20 times during his 30 minute speech.

Stressing the fact that he had made no "cabinet post" commitments, he said. "I will not make any decisions on such positions until after I have taken office."

He again cited his record during six years in the Legislature, pointed to his work as representative of Alabamians at Young Democrat conventions and at National Democratic Conventions during recent years.

Fire Marshal R. C. Talley estimated the crowd at 3,000 in an auditorium with a seating capacity of 2,700.

The main floor section of the building was packed, with every seat filled and people standing in the front lobby and immediately inside the doorways. Most of the balcony also was filled.

As governor, Wallace said he would close down schools threatened with federal intervention.

He reaffirmed his stand for better educational facilities, improved highways, a sound farm program, and economical and honest government.

Inclement weather threw a few kinks into what otherwise was a well-organized show.

Battle Denies Support Given To Candidates

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP)—Former Rep. Laurie Battle, eliminated in the May 6 Democratic primary election as a gubernatorial candidate, issued a statement Friday saying he would support neither candidate in the June 3 runoff election.

Atty. Gen. John Patterson and Circuit Judge George Wallace are seeking the nomination in the runoff.

"There is considerable misunderstanding about my personal position in the gubernatorial runoff," Battle's statement said.

"I would like to reiterate that I have not and will not be active in either political camp. I have not and will not endorse either political candidate. I have not and will not ask any of my workers to go for or against either candidate for governor.

"I am giving my full attention to my private affairs and family responsibilities. I have made preliminary arrangements to get as large loan as possible on my house to help pay my campaign debts. I am looking for a private job to enable me to pay off all my campaign debts through my own honest efforts and labor. I hope my creditors will be as lenient as possible and I guarantee every cent will be paid just as soon as I can earn the money. My wife and I have agreed to economize in every way."

Battle said his campaign workers are free to support either candidate, but he said he has declined to advise them.

Walker's Backing Goes To Wallace

George Wallace gained the support Friday of a defeated candidate who accused Atty. Gen. John Patterson of waiting until he started running for governor to start complaining about wasteful spending.

The Rev. Billy Walker of Pell City endorsed the Clayton, Ala., judge in the runoff campaign and arranged to speak for him at an International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers meetng at Sheffeld Friday night.

Patterson and Wallace are competing for the Democratic nomination for governor in the runoff primary June 3.

Walker, a Baptist minister who ran ninth in the governor's race, said in a written statement that he received information during his campagn that $90 million a year in state funds are being wasted.

"And yet," he said, "Mr. Patterson, as our state's highest legal officer, you did not reveal this truth until his campaign for governor needed the fuel on the fire."

Although Patterson had been in office three and a half years, Walker said the attorney general took no criminal action to accuse anyone of stealing money.

"We need a new governor," the minister said, "and he must not be a member of the ranks of the present administration."

Patterson was campaigning in Central Alabama, Wallace in the heavy voting counties of the northern half of the state.

State control in doubt—

Anti-oath candidates show only 34 elected

The states righters who oppose the Democratic Party loyalty oath in Alabama may not have captured contro of the 72-member committee, after all.

It appeared at first that about 40 of the anti-oath candidates had received majorities in last Tuesday's elec ion. Now, the results may not be known until the offi- cial statewide vote canvass in Montgomery next Tues- day.

The official canvass in Talladega County showed that two candidates previously counted with a majority in the committee race, actually face a runoff. Both were anti-oath candidates.

THE UNOFFICIAL standing for the committee as of now show 34 states' righters elected and seven others leading. The loyalists have captured 28 places and are leading in three others.

The anti-oath group is assured of at least one additional place. In Jefferson County where Tuesday's primary decided five places in the committee race, there are six candidates remaining in the race for three places.

Only two of those remaining are pro-oath candidates.

JUDGE ROY MAYHALL, Jasper, chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee, declared today that if the loyalty oath is thrown out by the new committee, the Democratic Party in Alabama "will certainly be destroyed."

"It is my judgment that if they follow their campaign promises, the Democratic Party in Alabama will certainly be destroyed and will either have a splinter party or we will eventually be absorbed by the national Republican Party," he said.

He said the only issue in the [illegible] campaign was between Democrats and Republicans ... 'For if the bolters take control of the Democratic Party in Alabama and withdraw support from the national Democratic Party, this will help to assure the election of a Republican president in 1960 ..."

THE COMMITTEE selected in the primary election will decide whether to adopt or reject the pledge in the 1960 presidential year. Rejection could clear the way for a repeat of 1948, when Alabama's electoral vote was cast for the States Rights presidential ticket headed by then Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina.

In 1948, Alabama candidates for Democratic presidential elector pledged in advance that if President Truman were nominated again they would not support him. The state primary election was held before the national nominating convention.

The racial issue was injected yesterday by a statement by one of the leaders of opposition to the loyalty oath.

Frank J. Mizell Jr., of Montgomery, who apparently has won his race for a Second District seat on the committee, said that Montgomery boxes where Negro registration is highest gave "a heavy vote" to the so-called loyalists who favor the oath.

In a prepared statement, Mizell said, "from complete unofficial returns of ... the Second Congressional District, it appears the group of Alabama Democrats who are opposed to the gag-rule loyalty oath, which is advocated by Mr. Mayhall and the National Democrats, have won a commanding lead in the state committee race.

"This vote indicates the people of Alabama are determined to have political independence and not be hopelessly bound to the South-hating element of the National Democratic Party."

The Stars Fall On Alabama

The state of Alabama has just closed one of the hottest political campaigns in its history. There was a record number of candidates in the field for governor, numbering some fourteen. This would say that the governorship of that state is a big stake, that as such it holds out a temptation hard to bypass.

In the race for governor, Attorney General John Patterson apparently led the field of the big pile of contenders. The runnerup, George Wallace of Barbour County, (Eufaula) piled up a sizable vote and with the other candidates polling large numbers, a run-off will have to settle the race.

It would appear that Patterson polled his strength in the first primary; that remains to be seen if and when a runover is resorted to in order to give a candidate the required vote for nomination.

It has been said editorially by one of Alabama's leading dailies, that Tuskegee merchants felt that Patterson had contributed to the sad plight of their business. The pressure Patterson placed on the boycotters apparently accelerated the critical situation, and instead of ending the crusade, Negro business people around Tuskegee are building business and trade centers of their own.

So, Patterson did not whip the Negroes in line in Macon County, and it appears that all will not be so safe in the Patterson camp, comes the runover.

Macon County Representative, Sam Englehardt, who devised the plan for the complete liquidation of Macon County by slicing it in five pieces for adjoining counties, was beaten in his wager for Lieutenant Governor. Latest press reports indicate he is running a poor third. If he doesn't pick up, he will not make the runover for that post.

All the candidates for governor ran on the segregation issue; each trying to show how much they were out of line with obedience to the orders of the highest court in the land.

From reports, the Negro vote had its repercussions in this campaign where there is a field of candidates pitted in a race all avowed challengers of the court decision, there is little else for the voter to do than take the candidate who is less unreasonable.

Judge George Wallace

Judge Wallace is a successful veteran in political experience and activity. He has shown that he can well serve the goals he seeks.

Bham, Ala.

EARLY HE CONCERNED HIMSELF with the business and the aspirations of the people of Alabama, and from the beginning he showed he was industrious, effective, resolute.

In 1946 he was an assistant attorney general of Alabama.

From 1947 through 1952 he was a member of the legislature from Barbour County, serving with marked effectiveness.

He has contributed much in the establishment of additional state trade schools, in the industrial upbuilding of the state, in the development of health services. In other fields of constructive activity, he has been a competent and devoted worker.

Since January, 1953, he has served as judge of the Third Judicial Circuit comprising Barbour, Bullock and Dale Counties.

He took an active part in the Democratic national conventions of 1948 and 1956 and was a leader in presenting and upholding Southern viewpoints and convictions. He served outstandingly on the platform committee in 1956.

He has conducted a very effective campaign for the Democratic nomination for governor, as is evidenced by his running second in a field of 14 candidates.

34a(2)

NOW, WITH CHARACTERISTIC VIGOR, he is pressing on with his runoff drive. Voters who supported other gubernational aspirants in the first primary, in considering the current choice, can, we believe, find in Judge Wallace a candidate well worthy of their backing.

He can, in our view, afford the kind of well-conceived and dynamic leadership this state should have in this time of many difficult problems and of many challenging opportunities.

George Wallace grew up on a farm. He knows at firsthand the urgent need for the upbuilding of the economy of the state, for the broadening of opportunities for our people. He realizes that education is basic in solving our problems and achieving new progress. He is unequivocally committed to the upholding of deep convictions in Alabama respecting the maintenance of traditional segregation practices, without violence and by lawful processes.

He is fervently devoted to his ideals and aims, capable, as he has repeatedly demonstrated, of serving them with a high degree of competence.

GEORGE WALLACE, AS GOVERNOR, would, we believe, lead Alabama forward on a sound and hopeful course. His election would assure capable, experienced, high-minded executive control at Montgomery. That is what the people critically need and ardently desire.

Seven Negro Candidates Elected To Seats On MCEC

MOBILE, Ala. — (ANS) — Seven of 13 Negro candidates for seats on the 64 man Mobile County Democratic Executive Committee were elected in the May 6 Democratic Primary.

Incumbents Alex Herman and C. H. Montgomery were re-elected.

C. E. Powell, retired school principal; Conrad Dean, labor leader; Joe Malone, Jr., civic leader; John Randolph and Charles Alexander were also elected.

Herman, Montgomery and Powell were elected from Ward 10; Deane and Malone from Ward 22, Alexander from Ward 23 and Randolph from Ward 1.

Randolph defeated a white opponent in winning his committee seat. Alexander led his white opponents in votes.

In Birmingham, Arthur Tiddle, a candidate for the State Legislature lost in his bid for that office.

The run-off election June 3 will be highlighted by a battle between to two youthful candidates, Atty. Gen. John Patterson and Circuit Judge George Wallace for governor.

Patterson led the 14-man field in the May 6 primary. Both Patterson and Wallace rode the race issue hard in their campaigns.

George Wallace Is A Liar

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — In 1908 I moved to Montgomery with my family. At that time I subscribed to The Advertiser and have been a subscriber ever since.

I read the news, for and against my views. One day in 1910 I was talking to my good friend, Ed Joseph, now deceased, and he made the following statement:

"There's an element here and elsewhere trying to have the KKK's stamped out. They think that when they have them outlawed that the white Negro in the North and the white Negro in the South can cram the African Negroes down the decent white people's throat."

This has come just as true as the stars shine above. Any white person that will lower himself to the equal of the Negro is not only lower than the Negro but is lower than a snake's belly.

It is true that at times rurals have sneaked their way into the KKKs, but the true klans will soon find them out and oust them. Isn't it true that such crooks have entered our churches, Masonic lodges, Elks, etc.? We don't condemn the whole outfit for a few rotten apples. The vows that each organization takes, if the members are sincere, are as Christian men and women.

The votes of these Christians are the ones the Patterson people want, not the crooks, gangsters or the dirty politicians. Lots of the ugly deeds that have been done in the Klan's name have been instigated and carried out by members of the NAACP. A good example of this is the case out from Americus, Ga., right here in our own back yard. It would happen in Alabama if the NAACP weren't outlawed, and the load of having them outlawed lays on the shoulders of our honorable Atty. Gen. John Patterson.

I do not belong to the Klan, but if I could go back 30 or 40 years I certainly would belong. Ever since Mr. Joseph made that remark, I have kept track of the ones I know who are against the Klan, and eight out of 10 are either gangsters, crooked politicians, either lied to some good mother's daughter or caught in hotels and motels with the wrong person.

A few years back we were faced with Alabama being taken over by gangsters and the NAACP with the blessings of those in office. It took the life, in cold murder, of a good Christian husband and father to start and his son has helped to finish the cleaningup process. These gangsters have either left Alabama or are lying low waiting for John Patterson to be cut asunder from any law enforcement office. That is why they are fighting for his defeat so hard with labor and money.

John Patterson, following in his father's footsteps, has done more to rid Alabama of rottenness than any other man in the last 20 years and perhaps even longer. He stands for law and order, the same for one and all. He doesn't have one code for the big man and another for the little man. He's a friend to the people. That's why "Nobody is for Patterson but the people."

John Patterson led in the race of 14 gubernatorial candidates because the people of Alabama want decent and honest government restored. We appeared on TV after Mr. Patterson had made such a nice response to his success and Judge Wallace made such a nasty response. We are sure he will have to go to a hospital after June 3.

Judge Wallace, we have a nice hospital in Ozark and if you will enter here we will assure you fair treatment.

Alabama has been laughed at and ridiculed all across the U.S.A. long enough. We have had enough of the rock & roll government.

Let's put a man in the governor's chair that we can be proud of and can do something besides yelp.

Editor, The Advertiser:

I notice in the May 19 issue of South magazine the following statement:

"Candidate Wallace has repeatedly stated there is a big difference between smear and fact. We wonder in which category Alabama voters will place the entirely unfounded KKK accusations."

Apparently, just like myself South's editor was completely unaware of the documentary evidence proving the Klux ers are promoting the candidacy of Patterson.

It was certainly a shocker to me I know John Patterson's signature anywhere I see it. I cannot go along any further for Mr. Patterson. Mr. Patterson's false denial of his own signature reinforces my decision to leave him. A lot of my friends feel as I do.

PATTERSON ADMITS DRAGON IS HIS FRIEND

Klan Becomes 'Bama Runoff Issue

BY FRED TAYLOR
Staff Writer, The Birmingham News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 24—Ku Klux Klan support of Atty. Gen. John Patterson became one of the hottest issues in his fight with Judge George Wallace for governor of Alabama as the runoff campaign entered its final week before June 3 voting.

Fred Taylor

With the hard-hitting Clayton Circuit Court jurist having broadside after broadside at Patterson, the attorney general finally admitted that Robert (Bob) Shelton of Tuscaloosa, grand dragon of the Alabama Klan, had been his friend and political associate.

But he said he knew nothing of Shelton's affiliation with the Klan.

The front-running Patterson, who has been kept under wraps by his political advisers in the runoff, when questioned earlier regarding his connection with Shelton, was quoted as saying:

"This is amazing. I am not a member of the Ku Klux Klan. I have never been a member. I don't know anyone named Shelton."

Patterson said this a few hours after Shelton had called at Patterson's state campaign headquarters in Birmingham and asked a reporter and photographer who was there. Shelton had been chatting with the gubernatorial candidate's younger brother, Maurice Patterson.

The Greensboro Watchman, a weekly newspaper which endorsed Judge Wallace in the blistering runoff campaign, asserted that the Klan in that area and surrounding counties supported Patterson "almost to a man" in the first primary and is still backing the attorney general.

The paper stated editorially that "the election of George Wallace will mean a repudiation of the Ku Klux Klan in Alabama."

It added the assertion that "the election of John Patterson will be interpreted by the Klan as a major victory."

Asked if he is seeking the support of the Klan, Patterson replied:

"I will answer your question this way.

ALABAMA

If any person in Alabama is a member of any organization and believes in John Patterson, what he stands for and good government, I solicit his vote."

The Week in Alabama

Economic gains from space-age technology can well mean more to the South than to the rest of the nation, Maj. Gen. John B. Medaris, commanding general of the U.S. Army Ordnance Missile Command at Redstone Arsenal, told the Southern Economic Conference in Birmingham. But Medaris declared bluntly that one of the major weaknesses in meeting the challenge of the space age, not only in the South but the nation as a whole, rests in the educational system. . . . One of the world's leading bankers—George Champion, president of the Chase Manhattan Bank of New York—told this conference that the rapid increase in the savings of individuals in the South in recent years is of tremendous significance for expanding credit. He added that savings of individuals in Dixie had increased fivefold since pre-World War II days, or one and one-half times the rate of the rest of the nation. . . . Nomination of Frank R. Stewart of Centre as state school superintendent in the May 6 Democratic primary was assured when I. J. Browder of Gadsden bowed out of the runoff race. Browder, one of the state's outstanding educators, who was on leave of absence as superintendent of Gadsden city schools during the recent election campaign, rapped those who circulated what he asserted were "false rumors" that he would have shortened rural school terms from nine to seven months had he been nominated.

Races With Grandpa

Eight-year-old Avelena Bibby of Tarrant is in a race with her 72-year-old grandfather, J. T. Hays of Cullman.

It is a natural race for Avelena, but a strange one for her grandad. And she's going to have to hurry to keep up with grandpop, because he has cut three new teeth.

A Record Vote

The total vote in the governor's race set a new record for Alabama.

Unofficial tabulation showed that well over 600,000 voters cast ballots. Unreported boxes not yet included are expected to run the total to 625,000 or more.

As of Friday the count was 5,000 more than the previous record set in 1954.

This reflects the keen interest of the voters in the governor's race as well as other campaigns. It would be fine if an even larger turnout of voters cast their ballots in the second primary on June 3.

Wallace's election will repudiate Klan, paper says

GREENSBORO, Ala., May 22—Judge George Wallace's candidacy for governor was endorsed Wednesday by The Greensboro Watchman, a weekly newspaper.

In an editorial, the newspaper said the Ku Klux Klan in Hale and surrounding counties supported Patterson "almost to a man" during the first primary and is still supporting him.

The editorial said "the election of George Wallace will mean a repudiation of the Ku Klux Klan in Alabama.

"The election of John Patterson will be interpreted by the Klan as a major victory. . . . In that event, for the next four years the escutcheon of Alabama will proclaim the bedsheet and the burning cross."

Rivals state stands

Patterson, Wallace for reapportionment

DECATUR, Ala., May 22—(AP)—Both Atty. Gen. John Patterson and Judge George Wallace, rival candidates for governor, say they favor reapportionment of the Alabama Legislature.

The Decatur daily has received answers on reapportionment from both candidates on an identical questionnaire which included this preamble:

"In more than one section of Alabama reapportionment of the Legislature has become an absolute necessity and it is our opinion that the power of the governor fully exerted, will accomplish fair reapportionment."

Each candidate was asked the following six questions:

1. Do you favor reapportionment as directed by the constitution of Alabama, do you favor a constitutional convention called for the purpose of changing the section which deals with reapportioning the Legislature and for such other matters as may properly come before such a convention? Patterson did not answer the question. Wallace answered "yes."

3. If you favor neither of these methods of obtaining reapportionment, what solution do you have to offer? Neither Patterson nor Wallace offered any other solution.

4. Will you place the full power of the governor's office back of obtaining reapportionment at the first session of the Legislature during your administration, and, failing in this first session, will you continue to demand reapportionment until such time as it is accomplished. Patterson and Wallace both answered, "yes."

5. Will you support and fight for a constitutional amendment which will give the 11 largest populated counties of the state a full-time senator; Jefferson, Mobile, Montgomery, Etowah, Tuscaloosa, Walker, Madison, Calhoun, Morgan, Lauderdale, Cullman and divide the remaining counties into two-county senatorial districts? Patterson answered with a footnote, shown later in this story. Wallace answered, "yes."

2. Will you include in this constitutional amendment a formula for the House of Representatives of each county, based upon one representative for each 28,500 people or fractional part thereof, with a limitation of 12 for Jefferson, 5 for Mobile, 4 for Montgomery? Wallace answered "yes."

Patterson's answer to both questions 5 and 6:

"Due to the pressing activity of the governor's race, I have not had the opportunity to study throughly the proposals set out in 5 and 6; however, I want to assure you that I will support and will use the full power of the governor's office to push the passage of any measure or constitutional amendment to bring about a reapportionment of the Legislature on a basis of population so that all the people of the state of Alabama will have a fair voice and representation in the Legislature.

"As soon as I have the opportunity to further study your proposals numbered 5 and 6, I will give you a definite answer on them."

The Folsom-Wallace Break In '56

BOB INGRAM IN THE MONTGOMERY ADVERTISER OF MARCH 4, 1956

[T. Raiford Ellis, RFD, Montgomery, has written to ask the question: "When did the break between Big Jim Folsom and Judge Wallace come, and what was the cause of it?" The following was the Sunday column of Bob Ingram, first printed March 4, 1956. It was headlined "George Wallace Breaks With Folsom." It has been printed and not denied that Gov. Folsom voted for Faulkner in the first primary, considering him the "best Democrat."—Ed]

A SMOULDERING feud between Gov. Folsom and Circuit Judge George Wallace of Barbour County seems certain to move to the surface in the immediate future.

Time was when the giant Folsom and the diminutive Wallace were all but inseparable. Wallace was one of Folsom's leading campaign officials in 1954, writing many if not most of the speeches used in the race.

INGRAM

Later, when Folsom assumed office, the former boxing champion from Clayton played an important behind-the-scene role as adviser, using his legal and legislative experience to good advantage in preparing legislation.

The Judge was a frequent visitor at Folsom's office, and just as frequently was a guest at the mansion.

But such is no longer the case. Folsom apparently has all but forgotten the favors he received in the past from Wallace, and in turn, Wallace, with a political race upcoming, seems little disturbed at the cessation of this relationship.

The first symptoms of a rift between the two began to show up last summer during the regular session of the legislature.

Having written Folsom's campaign speeches, Wallace well remembered certain promises the governor had made. He particularly recalled promises by Folsom to support a competitive bid bill for the state, abolish liquor agents and repeal the right to work law.

When a competitive bid bill made its appearance in the legislature, it was fought hammer-and-tongs by Folsom and his forces. So strongly has Folsom opposed such legislation that both he and Finance Director Fuller Kimbrell have prominently displayed in their respective offices a record vote on such a bill introduced during the past special session. The lawmaker who voted for that bill need not expect many of the marbles which Folsom passes out, such marbles later used in collecting on political debts.

LIQUOR AGENTS

On the question of liquor agents, Folsom started off on the right foot. On Jan. 17, 1955, three days before he took office, Folsom ordered distillers to dismiss all liquor agents.

But as time wore by, and the line to the trough continued to grow, Folsom reversed his position and began permitting the appointment of liquor agents.

A bill to repeal the right to work law was introduced on the very first day of the 1955 regular session. A short time later it was reported out of a House committee and reached the calendar. It was still on the calendar when the session adjourned. Folsom gave the repealer lip service, but little else.

FOLSOM AND RACE MATTERS

Wallace resented Folsom's actions on these measures, but it proved to be the governor's actions on segregation matters which drove the big wedge between the two men.

Wallace obviously was annoyed throughout last summer as Folsom either vetoed or refused to sign all bills relating to the subject, but it was a statement Folsom made at the national convention of the Young Democrats of America in Oklahoma City which ended the long personal and political friendship between the two men.

Wallace was one of 24 Alabama Young Democrats who went to the convention as delegates. It was at this convention that State Senator Neil Metcalf of Geneva, was seeking election to the office of national YD president.

The race issue immediately came up in the election of national officers, following a report by the resolutions committee which included a resolution commending the U.S. Supreme Court for its desegregation decree.

Leaders of the Metcalf movement, fearing any mass protest might cost their candidate his Northern support suggested that the Alabama delegates cast 10 votes for the resolution 14 against.

Wallace, Judge Rowan Bone of the Court of Appeals and State Rep. McDowell Lee didn't like the plan. Wallace suggested a motion calling for a record vote, so there would be no question as to how each of the delegates voted.

This suggestion was immediately rejected by Metcalf forces, and later the Geneva senator told Wallace that "Gov. Folsom has suggested you not be seated as a delegate as he is afraid you might make a wild Dixiecratic speech."

WALLACE CONFIRMS STORY

Wallace, Bone and Lee quickly stepped aside, declaring their unwillingness to compromise their own racial views merely to further Metcalf's chances of election.

Judge Wallace has thus far kept quiet on the situation, however when asked Friday to comment his reply was brief but meaningful:

"From what you tell me you already know about the story, I'd say you had it just about right."

And Wallace can be counted on to say even more Friday night when Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia addresses a Citizens' Council rally in Wallace's home town of Clayton. Wallace is also on the program, and what he has to say about his former friend, the governor, could prove to be interesting listening.

BOYKIN ASKS BOTH RACES TO OPPOSE RULING

U.S. Rep. Frank Boykin of Alabama's First District, in a letter to The Advertiser, has taken his stand on the segregation question.

Earlier this reporter had sought to poll the entire Alabama congressional delegation regarding their approval or disapproval of the nullification resolution.

Rep. Boykin was one of three members—the others being Congressman Carl Elliott and Bob Jones—who were unavailable for comment despite repeated efforts to reach him by telephone.

His stand on nullification was not mentioned, but he made a strong statement in favor of segregation.

"During the 21 years which I have served all of the people of the First Congressional District of Alabama and during my entire lifetime, the relations between the races throughout all of my district have been friendly and cordial," Boykin declared. "The leaders of both races have been working out the difficult problems which both have faced, under the existing system."

"In my studied opinion the recent decision of the Supreme Court should be opposed by both races by every legal means," Boykin concluded. "I am now and have always been for segregation, as the best solution to our racial problems in the South, and all of our thoughtful colored friends from whom I have heard agree with this position."

SUPERINTENDENT JOB GROWS IN IMPORTANCE

(Editor's Note: This is the third in a series of articles on the races for state office other than governor. The purpose of this series is to acquaint readers of The Advertiser with the candidates, their background and qualification, and the duties of the office they seek.)

By BOB INGRAM

Three Alabama educators are candidates for state superintendent of education in the May Democratic primary, and the office they seek has become increasingly important since World War II.

It has only been in the past 12 years that the state has gone into the field of education in a big way, reaching a peak this biennium when approximately $236 million in state funds will be expended for schools.

The appropriation for the operation of the public school system during the year now in progress is $117 million, and $119 million has been set aside for the coming year.

This is almost four times the amount of state funds earmarked for the General Fund, from which practically all other departments of the state function.

Despite the record-breaking education appropriation, there is a continuing cry from educational leaders for more funds, and the superintendent to be elected this year will be the one most responsible for seeing where these millions go, and how they will be spent.

So enormous has the state school system grown that there has been a loud clamor to remove the superintendent position from the educational field into the business profession. However, efforts within the Legislature to make this change failed to make headway.

Giving added significance to this position is the fact that most of the major candidates for governor have promised multi-million dollar bond issues to finance school building programs, and if such programs become a reality the superintendent will be in a strategic and highly responsible position.

While all three candidates for the office this spring have hit hard on the issue of the integration of races in the public schools, which they promise to maintain, the role they will play in this issue will be purely advisory.

The superintendent of education has no official capacity in the state's legal efforts to prevent integration, but his unofficial part will be important.

BROWDER — Born in Jackson County, Browder was educated at Florence State College and the University of Alabama. He has also done graduate work at Columbia and Pittsburgh Universities. Browder's first political experience came in 1935 when he was elected to the State Senate from Jackson County. In 1939 he became the first director of the State Merit System, established by Gov. Frank Dixon. Brosder served in this capacity until 1945. He later served as director of the University of Alabama Center in Birmingham, and in 1951 became superintendent of the Gadsden City Schools, a position he still occupies.

DOTSON — Born in Colbert County, Dotson attended summer school for 18 consecutive years to earn his college degree, while teaching school the remainder of the year. After earning his B.S. from Florence State College, Dotson later received his M.A. degree from the University of Alabama and his Doctorate in Education from Columbia. He is the only candidate in the race with a doctorate degree. Dotson has taught school for 20 years, including service at Howard and Jacksonville College. In 1950 he ran for superintendent of education, but finished third. Later he was named to an administrative office in the Department of Education by the man who defeated him, W. J. Terry. Recently he served two years as educational advisor to Jordan.

STEWART — Born on a farm in Cherokee County, Stewart attended Piedmont High School, and later earned his B.S. from Jacksonville and his M.S. from Auburn. He has done considerable graduate work at Peabody College in Nashville. He began his teaching career in 1935, and was elected county superintendent in Cherokee in 1945 while serving overseas as an enlisted infantryman. In 1954 he ran for state superintendent, finishing third in a three-man race. He later was appointed as assistant state superintendent by Dr. Austin R. Meadows. Stewart resigned that post in January of this year to begin his campaign.

Campaign Contradictions And Strange Conditions

'SHORE I stole," said J in 1954. He won in one primary.

Shore J stole, says Patterson. And Patterson ran first in the primary.

FOLSOM might even vote for Patterson. It has been printed and never denied that he voted for Faulkner in the first primary. He is sour on Wallace.

But above all that is J's probable calculation that four years of Patterson would set it up for his election to a third term in 1962.

YOU hear a lot about "smears."

That's what politicians yelp when the unanswerable truth is printed about them.

J came to power smearing the people in the Capitol, saying they were cheating and mistreating the po' fokes.

In 1954 he returned to power by smearing Gotrocks.

Part of Patterson's remarkable campaign appeal has been his smearing of the Folsom Administration.

When most citizens in Alabama speak of Hugo Black, they say things that smear him.

"Pour it on!" roared the people when Truman was attacking Dewey in 1948. "Pour it on" meant smear him.

The truth is a "smear" when it can't be answered or explained.

WHETHER Patterson wins or loses, his campaign manager, Charles Meriwether, has made a big name for himself and in future campaigns he undoubtedly will be sought by politicians.

Meriwether, who seems to be a smooth and pleasant man, didn't do much for Crommelin when they were allied in 1950. But he didn't have much to work with.

His achievements in behalf of Patterson, however, are remarkable. Meriwether must have brought a lot of savvy to Alabama from Memphis, where he worked for Boss Crump. He was a quite minor figure in the machine, but he evidently studied hard and paid attention in class to the master.

JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES, the Birmingham Post-Herald columnist, chides us for illuminating the fact that Meriwether was once associated with Boss Crump. Graves reminds us that Boss Crump's dictatorship made Memphis a "clean, noiseless, peaceful, corruption free city."

THERE is one thing that Graves hasn't touched on, yet one that surely must have stimulated his curiosity. Patterson said he didn't know anybody named Bob Shelton, Grand Dragon of the Klan. Yet right under that was a photostat of a letter referring to Shelton as "mutual friend" and signed John Patterson.

Graves, as a supporter of Patterson, has access to him. Why doesn't Graves or the Post-Herald just ask their man Patterson to get the state straight on his relationship with the Grand Dragon?

"John, this is John. Think again.

Are you sure you don't know Bob?"

SUPERINTENDENT JOB GROWS IN IMPORTANCE

Canvass Shows Patterson With 34,400 Vote Margin

By GEORGE PRENTICE

Alabama's attorney general candidate for governor claimed a 34,424-vote lead in a record election turnout in which 618,462 votes were cast, an official canvass showed Tuesday.

A subcommittee of the State Democratic Executive Committee, meeting in the Capitol here, set Atty. Gen. John Patterson's official vote at 196,859. Second-running Judge George Wallace received 162,435 votes in the 14-man field.

The voter turnout exceeded previous records by 23,000. Of the total vote cast, official canvass returns show that Patterson received 33.5 per cent and Wallace 28.2 per cent.

Publisher Jimmy Faulkner, runnerup in 1954 to Gov. James E. Folsom, ran a low third with 91,[illegible] votes.

Patterson and Wallace will decide the contest in a runoff election June 3.

The subcommittee, led by Judge Roy Mayhall of Jasper, also certified returns which showed that four statewide races were decided in the first primary.

Two congressmen also were returned to their seats in the national legislative body. Congressman George Grant received 37,702 votes to 35,710 received by his opponent, Wilbur B. Nolen Jr.

Congressman Albert Rains won reelection with 57,490 votes to 16,170 for his opponent, R. H. (Red) Hardin.

The balance of the state offices will be subject to vote of the people in the runoff election.

Winning office without a runoff were MacDonald Gallion for Attorney general, Mary Texas Hurt Garner for state auditor; R. C.

STATEWIDE TV HOOKUP

Wallace Challenges Patterson On Issues

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Circuit Judge George C. Wallace Tuesday night challenged Alabama Atty. Gen. John Patterson to a face-to-face discussion on a state-wide television hookup.

Wallace, runnerup to Patterson in the race for governor in last Tuesday's Democratic primary, issued the challenge while in Mobile for a series of conferences with southwest Alabama supporters.

He said the voters of Alabama have a right to know how each stands on segregation, law enforcement, corruption in government and their past records.

WALLACE STATEMENT

Wallace issued this statement: "I am inviting my opponent to discuss face-to-face on a statewide television hookup the issues of this campaign. I do not ask for a debate; I am asking for a frank public discussion.

"The voters of Alabama want to know and have a right to know where each of us stands on segregation, on law enforcement, the issues of cleanups and corruption in government, and our past records even to the extent of our law firms and who they represent.

"The voters have a right to have the air cleared, to hear from us personally where we stood yesterday, where we stand today and where we will stand tomorrow. I invite the other candidate to meet me at the time he might name for a full discussion of these matters."

Wallace and Patterson were busy Tuesday wooing voters for the June 3 runoff election. Patterson was still in north Alabama, while Wallace planned to head into the northern part of the state Wednesday.

Meanwhile, defeated candidate Laurie Battle backed away from both contenders in the runoff and told his followers to take their choice.

Battle, who ran fifth, said in a statement that he intends to devote his attention to private affairs and "will not be politically active in either camp during the gubernatorial runoff."

"I am not interested in any cabinet position or in any political office," the former congressman said. "I am looking for a private job to take care of my family. If necessary, I will sell my house in order to pay my campaign debts."

THANKS WORKERS

Battle thanked the campaign workers who helped him in the first primary and told them they are "completely free to support the candidate of their choice" in the runoff.

State School Supt. Austin R. Meadows meanwhile appealed to candidates for all offices in the runoff to make education the No 1 issue in their campaigns.

In a prepared statement, Meadows said voters should support only the candidates who recognize education as a major problem. Otherwise, he said, they will be "indirectly voting against school children and the future."

His statement was directed more at candidates for the Legislature, since it blamed the present Legislature for part of the failure to meet school needs.

GALLION STATEMENT

Even though the nation is suffering from an economic setback, the superintendent said Alabama can still "educate our children to meet the challenge of other states and of Russia."

MacDonald Gallion, the victorious candidate for attorney general, also issued a statement promising to do his "utmost for the cause of good government in the state and the fair and impartial enforcement of the law."

Gallion said, too, he intends to "use the influence of my office to aid in every way possible toward the solution of municipal, county and state problems."

Patterson's Manager Is No Amateur

By Bob Ingram

TALL, BLOND and handsome Charles M. Meriwether of Birmingham is living proof that Atty. Gen. John Patterson's campaign leadership was not made up entirely of amateurs.

INGRAM

Meriwether is no amateur. In fact, he would probably resent being so identified. He is a political pro and a good one. This he proved by all standards May 6 by managing a campaign which left 13 other candidates for governor gasping for breath.

It was Meriwether who dispatched a message to Patterson a week before the primary instructing him to make no statement, make no move, without clearing with him.

"We are leading the field; let's hold what we've got where we are and play it safe," was the gist of Meriwether's message.

The Wallace and Faulkner people, through their intricate spy systems, got word of the message and chuckled with amusement. It is now Meriwether who is chuckling.

This reporter spent some 45 minutes with Meriwether in Patterson's headquarters on the fifth floor of the Molton Hotel in Birmingham last week.

Meet The Press And The KKK

MERIWETHER recognized that he was giving of his time to a representative of a newspaper in the enemy camp. This did not concern him in the least. He was in the driver's seat and he knew it.

Not long before he had chatted with Grand Dragon Bobby Shelton of the KKK, and shortly thereafter a delegation of insurance executives conferred with Meriwether. This group included Frank Samford, president of big Liberty National Life Insurance Co., and Horace Caldins, of Montgomery, a Metropolitan Life executive.

Next came the enemy press. He was delighted by the visit.

After some 10 or 15 minutes of cordial conversation with Meriwether and Hunter Phillips, Opelika businessman and key Patterson aide, I asked the first of two big questions:

"What about your affiliations with the Crump machine in Memphis?"

"That's the reason you are here, isn't it?" Meriwether smiled.

He then quite frankly answered the question.

"I worked for a number of years for the E. H. Crump Co., an insurance firm, one of the biggest in the South," Meriwether recalled. "I was in the promotion and public relations side seeking to encourage the sale of group insurance. It was a non-political job."

With that out of the way, the conversation returned to generalities. Then, without being prompted, Meriwether brought up the story of his legal background.

"I'm sure you have heard that I am a disbarred lawyer; that story has been told all over Alabama," he said. "I couldn't be a disbarred lawyer as I have never been a lawyer."

Meriwether said he attended Cumberland University (class of '32) and then the University of Tennessee (class of '34).

"At one time I planned to be an attorney but I never did complete law school," he said.

Veteran Of Six Campaigns

RETURNING to more important matters, I asked Meriwether where he first became interested in playing politics.

"I've always been interested in politics. In fact, since I've been in Alabama I've worked in six campaigns and never lost one," Meriwether said.

Having made the opening himself, the time seemed ripe for Big Question No. 2.

"You directed Adm. John Crommelin's campaign in 1950 didn't you?" I inquired.

"I'd rather you didn't say anything about that," Meriwether said.

I pointed out that the Crommelin-Meriwether link was being rumored all over the state and that of necessity some statement on this report was needed.

Meriwether paused a moment, then seemed to relax with a what-the-heck attitude.

"This is another question you came up here to ask me," he declared. This was a statement, not a question.

"Well, I did help in Crommelin's campaign in 1950, but if you will look up his platform in that year you will see it was a good one," he said. "There was absolutely nothing wrong with his platform and we felt he had some good ideas that should be carried out."

"He had just come home from the Navy, too late to qualify for the Democratic Primary," he continued, "so I suggested he run as an independent in the November election. He did right well for an independent."

"I also directed Wade Bradley's campaign in 1953," he said. "I put him in City Hall when they said it couldn't be done."

"You also worked in Armistead Selden's campaign for Congress in 1952, didn't you," we asked.

"I didn't know you knew about that one," he grinned. "Yes, I worked some for him in Tuscaloosa County."

Well, One Defeat

HE DIDN'T discuss the other campaigns he worked in, but retracted his statement about having never lost a campaign.

"Of course, we lost with Crommelin, but that wasn't in a Democratic Primary," Meriwether added.

Meriwether said he was pleased with his results in politics "not because we might have won an election but that we were successful in winning with the type of men we support."

"They have all been outstanding men, honest men, and most usually men who weren't given a chance of winning," he said.

The 47-year-old Meriwether, still blessed with a headful of brownish-blond hair with not a sign of grey, is married and the father of three children.

He is presently business promotion manager for Dewberry Drug Co., and is active in a variety of civic work in Birmingham. He is extremely personable, with a charm that is disarming. Not once during the interview did he display any feeling other than pleasure at meeting a representative of the opposition press.

"Let me express to you now my appreciation for the manner in which your paper handled the campaign," he said, in what appeared to be genuine sincerity. "I think you handled it as fairly as any newspaper in the state. You all did a fine job."

As to the campaign waged by Patterson, the campaign manager said he was "proud" that it was "clean and free of any smear tactics."

He fought hard but he fought clean, and he received the solid support of the working people and the farm people," Meriwether said. "We approached the major issues — misspending and segregation — in a manner which left no doubt where Patterson stood, and the voters believed our story."

Looking to the runoff June 3, Meriwether is confident of victory.

"I am confident that with a continuation of hard work that went into the primary, coupled with the support and confidence being manifested by people who supported other candidates in the first primary, we will lead in the runoff by a comfortable margin," Meriwether said.

Ex-Wizard For Patterson

ANOTHER development on the KKK-Patterson tie-in has come from Mobile.

E. C. Barnard, a Mobile gunsmith and past Imperial Wizard of the Gulf KKK, admitted in an interview that he supported Patterson May 6 and would do so again June 3.

Barnard resigned as Imperial Wizard last October, but admits he is still a member of the KKK.

"The only two votes I know that will go for John Patterson are mine and my wife," Barnard said. "Most of the Klan members in this area that I know of voted for either Faulkner or Wallace in the primary."

Barnard stepped down as head of the Klan shortly after he made a race for the Mobile City Commission, polling but 1,994 of the 24,233 votes cast.

Shortly after that election Barnard issued a statement in which he said the Mobile vote "gave me the information I've been wanting for 10 years."

"The election showed that the people will not support the Ku Klux Klan or I would have been elected," he said in a press release.

It had been reported last week that Barnard's place of business was covered with Patterson stickers, with a noose also hanging in the midst of the political display. However, an investigation proved this report to be false. There were no stickers, no noose but just a few Patterson cards on a counter.

Wallace Asks Patterson State Stand On Key State Issues

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Judge George Wallace has challenged Atty. Gen. John Patterson to announce publicly his stand on education, agriculture, the Tennessee Valley Authority and reapportionment for the Alabama Legislature.

Wallace, runnerup to Patterson for governor in the May 6 Democratic primary, issued the challenge in an address [illegible] Bay.

The Clayton judge, who last week challenged Patterson to a face-to-face statewide television debate, said [illegible] that his opponent has been silent on the major issues facing the state.

Wallace also reiterated his pledge to reapportion the legislature.

"If elected governor," he said, "I will submit a constitutional amendment to reapportion the Legislature and if the legislators fail to act at their first regular session, I will call them back into special session."

Patterson, meanwhile, also toured North Alabama Saturday. Neither in talks at Oneonta nor Hayden did he reply to Wallace's charges of Ku Klux Klan backing and the challenge to meet in a television debate.

The attorney general pledged at Hayden that development of Alabama's inland waterways would be one of his chief aims if elected.

"I will be working with every ounce of energy at my command for the expansion of our inland waterways, docks and harbors," he declared.

Citing the state's industrial growth, Patterson added that "a higher standard of living for all will be uppermost in my mind when I am elected governor."

Patterson's campaign plans for this week had not been announced. Wallace scheduled talks Monday in Tuscumbia, Florence and Athens.

The two runoff candidates for lieutenant governor appeared on a Montgomery television program Sunday.

In answer to questions from local citizens, state Sen. Albert Boutwell of Jefferson County said he favored allowing women to serve on juries in state courts but not requiring them to do so.

State Sen. E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa, Boutwell's runoff opponent, said he favored jury service for women in Alabama only after the issue had been submitted to a referendum.

Both legislators said they believed election laws should be carefully studied. This "would eliminate as much chance of fraud as possible, particularly in absentee voting," Boutwell said.

Skidmore advocated stiffer penalties for violators of election laws and a statewide "reidentification" of voters. This would not require a re-registration, he explained.

Boutwell said he felt one of the most important duties of the lieutenant governor is his position as chairman of the legislative committee which has control of the examiners of public accounts.

He added he opposed proposals such as were made in some past legislatures to take this department away from the joint legislative committee and place it under the governor.

Both men said they favored reapportionment and felt it could be accomplished without increasing the present number of representatives and senators.

Faulkner's DPs Divided For Primary

The displaced persons in the Jimmy Faulkner camp in Montgomery are splitting between John Patterson and George Wallace. After much agitated activity, which commenced the morning after the election, the Faulkner leaders could not agree to go over to either candidate in a body.

The biggest single catch for Patterson so far may have been Jim Smith, who was state manager for Faulkner. Smith, a young and prosperous Tuscumbia (Colbert County) lawyer, is a former Democratic national committeeman for Alabama. He was a Folsom leader, in the Tennessee Valley for Gov. Folsom in the 1954 campaign and has conferred with Folsom at the mansion during the campaign.

Smith, a firm advocate of the Democratic loyalty oath, thus finds himself allied now with former Sen. Bruce Henderson of Wilcox, a relentless enemy of the loyalty oath.

Smith conferred with both Wallace and Patterson before joining Patterson.

Along with Smith went such Faulkner leaders as Horace Davis, the Montgomery car dealer; Warner Mathis, who runs Southern Sash here; Henry Flinn Jr., and Jimmy Folmar, personal and business associates of Faulkner; and Emory Folmar, who was associated with Faulkner in Loyal American Insurance Co.

Folmar drove Faulkner about the state in the campaign and would have been executive secretary to Faulkner had he been elected. Folmar is on the phone for Patterson.

Earl James, former Montgomery city commissioner and county campaign manager for Faulkner, was flown to Birmingham in a private plane immediately after the election for a conference with Patterson. James did not, however, conclude an agreement with Patterson.

What Gov. Folsom will do in the runoff is uncertain, but the best information available is that he voted for Faulkner on the ground that Faulkner was the "best Democrat." So far as can be learned by The Advertiser, Folsom nevertheless abided by his public promise to stay out of the election.

Among the Faulkner leaders who refused to follow the leader into the Patterson camp and are now working for Wallace are C. T. Fitzpatrick of Empire - Rouse Laundry; John C. Tyson III, attorney; John Pemberton, attorney; William Moore, attorney; Chris Sherlock, former state highway director; S. T. Russell, cattleman and poultryman; Francis Kohn, attorney, and former assistant attorney general. (Kohn's brother, John, is an original Patterson mastermind).

There was a disposition Tuesday night, when the returns began suggesting that Faulkner would be eliminated, for the Faulkner people to meet to see if they could agree on going to one candidate or the other.

A meeting was held in the lounge of the Whitley Hotel (Jim Smith had already made his arrangements with Patterson by this time) with John Tyson presiding. Warner Mathis remarked that the high knockers of the Faulkner apparatus had already gone to Patterson. Here the division developed—as doubtless was happening in every large city in Alabama.

Some of the Faulkner people going to Patterson are guided by the feeling that Patterson had no organization in the first primary and that they could now become the Patterson organization.

The Stars Fall On Alabama

The state of Alabama has just closed one of the hottest political campaigns in its history. There was a record number of candidates in the field for governor, numbering some fourteen. This would say that the governorship of that state is a big stake; that as such it holds out a temptation hard to bypass.

In the race for governor, Attorney General John Patterson apparently led the field of the big pile of contenders. The runnerup, George Wallace of Barbour County, (Eufaula) piled up a sizable vote and with the other candidates polling large numbers, a run-off will have to settle the race.

It would appear that Patterson polled his strength in the first primary; that remains to be seen if and when a runover is resorted to in order to give a candidate the required vote for nomination.

It has been said editorially by one of Alabama's leading dailies, that Tuskegee merchants felt that Patterson had contributed to the sad plight of their business. The pressure Patterson placed on the boycotters apparently accelerated the critical situation, and instead of ending the crusade, Negro business people around Tuskegee are building business and trade centers of their own.

So, Patterson did not whip the Negroes in line in Macon County, and it appears that all will not be so safe in the Patterson camp, comes the runover.

Macon County Representative, Sam Englehardt, who devised the plan for the complete liquidation of Macon County by slicing it in five pieces for adjoining counties, was beaten in his wager for Lieutenant Governor. Latest press reports indicate he is running a poor third. If he doesn't pick up, he will not make the runover for that post.

All the candidates for governor ran on the segregation issue; each trying to show how much they were out of line with obedience to the orders of the highest court in the land.

From reports, the Negro vote had its repercussions in this campaign where there is a field of candidates pitted in a race all avowed challengers of the court decision, there is little else for the vater to do than take the candidate who is less unreasonable.

Patterson, Wallace Map Stump Tours In Runoff

By GEORGE PRENTICE

Alabama's gubernatorial candidates will put new life into the current campaign for governor as they return to the stump next week in their finals bids for the state's top executive office.

Atty. Gen. John Patterson and Judge George C. Wallace said their schedules have not yet been established but that they plan to begin new tours of the state before the week ends.

A spokesman for the Wallace campaign headquarters said the Clayton judge probably would open his second stumping tour Friday or Saturday.

Ed Azar, a spokesman for the Montgomery County organization in Patterson's headquarters, said the attorney general also planned a new tour of Alabama, but schedules have not been ve-

PATTERSON IN LEAD

Patterson led the field of 14 gubernatorial candidates in the May 6 Democratic Primary election with 184,713 votes. Wallace ran second with 159,017.

The majority of defeated candidates, meanwhile, said they planned to release their support pts "to vote for the man they believe best for the job." Some said they still were undecided what course to take.

Jimmy Faulkner, whose support has been the subject of much speculation during the past week, said he still has made no decision.

"At present I'm just standing back listening to my friends," Faulkner said in an interview from his home.

The Bay Minette publisher had said earlier, however, that he had no intentions of staying out of the

A complete, unofficial tabulation showing how Montgomery County voted in last Tuesday's Democratic primary appears today on page 5C.

Anniston Star Endorses Wallace Over Patterson

ANNISTON, Ala. (AP)—The Anniston Star announced in its Sunday editions that the newspaper supports Judge George C. Wallace for governor.

The Star, which did not endorse any candidate in the first primary, gave its support to Wallace as he and Atty Gen. John Patterson began campaigning for the June 3 runoff.

The newspaper said that it holds Patterson in high esteem, but he lacks the legislative experience which the Star believes essential in the governorship.

"If the second race had been between Wallace and Jimmy Faulkner our choice would have been hard to resolve, for both men are esteemed personal friends of this paper and they both are qualified by experience and character to fill the high office of chief of state," the editorial endorsement said.

The Star said that Wallace had served as an assistant attorney general, was twice voted one of the 10 best legislators in either house; and in 1956 made a national reputation by his fight against integration as a member of the platform committee of the National Democratic Convention. The newspaper also praised Wallace for his "interest in education."

race. Runnerup to Gov. James E. Folsom in 1954, he finished third in the field with 86,494 votes.

Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd said he planned to return to his Montgomery office. "I have told my suppoters and those who voted for me, that they are to choose the man they consider best for the job. I would not attempt to tell anyone how to vote," he said.

Former Congressman Laurie Battle said he planned to meet Monday with his campaign committee. "We haven't made any decision yet as to whether or not we will support one or the other," he said.

ELEBASH SILENT

Shearen Elebash declined to make a statement Saturday. "I will make my decision and probably make an announcement within the next week or 10 days," he said.

W. E. Dodd said he would announce his decision "by May 20."

Adm. John Crommelin, (ret.) had no "official decision," but said, "I think I know who I'm going to support. I'll have an announcement in two or three days."

Rep. Karl Harrison said he too wanted his supporters to "vote for the man they believe will be the best governor."

"I plan to take no active part in the campaign," he said.

C. (Jack) Owen, Ralph (Shorty) Price, the Rev. Billy Walker, George Hawkins and Winston Gullatte were not available for comment.

Wallace Claims KKK Members Back Patterson

BIRMINGHAM—George Wallace charged in a televised interview here Sunday that the Ku Klux Klan supported John Patterson in the May 6 Democratic primary and also is supporting him in the runoff.

Wallace, the Barbour County circuit judge who faces Patterson in the June 3 runoff for governor, declined to name the Klan units he said are working for Patterson.

"They (the KKK) are supporting my opposition, you know that," Wallace told the panel of interviewers. He refused to elaborate.

Wallace also charged that Patterson should have somebody behind bars to support his claims that millions of dollars in state money got into the pockets of crooks and chiselers.

"CLEANUP" BLASTED

Wallace blasted the attorney general's proposed cleanup of state government.

He told the panel of newsmen that according to Patterson's figures, more than $400 million has gone into "the pockets of crooks and chiselers" in the past three and one-half years.

"Patterson ought to go before the Montgomery County Grand Jury and indict the entire administration, every single person involved," Wallace declared.

INFORMATION TO JURY

The runnerup in last Tuesday's Democratic primary said if "Patterson will tell me who is getting the graft, I'll see that the grand jury gets the information."

Patterson campaigned strongly on a "cleanup government" basis, and Wallace has indicated by his two appearances since the primary that he is going to harp on the corruption issue.

The television program, "Alabama Press Conference," will present Patterson's views in answer to reporters' questions next Sunday.

Governor's Race In Fall Draws Entry

An independent candidate will oppose the Democratic nominee for governor in the November general election.

William Marvin Jackson, 2716 Mallory Dr., became a candidate by officially qualifying with the secretary of state's office Monday.

Meanwhile, a Segregation Party candidate said Friday he would not run in the general election because the two Democratic runoff candidates are both strong on the segregation issue.

Fred Duggar of Hope Hull, 38-year-old architect, had indicated previously he would be a candidate. Friday he was reported on his way to Florida for the week-end, but a statement was released by his brother, L. H. Duggar. It said:

"The candidates who were weak on the segregation issue have been eliminated and the two candidates who are now in the race have both made a powerful stand for segregation. There would be no need in my continuing in this race against two good men."

L. H. Duggar said the Segregation Party executive committee would send withdrawal papers to the secretary of state office within a few days.

Jackson, former president of a Montgomery manufacturing company, is now night manager at a local eating establishment.

He qualified by presenting a petition, signed by 300 registered voters, requesting that his name be allowed on the November ballot.

The secretary of state, Mrs. Mary Hurt Garner, said Jackson cannot have an emblem other than a circle because he is not affiliated with any party.

Jackson will be opposing the Democratic nominee who will be named in the June 3 Democratic runoff.

Segregation party to run candidate

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 9 (AP)—The Segregation Party officially has a candidate for governor now. He's John Frederick Duggar III of Hope Hull, a rural community near Montgomery.

DUGGAR HAS formally qualified with the secretary of state and his name will go on the ballot in the November general election opposing the Democratic nominee and a Republican candidate.

The secretary of state's office said the Segregation Party officially qualified after one false start. The first effort was held up on a technicality.

Duggar, as chairman, and John C. Eagerton of Montgomery as executive secretary, have notified state authorities that a caucus of party officers was held Tuesday, the day of the Democratic primary, as required by law.

The Segregation emblem to go on the ballot shows a map of the United States with state borders outlined. Underneath is the party motto, "audemus jura nostra defendere." In Latin, that means "We defend our rights."

It was borrowed from the Alabama court of arms.

Runoff Rare Spectacle For Voters In Alabama

By REX THOMAS
AP Staff Writer

Alabama voters are witnessing a rare spectacle—a runoff election for governor.

Only three times in past history have Democrats had to vote twice to nominate a candidate. The current runoff between Atty. Gen. John Patterson and Circuit Judge George Wallace is the fourth.

Two of the candidates who led in the first primary have triumphed in the runoff. The runner-up won the other time.

Until 1914, it took only a plurality to win the nomination. And since a majority wasn't required, there was no need for a second election.

In the year World War I started, the rules were changed and for the first time, it took a majority to get the nomination.

Braxton Bragg Comer, who had served one term as governor, ran ahead of Charles Henderson in the first primary in 1914, 48,189 votes to 36,599. But Henderson reversed the trend and outdistanced his opponent in the runoff, 69,184 to 59,357.

The next runoff was in 1934, only a few hundred votes of winning a majority.

Four years later, Sparks got a majority in the first election, with Folsom as the runnerup. In 1946, Folsom led the field and Ellis tried to overcome his lead in a runoff, but failed.

Gordon Persons fell short of a majority against 14 opponents in 1950, but the No. 2 candidate, Folsom - sponsored Phillip D. Hamm, withdrew and Persons got by without a runoff.

Folsom, running for the third time, got a majority over six other candidates in 1954.

When Bibb Graves failed to get a majority in the first primary and had to run twice against Frank Dixon. Graves won it in the second election.

Then again in 1946, James E. Folsom, the present governor, was forced into a runoff against Handy Ellis. Folsom Won.

After the one runoff in 1914, the system was changed again and for 16 years the voters went back to the one election plan with new rules. In the primaries of 1918, 1922, 1926 and 1930, Democrats marked their ballots for first and second choice candidates.

Added together, those votes determined the winner.

But in 1922, only two candidates ran— W. W. Brandon and Graves. Brandon triumphed, and Graves had to wait four years before he became governor.

The present system was started in 1934 and has gone unchanged. If no candidate gets a majority, the two top contenders battle it out in a second primary.

Even after the runoff system was resumed, candidates won the gubernatorial nomination in the first primary in 1938, 1942, 1946 and 1954.

Chauncey Sparks won the right to run it off against Dixon in 1938 but declined because Dixon lacked the state's highest legal post, Patterson has proven that he is an excellent state official. His record as attorney general surely bears out the fact that he is for honest government," Nielsen said.

Rail Group's Backing Goes To Patterson

The Alabama Joint Legislative Committee of Railroad Brotherhoods Saturday endorsed Atty. Gen. John Patterson for governor.

The committee represents 21 brotherhoods over the state.

Alan M. Nielsen, chairman of the committee, said that the organization is for John Patterson because they know he will serve the people of Alabama.

"He ran a good, clean race in the primary. As attorney general he has fought for the best interests of the people.

"He has fought against corruption and illegal spending in the state and he has attacked outside agitators who want to bring trouble to this state," Neilsen said.

"Also, as attorney general,

Backstop The Governor

AMID the howl, dust and gore of the combat between Wallace and Patterson, may the voters not neglect to take a searching interest in the runoff between Senator Albert Boutwell of Birmingham and Senator E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa.

The office of lieutenant governor is one of very large powers, and the two adversaries are quite different from each other on the issues.

The struggle between Boutwell and Skidmore, now that Skidmore has decided to run it off, is no popularity contest. It is a struggle between colliding viewpoints and convictions.

Nobody can say now who will be governor. But whatever the choice, be it Wallace or Patterson, Alabama should backstop its choice by electing a lieutenant governor, who, on the basis of past performances, can be relied upon to represent certain principles.

The lieutenant governor presides over the Senate and appoints the all-important committees. These committees exercise great power over the progress of legislation—they can put a bill on the rails or derail it.

Further, the lieutenant governor, if he is a man of force and experience, can stabilize strife and rashness.

Senator Skidmore is an energetic and determined man, as was seen in the rule-or-ruin education filibuster. He has been a Folsom man and is now the choice of the labor bosses. He carried the Negro vote in Montgomery in the first primary.

Albert Boutwell was born in Montgomery and raised in Greenville. His record in the legislature is that of an uncommonly hard-working, skillful legislator. He is mild-mannered, courteous to all men and avoids all needless antagonisms. At the same time, he fights with vigor and skill for his viewpoint.

The caliber of his efforts to block race mixing in schools was witnessed last week when a federal court refused to knock out the Boutwell School Placement Bill. This is one of the first major legal victories the South has won in the federal courts since 1954. That kind of skill Alabama needs.

Albert Boutwell deserves to be lieutenant governor for reasons both past and future.

OUT FRONT IN TIGHT GUBERNATORIAL RACE

John Patterson — George Wallace

Wallace Trails by Thin Margin

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP)—Atty. Gen. John Patterson held a narrow lead in the governor's race Tuesday night on early returns from Alabama's Democratic primary.

Circuit Judge George Wallace was running second and former State Sen. Jimmy Faulkner was third.

The count from 530 boxes out of 3,261 showed:

Patterson 28,232; Wallace 25,470; Faulkner 16,445.

The remaining 11 candidates trailed in this order:

A. W. Todd 6,219; Laurie Battle 4,010; George Hawkins 4,998; Jack Owen 2,432; Karl Harrison 1,645; W. E. Dodd 676; the Rev. Billy Walker 997; John Crommelin 506; Shearen Elsbash 398; Winston Gullatte 164; Ralph Price 107.

Candidates for state and local offices were nominated in an election marked by extremely heavy balloting.

State Sen. Albert Boutwell of Birmingham held a slim lead over Sen. Sam Encelhardt of Macon County in a five-man race for lieutenant governor.

Returns from 53 boxes in that race gave Boutwell 2,721 votes; Engelhardt 1,603; Sen. E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa 971; Robert T. Butler of Montgomery 305, and Asa Carter of Birmingham 277.

MacDonald Gallion of Montgomery was well in front in the balloting for attorney general with 3,541 votes. Sen. Richmond Flowers of Dothan had 1,176 and Rep. Charles W. McKay Jr., of Sylacauga 643.

Auditor: John Brandon 2,609; Mary Texas Hort Garner 2,636.

Secretary of State: Anne Conway 702; Ruby Folsom Ellis 504; Bettye Frink 1,001; Roy King 882; Pete Mathews 1,267; Eloise Stuart 1,23[illegible].

Treasurer: Agnes Baggett 3,891; R. A. Davison 649; Carl Griffin 87[illegible].

Superintendent of Education: I. J. Browder 1,613; Floyd Dotson 1,353; Frank Stewart 2,559.

Commissioner of Agriculture: R. C. Bamberg 4,187; V. C. Gentle 777; Crawford Roquemore 508.

Rain which fell over much of the state, if anything, perhaps contributed to the heavy turnout of voters. Farmers, unable to work in the fields, had little else to do.

Fourteen candidates sought nominations for governor and the $25,000 a year which the office will pay when the new term begins in January. Outgoing Gov. James E. Folsom, ineligible to succeed himself, gets $12,000.

The threat of racial integration, especially in schools, overshadowed other campaign issues. Each in his own way, the candidates for governor agreed that segregation must be preserved in Alabama. They differed only on the way to go about it.

Primary Vote Lead Is Held By Patterson

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 6 (AP)—Atty. Gen. John Patterson, whose father's slaying set off the Phenix City crime cleanup four years ago, led a 14-man race for Alabama governor in early returns from today's Democratic primary.

Patterson, 36, won a permanent injunction against the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People in state courts in 1956. He pledged to maintain segregation in the state and to keep organized crime out of the state.

[illegible] in that appeared to be a three-man race for the two places in the June 3 runoff was Judge George Wallace, 50, of Clayton. In third spot was Jimmy Faulkner, 42, weekly newspaper publisher of Bay Minette.

Returns from 745 boxes of 3,26[illegible] gave Wallace 16,[illegible]; Faulkner 8,632; Patterson 14,273. The other 11 were far behind.

Patterson Stumps In North; Wallace Speaks To Insurors

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Atty. Gen. John Patterson started a handshaking tour of north Alabama Monday with the claim that "We are gaining by the hour" in the runoff campaign for governor.

His opponent, Circuit Judge George Wallace, meanwhile promised a group of insurance men he will undertake "a complete overhaul of the insurance business in Alabama" if he is elected.

The two candidates are fighting it out for the Democratic nomination for governor in the runoff primary June 3. Patterson led the field of 14 candidates in last Tuesday's election; Wallace was the runnerup.

TO CANVASS RETURNS

A three-man subcommittee of the State Democratic Executive Committee will canvass the statewide primary returns at Montgomery Tuesday.

Patterson conferred with campaign workers in Decatur Monday and told them "our strength since the first primary has grown by leaps and bounds, and we are gaining by the hour."

"The vote that the citizens of Alabama gave me was convincing evidence," the attorney general said, "that the will of the whole people is for honest and decency in government, maintenance of our racial way of life, resolute action against the loan sharks, the grafters and corruptionists, and advancement of our state on every front."

Wallace spoke at the annual convention of the Alabama Assn. of Insurance Agents in Birmingham. He said a review of Alabama's insurance laws would be his first order of business if he takes office as governor.

'WALLACE ADMINISTRATION'

The Clayton judge also told the insurance men that "if I am elected, my administration will be known as the Wallace administration. It won't be known by any past governor's name."

He said he doesn't know whom Gov. James E. Folsom supported last Tuesday but that "I know he did not support George Wallace."

Wallace planned committee meetings in Mobile Tuesday, and in Blount, Marshall, Jackson, Cherokee and Etowah counties Wednesday through Friday.

A "major address" is scheduled by Wallace in Russellville Saturday following stump speeches through Lawrence and Franklin counties.

A Wallace aide said Minnie Pearl would be joined by "Little Jimmy" Dickens for entertainment at Wallace rallies during the runoff campaign.

Meanwhile, Jimmy Faulkner, who ran third in the governor's race, declined to say whether he will personally endorse either Patterson or Wallace.

He said he has talked with both candidates, but gave no indication of the nature of the conversations.

A runnerup candidate for the State Senate in the Third District withdrew from the runoff Monday and asked party officials to certify his opponent as the winner.

H. R. Lowery of Cullman trailed Elwood Rutledge of Haleyville in the first primary and won the right to run it off. But he notified party chairman Roy Mayhall and the secretary of state's office that he doesn't intend to campaign further.

The Third District includes Blount, Cullman and Winston counties.

Rutledge was one of the National Guard officers sent to Phenix City during the vice cleanup which followed the slaying of A. L. Patterson four years ago.

Patterson and Wallace Face Alabama Runoff

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 7 (AP).—A runoff June 3 between for the Democratic nomination for Alabama Governor ap Attorney General John Patterson and Judge George Wallac peared certain today.

Still unsettled, however, was control of party machinery, heated issue in yesterday's Democratic primary.

That control could bar, or open the way for this State's Democrats to give its 1960 electoral votes to an independent candidate for President, rather than the national party nominee. That was done in 1948.

At that time, Alabama's primary rules permitted the party electors to cast the State's 11 electoral votes for the States Rights ticket headed by J. Strom Thurmond, then governor of South Carolina.

On inconclusive results, State Executive Committee candidates favoring an independent wait and see role for 1960 were ahead in the districts comprising Birmingham, Mobile and Montgomery. Results from the six other districts will decide the issue.

Mr. Patterson, 36, was making his first statewide race. He is the son of Albert L. Patterson, whose murder at Phenix City in 1954 touched off a crime cleanup there.

Judge Wallace, 40, was a member of the Democratic Platform Committee at Chicago in 1956. He, like Mr. Patterson and all the 12 other candidates for Governor, pledged to continue segregation.

Returns from 1640 of the State's 3261 boxes for Governor gave:

Mr. Patterson 87,291; Judge Wallace 70,369; Jimmy Faulkner 42,850.

Mr. Faulkner, Bay Minette newspaper publisher, was runnerup in the race for Governor four years ago.

The battle for State Executive Committee control was the third since Alabama left the regular Democratic ranks in 1948.

In 1950, party regulars won a 44-28 majority on the 72-man committee. Four years later they won again by a wider margin. 61-11.

Besides a Governor, the voters will choose nominees for Lieutenant Governor, all 141 seats in the State Legislature, nine places in Congress, Attorney General, State Auditor, Secretary of State, State Treasurer, State Superintendent of Education and Commissioner of Agriculture.

Court Posts Open

Automatically nominated without opposition will be three justices of the State Supreme Court, three on the Court of Appeals and two members of the Public Service Commission.

Victory in the Democratic primary is tantamount to election in Alabama.

While nominating candidates for public office, the voters also will elect a new seventy - two-member state Democratic executive committee, and in doing may decide Alabama's role in the Presidential election two years hence.

The outcome will hinge on whether a majority on the newly elected committee is for or against the controversial party loyalty oath.

If the pledge is retained by the incoming committee, candidates running for Presidential elector in 1960 must promise in advance to support the party's Presidential ticket.

Ninety-nine of the candidates answering a recent Associated Press poll indorsed the loyalty oath; forty-three others opposed it. The remaining twenty-eight in the race declined to reply to the questionnaire.

Estimates of the probable vote Tuesday have run as high as 750,000, far exceeding the previous record of 595,000 in the Governor's race four years ago. Other forecasters predict a somewhat smaller turnout.

Seeking the gubernatorial nomination are:

Former Rep. Laurie C. Battle of Birmingham; retired Adm. John Crommelin of Wetumpka; W. E. Dodd of Bessemer; Sheaven Elebash of Montgomery; ex-State Sen. Jimmy Faulkner of Bay Minette; Winston Gullatte of Selma; State Rep. Karl Harrison of Columbiana; State Rep. George Hawkins of Gadsden; Jack Owen, president of the Public Service Commission, Montgomery; Attorney General John Patterson of Phenix City; Ralph Price of Louisville; Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd of Russellville; the Rev. Billy Walker of Pell City, and Circuit Judge George Wallace of Clayton.

Patterson's Supporters Enthusiastic

"We've already got the votes Getting them to the polls is the thing now."

So John Coleman, chairman of the North Talladega County Committee for John Patterson, told Patterson enthusiasts at a meeting Friday afternoon at the Courthouse.

Coleman told the group of about 50, including men, women and children: "We want all Alabamians interested in clean, honest government."

"If you want a favor or promise, you've come to the wrong place," Coleman said.

"John Patterson is not promising anything except good, decent government."

Bill Hurst was named treasurer and Dexter Parks co-treasurer.

"Believe you me, Patterson is going to stop the stealing" Hurst said.

Buddy Screws predicted that Patterson will "go in with the biggest vote" ever given a candidate for governor.

Street Commissioner John North got an ovation when he said, "I think Patterson is the man."

A. B. Miller, former city engineer, said he had known Patterson since the candidate was a baby and that he is "four square and honorable in every respect."

George Porter, former Faulkner supporter, who is supporting Patterson since Faulkner is not in the run-off, advised the group not to underestimate George Wallace.

"Wallace is a fighter and everybody for him is after something" Porter said.

The Patterson group has been "swamped" with persons wanting buttons and automobiles stickers his supporters said.

Alabamians In Primary On Tuesday

14 Democrats In Governor Race

MONTGOMERY, May 3 (AP).—Alabama Democrats perhaps in record numbers will nominate candidates for Governor and scores of lesser offices Tuesday, climaxing a campaign heavy with emphasis on segregation.

All fourteen contenders seeking the Democratic nomination for Governor in the party primary have sworn to uphold the tradition of separate racial facilities, particularly in the schools.

Even so, the threat of ultimate integration has been one of the major campaign issues. Each candidate has offered his own formula for stopping it.

Patterson Tops In Alabama

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—(AP)—Attorney General John Patterson, whose father's slaying set off the Phenix City crime cleanup four years ago, led a 14-man race for Alabama governor in early returns from Tuesday's Democratic primary.

Patteron, 36, won a permanent injunction against the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in state courts in 1956. He pledged to maintain segregation in the state and to keep organized crime out of the state.

Next in what appeared to be a three-man race for the two places in the June 3 runoff was Judge George Wallace, 39, of Clayton. In third spot was Jimmy Faulkner, 42, weekly newspaper publisher of Bay Minette.

Returns from 586 of the state's 3,262 boxes gave:

Patterson 30,221; Wallace 27,285; Faulkner 17,751.

The other 11 were far behind.

WALLACE'S GRANDMOTHER CASTS VOTE
. . . Mrs. Kate Watson, 90 years young

Never missed voting—

Wallace's grandmother votes for famed judge

By Evan Creamer, News staff writer

The petite little lady with twinkling eyes stepped into the voting booth at Adamsville and everyone knew who her choice for governor would be.

Although 90 years old and handicapped a little by retarded eyesight and hearing, Mrs. Kate Watson grandmother of gubernatorial candidate George C. Wallace, found little trouble in voting.

Now living with her daughter, Mrs. V. E. Thomas of 1620 Pike-rd, Ensley, Mrs. Watson hasn't missed voting since women were allowed suffrage by the 19th amendment.

She reared five children, one of them George Wallace's mother, and lived in Ensley most of her life except for a brief period in Adamsville.

When her widely known grandson announced he would run for the governor's post, she said, "He hasn't got a chance," but this changed recently when she wrote a relative, "He's running mighty hard."

"I remember when George C. used to come through Ensley, selling magazines across the country," his aunt, Mrs. Thomas, said.

"HE ALSO VISITED several times during his Golden Glove career, when he won the state bantam title."

Mrs. Watson had a few legal barriers to overcome when she voted Tuesday. These were overcome, however, with the help of J. Earle Jones, a family friend who drove her to the Adamsville school.

She made one point clear in an interview. "I'm not 91, as Mr. Jones said, I'm still 90 and that makes a difference."

She remembered Judge Wallace's first visit to Birmingham from his native town of Clayton. He made the family ride the elevator up and down in Pizitz Department Store. "He's been running every since," his aunt exclaimed.

Hot Runoff Battling Expected in Alabama

By FRED TAYLOR
Staff Writer of The Birmingham News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 10—One of the roughest runoff races for governor in Alabama's history is in prospect as front-running Atty. Gen. John Patterson of Phenix City and runner-up Judge George Wallace of Clayton face each other in a second Democratic primary fight. It will be settled at the polls June 3.

Fred Taylor

Judge Wallace, who trailed Patterson by more than 30,000 votes, declared he would "take the wraps off" for a rock-and-sock second battle.

Patterson, winding up four years as attorney general, likewise was preparing for furious runoff battling, with his backers jubilant over the lead they believed would help carry him through to victory.

Frenzied behind-the-scenes maneuvering was being carried on by both camps as Wallace and Patterson attempted to line up support of the candidates eliminated in the 14-man first primary.

Feverishly sought was the backing of Jimmy Faulkner, the Bay Minette newspaper publisher who was runner-up to Gov.

ALABAMA

James E. Folsom four years ago but who ran third this time.

Another significant result of Tuesday's voting in Alabama was the victory of opponents of the Democratic loyalty oath required of candidates in primary elections, as they won control of state party machinery.

Antiloyalty oath candidates grabbed at least 40 seats on the 72-member State Democratic Executive Committee to make apparently certain that the controversial loyalty pledge would be discarded before the 1960 presidential election. Loyalists won only 29, with three places in doubt.

The Week in Alabama

History echoed through the streets of Columbus, Miss., when Gov. Folsom and Gov. James P. Coleman Jr. of that state signed a pact expected to mean much to the economic and industrial future of their respective states. It was the Tennessee-Tombigbee compact to start the financing of a program to harness the Tombigbee River and open it to navigation all the way from the Gulf to the Tennessee River. One of its chief aims is preventing oft-recurring floods. It would link Alabama and Mississippi with the nation's inland waterway system. Alabama has appropriated $100,000 and Mississippi $80,000 to support the Tennessee-Tombigbee Development Authority under the compact.

. . . The Small Business League of Alabama has thrown its "full backing" behind legislation under consideration by Congress for cutting taxes. Nelson Weaver, Birmingham business leader and league president, said the proposals "would give much-needed relief to the small businessman and help combat the recession. . . . Birmingham's city commission has, by unanimous vote, adopted an ordinance preventing members of the city's police force from belonging to a union or striking.

Ready for Corn on Cob

A newborn Birmingham boy is all set for corn on the cob. He came into the world with teeth, plainly visible from birth, and very well may become a great man.

So says Dr. Sidney B. Finn, director of the department of children's dentistry at University of Alabama Dental College. He points out that some of the world's most distinguished men have been born with teeth. The bouncing infant is Sam Madison Gray, whose mother, Mrs. Bob C. Gray, says the baby's chompers haven't bothered him at all.

TOP MEN IN THREE COUNTY RACES WILL RUN IT OFF IN SECOND PRIMARY RACE

Candidates for three county-wide positions — circuit judge, state representative and sheriff —are squaring off for hard-fought runoffs.

Judge Henry Hurst, runner-up to Lincoln Mayor William C. Sullivan for circuit judge, told the Daily Home that the plans to be a candidate in the June 3 election.

Dr. Ashley Camp, second high man in the state representatives, place number two race, said he will "wage a vigorous campaign" in a contest with Attorney Jerry Worthy of Sylacauga.

Luke Brewer, former deputy and city policeman, and James H. Costner of Munford, former highway patrolman, are in the sheriff's run-off. Costner was the high vote getter in the May 6 balloting by a margin of 741 votes.

Sheriff John Robinson, by the official count, failed to make the run-off by only 64 votes in a contest in which 12,664 votes were cast. There were 11 candidates for sheriff.

Talladega County voters apparently were in a "It's time for a change" mood, as Veterans D. Hardy Riddle, L. N. Payne and Robinson lost out.

Two officials, Circuit Judge Harry Teel and Representative Charles McKay, were not candidates for re-election.

Senator Kyser Leonard, in a close race, defeated Graham Wright, former senator, 6401 to 5928.

In contrast to the other spirited races, Circuit Clerk Arthur Wood out-polled both his opponents, Bruce "Pop" Brown and Frank Wood.

The official count Wednesday showed the following results:

State Senator—Leonard 6401; Wright 5928.

House of Representatives, place number one—Bill Nichols 7268; Payne 5001.

House of Representatives, place number two—Ashley Camp, Jr., 3787; W. M. (Spud) Cole 2057; W. Hugh Sims 1789; Jerry Worthy 4342.

Probate Judge—W. F. Killough 6969; Riddle 5274.

Incumbent Alfred J. Turner was top man in the district one county commisisoner race, getting 550 votes.

Howard Bussey received 305; George G. Brooks 255; Oscar Phillips, Jr. 215; Shelton Allred 122; Luther F. Ellen 85.

For Beat 5 committeeman, Noble C. Hall got 2766 votes; John P. North 2377; J. D. Riddle, Jr. 1939.

Results in these races were tabulated officially Wednesday and early Thursday because of the high interest.

The official count of state and district offices is planned today.

A crowd stood in the Courthouse corridors late Wednesday awaiting announcement of the official results.

Because of the large vote and lengthy ballot county deputies were up all night Tuesday to receive the boxes. Only two boxes had reported about 9:30 p.m.

The candidates in the run-off thanked their supporters for their assistance during the first go-round and asked the help of friends and supporters in the June 3 contests.

Hurst said "so far as I know now I will run off" the race for circuit judge.

Camp said he will battle "to maintain one representative seat in Talladega."

Nichols, winner over Payne, is a Sylacaugan, as is Jerry Worthy, Camp's opponent in the run-off. Payne and Camp live in Talladega.

Four anti-oath candidates win without runoff

Jefferson County voters elected without a runoff four anti-loyalty oath candidates and one running on a platform of retaining the oath.

Of the six remaining in the runoff for three remaining places, four are anti-oath and two loyalists.

The anti-oath candidates elected in Jefferson County without runoff were M. W. Bagwell Jr. with 43,128; James E. Simpson, 39,907; Sidney W. Smyer Jr., 39,636; Earl T. Rogers, 39,019.

The runoff candidates committed to throwing out the pro-oath party loyalty oath are Lawrence McNeil, 37,252; Barron and Ellis 33,409. Bethea, 36,532; Victor H. Smith, 35,310 and John Gold-en, 36,555.

Inactivity In Lucy Case

Montgomery, Ala.

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Circuit Judge George Wallace declared Friday that the only school integration Alabama has known occurred while his opponent in the runoff campaign for governor was the state's chief law enforcement officer.

He charged too in a television speech that the University of Alabama was forced to employ outside lawyers in the Autherine Lucy case because Atty. Gen. John Patterson took no action to intervene on behalf of the state.

He referred to the admittance of the first Negro student ever to enroll at the university. She was driven from the campus by a mob and later expelled from school for accusing university authorities of conspiring with the mob.

Sat. 5-10-58

The Negro coed was ordered enrolled at the university by a federal court order despite efforts of the school to keep her out.

Wallace, in the first speech of the runoff campaign against an opponent who led in the first primary Tuesday, also questioned Patterson's accusations of graft and corruption in the state government.

Despite the attorney general's claims, Wallace said Patterson has filed no criminal suit in court and has taken no action toward getting grand jury indictments.

STOP STEALING

"If I am elected governor and find stealing going on, I'm going to see that it is stopped," the judge declared.

Wallace said, in response to what he called campaign rumors, said he has had nothing to do with Gov. James E. Folsom's administration in three years and that he has made no commitments to anyone connected with Folsom and that he will make none.

"I haven't seen the governor or talked with him since 1955," Wallace said.

The runnerup in Tuesday's primary recalled that he served on the platform committee at the Democratic National Convention two years ago, and said if he is elected governor he will run for delegate to the convention in 1960.

"As your governor, I intend to ask the people to let me attend the Democratic convention again as their titular leader," he said, "and fight as I have in the past to preserve our way of life."

Wallace, who had said he would "take the gloves off" during the runoff campaign, told his viewers he will refuse to be drawn into a smear campaign. But he added "facts are facts, and I intend to bring out some of those facts in his campaign that were not mentioned before.

Meanwhile, there was no word from the rival camp of Atty. Gen. John Patterson as to when he will begin his drive for votes in the June 3 runoff primary.

Patterson led the 14-candidate field seeking the governorship in Tuesday's Democratic primary, finishing some 25,000 votes ahead of Wallace on basis of late unofficial returns.

The attorney general planned a statewide meeting with his campaign workers in Birmingham "very shortly," his headquarters said.

State Sen. Albert Boutwell of Jefferson County, who finished first in the race for lieutenant governor, visited the state capital Friday seeking possible second primary support.

The runoff candidates for secretary of state, Mrs. Bettye Frink of Leeds, the runner-up, and State Rep. Pete Mathews of Clay County, who finished first, issued statements thanking the voters for their support.

RUN-OFF TO NAME ALA. GOVERNOR

Huntsville Times

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (INS)—The 49th Democratic primary for Alabama's governor will be decided by a run-off.

34 A (2)

The participants will be Atty. Gen. John Patterson, 37, and fellow Circuit Court Judge George Wallace, 38, of Barbour County. Neither received the required majority of votes to win the primary Tuesday.

Sat. 5-10-58

The slightly-balding Patterson, whose father's slaying set off the Phenix City crime wave cleanup four years ago, and Wallace, who used a Hill Billy band as an aid in his campaign, completely dominated the voting in what was believed to have been a record turnout at the polls.

JUNE 3, THE DAY

Birmingham, Ala.

June 3 has been set as run-off day. A victory in Alabama's Democratic primary has traditionally assured the victor the top political post.

Patterson, whose slogan was "Nobody Votes for Patterson but People," netted 149,995 votes, while Wallace, with the aid of his Hill Billy singers, received 119,207 votes. Approximately three-quarters of the ballots have been counted.

Running third, with returns from 2,722 of 3,261 boxes, was Jimmy Faulkner—one of the early favorites and runner-up to Gov. James E. Folsom four years ago.

Wallace was in a joyous mood Wednesday and confident of victory in the run-off. "I was just trying to get in the run-off and I made it," he said. He added:

"I expect complete victory in the run-off on the third of June."

The race for lieutenant-governor also boiled down to a two-man affair and a run-off there too seemed likely.

State Sen. Albert Boutwell — known as the father of Alabama's segregation legislation— and Sen. E. L. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa are leading a five-man field.

Segregation Party Enters Candidate

MONTGOMERY (AP)—The Segregation Party officially has a candidate for governor now. He's John Frederick Duggar III of Hope Hull, a rural community near Montgomery.

Duggar has formally qualified his name will go on the ballot in the November general election opposing the Democratic nominee and a Republican candidate if the GOP nominates one.

Faulkner, Hawkins, Elebash Submit Campaign Expenses

Montgomery, Ala.

Sun. 7-27-58

Three candidates for governor and a number of other aspirants for state office submitted itemized lists of campaign expenses and contributions with the Secretary of State Saturday.

A complete list of campaign expenses and contributions of candidates for state office can be found on pages 4-5 A of today's Advertiser-Journal

Surprisingly, Hawkins set the pace in both expenditures and contributions. He reported he had spent $28,461 in his campaign and had received $26,869 in contributions. Hawkins' expenses are the highest to date of any candidate for governor.

Faulkner reported expenses of $23,495, almost entirely offset by contributions of $23,060.

Elebash said he had spent $10,591 in his race for governor while receiving donations of $9,530.

Among Hawkins' major contributions was $1,500 from C. Rhea of Gadsden, presumably Clarence Rhea, Hawkins' law partner and campaign manager. Another contribution in the same amount came from G. Hawkins.

In addition, Hawkins received $14,753 from Republic employees, Etowah County and Mobile County Committees for Hawkins, $5,200 from Goodyear, Retail and Attalla Pipe employees; and $2,500 from employees of Cone Mills in Gadsden.

Faulkner, who reported he had paid the Statesmen and Blackwood Brothers quartets $3,000 each in salaries, listed a number of $1,000 contributions from individuals. They include W. M. Hodgson, J. E. Still, Charlie Kilborne, J. W. Gaskins and M. C. Farmer.

Contributions of $500 were received from N. C. Albright, Churchill Marks, Grady Moss, Ben Boyd, the Malbis Farms, Fred Griffin, Bob Hodgson, Mack Hodgson and Kathleen Hodgson.

Elebash, making his first race for public office, reported one "indirect" contribution of $5,000 from A. Allen, later confirmed to be Asa Allen, a local publisher who prints a baby book.

Allen said he had printed literature for Elebash's campaign as a contribution but that he didn't think the cost would run as high as $5,000.

Another "indirect" contribution in the amount of $2,000 came from C. E. Pitts.

Several other candidates for state office filed itemizations Saturday. They include:

I. J. (Ike) Browder, superintendent of education candidate; $3,097 in expenses, $1,210 in contributions; Floyd Dotson, superintendent of education; $2,915 in expenses, $750 in contributions; Sen. Albert Boutwell, candidate for lieutenant governor; $2,120 in expenses and $997 in contributions; Wilbur Nolen, congressional candidate; $3,158 in expenses and $2,635 in contributions; Congressman Albert Rains seeking reelection, $1,200 in expenses and $1,700 in contributions.

2 Candidates Face Runoff In Alabama

34 A (2)

James Union

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. May 7 (AP)—Candidates who fought what they called outside racial agitation held widening leads today for governor and for control of Democratic party machinery in Alabama.

Atty. Gen. John Patterson ran well ahead of 13 opponents for governor but faced a runoff election June 3 against Circuit Judge George Wallace.

Wallace

Patterson

Returns from yesterday's Democratic primary also showed States' Rights candidates for the state Democratic committee leading in 35 of 72 committee races. They campaigned against retention of the loyalty oath aimed at keeping Alabama in the Democratic party.

Times 5-8-58

The official canvass, expected next week, and the runoff election probably will have to decide the outcome. The runoff puts the top two candidates against each other in all contests where no one gets a majority the first time.

Unofficial returns from 2,691 of 3,929 boxes in the governor's race showed: Patterson 145,980; Wallace 117,726; former State Sen. Jimmy Faulkner 70,763.

The other 11 candidates were far behind.

P. 4

Wallace, saying he had achieved his immediate goal of getting into the runoff, predicted victory on June 3. But Patterson said he is confident he can hold the margin in the runoff.

The attorney general, son of the slain crusader A. L. Patterson, filed a court suit two years ago which resulted in an injunction to put the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People out of business in Alabama.

The NAACP was fined $100,000 for refusing to produce membership lists and other records sought by Patterson. Both the fine and injunction have been appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Patterson referred to the NAACP suit repeatedly during the gubernatorial campaign. He also charged that gangsters and racketeers, whose grip on Phenix City was broken by a vice cleanup after the murder of his father, were campaigning against him.

FINAL

Wallace threatened to jail any federal agent caught investigating complaints of jury discrimination in his circuit, and later announced he was closing the records of his court to the new federal Civil Rights Commission.

Both Patterson and Wallace promised to close any school threatened with integration.

Spirit of Unity

Next Tuesday, May 6, the Democratic Primary will be held in Alabama. In this one-party state, the Democratic Primary is tantamont to election. It is the election in which the voters actually determine their officeholders.

The second thing to bear in mind is that the Democratic Primary in Alabama breeds one-issue politics. The dominant issue this year is a negative, emotional, divisive issue. Under such circumstances it is always the lesser of evils for those voters who want to see Alabama move forward as a friendly, progressive, growing state. Certainly this newspaper belongs to that thinking which wants to see Alabama become a better state, one growing in democratic vigor, in substantial enlightment, dynamic freedom.

The third thing to consider is the need for the spirit of unity. One-party politics tends to divide along the lines of emotion rather than issues. Hence unity for freedom, for better politics, for political education is the rallying appeal that should prevail among us in the midst of the clamor and thunder of empty campaigning.

If fate works it that way, in choosing the lesser of evils on May 6, it would seem to be far better to be on the side of unity with dignity than victory at the sacrifice of one's civic honor. Those who try to divide us most likely would be those who would try to mis-use us. To be on the side of other than what is considered the lesser of evils in this campaign would place in jeopardy not only this spiritual unity but the political strength to continue this heart-breaking struggle.

Not to be overlooked as a fourth consideration is the need for getting out the fullest possible vote next Tuesday. A voter is without political value to either himself or his group unless he goes to the polls and casts his ballot. Getting out the vote, communicating to them the message of unity, is a responsibility which falls on the shoulders of the civic and community leaders. The size of the voter turnout will reflect the strength of the community leadership.

Thus we come to the end of this campaign having taken our stand on the side of an uplifting unity. We have called attention to the need for campaigning among our civic leaders as a means of communicating to the voters. We have urged our civic leaders to make effective plans for getting out the vote. The one-party system makes unity a necessity for self-defense. United our leadership can survive the outcome of any election and still be strong enough to carry on, fight on, and eventually win the battle for decent politics.

A united leadership can be an independent leadership responsible only to the finest ideals of democracy and the supporters who give them the power to stand up, and even alone, if the necessities of politics demand it. A united leadership must never know the meaning of defeat. The campaign for sane political issues and clean government must go on.

Campaign Notes From Upstate

By Bob Ingram

THE WEATHER in North Alabama election day could be the deciding factor on the number of votes cast in the Democratic Party primary.

INGRAM

And ironically, the prediction in North Alabama is that a heavy rain will increase, rather than decrease, the total vote cast.

The reasoning behind this is simple. Heavy rains have soaked the Tennessee Valley for weeks, to such an extent in fact that county agents report no more than 5 per cent of the crop has been planted.

This has been one reason why most of the candidates for governor have attracted such tremendous crowds. With the fields too wet to plow, farm families have had little to do but go to town to talk politics and listen to the candidates as they paraded through.

Should the rains cease, many farmers, already dangerously far behind in their work, will of necessity have to get to work even if it means spending election day in the fields atop a tractor or behind a mule.

Predictions are that whatever the weather a record number of votes will be cast Tuesday. In many instances the voters will be lured to the polls by hot local races rather than to elect a governor.

A record is expected to be established (the all-time high was 595,000 in '54) because heavy registration of voters has offset sharp drops in some counties caused by voter reidentification.

Glencoe Present

AT THE Faulkner rally Wednesday night in Gadsden which climaxed the first day of the "Victory March," seated on front row center was Rex (Glencoe Paving Co.) Edwards, the hot plant mix king of the Folsom administration.

Edwards was clapping his hand louder than most while keeping time to the Statesmen Quartet's wonderful rendition of "He's Got The Whole World In His Hands."

In addition to his duty above and beyond in behalf of Faulkner, Edwards is also campaign manager for Red Hardin of Gadsden who is seeking to oust Rep. Albert Rains from Congress. The Rains-Hardin scrap is one of the muddiest in years in the Fifth Congressional District.

Cadillacs And A Thunderbird

JUDGING from Montgomery reaction to the Faulkner motorcade in North Alabama it seems in order to set the record straight on the length of that caravan.

Three times during the day as the motorcade snaked its way through North Alabama, this operator literally took his life in his hands to pass the entire motorcade then pull off the road and count the cars as they came by. State speed laws took a terrible beating as this assignment was carried out.

— But three time the motorcade was counted—as it crossed the Tennessee River en route from Decatur to Huntsville; as it recrossed the same river entering Guntersville, and finally, as it stormed through downtown Gadsden.

At the Decatur bridge the total was 306; at Guntersville, 244; and in Gadsden, 196. By coincidence, but unknown at the time, a staff member of the Gadsden Times also counted the vehicles in his city. His total: 194.

As it left Decatur the motorcade included one Thunderbird with two young Baldwin County men as driver and passenger), two Lincoln Continentals, four Chrysler Imperials, 19 Cadillacs, 31 Oldsmobiles and 46 Buicks.

Faulkner was riding in a blue and white 1957 Pontiac convertible with the top back.

This bunk about the motorcade numbering 723 cars, or even 600, is just that—bunk.

It was still an impressive stunt. But by claiming more than twice what they really had, the Faulkner people gave the opposition something to laugh about.

Keep It Modest

NONE OF the candidates for governor riding in motorcades in the north made the mistake of traveling in too much class. A candidate who gets caught in a Cad is dead.

While Faulkner was being transported in a Pontiac, Atty. Gen. John Patterson was in a 1958 Dodge hardtop, A. W. Todd alternated between a 1956 Mercury and a 1958 Buick station wagon, and George Hawkins was in a 1957 Buick sedan.

A Flag For Todd

WHEN THE Decatur Daily endorses a candidate for office it goes all out for the man.

The newspaper give its editorial endorsement to Todd several weeks ago but lest someone not be aware of this fact a large Todd banner has been strung over the street in front of the Daily building.

There seemed to be more election interest in Decatur than any other city in the Tennessee Valley. Morgan County's two House members, Bob Gilchrist and Albert Brewer, are both up to their ears in the governor's race. They can afford to be as both got by this spring without opposition in bids for reelection.

Brewer is beating the bushes for Wallace while his colleague is equally active for Rep. Karl Harrison. The other member of the Morgan legislative delegation, Sen. Joe Calvin, is staying clear of the race. He has a law partner running for local office.

The Faulkner motorcade is Decatur caused considerable confusion, one reason being the local folks were crossed up on the time. Decatur is on Daylight Savings Time. Added to this was the fact that the motorcade received an unexpected escort from Decatur's motorcycle-riding lady cops, looking both attractive and efficient in blue slacks.

The lady cyclists direct traffic in school zones, and during the remainder of the day dispense parking tickets.

A Whistle, But No Stop

PATTERSON left a lot of disappointed people throughout Northeast Alabama Thursday with his motorcade. Somebody got the wires crossed and had announced in most of the cities that Patterson would speak.

In several places (particularly Fort Payne, Centre and Oneonta) large crowds had gathered to hear the attorney general speak. There was plenty of grumbling and disappointment evident when Patterson barrelled through without even stopping.

Credit for the precision-like manner in which the Faulkner caravan moved through North Alabama was given to George Limbaugh, a Childersburg hardware dealer who has a hobby of working out motorcade details.

It was he who set up the Folsom caravan of 1954, a fact which was being mentioned proudly by the Faulkner fans throughout the day.

Limbaugh even handled reservations for the motorcade participants for the three night-time spots—Gadsden, Mobile and Montgomery. The checks, however were picked up by the individuals.

Grandma And The Wall St. Journal

IN WHAT has been the rule throughout the campaign, the only newspaper on the job in North Alabama during the week was The Advertiser.

There was, however, one exception to this. When Patterson moved through the wild, deserted territory from Cherokee (town, not county) to Red Bay over unpaved roads all but washed away by torrential rains, he also was accompanied by another member of the press—Ed Kony of the Wall Street Journal.

After corssing a couple of rain-swollen mountain streams spanned by one-way wooden bridges, Kony appeared anxious to leave on another assignment.

Wallace Pledges Separate School Systems For State

Judge George C. Wallace, only leading candidate for governor to include Tuskegee on his speaking tour, spoke Thursday afternoon to a crowd of several hundred persons in front of the Court House. He was introduced by Minnie Pearl, star of the Grand Ole Op-

Judge Wallace devoted much o' his talk to his record in opposing civil rights for the past 10 years and to his plan for preserving harmonious race relations by maintaining segregation in Alabama.

"I had been working on this problem of civil rights and segregation long before I became a candidate for governor," Wallace said, citing his fight in two Democratic National Conventions against civil rights proposals by Northern radicals.

Declaring that he believes in fair treatment for everyone, Judge Wallace said he will close any school in Alabama which is ordered to integrate its pupils.

"If any troops are sent to Alabama with fixed bayonets to enforce integration they will find themselves pointing their bayonets at empty schools," the candidate said.

The speaker touched briefly on old age pensions, stating that it is cruel for anyone to promise old people more assistance than the state can provide. He pledged to provide the maximum old-age assistance the state can afford.

He also called attention to his support of education and his sponsorship of the bill that resulted in establishment of a system of trade schools over the state.

Judge Wallace called attention to the Wallace Industrial Development Act which he sponsored in the Legislature and told the crowd that when he is governor he will go with city and county officials anywhere in the country to obtain industry.

From Tuskegee the Wallace party moved to Notasulga where he delivered his last speech of the day before going to Birmingham for a television program Thursday night.

Alabama Vote May Set Mark

Segregation A Top Issue In Tuesday Ballot

14 RUN FOR GOVERNOR

By The Associated Press

MONTGOMERY, May 3.—Alabama Democrats perhaps in record numbers will nominate candidates for governor and scores of lesser offices Tuesday, climaxing a campaign heavy with emphasis on segregation.

All 14 contenders seeking the Democratic nomination for governor in the party primary have sworn to uphold the tradition of separate racial facilities, particularly in the schools.

Each Has Own Plan

Even so, the threat of ultimate integration has been one of the major campaign issues. Each candidate has offered his own formula for stopping it.

Besides a governor, voters will choose nominees for lieutenant governor, all 141 seats in the Legislature, nine places in Congress, attorney general, state auditor, secretary of state, state treasurer, state superintendent of education and commissioner of agriculture.

Automatically nominated without opposition will be three justices on the State Supreme Court, three on the Court of Appeals and two members of the Public Service Commission.

Victory in the Democratic primary is tantamount to election in Alabama.

While nominating candidates for public office, the voters also will elect a new 72-member State Democratic Executive Committee, and in so doing may decide Alabama's role in the presidential election two years hence.

Loyalty Oath A Factor

The outcome will hinge on whether a majority on the newly elected committee is for or against the controversial party loyalty oath.

This pledge, retained by the incoming committee, candidates running for presidential elector in 1960 must promise in advance to support the party's presidential ticket.

Ninety-nine of the candidates answering a recent Associated Press poll endorsed the loyalty oath; 43 others opposed it. The remaining 28 in the race declined to reply to the questionnaire.

Estimates of the probable vote Tuesday have run as high as 750,000, far exceeding the previous record of 595,000 in the governor's race four years ago. Other forecasters predict a somewhat smaller turnout.

Recent demands for Negro registration have intensified interest in their votes. With an estimated 53,000 Negroes eligible to vote a year ago and an undetermined number added since, a bloc vote, if one exists, could be an important factor in the elections.

Runn Off Slated June 3

Many state and district races may be left undecided by Tuesday's election, since a majority of the votes cast is necessary for nomination. A runoff is scheduled June 3 with the top two candidates competing in each race where no one gets a majority.

Gubernatorial candidates are former Representative Laurie C. Battle of Birmingham; Adm. John Crommelin (USN, Ret.) of Wetumpka; W. E. Dodd of Bessemer; Shearen Elebash of Montgomery; former State Senator Jimmy Faulkner of Bay Minette; Winston Gullatte of Selma; State Representative Karl Harrison of Columbiana; State Representative George Hawkins of Gadsden; Jack Owen, president of the Public Service Commission, from Montgomery; Atty. Gen. John Patterson of Phenix City; Ralph 'Shorty' Price of Louisville; Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd of Russellville; the Rev. Billy Walker of Pell City, and Circuit Judge George Wallace of Clayton.

Wallace will face TV press

What "new facts" does Judge George Wallace plan to bring out in the June 3 runoff primary with Atty. Gen. John Patterson for governor?

Who was behind the "snear" campaign against Wallace in the first primary?

What strategy will Wallace use to overcome the 25,000-vote lead Patterson got in the first primary?

These and other questions will be asked Judge Wallace of Clayton, a Circuit Court jurist and former legislator, when he appears as special guest on "Alabama Press Conference" at 12:25 p.m. Sunday over Station WABT (Channel 13).

WALLACE

These public information programs are sponsored by The Birmingham News and Stations WABT and WAPI.

Questioning Wallace will be Fred Taylor, Birmingham News political writer and regular panelist, and Rex Thomas, chief of The Associated Press Bureau at Montgomery. WABT-WAPI News Editor Charlie Davis will be moderator.

This program will be rebroadcast at 1:30 p.m. Sunday over WAPI.

AN EDITORIAL

Wallace Best Qualified

Nearly all the straw polls, as well as persistent news report from over the state on the current campaign for governor of Alabama confirm what most people have begun to suspect—Judge George C. Wallace is ahead of the pack as the race enters the home stretch. This paper believes there are sound reasons for his selection as the favorite.

Alabamians, we believe, are flocking to the Wallace standard for a most compelling reason. The candidate has asked them to look at his record; they have looked and they have liked it.

They like, for instance, the Wallace Industrial Development Act which has brought new payrolls to many communities over the state through 160 industries established under its provisions. They believe that, with Wallace as administrator, the Act which bears his name will bring many more industries to Alabama.

And they like the Wallace Trade School Act which has enabled some 25,000 young Alabamians to learn the trades and skills necessary in the new industrial age.

Alabamians are wise enough to realize that an increasing prosperity for the state will provide the added revenue needed for education, old-age pensions, health and welfare without burdensome new taxes. Wallace has promised expansion of all essential state functions and his program for encouraging industry offers the best hope of making it all possible.

Despite all the thunder about race relations during the campaign, the voters will hardly make this a leading issue for all the candidates, especially the leading candidates, are singing the same song, if not the same verse. The only novelty is the quaint suggestion of one candidate that the matter might be administered as well from a jail cell as from the governor's office.

The Wallace record, too, is a record of honesty, integrity and constancy to high ideals of public service. The voters have faith that these traits of character will hardly change with Wallace in the governor's office.

His training, experience and record of past performance establish him as undoubtedly the best qualified of the 14 candidates seeking the state's highest office.

For all these reasons and for others that cannot be listed in an article of limited length, this paper believes that Judge George C. Wallace deserves to be and will be chosen by the voters as governor of Alabama.

Wallace wins half of votes of newsmen

BY FRED TAYLOR

Judge George Wallace, who was the heavy favorite of newspaper men for governor in a poll taken at the Alabama Associated Press Assn. meeting at Huntsville, Saturday had two gubernatorial opponents challenging him to debate law enforcement and segregation issues.

They were the Rev. Billy Walker of Crotwell, who joined George Hawkins in wanting to debate with Wallace, as all the candidates in the warming race for governor pushed vote bids in just about every section of the state.

Patterson, wife set open house

"Open house" receptions for Gubernatorial Candidate John Patterson and Mrs. Patterson will be held in Birmingham Sunday afternoon and night. The first will be at the residence of Mrs. Esther Rennick, 3530 24th-st, n, in North Birmingham, from 2 to 5 p.m. The second will be at the residence of Mrs. Louis H. Lehmann, 4234 Woodvale-rd, s, near Avondale Villa, from 6 to 9:30 p.m.

Newsmen, attending the Huntsville meeting on Friday, were asked to predict who would win the Democratic nomination for governor.

Judge Wallace was ahead with 36 votes, with Jimmy Faulkner getting 19; John Patterson, 8; A. W. Todd, 4, and Laurie Battle and Hawkins one each. None of the other candidates received a vote.

HOWEVER, the voting was not limited to Alabama editors and reporters who comprised most of those attending The Associated Press gathering. A few Tennessee and Georgia editors voted.

WALLACE, whose campaign got another boost from the weekly Jackson County Farmer, which endorsed his candidacy, had declared at Scottsboro earlier in the week that "No candidate has a monopoly on law enforcement." He said he would debate this issue with any of the candidates.

The Clayton judge, who addressed a big crowd at Stevenson Friday night and who continued to campaign Saturday in North Alabama, made no comment on the challenges by Walker and Hawkins.

HAWKINS TOLD a gathering at Tuscaloosa Friday night that Wallace "must have been kidding" when he said he would debate the issues with other candidates. He added that he stood ready to debate Wallace on television, if his opponent desired, and would help share the cost of a TV program.

Meantime, Jack Owen, who pledged to establish a resort commissioner for Alabama if elected governor, addressed a large turnout of voters at a rally at the Florence American Legion Home Friday night.

Owen, who continued to draw big crowds and warm applause for his pledge to retain the right-to-work law and to "make certain" that segregation is maintained, said "Alabama now has a $1 million yearly tourist business and it could be developed to many times that size."

Weekly gives Wallace backing

SCOTTSBORO, Ala., April 12—The weekly Jackson County Farmer endorsed Judge George Wallace for governor, stating editorially that it believes he is the only candidate with the proven ability to preserve the Southern way of life, if attacked by the federal government."

The newspaper stated, "This man has an established record that proves beyond doubt his ability and intention to preserve segregation in Alabama. He has done more for the working man and the farmer than any other man in the race."

"I will add to my cabinet a resort commissioner to work with the fast-growing tourist trade," he declared.

JIMMY FAULKNER, after an intensive two-day stumping tour of Jefferson County, took his campaign to Talladega, Coosa and Clay Counties Saturday. Faulkner had big crowds in Jefferson, addressing a rally Friday night at Tarrant City Hall where he hammered hard on his stand for maintaining segregation, aiding schools and industrial development to "bring more pocket dollars to this area and all of Alabama."

Faulkner, exuding confidence that he will be elected governor, also stressed these and other issues, including reapportionment, in a speech over WBRC-TV Friday night.

"Being in the lead has its advantages, but I am sure that all of you listening realize it also has its drawbacks," said Faulkner. "Your back becomes an inviting target for those running along behind you.

"If you are not in the lead, it seems you are free to make wild statements and rash, impossible promises and praise yourself to the high heavens, with little regard to whether what you are saying is true or not."

"I have presented a sound and workable program to the people all over this state," Faulkner added, "and the acceptance of the people for this program is the reason for Jimmy Faulkner being in the lead."

TODD PREDICTED a "great rolling tide of votes will swell down out of the Tennessee Valley, over Sand Mountain and to the Gulf Coast" to sweep him into the governor's office May 6.

The state agriculture commissioner, who made six speeches in North Alabama Friday, winding up with a night rally at Decatur, declared "I am the candidate of the people—the working man and the farmer—and the only candidate in the race with a clear-cut record on the reapportionment issue."

He said he is the only candidate in the race with a record on public ownership of TVA, having sponsored a bill in the State Senate to assure TVA would never be sold to "money-grabbing private interests."

He said the measure was killed by Alabama Power Co., "which fought it with everything they had." Todd spoke Saturday at Eastaboga, Anniston, Oxford, Alexandria and Wellington and will address a 7:30 night rally at Hoke's Bluff High School.

FAULKNER spoke at Childersburg, at Sylacauga during the morning, and had speeches set for Goodwater at 1:30 p.m.; Ashland at 3 p.m.; Talladega at 4:30 p.m. and Anniston at 7:30 p.m.

Battle, who was escorted from Gadsden by a 100-car motorcade, formally opened campaign headquarters Saturday at Anniston.

The voters of Alabama already are ready for the political revolution and the moral crusade which I have planned," said Battle, "And I have every reason to believe that I will receive an overwhelming vote."

Battle will deliver a TV appeal at 8 p.m. Saturday over WBRC-TV.

KARL HARRISON, who urged that "Alabama move quickly to aid its forgotten citizens—the mentally ill," emphasized his efforts in behalf of public health as he campaigned Saturday in the Tri-Cities.

He said that the present plight of the mentally ill and mentally retarded in this state is "shocking." Harrison, veteran Shelby County legislator, is chairman of the Legislature's interim committee on health.

Harrison's speaking schedule called for an appearance at Huntsville Saturday afternoon. From there he will go to Guntersville for campaigning Saturday night.

Patterson pushed his vote drive in the Wiregrass Saturday, speaking at Troy, Brundidge and Dothan during the day. He will address a 7:30 night rally at the Tanyard community.

Wallace spoke Saturday at Guntersville, Cullman, Hartselle, Athens, Ider and Ardmore.

Owen's Saturday schedule called for seven speeches. He spoke at Waterloo, Cloverdale, Killen, Rodgersville, Anderson, Green Hill and was to address a 7:30 night rally at Lexington.

Loyalty Fight Overshadows Alabama Governor's Race

Both Sides Confident of Victory As They Fire Away at Each Other

By FRED TAYLOR

Staff Writer, The Birmingham News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 19—Democratic regulars and would-be bolters are battling furiously for control of party machinery in Alabama as this campaign roars toward May 6 election day.

In many ways this sizzling fight overshadows the 14-man race for governor, with voters preparing to decide for the third time in eight years whether the controversial loyalty oath for candidates in Democratic primary elections will be retained.

Party regulars—those who advocate staying in the national party and settling all disputes there—were victorious by lopsided margins in both the 1950 and 1954 tussles for control of the 72-member State Democratic Executive Committee.

And stick-by-the-party campaigners, who have full slates of candidates in all nine congressional districts (eight committeemen will be elected from each) are confident they will triumph again.

Dissidents Hopeful

But dissidents, who insist they will have no part of the national Democratic Party, have hopes of regaining control of the state party governing body.

ALABAMA

They held control in 1958 when Alabama's 11 electoral votes were diverted from nominees Harry Truman and Alben Barkley and given to the Thurmond-Wright ticket.

State Democratic Chairman Roy Mayhall, circuit court judge of Jasper, is one of the central figures in the tussle as would-be bolter candidates pound him hard.

Two others are U.S. Sens. Lister Hill and John Sparkman. The new revolt movement has as its long-range objective the unseating of the two senators when they come up for re-election. Sen. Sparkman's seat will be open to campaign in 1960 and that of Sen. Hill in 1962.

The antiloyalty oath campaign leaders are still smarting from the fact that Hill and Sparkman took the stump in 1950 to help wrest control of party machinery from the bolters and did it again in 1954 to retain control.

Chairman Mayhall, slamming back at the revolt leaders this time, declared that the "real issue" in the dispute over committee control is one between Democratic regulars and "lovers of the Republican Party and its economic principles."

"Critics of our Democratic loyalty oath are ignoring, or trying to hide, the most important fact of the American political ssytem: Namely, that there are two and only two parties with any influence in the United States—the Democratic and Republican parties," said Judge Mayhall.

Names Georgians

"The Democratic Party includes all our Alabama senators and congressmen, along with men like Russell and Talmadge of Georgia, Stennis and Eastland of Mississippi, Rayburn and Johnson of Texas and many others who have rendered fine and loyal service to the South and to the nation," the jurist added.

Judge Mayhall, in rapping the would-be bolters, declared "those who are raising so much fuss over the loyalty oath must be exposed for what they are—aiders and stooges of the Republican Party.

"The Republican Party includes tricky Dick Nixon, Sherman Adams, Adam Clayton Powell (New York Negro congressman who abandoned the Democrats and went to the GOP), Herbert Brownell, William Knowland, Everett Dirksen and the man who ordered armed paratroopers into Little Rock—Dwight D. Eisenhower," he said.

The State Democratic chairman added that "I have far more respect for Republicans honest enough to admit it, than I have for these anti-Democratic loyalty oath slate candidates who are trying to sneak into leadership in the Democratic Party."

But revolt leaders whaled away at Chairman Mayhall, as a three-pronged assault was directed against the loyalty oath which barred as candidate in Democratic primary elections those who bolted to the Eisenhower-Nixon ticket in 1956.

Assails Mayhall

Coleman Long of Uniontown, one of those who helped lead the 1948 States' Rights revolt, assailed Mayhall for his criticism of efforts to junk the loyalty pledge.

"I have observed Roy Malhall's attack upon the character, motives and integrity of these loyal Democrats who do not believe in the gag rule of the so-called loyalty oath," said Long, candidate for the state committee from the Sixth District.

Long said the issue in the fight is: "Shall the voters of Alabama have the right to vote freely and independently in our national election? They are denied that right now."

Also directing blistering attacks at the loyalty oath were James E. Simpson, young Birmingham attorney and candidate for the committee from the Ninth District, and E. O. Baldwin, Andalusia attorney.

Simpson, son of former state Sen. James A. Simpson, said the upcoming election would decide "whether the Democratic Party of Alabama will be returned to the people of this state or remain under the control of a few professional politicians."

Baldwin declared that the loyalty oath "barring lifelong Democrats from running for office in the Democratic primary is knocking the people of Alabama groggy."

Cost of getting votes is high

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 26—(AP)—The latest political gimmick of entertaining as well as wooing the voters has cost several candidates for governor a sizable hunk of money.

In the filing of expense accounts with the secretary of state during the past week, the following expenditures were noted:

Jimmy Faulkner—Statesmen Quartet, $3000; Blackwood Brothers Quartet, $3000.

Jack Owen—Shorty Sullivan's Confederate Colonels, $6650.

John Patterson—Rebe Gosdin and His Sunny Valley Boys, $6600.

Winston Gullatte—Quartet, $4000.

Shorty Price—Barbour County Band, $250.

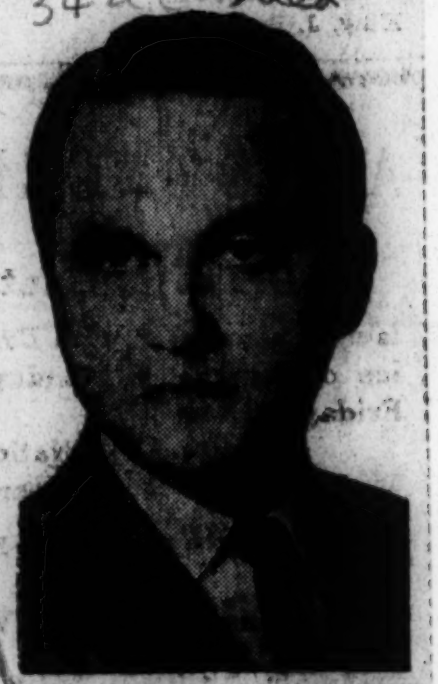
ANOTHER CANDIDATE, Judge George C. Wallace, did not specify in his intemization how much he has paid Grand Ole Opry Star Minnie Pearl or the hillbilly band which has accompanied him. He listed total expenses of $12,298.

Still to report his expenses is A. W. Todd, who has carried an impressive array of talent with him, including Wally Fowler, the Sons of Song and the Chuck Wagon Gang.

The expenses reported by the candidates represents only what they and their official organizations have spent. The entertainers might have been paid more by individual supporters of the various candidates.

Judge Wallace Will Make Two Talks In Macon County

Judge George C. Wallace, acclaimed in all parts of the state as one of th top-running candidates for governor in the May 6 Democratic primary, will bring his bid for the state's highest office to Macon County next Thursday for speaking engagements in Tuskegee and Notasulga.



JUDGE GEORGE C. WALLACE

Judge Wallace will speak from the Court House steps in Tuskegee at 1 p. m. and in downtown Notasulga at 2:30 p. m.

A champion of States' Rights for many years, Judge Wallace has pitched his campaign on the theme of developing Alabama by its own efforts and has been citing the accomplishments of the Wallace Industrial Development Act as an example of what can be done by wise legislation. More than 100 industries have been brought to Alabama through provisions of this act.

Judge Wallace, while serving in the Legislature, sponsored measures to aid education in Alabama and in his campaign for governor has promised to expand the state's schools. He has pledged to maintain "complete and absolute" segregation in the schools.

Some Early Political Rivalries In Alabama

34a(2) Ala

By C. M. Stanley
Editor-in-Chief The Alabama Journal

IN ALABAMA'S first election for governor in 1819, Dr. William Wyatt Bibb received 8,342 votes, defeating Mr. Marmanduke Williams by 1,202 votes.

STANLEY

The official census for 1820 shows Alabama had a population of 127,901. By 1830 the state's population had jumped to 300,527, or 142 per cent, second greatest percentage increase for any decade in the state's history.

This rapid growth was due to the state organization of a state government, adoption of a constitution, election of officials, and admission to the Union as one of the sovereign states.

THE TERRITORIAL legislature called an election for naming delegates to a constitutional convention to be held in Huntsville on the first Monday in May, 1819.

Sun. 4-20-58

The convention assembled at Huntsville July 5, 1819. It is noteworthy that President James Monroe visited Huntsville that hot summer. Another visitor was Andrew Jackson of Tennessee, military hero and future president who came to Huntsville while the convention was in session bringing with him a string and stable of race horses for the races then in progress. Both guests were entertained and given distinguished attention by the prominent Alabama men who were members of the convention, as well as by the people of Huntsville.

THE FIRST state election was held on the third Monday and Tuesday of September 1819.

The government was set up and Gov. Bibb was inaugurated at Huntsville November 9, 1819.

The joint resolution of Congress admitting Alabama as a state was signed by President Monroe December 14, 1819, and the state was on its own, and off to its great future.

The state's first Legislature had 21 senators and the House of Representatives had 45 members, with James Dellet, of Monroe, as speaker.

IN THOSE days Alabama selected her finest and ablest men as lawmakers and state officials whether they were lawyers, planters, businessmen, bankers or trained statesmen. Recital of the names of only a few of the members of the early legislature will indicate the caliber of men chosen. Among them were Nicholas Davis, Thomas Bibb, John D. Carroll, Daniel Coleman, John W. Walker, Beverly Hughes and Harry Toulman, of Mobile.

The legislature chose as the state's first two United States senators John W. Walker who had come to Alabama from Georgia, then living in Huntsville, and William Rufus King, then living at Cahawba, site of the future state capital. In 1852 Mr. King was elected vice president of the United States, but was taken desperately ill in Cuba, returned to his home in Alabama dying shortly afterward. He took the oath of office in Cuba but was never able to serve actively in the office to which he had been elected.

IN THE ACT admitting Alabama as a state the federal government donated 72 sections of land for a high seminary of learning; the 16th section of land in every township in the state for free schools; and 1,620 acres of land at the confluence of the Cahawba and Alabama rivers for a seat of government.

It should be recorded that much of this land was exploited and wasted in the years to come.

IN THE early years of Alabama's history there was intense political rivalry between what was called the Georgia Crowd and the rest of the state. William Wyatt Bibb lived at Coosada just across the Tallapoosa river from Montgomery County, and was the leader of the Georgia crowd.

The Georgia Crowd was composed largely of the prominent families that had come to Alabama from the Broad River settlement in Northeast Georgia some forty or fifty miles up the Savannah River from Augusta.

Not all of the Georgia Crowd had settled in and around Montgomery, however. Thomas Bibb, a brother of William Wyatt Bibb also from the Broad River community, had settled first at Huntsville and then in Limestone County where he built Belle Mina mansion, still a showplace of North Alabama. John W. Walker, one of Alabama's first senators, was also from Georgia and had settled in Madison County.

IN THE state's first election for the legislature Limestone County elected Thomas Bibb to the state Senate. The state's first constitution did not provide for a lieutenant governor, but the Senate elected its own presiding officer. Thomas Bibb of the Georgia crowd was elected to this office. If anything happened to the governor the presiding officer of the Senate automatically became governor.

Gov. William Wyatt Bibb was fatally injured in 1820 when his horse stumbled and fell during a thunderstorm near the governor's Coosada home. He lingered for nearly six months with his brother Thomas Bibb constantly at his side helping to carry on the state's business.

When Gov. William Wyatt Bibb died on July 9, 1820, at the age of 39, Thomas Bibb became governor and the Georgia Crowd was still at the political helm.

THE POLITICAL rivalry of those days in Alabama was not like the rivalry felt toward the "Black Belt" today, but resembled it. The Georgia Crowd had adherents all the way from the Gulf to the Tennessee line, though most of its leaders were in what is now the state's Black Belt region.

State history seems to show that the Georgia Crowd ruled because it deserved to rule. Its men were of the highest type and of extensive political experience before they came to Alabama. Governor William Wyatt Bibb had been a United States senator from Georgia before he came to Alabama, and his Georgia colleague in the United States Senate was Charles Tait, also of the Broad River settlement, who became Alabama's first United States judge under appointment by President Monroe.

Straight On 8-Year-Old News Talk

34a(2)

THIS now looks more and more like Judge George Wallace's year. The signs are that the people are at this moment decisively swinging in behind Judge Wallace as their choice for 47th Governor of Alabama. The Montgomery Advertiser believes that this is a commendable choice.

The Advertiser must say frankly that the choice this year has not been as easy as in some past elections. Not the least reason for this is our esteem for some of the other candidates.

However, this year there is an unusual consolation for a newspaper or voter in responding to the duty of choosing. The candidates are characteristically young men, averaging about 40 years of age. Ambitious and competent, the defeated candidates undoubtedly will offer themselves again in other races on future ballots. For some, their year will come in future elections as it seems to have come in this election year for Judge Wallace.

IN AT lease one respect it would be a wholesome thing if Judge Wallace could register his victory May 6 without a runoff, for this would leave the voters free to concentrate on the men and issues involved in the runoffs for other powerful and consequential offices such as lieutenant governor, attorney general, legislator and county offices.

The Advertiser cannot, as yet, predict that Wallace's lead May 6 will be great enough to make the No. 2 man despair of running it off, but it is possible. As a matter of fact, there was no runoff in the races in 1950 and 1954.

If enough voters could see their way clear to forego the complimentary vote they intend to sacrifice out of esteem or home-county sentiment,

It might well be that Wallace will be elected without a runoff.

THOUGH not yet 40, Judge Wallace has been seasoned at every level of leadership and responsibility. After working his way through the University of Alabama law school, he was by turns an assistant attorney general, legislator and at present, a circuit judge.

He has played his part upon the national stage, and learned much as he went along. As a delegate to the Democratic Convention of 1948 at Philadelphia, Wallace did not walk out but remained to nominate Senator Richard B. Russell of Georgia for President.

In the 1956 convention at Chicago, Wallace was chosen to represent Alabama on the platform committee and acted as the right hand of Gov. J. P. Coleman of Mississippi. Their tactics in watering down the civil rights plank were so effective that the NAACP and Walter Reuther left Chicago in wrath, publicly accusing the Wallace committee of locking them out of their meeting place in the tower of the Conrad Hilton Hotel.

More recently than that, Judge Wallace went to Washington and testified in well remembered fashion against the civil rights bills, and his collision with that New York holy-roller, Congressman Emanuel Celler, attracted wide notice to the earnestness of Alabama's opposition to race mixing.

The spirit and skill which Wallace has demonstrated in resisting federal intrusions were recognized a few weeks ago when he was summoned to address a joint session of the Georgia legislature.

Thus the young jurist has served a full apprenticeship at every level of government — county, state and national—and is thereby qualified to take up the seals of office as Alabama's chief magistrate.

ONE of the reasons Wallace is commanding such favor throughout Alabama is that his position on race mixing leaves little to the imagination.

¶ Wallace opposes race mixing.

¶ But also, Wallace opposes violence—no matter by whom committed.

For example, last Feb. 6 in his testimony before Congress, Wallace dealt roughly with his Northern adversaries, but he also made plain his scorn of race hatreds and race baiting:

"If ever it [race hating and abuse] is necessary, this is one witness who won't even be a candidate for public office."

ON THE more conventional issues such as highways, schools and welfare payments, the major candidates are not far apart (except for the candidate who has solemnly promised $75 pensions without disclosing just where he would raise the necessary $32,000,000).

FINALLY, there is one issue less obvious and little discussed, but one Alabamians are deeply interested in. The next governor will have a good deal to say about the 1960 Democratic convention, its platform and its nominee. Judge Wallace, by now an old hand in convention struggles, will be bent on satisfying the wishes of Alabamians.

It would be to the advantage of Alabama to have a governor friendly to our two U.S. senators, but entirely independent of the senators and in no degree awed or beguiled by them.

That man is obviously George Wallace.

Citizens Councils Say Six In Race Want Modified Oath

The Alabama Assn. of Citizens Councils claimed the support of six candidates for governor Monday for what it called a modified Democratic Party loyalty oath.

Officers of the prosegregation organization made public the replies from candidates for governor and other statewide offices to a segregation questionnaire circulated by the councils.

Among other questions, it asked candidates for governor whether they would use their influence to get a "modified loyalty oath that will not require Alabama candidates to favor candidates on the national ticket who are Negroes or who favor integration."

The council headquarters said Laurie Battle, W. M. Dodd, Shearen Elebash, John Patterson, Ralph (Shorty) Price and the Rev. Billy Walker all replied they would support such an oath.

State Rep. George Hawkins and Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd said they wouldn't go along with it, the announcement said, while John Crommelin, Jimmy Faulkner, Winston Gullatte, State Rep. Karl Harrison, Jack Owen and Circuit Judge George Wallace gave no answers.

The present Democratic loyalty oath requires candidates running in the promaries to bind themselves in advance to support the party's regular presidential ticket no matter who the nominees might be.

On another question, the Citizens Council officers said nine candidates promised to support legislation to cut off appropriations and close any school, public park or other institution "where integration is practiced."

Endorsing that proposal, the council headquarters said, were Battle, Dodd, Elebash, Harrison, Hawkins, Patterson, Price, Walker and Wallace.

Todd said he wouldn't support such legislation, the announcement added, and no answers were received from Crommelin, Faulkner, Gullatte and Owen.

On the proposed "modified" loyalty oath, the council organization said all but one of the five candidates for lieutenant governor gave their support.

It said Sen. E. W. Skidmore failed to return the questionnaire but Sens. Albert Boutwell, Sen. Sam Engelhardt, Robert T. (Bob) Butler and Asa E. (ace) Carter all endorsed the suggestion.

In 1955-'57 sessions—

Harrison's votes backed school, health, segregation legislation

BY HUGH W. SPARROW, News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 12—Shelby Rep. Karl Harrison continued to render much better than average service as a legislator during the 1955-'57 regular and special sessions—as he did in the 1939-'42 Senate and the 1951-'54 House.

During the Persons administration Rep. Harrison, from 1951 through 1954, represented Shelby County in the House and served as one of the governor's House floor leaders. That, to some extent, controlled many of his decisions and actions.

He represented Shelby again in 1955-57 during which two regular and five special sessions were held. During that interval he was not an "administration man." As a so-called "independent" Harrison ointly backed many of the nore important measures coming before the House.

He was a strong supporter of school and health legislation and a backer of the many bills passed in an effort to maintain racial segregation in Alabama.

Because Harrison has had much longer legislative experience than the four other gubernatorial candidates, three stories are necessary to cover his legislative activities. The first concerned his record as a senator, the second as a House member during the Persons administration and the present one relating to the 1955-57 period.

Next week the record of Rep. George Hawkins of Etowah in the 1951-54 session will be given.

His votes

DURING THE FIRST special session of 1955 Harrison voted against a bill boosting the gas tax a penny a gallon. He voted for H. 17, repealing the unpopular "20 hook" fishing license law, and for H. 41 for the relief of the Russell County government which was hard hit as a result of the 1954 Phenix City "cleanup" and left bankrupt.

One of the major bills at issue during the second special session was H. 25, repealing the relative responsibility law, which denied pensions to old persons having close kin capable of supporting them. Harrison voted for passage of the bill.

He voted for a bill increasing the tax on tobacco products; for H. 46, increasing the rate of the franchise tax and for H. 71, increasing the premium tax on insurance companies.

The measures were intended to provide additional money for old age pensions.

He voted against another bill of the same series, however, which proposed a 10 per cent tax on the price of liquor.

Good attendance

HARRISON WAS present on each day of the three 1955 special sessions and was present on all but one day of the regular session.

The third special session of legislation 1955 was devoid of important legislation and few, if any bills were passed.

During the regular session of 1955 Harrison voted aye on the following measures:

H. 84, increasing the penalty for vote buying.

The General Appropriation bill.

H. 87, putting a tax on hotels and motels.

H. 28, a constitutional amendment abolishing the poll tax as a pre-requisite for voting.

H. 202, providing a stiff penalty for fraudulently altering the vote of an elector.

H. 266, increasing pensions for Confederate widows.

H. 685, the Goodwyn income tax amendment;

The education appropriation bill, containing provision for a $600 a year pay boost for all public school teachers.

H. 296, providing for pupil assignment to the various schools.

H. 17, creating the State Department of Pensions and Security.

Harison did not vote on H. 816, boosting pay for virtually all state officials; H. 377, providing for further grading of milk and strictly regulating the importation of milk from other states and S. 218, proposing a tax on financial institutions.

More voting

DURING THE 1956 Special Session No. 1, Harrison was absent on one day, the third legislative day of the session.

He voted aye on S. 47, a constitutional amendment designating state and county superintendents of education, and other school administrators, as judicial officers. The bill was intended to prevent Negro organizations from suing school administrators personally.

Harrison voted for adoption of House Joint Resolution 18, the socalled interposition resolution, declaring null and void the U. S. Supreme Court's school integration ruling.

Among other bills, Harrison voted for S. 12 authorizing the Macon County Board of Education to dismiss any school teacher where such dismissal appeared to be in the public interest.

HARRISON was present on all legislative days of the second special session of 1956.

He voted to submit a constitutional amendment increasing the income tax rate on corporations from 3 to 5 per cent.

Sponsored bills

HARRISON WAS ABSENT on two days of the 1957 regular session.

He was joint sponsor of a number of maior proposals. Among them were:

H. 19, tightening up on provisions of health and medical insurance policies.

H. 13, the competitive bid bill.

H. 63, boosting pay of certain elected officials.

H. 64, increasing pay of jurors.

H. 65, boosting pay of circuit judges.

H. 79, the Lackey-Edwards school study bill.

H. 379, a constitutional amendment, providing that offices of officials cannot be abolished during their elected terms.

Several bills increasing benefits of workmen's compensation and unemployment compensation laws.

H. 610, providing for a long range health program.

Bills increasing pay of registers and fees of Circuit Court clerks.

Another bill boosting pay of Alabama Public Service Commission members.

A bill providing for a three-judge court to hear all appeals from Public Service Commission rate rulings.

H. 920, a constitutional amendment, authorizing issuance of $110 million in bonds for school properties.

DURING THE 1957 session Harrison voted for the general and education appropriation bills, the competitive bid bill, H. 34 providing for legislative reapportionment, the Lackey-Edwards school investigation measure and H. 835, knocking out exemptions on corporation income taxes.

He declined to vote on the bill proposing issuance of $20 million in revenue bonds for roads.

No one can accuse Harrison of voting for a measure he hopes will benefit him personally. The record shows he refrained from voting on H. 964, boosting the pay of the next governor from $12,000 to $25,000.

Wallace Gains New Debate Challenger

The gubernatorial race for the big vote in the May 6 Democratic primary election added fuel yesterday.

Circuit Judge George Wallace picked up a new challenger yesterday when a Montgomery minister campaigning for governor offered to debate him on the law enforcement or segregation issues.

The Rev. Billy Walker sent a telegram to Wallace saying he would like to debate the entire segregation issue with him.

During an appearance at Scottsboro Monday, Wallace said he would like to debate the law enforcement issue with any of the candidates for governor.

He apparently referred to Atty. Gen. John Patterson in particular since Patterson has campaigned on a promise of improved law enforcement and a crackdown on gangsterism.

In a telegram to the jurist yesterday, Walker suggested that the debate be carried on a statewide television network and offered to share the expense of the telecast with him.

More steam in the race came from Wallace's failure to show up at the University of Alabama yesterday to debate Candidate George Hawkins on issues in the governor's race.

Hawkins took up Wallace's Monday challenge. Since both are members of the University of Alabama Law School Class of 1942, and the class met in Tuscaloosa yesterday, Hawkins tentatively set that time.

Wallace's workers said he wouldn't make it because of schedule commitments. Hawkins says he will debate with Wallace anytime.

Judge Wallace's Barbour County neighbor and competiter in the governor's race, Ralph (Shorty) Price, has accused Wallace of being easy on Negroes convicted in the judge's court.

Price said Wallace is seeking the Negro vote, the first to make the charge openly. And he said Wallace, in effect, is running for Gov. James E. Folsom.

The Negro vote seeking charge came out at a political rally in Geneva.

Other candidates in the race for governor have been talking about Wallace's backing, but the rally was the first time any charges have come out.

Wallace, in answering Price, said:

"All my life in government I have worked to help the mentally ill. I will continue to do so."

And Wallace drew the loudest applause from the crowd.

Rep. Karl Harrison said in Dothan yesterday that Alabama must move quickly to the aid of its forgotten citizens, the mentally ill.

Speaking to a television audience, Harrison said the present plight of the mentally ill and mentally retarded in Alabama is shocking.

"I will co-ordinate an overall plan which will utilize Federal, state and private funds in an all-out attack on this tragic situation," he said.

"Alabama can correct its unemployment by merely matching Federal road building funds that are available now or will be available in the next four years," Candidate Jimmy Faulkner said in Ensley yesterday.

"Alabama has $96 million available in Washington now and $60 million will be available each year for the next four years. All we have to do is match it," Faulkner said. "When I am governor we are going to match these funds and match them without additional taxes if we have to borrow the money.

"We would be giving jobs to 75,000 people in the state. This should correct the unemployment situation in Alabama, because we now have approximately 48,000 persons drawing unemployment compensation," Faulkner said.

To Country Music Strains—

Patterson Vows To Plug State Spending 'Holes'

BY CLARKE STALLWORTH
Post-Herald Staff Writer

NEW SITE, Feb. [illegible] the strains of country music, Atty. Gen. John Patterson tonight opened his campaign for governor on a platform of "stopping up the holes in the state treasury."

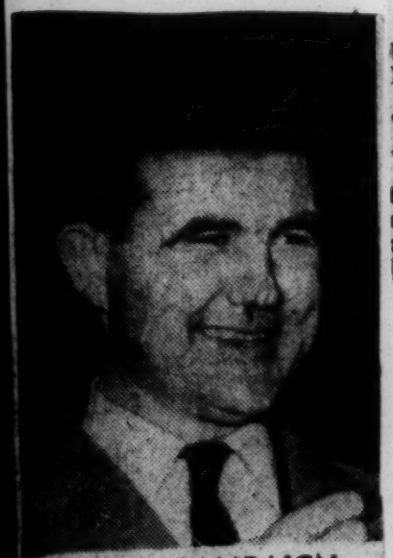
"We are not getting our money's worth for our tax dollar in Montgomery," he said. "A large part of every tax dollar is going down the drain. If we stop up the holes . . . and get a dollar's worth of goods and services for every tax dollar spent, we will have enough money to expand every program . . . and still have money left over."

"If we cut the fat out of spending . . . the money saved from greater efficiency will be put to work building modern, segregated schools for both races, and paying teachers the higher salaries they deserve."

Before a hometown crowd Patterson touched on these subjects:

SEGREGATION — "As your governor I will see to it that there will be no mixing of the races in the public schools . . . I will continue as I have in the attorney general's office, to wage an all-out fight against outside agitators like the NAACP.

"Integration of the races is unthinkable . . . if it is attempted, we will see bitterness and turmoil the likes of which we never have seen before. Any attempt to integrate the schools of this state would cause violence, disorder, and possible bloodshed, and would destroy the school where such an attempt was made.



OPENS CAMPAIGN — Atty. Gen. John Patterson.

Patterson said he would seek the passage of a law requiring the governor to close any public school where Federal troops are used to force race mixing in that school. No public school can function at the point of a bayonet."

LAW AND ORDER—"I have known from personal experience that gangsters and public officials cannot be partners in decent government . . . during my administration there will be no room for gangsters to operate in this state."

FARMERS — "The Alabama farmer . . . is being short-changed by unfair treatment . . . I will work . . . to improve the living and working conditions of the Alabama farmer and see that he has a market for his products and that he gets a fair price . . ."

OLD AGE PENSIONS—"Alabama's old age pensions are too low. The average old pension in Alabama is around $33 a month. The national average . . . is about $55 a month.

"As your governor I will see to it that those who qualify for old age pension . . . will be paid at least $75 a month, and more if possible."

"Now you're going to hear some people say that this can't be done, but I say it can. These same people said that we couldn't put the NAACP out of business, but we did.

"These same people said we couldn't stop them from letting contracts without competitive bids in Mongtomery, but we did. These same people said we'd never win a case against the loan sharks, but we did.

"If we stop up the holes in the public treasury, cut out the graft and corruption in Montgomery, cut out the padding of contracts and payment of commissions to political favorites, require competitive bidding on contracts and get our money's worth . . . we will have enough money without any more taxes to increase the old age pensions . . ."

PUBLIC SCHOOLS—". . . I promise that I will do everything in my power to increase the salaries of our teachers and provide adequate school facilities . . ."

LABOR—"I will not allow labor to be kicked around and abused while I am governor . . . labor will get a square deal . . ."

The New Site community, in Tallapoosa County, is near Bethlehem Cemetery where Patterson's father is buried, and near Goldville, where the attorney general was born.

Rebe Gosdin and his Sunny Valley Gang, of Montgomery, furnished the music here tonight. Patterson's next rally — also with the Sunny Valley group—will be at Lanett Elementary School in Chambers County on Feb. 14.

WALLACE WINS LEAD IN THREE STRAW POLLS

Gubernatorial candidate George C. Wallace walked off with top honors in three more straw polls Thursday.

Students at Huntingdon College went to the polls in a mock election, and when the returns were counted Wallace led the ticket. However, he failed by a substantial number in winning a majority.

Of the 245 votes cast on the campus, which is less than one-half the student body, Wallace received 97 votes to Jimmy Faulkner's 66.

Other totals included John Patterson 47, Laurie Battle 6, Shearen Elebash 5, Karl Harrison 4, Jack Owen, A. W. Todd and Billy Walker, 2 each; John Crommelin and Winston Gullatte, one each.

Shorty Price and W. E. Dodd failed to score.

The Lions Clubs of Opp and Andalusia held similar straw polls, with Wallace a runaway winner in both.

The Andalusia Lions gave Wallace 26 of the 53 votes cast, with Faulkner second with 10, Patterson 8, Owen 7 and Battle 2.

In Opp, Wallace did even better, polling 23 of the 32 votes cast. Faulkner got 5 and Patterson 4.

RUNOFF NOW APPEARS CERTAIN IN ALABAMA GOVERNOR'S RACE

By FRED TAYLOR
Staff Writer, The Birmingham News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., April 26—As Alabama's 14-man race for governor moved into the final weeks of battling before May 6 Democratic primary voting, observers gave Judge George Wallace of Clayton and former State Sen. Jimmy Faulkner of Bay Minette the best chances of finishing ahead.

Fred Taylor

If they did—and it did not appear likely that either would poll enough votes to win first primary nomination—they would fight it out in a runoff election four weeks later.

But Atty. Gen. John Patterson of Phenix City had been moving up fast, purposely aided in part by both the Faulkner and Wallace forces, and was in position to challenge them for one of the coveted runoff berths.

Also very much threats to the frontrunners were State Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd and Jack Owen, president of the Public Service Commission, both of whom had generated stretch-drive strength.

Owen, like Faulkner, was making his second race for governor, even though he failed to make as good showing as did Faulkner when the latter was runnerup to Gov. James E. Folsom four years ago. While Folsom won in a seven-candidate field without a runoff, Faulkner got some 152,000 votes in 1954. That was more than any other candidate, except Folsom, had ever received for governor in Alabama.

The Week in Alabama

Alabama's economy got a $16,891,487 shot in the arm from federal government and private contracts during the week. The U.S. Corps of Engineers awarded a $14,666,487 contract for construction of the Jackson Lock and Dam on the Tombigbee River. And Southern Electric Generating Co. announced $2,225,000 would be spent on the first two units of a huge steam electric generating plant under construction at Wilsonville, Ala. . . . Further evidence of Birmingham's growing purchasing power came with the announcement of a $3,500,000 shopping center to be built on the Green Springs Highway entrance to the city. This came on the heels of the formation of a "Buy Now" business booster group made up of business, professional and civic leaders and spearheaded by the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce. . . . The board of trustees of the Jefferson County Medical Society and other local physicians have under study a plan for a new county hospital within the mammoth Birmingham Medical Center. This is part of a long-range plan to help meet indigent patient care demands. . . . Norman P. Mason, commissioner of the Federal Housing Administration at Washington, meeting with Alabama Republican leaders in Birmingham, said that if housing demands can be used as a yardstick, Alabama and other Southeastern states are the fastest growing sections of the nation. Mason made this comment while inspecting housing conditions in the fast-growing rocket city of Huntsville and Redstone Arsenal. . . . Alabama will have approximately 900,000 qualified voters—an all-time high—eligible to participate in the May 6 primary election. An estimated 50,000 to 60,000 of these are Negroes, also a record high number of voters of that race.

Hawkins Offers To Debate Wallace

State Rep. George Hawkins Wednesday offered to debate law enforcement programs with Circuit Judge George Wallace, including their stands on enforcing reapportionment and segregation laws.

In a telegram to Wallace, Hawkins referred to a statement by the Clayton judge at a political rally in Scottsboro Monday. Wallace said he would debate any man in the governor's race on this issue of law enforcement.

"I'll accept this challenge to debate our respective programs on this issue of law enforcement, including of course the enforcement of laws relating to reapportionment and the best method of maintaining segregation," Hawkins' telegram said.

The Etowah County legislator suggested the debate might be held at Tuscaloosa Friday when both candidates will be on the University of Alabama campus for a class meeting. Hawkins and Wallace were members of the same class at the university's Law School.

"In the event you do not wish to debate in Tuscaloosa, I am certain we can agree on another mutually convenient time and place," Hawkins added.

Wallace could not be reached for comment on the telegram.

Speaking at Oneonta, Hawkins promised to make an issue of the increasingly heavy federal tax burden if he is elected governor of Alabama.

Alabama and other states, he said, have been "bled white . . . by the steady encroachment of the federal government in the tax field."

If he is elected, the Gadsden attorney said he will make every effort at national and regional governors' conferences to get other states to join him in a fight to reverse the tax trend.

State Rep. Karl Harrison told listeners at Prattville that the voters face a "three billion dollar question" in electing a governor.

And, he added, the people won't get a second chance if they come up with the wrong answer.

Harrison said that is the amount the state will receive in taxes and from various bond issues and federal allocations in the next four years, and he added:

"The next governor will have the direct responsibility of controlling the expenditures of these billions."

Harrison said the only way to prevent improper spending is to elect "an able and experienced governor who will be a watchdog for the people and not a pointer for political friends."

Other gubernatorial candidates meanwhile took their campaigns back to Jefferson County.

Wallace attended the formal opening of his campaign headquarters at Fairfield.

Ex-Congressman Laurie Battle spoke at a rally at the Hollywood Country Club in Birmingham. It was put on by women supporters of Battle.

Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Tood Wednesday told audiences in five west Jefferson County municipaliaies his plan to solve that metropolitan area's traffic problems.

Tood also said he will "do something about" the 11-mile stretch of Highway 78 leading out of Birmingham westward to Graysville and Jasper, tnence to Memphis, and that in the overall development of superhighways, he will see that there is no favoritism in placement of roads.

Jimmy Faulkner, a weekly newspaper publisher himself, meanwhile got the endorsement of the weekly Limestone Democrat and the Alabama Courier in his campaign for governor.

The 14 candidates turned their attention also to Geneva for one of the biggest political rallies of the campaign Thursday.

All prospective state officeholders were invited to speak at an outing sponsored by the Geneva American Legion Post. Those running for governor were on the schedule for appearances at night; the others during the afternoon.

'New' Faulkner Bares Temper In Blast At Charge Of 'Deals'

By BOB INGRAM
Advertiser Staff Writer

SELMA — Gubernatorial candidate Jimmy Faulkner unveiled a hot temper here Wednesday night as he branded the editor of the local newspaper "a man without journalistic ethics and a liar."

Faulkner released his pent-up feelings on editor Ed Fields of the Selma Times-Journal who in a recent editorial endorsement of another candidate had expressed opposition to Faulkner because he had made too many ideals and was a foe of the Black Belt.

It was these two editorial digs which aroused Faulkner to a heated pitch.

"I have made no promises to any group that I have not made publicly," Faulkner said, "and anybody who said I made any backstage deals is a liar."

"You have a local editor who must not know anything about journalistic ethics," Faulkner continued. "And anybody who says I said anything about the Black Belt or any other section of Alabama is a liar."

"If that editor has any character at all, he will apologize to me," Faulkner added.

ORATOR OF OLD SCHOOL

Faulkner was a new candidate at the rally Wednesday night, perhaps due in part to his anger. He was a shouting, arm-waving orator of the old school, and this approach was highly effective.

The crowd of about 325 people which attended the rally in the Selma Junior High School auditorium was a receptive one, interrupting Faulkner with applause 29 times during his 25-minute address.

Other than attacking the local newspaper editor, Faulkner gave much the same address he had delivered throughout the campaign.

SEGREGATION STAND

Dwelling particularly on segregation, he re-emphasized his warning that "if you want to have mob rule and race riots and integration, the fastest way to get it is to send a wishy-washy demagogue to Montgomery."

"I will do everything to maintain segregation that you would do if you were governor, and that is everything in my power," Faulkner said.

Faulkner once again told the voters that a candidate needed to run a second time to be elected governor, adding that he is the only man running for governor while the 13 other candidates are all running for second place.

The candidate made a joking reference to his 1954 race, when he observed that "there are a lot more candidates running today, but the competition ain't nearly so rough."

CONFIDENT OF VICTORY

And in closing, Faulkner said confidently, "I know that I'm going to be the next governor of Alabama."

The attendance at the rally was sizable, considering the fact that there were two sets of circumstances which upset the original plans. Rain forced the rally to be moved from the local stadium, and the program was held up for 75 minutes due to services being held at most Selma churches.

A number of Faulkner's Montgomery campaign leaders were here for the rally, including Mrs. Dorothy Altheimer, Max Baum, C. T. Fitzpatrick, Mr. and Mrs. Vic Akin, and S. T. (Tyre) Russell.

PERSONS' AIDES

Also present were two former members of the cabinet of former Gov. Gordon Persons—former Public Safety Director L. B. Sullivan, and former Adj. Gen. Walter J. (Crack) Hanna of Birmingham.

Also observed helping the Blackwood Brothers unload their sound equipment was John Drinkard, Cullman automobile dealer and a brother of the conservation director.

Mrs. Ruby Folsom Ellis, Montgomery, a candidate for secretary of state, took advantage of the Faulkner crowd to pass out campaign literature in her behalf.

Faulkner Campaigns On Tradition Basis

Declares Runners-Up Win Next Time; Battle Pitches Plea On Drive-O-Rama Plan

BY IVAN SWIFT

Jimmy Faulkner is appealing to voters to elect him governor on a "tradition" basis.

He told several groups listening to him speak in Walker County over the week-end it's traditional in Alabama "that a man has to run for governor a second time to win."

Faulkner said "the people of Alabama aren't in the mood to change traditions this year."

He pointed out that the runner-up in the governor's race "has always been elected if he ran the next time."

This is Faulkner's "next time." He was runner-up to Gov. James Folsom in the last election.

Faulkner told the crowds, "I received 152,000 votes, more than any candidate for governor ever received in Alabama, save one. He's down there now."

Faulkner said the traditions "make good sense."

He said "it takes five or six years for the people to get to know a candidate. You've got to be cussed and discussed."

Faulkner also has promised to be "the greatest friend education has ever had in a governor."

He said "we are going to give our boys and girls the same quality education as any Southern state when I am governor."

Faulkner will be in Loxley, Robertsdale, Foley, Fairhope and Bay Minette today.

Laurie Battle introduced a multi-million dollar "drive-o-rama" highway system in talks last week-end.

Battle said the Federal highway program will pay for most of the "broad, smooth expressways and hardtop access roads" he plans to build if he's elected governor.

Battle will be in Scottsboro today.

Here is what some of the other candidates told the voters during the week-end:

KARL HARRISON—"I think the people of Alabama will choose the hand of an experienced, dedicated leader and I believe I am the candiate best equipped to serve our state in this role.

"I have not run around the state shouting a bunch of impossible to fill promises, but have offered my record of accomplishments in evidence that I will continue to press forward with a vigorous program which will make Alabama a better place to live. I believe my years speak well of me.

"Twelve years in the Alabama House and Senate gives me an unmatched record in knowing not only what our state needs most, but how best to answer these needs through a workable legislative program."

His plans for this week center in North Alabama and include a major television speech in Birmingham.

GEORGE HAWKINS—Speaking in Guntersville, dismissed advocates of "taking politics out of this or that branch of government . . . as I see it, the only sure way to take politics out of government is to stop holding elections altogether."

His statement was an apparent dig at Battle, who has said he will accept recommendations from impartial groups and citizens for appointive officeholders.

"The answer is not to place power in the hands of so-called non-political committees and boards that aren't answerable, but to elect public officials you can trust, and keep a check on them."

He will be in Scottsboro today.

JOHN PATTERSON—has the "unanimous" backing of KILROI, an organization of Indians.

Creek Chief Calvin McGee of Atmore, said the Kinsmen of Indians for Liberty, Reform, Opportunity and Instruction in Civic Affairs has unanimously endorsed Patterson "after careful consideration of all candidates."

In announcing the endorsement, McGee called on an estimated 60,000 Indian descendants in Alabama "to stand by John Patterson in this race."

Patterson will be in Scottsboro today and DeKalb County tomorrow. He will attend the state Parent-Teacher Assn. meeting at Tuscaloosa Wednesday.

GEORGE WALLACE—Told a crowd of 2000 at Wetumpka he was fighting civil rights long before many knew what they were.

He said he would travel the nation after his nomination to bring industry to Alabama.

Wallace declared he would not spend his time tearing down his opponents in the race.

A. W. TODD—Cited his record as Commissioner of Agriculture and Industries as "a small example of the big things I will do when I am elected governor."

He said the State Industrial Planning and Development Board which he helped set up and of which he is a member has brought 227 new industries to 40 Alabama counties.

In the past "several months," he said while stumping Northwest Alabama, the board has brought in "more than $2,200,000 . . . and will be able to bring vast additional industry to the state with my aid if I am elected governor."

In the lieutenant governor's race, E. W. Skidmore has received the endorsement of the Tuscaloosa Bar Assn.

Skidmore has served as its president.

Tempers get short, Faulkner blasts Selma news editor

BY FRED TAYLOR, News staff writer

Jimmy Faulkner, who branded a Selma editor "a man without journalistic ethics," today brought his gubernatorial campaign back to populous Jefferson County where George Wallace and A. W. Todd already were pressing hard for votes.

Faulkner, addressing a Selma rally last night, tore into Ed Field, editor of the Wallace-supporting Selma Times-Journal, who had been critical of the Bay Minette publisher in recent editorials for allegedly making "deals" and being a foe of the Black Belt.

"I have made no promises to any group that I have not made publicly," declared Faulkner. "And anybody who says I have made any backstage deals, or who says I have criticized any section of Alabama, is a liar."

AS TEMPERS grew shorter in the churning gubernatorial race, George Hawkins said he was accepting an offer by Judge Wallace to debate law enforcement with other candidates. Said Hawkins:

"I'll accept this challenge to debate our respective programs on this issue of law enforcement, including, of course, the enforcement of laws relating to reapportionment and the best method of maintaining segregation."

Wallace, who declared at Scottsboro Monday that "no candidate has a monoply on law enforcement" and that he would debate this issue, had no comment on Hawkins' statement.

BUT WALLACE reiterated in a television speech over WABT last night that "my name is on the only bill that ever ran a single gangster or racketeer out of Alabama."

man, told the workers "Todd is on top all over North Alabama and in much of South Alabama."

Bob Gwin, Birmingham attorney who is supporting Todd, and Joe Sergeant, another Birmingham worker, said Todd will get a "good" Birmingham vote.

Jimmy Faulkner also met with his campaign workers here during the week-end, and he told them "organization" is going to win the election.

"In the final analysis organization is going to win this election and we've got a bigger organization than all the other candidates combined," he said.

Faulkner told his workers "there is less likelihood of a runoff than there would be with five."

He said, "If we have to run it off, I had just as soon run it off with any of them."

George Wallace, target of some sniping by other gubernatorial candidates last week, spent some of the week-end in North Alabama, speaking at Cullman and Athens.

Wallace let a chance to debate Candidate George Hawkins go by, when he didn't show up at their law school class reunion in Tuscaloosa Friday.

Wallace put out a debate challenge aimed at Patterson, Hawkins took it up, and Wallace let it drop.

Hawkins' backers say the Gadsden representative will debate the opposition anytime.

Hawkins will begin a three-day campaign drive in Jefferson County today.

He will be on television tonight, make 31 stump talks, and hold an open house at 5 p.m. Tuesday at his campaign headquarters here.

Other candidates Monday schedules:

JIMMY FAULKNER—Uriah, Frisco City, Monroeville, Camden, Hayneville, Greenville.

GEORGE WALLACE—Millerville, Ashland, Lineville, Heflin, Wedowee, Roanoke.

JOHN PATTERSON — Luverne, Brantley, Opp, Florala, Red Level, River Falls and Andalusia.

A. W. TODD—Ida, Pisgah, Dutton, Section, Rainsville, Fbffe, Geraldine, Crossville, Gaylesville, Ranburne.

C. C. (JACK) OWEN—Leeds, Pell City, Ashville, Oneonta.

Patterson Continues Hard Pace

George Wallace Fails To Debate; Faulkner 'Confident'

BY [illegible]

At two "open houses" in Birmingham, Gubernatorial Candidate John Patterson, slightly hoarse from campaigning in the rain, talked with voters yesterday in the homes of Mrs. Esther Rennick in North Birmingham and Mrs. L. H. Lehmann in Avondale.

Patterson's wife, Mary Joe, and some of his campaign workers were around and they talked with the guests also.

Men and women streamed in and out of the houses.

Patterson spent part of the week-end speaking at Troy, Brundidge, Dothan, and at a big barbecue rally at the Tanyard Community.

Pleased at the flow of persons talking with him at the open houses yesterday, he said he plans to hold several more open house meetings in Birmingham and other cities.

Another among the 14 gubernatorial candidates competing for votes in the May 6 primary, A. W. Todd met with a large group of his campaign workers here yesterday.

FOLSOM BLAST STIRS CONTROVERSY IN RACE

The familiar political issue of Folsomism crept further into the 1958 governor's race Saturday, shortly after Gov. Folsom issued his first statement on the campaign.

Folsom, breaking an often-repeated pledge to stay clear of the race, released a statement Friday denouncing a candidate who had promised to fire all of Folsom's appointees.

Rep. George Hawkins of Gadsden, a one-time Folsom leader himself, made such a promise early last week, vowing there would be no room in his administration for "political hacks."

Ironically, no group was more pleased by Folsom's counter-attack than Hawkins' boosters. They were hopeful it would swing some of the anti-Folsom voters into their corner.

The Folsom-Hawkins byplay brought comment Saturday from another candidate. Rep. Karl Harrison, speaking at a rally in Guntersville, credited his anti-Folsom stand of six weeks ago with "smoking out" the other candidates on the issue.

"Back in March when I said that there would not be a Folsom tree left in the forest of Folsom appointments if I were elected governor, I heard no such pledges from other candidates," Harrison said. "With this new turn of events I fully expect to see the governor's former campaign manager renouncing him any day now."

This was a well-placed dig at Judge George C. Wallace, who served as a Folsom campaign leader in 1954.

Harrison predicted the voters would not be fooled by "former Folsom leaders who denounce him in election years or by candidates who straddle the issue altogether."

Alabama Editors Are Saying

Faulkner For Governor

The LaFayette Sun

THE LAFAYETTE SUN is for Jimmy Faulkner for governor of Alabama. This can hardly be considered news since we supported Jimmy wholeheartedly four years ago. We said then that we thought he held those qualifications a man who serves in the top office in our state should possess.

We have not changed one bit in four years, and from what we have heard since that election, a lot of people have wished that they had seen it our way then.

Jimmy Faulkner, 38 years of age when he ran four years ago, is now 42. Those four years since the last campaign have mellowed him and he now is in the prime of life. Jimmy polled a big vote in the race in 1954 —more than the five good men trailing him all put together. He stated his record and his stand on the issue when he answered many thousands of questions on his "talkathon." Many people felt then that Jimmy was a little too young. I was his first statewide race, and the Folsom competition and the fact that a man usually has to make the race twice, made it a little too tough on the first try.

His is a positive program—one that offers progress for Alabama. He has made his stand on the vital issues such as segregation, schools and more industrial development, very plain. No one who is interested in political developments and keeps himself informed can but know how he stands. He has not taken one stand one day and a different one the next day. Four years ago he warned that Alabama's educational problems needed our close attention, and he stated firmly that under his administration we would maintain separate but equal facilities for both white and colored schools. He feels the same today.

Having known Jimmy Faulkner closely for 20 years, we feel qualified to strongly recommend his candidacy for governor. We have supported many men for public office after carefully studying their qualifications, but we have never supported anyone as enthusiastically as we do Jimmy. We know the type man he is because we have been fortunate enough to have been associated with him over the years. To know him well is to love and admire him. We are convinced that he has a keen desire to serve his state well. Many groups and individuals who are reported to hold great political savvy have endeavored to tie him up with promises that would not be in the interest of all the people of Alabama, but Jimmy Faulkner would risk defeat before he would sell his convictions and principles. Alabama needs such a man.

BEING a leading candidate Jimmy has borne the brunt of the rumors and the mud slinging that is always directed at a front runner, but as he stated in his speech here recently, he still has the same wife, two children and one brother. The efforts to defeat him will know no bounds. One wild rumor has it he has received $150,000 from the NAACP Another has him a heavy drinker Their very absurd nature makes them undeserving of refutation.

The voter who is looking for a man of proven ability, character and integrity with experience in state government to vote for in this race will be safe with Jimmy Faulkner.

Wallace For Governor

The Jackson County Farmer

WHILE there are many candidates of the highest character in the race for governor, there can be only one man capable of serving all the people of Alabama.

This newspaper believes there is only one candidate with the proven ability to preserve the Southern way of life if attacked by our federal government. This man has an established record that proves beyond doubt, his ability and intention to preserve segregation in Alabama. He not only stands for segregation but has a plan to cope with this explosive situation.

Our candidate has done more for the working man and the farmer than any other man in the race. Through the benefits of a bill bearing his name, many new industries have located in Alabama, providing hundreds of full time jobs for the working man and part time jobs for the farmer. This same bill has made it possible for the construction of many broiler processing plants that provide a ready market for the poultry producers of this area. There is no other candidate with a proven record that has been any more of a friend to the farmer than our man.

This candidate has the governmental know-how, having been a legislator and a circuit judge. He knows the needs of Alabama and knows how to solve the problems at hand.

WHILE other candidates are claiming to fight crime, our man introduced legislation giving law enforcement officers the "teeth" they needed to break up lottery and gambling in our metropolitan cities. Even under the threat of violence by racketeers, he stood on the floor of the House of Representatives and waged a crusade against crime. This is a matter of record, not promise.

This candidate has a plan for the old people of this state and a promise that can be fulfilled. The promise that he will do all within his power to help them. In fact, his candidacy has been endorsed by many groups and publications that represent the older people of Alabama. This is a fact, not heresay.

Our candidate states "I shall fight to raise our educational standing to at least the national average by providing adequate physical facilities and an abundance of well-trained, well-paid teachers and other school employes. I have always fought for education. This is my record."

Our candidate is the only man that has proposed to help the small businessman through establishment of a board that can provide assistance to his many problems.

Our man maintains an expanded road program even greater than the one we have today. He has always been for road legislation and this is a matter of record.

When you hire an employe you want to know what he has already accomplished. You want to know what he has already done. When you base your vote on fact you can vote for and elect only one man. This background, this sincerity, this ability, this record and this gentleman convinces us that he is the only candidate that can serve all of the people of Alabama.

It is therefore with a great deal of enthusiasm and honor that the Jackson County Farmer endorses Judge George C. Wallace, the next governor of Alabama.

Faulkner, Todd Open Final Push In Race For Governor

Candidates Jimmy Faulkner and A. W. Todd began their last three weeks' "big push" in their campaigns for governor Sunday.

Faulkner, former state senator from Baldwin County, met with campaign workers here and told them that organization will decide the May 6 gubernatorial election.

Spotlight on POLITICS

"In the final analysis, organization is what is going to win this election, and we've got a bigger and better organization than all the other candidates combined," he told the Montgomery group.

He appeared with workers in Birmingham earlier in the day and flew here for the meeting.

"We have had more people at either of our meetings today than we had at our statewide meeting four years ago," said Faulkner, who was runner-up to Gov. James E. Folsom in 1954.

"I do not want us to be overconfident, but we can win this election May 6," he said.

"There is less likelihood of a run-off with 14 men running than there would be with five men running," he remarked, recalling that Gordon Persons won without a run-off with 34 per cent of the vote when 15 men ran for governor eight years ago.

Faulkner will be making appearances in south and central Alabama Monday and Tuesday. He closes Monday with a rally in Greenville at 7:30. Tuesday he will be in Montgomery and Autauga counties. His schedule: Ramer School, 9:30 a.m.; Cloverland, 10:30 a.m.; stock yards, 11:30 a.m.; Normandale, 1:30 p.m.; Eastbrook, 3:15 p.m.; Chisholm, 4:30 p.m.; West End, 5:30 p.m.; and Prattville, 7:30 p.m.

At the Todd Campaign Meeting in Birmingham Ed F. Maudlin of Town Creek said that, "Todd is on top all over north Alabama and in much of south Alabama."

"With 200 more workers such as you here today," said Todd, "I guarantee you there wouldn't even be a runoff after the May 6 primary."

C. C. (Jack) Owen will bring his gubernatorial campaign to south Alabama this week.

Tuesday he is to visit the Capitol and make a Montgomery TV appearance.

Wednesday at 3 p.m. he will address a rally in Alexander City. Subsequent stops are planned in Greenville, Camden and Monroeville and other south Alabama points.

In a speech prepared for delivery Monday, State Sen. Richmond Flowers promises north Alabama voters "their fair share of the legislative melon" if he is elected attorney general.

The Dothan attorney has said he will seek court action to prevent lawmakers from drawing any salaries or expenses until a plan for legislative reapportionment is passed.

"How long . . . are the people of north Alabama and other heavily populated areas going to allow the Legislature to dance and dance while they pay the fiddler?" Flowers' speech asks.

He adds, "We don't want anything special. We don't want ice cream on our pie. We just want what's on the menu. That's what we pay for and that's what we're going to get."

Flowers is one of three candidates in the race for the Democratic nomination for attorney general. He is opposed by Maj. Donald Gallion of Montgomery and State Rep. C. W. McKay Jr. of Talladega County.

FOLSOM'S CABINET DEFENSE

INJECTS NEW CAMPAIGN NOTE

Gov. James E. Folsom edged nearer participation in the current gubernatorial campaign Friday, coming to the defense of his cabinet and administration.

Noting that one of the candidates for governor, George C. Hawkins of Gadsden, had promised to remove all the incumbent cabinet members, Folsom said he considered that "anyone against my people is not against me but against my program."

"As for politics, I will support with all my ability people who are for things and not against things," Folsom added.

The governor said "every voter in Alabama" knows his stand on reapportionment, old age pensions, good roads, good schools and industrial development and "those opposing these things now are naturally opposing all those people who are for these constructive measures."

Earlier in the week Hawkins said in a stump speech that when he was elected governor he would "bring new faces into Montgomery" adding there would be "no room for political hacks."

Folsom apparently interpreted Hawkins' statement as an attack on his cabinet.

Patterson 'Fed Up' With 'Corrupt' Folsom Set-Up

Atty. Gen. John Patterson said Thursday he was "fed up" with what he called the "corrupt" Folsom administration.

"And," he told an audience at Salem in Lee County, "I know you're fed up too."

"In the attorney general's office," he charged, "We have been battling a corrupt administration. You ought to hear some of the politicians on Capitol Hill moan and groan and squall when we go in and try to do something about it."

The governor could not be reached for comment.

Meanwhile, a weekly newspaper at Livingston, our Southern Home announced it is endorsing Patterson.

The weekly said that "just about every selfish group, large and small" is opposing the attorney general's bid for the governorship. Patterson is also opposed the paper continued, by "so - called professional politicians." The endorsement added "They know only too well they cannot own him."

The paper also said "organized racketeers are spending the money" to defeat Patterson. The same charge has been made in several campaign speeches by the attorney general.

Patterson Swings Campaign To Steps Of State Capitol

Atty. Gen. John Patterson was to speak from the steps of the state capitol here Saturday night as he pressed his campaign into the deadline stretch.

Appearing at Gadsden earlier in the day, Patterson said he would continue to operate the attorney general's office despite his campaign for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination in the May 6 primary.

The attorney general said he would continue to investigate the activities of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which he said, "has gone underground in Alabama."

Patterson's efforts have outlawed the NAACP in the state.

A motorcade was organized for the candidate even before he arrived in Montgomery after his speech in the northern section of the state.

Patterson was to speak from the capitol steps about 7:30 p.m.

The capital city engagement came in the midst of rumors that Patterson was about to reveal information deemed highly important "to the voter" in the current campaign for governor.

There was no indication from Patterson headquarters, however, that the attorney general would sidestep the usual issues of school improvement, strong segregation laws, a better farm economy, and more money for the aged.

Pledges segregation—

Steelworkers give Faulkner ovation

Gubernatorial Candidate Jimmy Faulkner, who bore down hard for segregation and stressed his friendship for labor, was given a standing ovation by several hundred members of Local No. 1489, United Steelworkers last night at Ensley.

A representative group of Negroes was among those who heard Faulkner pledge that if he is elected governor segregation will be maintained in the schools and other institutions in Alabama.

"I HAVE ALWAYS been your friend," Faulkner told the labor group. "I will be your friend tomorrow and the next day. I voted against the right-to-work law and I voted against the Solomon Act. I thought they were anti-labor and I still think so."

Faulkner reiterated that he is the only candidate in the governor's race who employs union labor. He was introduced by John Tucker, Birmingham attorney. The gospel-singing Blackwoods Brothers, who are campaigning with Faulkner, performed briefly.

Several other candidates for various offices from Jefferson County who have been endorsed by the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education also spoke.

Among them were Olin Brooks, Peter J. Darabaris, Jerry Walter Gwin, John I. McWhorter and Miss Nina Miglionico, candidates for Jefferson House seats; Mrs. David Roberts III, candidate for State Democratic Executive Committee; John H. Hagood, running for sheriff, and John A. Jenkins, aspirant for state senator. All thanked the steelworkers for labor's endorsement.

BEN F. GAGE, staff representative of the steelworkers and president of Jefferson County's COPE, presided.

Jenkins told them, "The working man wants what is right and when I am in the State Senate you are going to get that, as is every other citizen."

Mrs. Roberts declared, "The Democratic Party is the best for Alabama and for the South. Don't be fooled by those who are against you."

Miss Miglionico said, "I know the problems of Jefferson County and can serve you well. Alabama is the only state that does not have a woman in the legislature."

McWHORTER SAID, "We are a family fighting for unionism. I will vote for you. There are numerous proposals that will in no way be a burden to management, but will be beneficial to the working man."

Gwin said, "We've never had a legislative delegation favorable to labor. If I am elected, I will not vote for a single tax unless we get reapportionment."

Darabaris said, "I am for labor and the working man. I will either sponsor or support repeal of the right-to-work law."

Brooks said, "This is my second time to run for the Legislature and I intend to come out on top. I am against the right-to-work law and if you want me to, I'll introduce a bill to repeal it."

Hagood said, "I am a member of organized labor. I know labor wants only good government and that's what I'll give you. The time has come for labor to help select the sheriff in Jefferson County."

Wallace Fans To Hear Candidate Talk At Reeltown

Macon County supporters of Judge George C. Wallace are planning another out-of-town trip Saturday to hear their candidate when he speaks at Reeltown. Judge Wallace, campaigning in East Central Alabama, will speak at Reeltown at 1 p. m. Saturday.

Earlier this week Judge Wallace has been in Northwest Alabama, where newspaper stories reported him drawing crowds of 1,000 and upwards even in smaller communities.

Judge Wallace has been handicapped this week by that bugaboo of public speakers—laryngitis. In some of his appearances he has been forced to curtail his remarks.

Minnie Pearl, Grand Ole Opry star who is traveling with Wallace doubled in some appearances as a political speaker for Wallace after her entertainment period.

The Barbour County candidate, rated as one of the top-runners in the race for governor, will return to Macon County later in the campaign for a speaking engagement in Tuskegee. Date for this appearance will be announced later.

In addition to speaking at Reeltown, Judge Wallace will visit Tallassee at 2:30 Saturday and will wind up the day at Wetumpka at 7:30 p. m.

Negroes Seek Florence City Board Posts

FLORENCE (AP) — Negro voters Monday formally asked City Council for representation on the Board of Health, Recreation and Parks Commission and other city agencies.

They asked further for amendment of the city charter to allow election by districts.

The requests were included in a list of grievances presented by the Florence members of the Palmetto State Voters Assn. William Bennett, Negro attorney, represented the group at the council meeting.

The attorney read a three-page resolution that noted Negro residents paid city and county taxes yet had received little consideration for street and sidewalk paving and recreational facilities.

One of the major items the Negroes asked was a recreation center with playgrounds, tennis courts and a swimming pool. Florence as present has only a public pool for whites.

Bennett said after the session that the group will go before the county delegation with another list of requests and grievances.

Candidates Jab News, segregation issue

BY FRED TAYLOR, News staff writer

ALEXANDER CITY, Ala., April 17—Gubernatorial candidates jabbed at each other and took more pokes at the newspapers at a barbecue rally here—one of the biggest of the campaign—which attracted nine of other officeseekers.

Laurie Battle joined John Crommelin in assailing the press with Crommelin calling the other gubernatorial aspirants "pink tea segregationists."

All nine bore down hard for maintaining segregation.

THESE TWO, along with Jack Owen, John Patterson, George Wallace, Karl Harrison, the Rev. Billy Walker, Shearen Elebash and Ralph Price, addressed a turnout estimated at 8500 persons yesterday afternoon at the Aexander City Airport. Crowd estimates were made by State Sen. Broughton Lamberth and Probate Judge Jack Coley. The rally was sponsored by the Alexander City Chamber of Commerce.

While the nine gubernatorial hopefuls spoke here, A. W. Todd, Jimmy Faulkner, George Hawkins and the other candidates pushed vote drives elsewhere.

TODD, ADDRESSING a crowd of 3000 at Hamilton last night, moved a little closer to divulging a plan — soon to be announced—for curbing "constantly increasing" utility rates. The crowd estimate was made by Police Officer Vado Kivette of Hamilton.

Todd, who campaigned through Northwest Alabama yesterday, revealed his plan would require a constitutional amendment, which he said "I can guarantee will pass both the Legislature and the people, because it will prevent the big utilities, particularly telephone, gas and power companies, from constantly increasing rates."

FAULKNER, WHOSE campaign got another boost from the endorsement of Local No. 12149, United Mine Workers, District 50, consisting of workers at Newport Industries in his home town of Bay Minette, stressed his plan to aid education at Union Springs last night.

"Our teachers, college professors and educational employes are very much underpaid," said Faulkner, in pointing out that "every year we are losing some of our finest teachers to other states."

"To retain the fine corps of teachers we now have, and to attract more young men and women to the teaching profession, we must afford our teachers a fair return for their effort," he stressed. "This is one of the first things I intend to do when I am governor."

OWEN, PRESIDENT of the Public Service Commission, predicted his election as governor, telling the Alexander City rally crowd that the right-to-work law would be the turning point of the campaign.

Owen, who declared "I am the only candidate for governor openly working for preservation of the right-to-work law," warned:

"If the right-to-work law is repealed, it would stop the flow of new industry and business into Alabama. This would hurt everybody, but the first man it would hurt would be that man who's looking for a job."

JUDGE WALLACE, who placed Georgia Sen. Dick Russell in nomination for president in 1948 at the Democratic National Convention at Philadelphia, cited the fact he had opposed "civil rights" measures in that convention.

And Wallace pointed to his fight against "anti-South measures" at the 1956 Democratic National Convention at Chicago when he served on the platform committee. He also pointed to his efforts in behalf of the textile industry.

The Clayton judge declared that the "Wallace anti-gambling bill, which was passed by the 1951 Legislature, is the only one sponsored by any candidate for governor that has driven any racketeers out of Alabama." He recalled how "numbers" and "bug" operators from Birmingham, Phenix City and other cities had converged on Montgomery and threatened him with violence for sponsoring this measure.

BATTLE, WHO DECLARED "I am going to revolutionize Alabama politics," carried his moral crusade" from Alexander City to Phenix City last night, where he repeated his prediction that he would "lead the ticket on May 6."

"There's nothing wrong with Alabama that a moral crusade and a political revolution won't cure," said Battle.

Battle, in rapping the press, said, "Some political writers over the state, who are sitting in their ivory towers, are going to have red faces the day after election. I haven't seen any of them attending political meetings over the state."

A reporter for The Montgomery Advertiser sat beside this reporter a few feet away from Battle as he spoke.

PATTERSON DESCRIBED the campaign as "a serious governor's race." He criticized the present administration and said the state is "under attack by forces outside Alabama."

Patterson, who spoke at Union Hill School near LaFayette last night, jabbed at his opponents, saying he was "rather surprised that we haven't heard more about the NAACP from the other candidates in this race. I would like to hear their opinions on this issue."

Patterson, with members of his staff, testified before the Macon County Grand Jury yesterday in connection with the Tuskegee boycott by Negroes. The attorney general obtained an injunction against Negroes boycotting Tuskegee stores and has charged they are violating the court order.

CROMMELIN, in lashing out at The Birmingham News and other newspapers, again whammed his opponents and referred to their supporters carrying banners in the crowd at Alexander City as "all you hired-helpers and hired yelpers." He also hit again at what he called "the Communist-Jewish conspiracy to mongrelize the South."

Crommelin called Patterson "Fire-and-fall-back Patterson, who's always going to do something and never does. He was going to 'get' at the Gentle loan people, and now they're about to get him."

HARRISON, who had four campaign vehicles, including one truck loaded with ponies, which were later hitched to a wagon, said:

"I don't have a band and I don't have a plane. Somebody has to pay the price for such entertainment and it usually winds up being the man in the streets."

Patterson and Owen had hillbilly bands and Wallace had Minnie Pearl on hand to help entertain the crowd.

The Rev. Walker said he is running for governor on a "Christian platform," adding "I can get 90 per cent of the votes wherever I've been all over North Alabama. I'm going to South Alabama next."

Price told the crowd that "honest government is worth the price, and the right price is Shorty Price."

HAWKINS, campaigning in Mobile and Baldwin Counties, said that if he is elected governor he would remove some of the present department heads and appoint "qualified men and women who are loyal to a common sense policy for a better Alabama."

IN ANOTHER development, State Sen. E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa, who filibustered against the right-to-work law when it was passed in 1953, renewed his attack on it at Mobile. He asserted that "union busting" was the aim of principle embodied in the law.

Skidmore spoke to the annual convention of the Southern Assn. of Pulp and Paper Industry Unions at Mobile.

JUDGE WALLACE pushed his campaign to the coastal area, speaking today in Baldwin County while Hawkins continued to speak in Mobile and Baldwin.

BOTH BATTLE and Patterson were campaigning in Eastern Alabama, with Battle speaking today at Opelika, LaFayette and Lanett and Patterson at Auburn Opelika and other Lee County communities.

FAULKNER, campaigning with the gospel-singing Statesmen Quartet, who busied themselves during an off campaign day yesterday putting bumper stickers on cars, pushed his vote drive today to Rockford, Wadley, Roanoke, Wedowee, Heflin and Oxford.

OWEN, CAMPAIGNING with Shorty Sullivan and his Confederate Colonels, spoke today at Greenville, Camden, Monroeville, Frisco City and Jackson.

TODD, WITH gospel-singing Wally Fowler and the Sons of Song, swung down to the Wiregrass today, speaking at Enterprise, New Brocton, Pinckard, Midland City, Dothan, Headland, Ashford and Abbeville.

Engelhardt's Blast Stir[illegible]

A sudden outburst on the issues of segregation and labor legislation, Monday brought new interest into the quiet campaign for lieutenant governor.

Sen. Sam Engelhardt of Macon initiated the verbal exchange when he issued a statement questioning the segregation stands of two of his opponents—Sens. Albert Boutwell of Birmingham and E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa.

Engelhardt then turned to the labor issue, charging that Boutwell's position on the right-to-work law has changed "under political pressure."

The segregation measure Engelhardt referred to was an amendment to the education appropriation bill which specified that in the event a school was integrated then state funds would be cut off.

Both Boutwell and Skidmore voted against the amendment, which was tabled by the Senate.

Boutwell, in reply to Engelhardt's charge, said the Senate "acted very wisely" in tabling the amendment, because it was "unconstitutional and would have been useless."

He also said the amendment, as written, could have resulted in state funds being taken from all state schools, integrated or segregated.

Skidmore said he would not take issue with Englehardt without first referring to the Senate Journal, adding that he "didn't remember" how he voted on that amendment.

On the right-to-work question, Engelhardt said Boutwell "hid behind a pair" when the measure came up for a final vote and announced that if he had voted he would have opposed the measure.

"Under pressure of a political campaign Boutwell has changed his position and now says he is for the law," Engelhardt added.

Boutwell said Monday that at the time of the vote "labor conditions were stable and I was not convinced that the right-to-work bill was necessary.

Since its passage it has worked very successfully not only for the benefit of labor but for management," Boutwell added.

therefore see no reason for repeal. It has proven to be good law and I do not favor repealing it."

Battle Blasts Advertiser's Endorsement Of Wallace

By BOB INGRAM

Gubernatorial candidate Laurie C. Battle lashed out at The Montgomery Advertiser at a rally here Tuesday night, describing the paper's endorsement of George C. Wallace as "one of the most amazing things I've ever seen."

"For 12 years this newspaper has been fighting Folsom, but now it has taken another bold step by endorsing a Folsom campaign leader for governor," Battle declared.

"They say politics make strange bedfellows, but I never thought it would get this strange," he continued. "I can remember when this paper couldn't come out unless it had something in it criticizing Folsom, and now they endorse his first lieutenant for governor."

Battle's attack on The Advertiser brought a vigorous response from the crowd of about 150 persons seated in City Auditorium.

The attendance at the rally was not helped by the opening of the baseball season at Paterson Field.

The candidate took another poke at the same newspaper later in his speech when he recalled that an Advertiser political reporter had written that Battle only had "die-hard segregationists" supporting him.

"I agree with that entirely, and I might add that every person in Alabama is a die-hard segregationist," Battle said.

In addition to his attack on the press, Battle also fired several shots at the other candidates in the field.

Noting the empty seats in the auditorium, Battle declared he preferred the audience he had "to 600 or 700 people who came out to hear a band."

Battle has no entertainers stumping the state with him.

The former congressman promised a "political revolution" if he takes office as governor, and also declared that "the people of Alabama will help me in determining who my cabinet members will be.

VOICES CONFIDENCE

"I will not appoint one single cabinet member for purely political reasons," he said.

Battle also voiced confidence that he would be elected governor, and without a run-off.

"Irrespective of the reports you might read in the press, I know in my heart and mind that we are at the top of the heap," he said.

Earlier, several other speakers had mentioned the "strong silent vote" which will be cast in Battle's behalf.

Battle had a responsive audience which interrupted him with applause 16 times during his 37-minute address.

OTHER SPEAKERS

The candidate was introduced by State Rep. Sam C. Nettles Jr., of Wilcox County, who described Battle as "standing head and shoulders above all others" in the race for governor.

Also speaking were Fred Goad, Birmingham automobile dealer; Mrs. R. C. Gilmore, Birmingham housewife, and Henry Hudson, a Montgomery engineer. Seated on the stage were other Battle boosters including Hugh Ashurst, Montgomery druggist, and Warren Marshall, local lumberman.

Committeeman Demands

Negro Candidate Quiz

MONTGOMERY (AP)— A Negro who has filed to run in the May 6th Democratic primary should be questioned to see if he supports principles of the party in Alabama, says a member of the state Democratic Executive committee.

Atty. Frank J. Mizell Jr. of Montgomery sent a letter yesterday to Circuit Judge Roy Mayhall, chairman of the state committee, in which he criticized the judge for allowing a Negro candidate to qualify.

Explaining that he was aware of rulings by the U. S. Supreme Court which forbid barring a candidate because of his color, Mizell added:

"There is nothing to preclude the Democratic Party of Alabama from requiring a would-be candidate to subscribe to and uphold the philosophy and declared principles of our Democratic Party in Alabama."

Mizell's letter was prompted by the announcement of Perry L. Thompson, a Negro announcer for a Bessemer radio station, who filed his qualifying papers to seek nomination as litutenant governor with Mayhall last Friday.

Mayhall said Thompson, 48, a former prize fighter and owner of a public relations firm, submitted the $100 qualifying fee with the declaration of candidacy.

The Montgomery attorney suggested that the state party leader quiz Thompson as to his position on these principles of the Alabama Democratic Party:

"The Democratic Party of Alabama believes in the continuation and enforcement of all laws relating to racial segregation.

"The Democratic Party of Alabama believes that continued unremitting and total opposition should be made by all office holders elected by the Democratic voters of Alabama to defeat any and every effort to enact legislation contrary to the beliefs herein above states'

Mizell said Thompson should be asked whether he "will uphold and work for the principles of the party."

Thompson's answer would be important he said to determine whether he should be certified as a candidate in the primary.

Mizell paid tribute to Gessner T. McCorvey of Mobile, a former state committee chairman, for action he took several years ago under similar circumstances.

McCorvey returned papers and qualifying fee to a Negro who attempted to file qualification papers, he said.

Ala. Candidate Vows Continued Segregation

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (ANP) — One among the number of hopefuls for the state's gubernatorial post, Jack Owens told a television audience last week that "when" he is elected governor, "I will take whatever steps are necessary to assure the continued separation of the races."

Owens was making his first bid for support in the Montgomery area. He told his viewing audiences:

"If necessary, I will dismiss the National Guard and then deputize them, along with every other white man in Alabama, as members of the highway patrol."

This last remark bespecks of a strategem which Owens says he will use if any attempt is made by the federal government to back up integration orders as was done in Little Rock.

Would dismiss guard—

Owen takes firm stand on segregation issue

BY FRED TAYLOR, News Staff Writer

A pattern to make certain that segregation is maintained in Alabama was outlined by Gubernatorial Candidate Jack Owen, who declared he would "deputize every white man in Alabama as a highway patrolman" to prevent integration of the races.

Owen said he would dismiss the National Guard to prevent President Eisenhower from federalizing it to take over control in the state.

Owen, president of the Public Service Commission, also projected a plan "to bring a flood of new industry to Alabama," which he said "would be the salvation of our state."

He said that, as governor, he would appoint "a full-time industrial agent, who would work directly under supervision of the governor, in each of Alabama's 67 counties."

Owen, commenting further on his plan to deputize all white men of Alabama as highway patrol to preserve segregation, said, "I feel certain they would be willing to serve without pay to do this."

OWEN, MAKING his second campaign for the govenorship, outlined his proposals on Sunday's WABT - WAPI "Alabama Press Conference," a public information program jointly sponsored by The Birmingham News.

And it became increasingly apparent that Owen, who pointed out that he has "a record on the segregation issue and am not just making promises," was emerging as very much a contender in the governor's race.

Owen also voiced the belief that Alabama's Supreme Court would uphold the Public Service Commission's action in turning down telephone rate hikes, which have totaled more than $22 million in the last two years.

THIS WOULD assure a refund averaging $35 for each telephone subscriber in the state. A Montgomery Circuit Court decision overruled the PSC refusal to grant the phone rate increase, and this was appealed by the commission to the high court.

Owen, in emphasizing tha segregation is the main issue in the governor's race, declared he not only would deputize every white man in Alabama as a highway patrolman" but "I would take every other step necessary to maintain segregation for the welfare of whites and Negroes."

In reiterating his stand for keeping the right-to-work law, Owen pointed out that "the right-to-work law doesn't say you have to belong to a union." He added that he does not believe the Legislature will repeal it.

"I DON'T BELIEVE a man should be forced to belong to a union to get a job any more than I believe he should be required to join a church or a civic club."

Owen said he is opposed to a labor "closed shop," citing the fact that the Taft-Hartley Law prohibits a "closed shop."

He added that "we should keep our good labor-management relations in Alabama to help insure that we will bring in more new industries and develop our state economically."

Owen said "I am a tool of no one," in declaring that "I have stood by labor, particularly the railroad man."

OWEN SAID that, if elected governor and the Legislature passed a bill abolishing Macon County, "I'd sign it in a minute." An amendment to the state constitution authorizing the Legislature to carve up or abolish Macon, where Negroes outnumber white persons nearly seven to one, was adopted overwhelmingly by the voters last Dec. 17.

Concerning financial backing in his campaign for governor, Owen said he would "not spend anything like $150,000 to $300,000" in making the race. He said no truck lines, utilities or other companies or groups are giving him financial support.

"IT'S AGAINST the law for anyone under my supervision (as public service commissioner) to contribute financially to my campaign," he added.

He said that various individuals, including some members of organized labor, were contributing to his campaign.

Owen said he is a "loyal Democrat," signed the loyalty oath willingly and believes in it.

He said he had won his fight to keep signs up designating waiting rooms for white persons and Negroes in bus and railroad stations and "I intend to keep those signs up."

OWEN SAID HE has "a great percentage" of followers of former Gov. Gordon Persons supporting him for governor and that he hoped Persons himself would support him. But he pointed out that Persons is running for probate judge of Montgomery County and apparently was taking no part in the governor's race.

He added that so far as he could determine, Gov. James E. Folsom was keeping hands off the governor's race.

Owen was questioned by Rex Thomas, Associated Press bureau chief at Montgomery, and this reporter. Charlie Davis, WABT-WAPI news editor, was moderator.

Patterson next to face panel

Atty. Gen. John Patterson, candidate for governor, will be a special guest on "Alabama Press Conference" next Sunday. Other candidates for governor will appear on this public information program prior to May 6 Democratic primary election.

11 Governor Candidates To Attend Geneva Rally

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Sun 4-6-58

One of the largest political rallies of the 1958 Democratic Party campaign is scheduled for Geneva Thursday afternoon and night with at least 11 of the 14 candidates for governor expected to be on hand.

The event will be staged at Geneva Stadium starting at 2 p.m. at which time candidates for lesser state offices and local offices will have an opportunity to speak.

From 5 until 7 p.m. a recess will be taken in the speech-making for a barbecue, and at 7 p.m. the candidates for governor will speak.

A. R. Sylvester, publicity chairman for the rally being sponsored by the Geneva American Legion Post No. 59, reported Saturday that Rep. Karl Harrison of Columbiana became the 11th gubernatorial candidate to accept an invitation to be present.

Earlier, invitations had been accepted by Laurie Battle, John Crommelin, W. E. Dodd, Shearen Hilebash, Winston Gullatte, Jack Owen, John Patterson, A. W. Todd, Billy Walker and George Wallace.

The only candidates for governor who have not yet accepted invitations to attend are Jimmy Faulkner, George Hawkins and Shorty Price.

Most of the candidates who have entertainers traveling with them have indicated they will bring these groups along to provide music for the occasion.

The Geneva Legion post sponsored a similar rally in 1954 and a crowd of more than 3,000 attended. Legion officials are expecting twice that number at Thursday's rally.

The rally is being co-sponsored this year by the senior class of Geneva High School. Director of the event is Legion Commander Hugh Herring Jr.

2,000 Rebel Yells Greet Wallace Policy Declaration

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Sun 4-6-58

WETUMPKA — Judge George C. Wallace, interrupted by rebel yells and frequent applause, told an enthusiastic crowd here Saturday night he would travel the nation after his nomination to bring industry to Alabama.

Speaking before a crowd of 2,000 to 2,500 people inside and outside the courthouse, Wallace said he would spend at least three months visiting other states in the nation in search of new industry.

A crowd estimated by Sheriff Lester Holley at 1,200 persons, packed the second floor courtroom here after they were driven inside by rain at 7:30 p.m. An equal number stood outside.

Declaring that he felt he was leading the field of 14 gubernatorial candidates, Wallace said he would devote no time to tearing down his various opponents. He said he would spend his energy on the promotion of a sound program of advancement for the state.

"I think a man should be elected on his record," he said.

Wallace followed his usual procedure of citing his past performance as a legislator, judge, and representative of the Alabama Democratic Party at various national functions.

"I was fighting against civil-rights 10 years ago before many knew what civil rights were," he said.

"If you kept up with events, you know that I led your fight against civil rights in the 1956 national convention," he said.

Turning to the question of education, the Clayton Circuit Court juge said he would preserve segregated schools and close them under the threat of integration by federal order.

"There is a great hue and cry in other parts of the nation that people of the South have not provided the type of education so necessary in this age of scientific need," he said.

"The worst thing that could happen is for the crowd in Washington to have anything to do with the education of a single student in Elmore County," he said.

He said about 35,000 persons now are being employed in new industries in the state, "brought here under provisions of the Wallace Act."

The Wallace Industrial Act provides for bonded support from a community in which a new industry wishes to locate. The money derived fro mbond sales is repaid over a period of years through rent from the incoming firm.

Sun 4-6-58

The judge received a hand when he declared, "No one in this state has a monoply on the fight against crime and racketeering."

ANTI-GAMBLING ACT

He cited his sponsorship of the Wallace Anti - Gambling Act passed by the legislature in 1951, as proof of what he called his longstanding fight against crime.

Wallace said he either had been, "or will be," endorsed by nearly every weekly newspaper in north Alabama. The endorsement would come as a result of the many poultry processing plants erected under provisions of the Wallace Industrial Act, he said.

"No candidate in this race can say his name is on a single bill or proceeding that brings such industry in Alabama," he declared.

In explaining his threat to "jail any FBI agent who asked for a jury box in my district," Wallace said he felt the "executive branch of the federal government cannot swallow up the judicial branch.

He said he would repeat his statement of several months ago and if the United States Attorney General should send investigating agents into his circuit for that purpose, "We'll have them singing that song so familiar to all you people in Wetumpka—'I'm In The Jailhouse Now'," he said.

On the race question, Wallace said he had always treated everyone fairly in his courts and would continue to do so as governor, regardless of their race or color."

WANTS NO MEDDLING

He said he wanted no meddling in the school integration issue, "because we'll decide ourselves what is best—keep peace, keep a segregated school system, and move forward to get the things Alabama needs."

The Wallace rally originally was planned as an outside event. Musicians with their public address systems and cameramen were set up for operation on the steps of the courthouse here when rain started to fall.

It took about 10 minutes for the crowd to move through the courthouse lobby and station themselves in the second floor courtroom.

Welcoming the throng as it moved up the steps was Grand Ole Opry star Minnie Pearl. She also introduced the judge for his speech.

Wallace will spend Easter with his family in Clayton.

RALLY ON CAPITOL STEPS

Patterson Swings Governor Campaign Into Montgomery

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Sat 4-19-58

Atty. Gen. John Patterson brings his campaign for governor into Montgomery for the first time Saturday with a rally scheduled for the Capitol steps.

The rally will begin at 7:30 p.m. with entertainment to be provided by Rebe Gosdin and his Sunny Valley Boys.

Spotlight on POLITICS

Earlier in the week a spokesman for the Patterson forces announced that the attorney general would identify by name the candidates in the race who are receiving financial assisatance from organized racketeers" but this announcement was later rescinded as a misunderstanding.

This will be but the second rally held in Montgomery during the current campaign by a gubernatorial candidate. Earlier, Judge George Wallace staged a rally at City Auditorium.

Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd dipped into Baldwin County Friday, the home county of Jimmy Faulkner, where he pledged to work for the development of the Gulf Coast and Mobile Bay areas.

Todd promised a free route in and out of Mobile, hitting on a hot Baldwin County issue. A toll fee is charged for the use of Bankhead Tunnel, although the tunnel has already been paid for. The proceeds of the fee now go for public improvements in Mobile.

Montgomery Ala

While Todd was in Faulkner territory, Faulkner was even bolder—he stumped in the hometowns of three opponents. He spoke in Pel City, Columbiana nd Centreville during a busy 11-stop day.

Pell City is the hometown of the Rev. Billy Walker, Karl and Jack Owen calls Centreville home.

Patterson, before coming to Montgomery, stumped Etowah County Friday; George Wallace and Jack Owen joined Todd in the Mobile-Baldwin area, and Karl Harrison was in Montgomery where he addressed a meting of the Alabama Medical Assn.

Faulkner Brings Campaign Into County Tomorrow

Jimmy Faulkner brings his stumping campaign for governor into Montgomery County Tuesday with seven appearances scheduled during the day.

Accompanied by the Statesmen Quartet, Faulkner will start his whirlwind tour at Phillips Super Market in Ramer at 9:30 a.m. At 11 a.m. he will be at Cloverland Shopping Center and at 11:45 a.m. will speak at the Capital Stockyards.

FAULKNER

During the afternoon Faulkner will be at Normandale Shopping Ctr. at 2 p.m., Eastbrook at 3:15 p.m., Chisholm at 4:30 p.m. and West End at 5:30 p.m.

Faulkner will conclude his busy day in Prattville Tuesday night with a rally at the courthouse at 7:30 p.m.

This will be Faulkner's first stump tour of the county during the 1958 campaign for governor.

Atty. Gen. John Patterson announced Monday he too would move into Montgomery this week.

Patterson will deliver a major campaign speech from the steps of the Capitol Saturday at 7:30 p.m. He said Monday he would "clearly and unequivocably" identify in his Montgomery speech the "corrupt, criminal and organized groups" who are opposing his candidacy and the candidates receiving the money and support of such groups.

Speaking in Luverne Monday, Patterson enlivened the governor's race with a charge that gangsters have been making threatening telephone calls to his campaign workers.

Patterson said such calls included some made to his campaign headquarters.

Recalling that his father, the late Albert L. Patterson, was elected attorney general in 1954 on a promise to clean up the state, Patterson said Monday "I am warning these people again to get out of this state at once."

"Otherwise, they will be inmates in our state prisons for a long time," Patterson warned.

Patterson will be stumping in south Alabama Tuesday, with appearances scheduled in Atmore, Flomaton, Evergreen, McKenzie, Georgiana and Greenville.

Another leading candidate for governor, Judge George C. Wallace, moves into this area Tuesday. Wallace, after weeks of stumping in north Alabama, will tour the Chattahoochee Valley Tuesday with stump speeches set at Lanett, Langdale, Fairfax, LaFayette, Opelika and Auburn.

Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd will be in the Tennessee Valley area Tuesday, stumping throughout Madison County.

Rep. George C. Hawkins of Gadsden will continue his campaign in the Birmingham area Tuesday. He will remain in that vicinity until Thursday when he flies to Mobile for a day of stumping in the Port City.

Laurie Battle will deliver a campaign address at a rally in Speake community in west Alabama. Battle will appear at a rally in Alexander City Wednesday afternoon, and another rally is scheduled in his behalf Wednesday night in Phenix City.

Thursday he will stump in Opelika, Lanett and LaFayette, and Saturday a rally is scheduled in his behalf at DeBardeleben Park in Bessemer.

CANDIDATES STEP UP DRIVE GOING INTO HOME STRETCH

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd has promised to reveal a plan next week aimed at curbing what he called "the constant increases" in public utility rates in Alabama.

The gubernatorial candidate told North Alabama audiences Tuesday many of the rates would be reduced under his program.

The plan will apply particularly to telephone, gas and power rates, he continued.

Laurie Battle predicted victory, saying "political prognosticators over the state who have been sitting in their ivory towers . . . are going to have red faces the day after the election."

State Rep. George Hawkins promised Tuesday that if elected governor he will push for a substitute for Alabama's right-to-work law.

As a proposed substitute for the present legislation, Hawkins outlined a five- point "industrial peace act" which he said would:

"1. Clearly define and set out unfair labor practices.

"2. Create an Alabama labor relations board with powers to hear and determine charges of unfair labor practices filed against labor organizations or employers. This board would have authority to prohibit unfair labor practices and require parties to comply with the law.

"3. This board would have the duty to attempt to voluntary adjustment of labor disputes.

"4. The board would be authorized to conduct elections among employes to let them determine by secret ballot whether or not any labor organization should represent them.

"5. Board rulings could be appealed by parties to Alabama state courts."

Edward J. Azar of Montgomery a spokesman for John Patterson, said Tuesday the attorney general will "be more specific about his opposition" in a speech at Montgomery Saturday night.

However, Azar added, Patterson "doesn't intend to call any candidate by name" in connection with his charges that he is being opposed by what he called corrupt and criminal groups.

Jimmy Faulkner campaigned in the Montgomery area Tuesday.

The Bay Minette publisher criticized what he called "discriminatory freight rates" on shipping cattle out of the state. If elected, he promised to give Alabama cattlemen his full support.

Circuit Judge George Wallace promised efforts to protect the textile industry during speeches at Opelika and Fairfax Tuesday.

Campaigning in East Alabama and the Chattahoochee River Valley, Wallace pledged at Auburn to work to regain full accreditation for the School of Engineering at Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

Judge Jones' Defeat Sought By NAACP, Attorney Charges

A Montgomery attorney Friday night charged in a television broadcast that the NAACP had rather defeat Judge Walter B. Jones for reelection to circuit judge than any other dozen public officials in the entire South.

The charge was made by John Harris, partner in the law firm of Hill, Hill, Whiting, Harris and Pilcher, speaking in behalf of Judge Jones' candidacy.

Harris said that the NAACP "with unlimited finances" "has a sworn "vengenance against Jones and is making every concerted effort to defeat him in this campaign."

The attorney in a 30-minute address added that "perilous times lie ahead for the people of Montgomery and grave problems will arise. The NAACP and its local counterpart, the Montgomery Improvement Assn., will leave no stone unturned to bring about integration in our public schools, our public parks, our public playgrounds, public swimming pools, in all social activities and all recreational activities, in our hotels, in our cafes and restaurants, and our theaters."

"They do not intend to stop with the accomplishment of these goals. It is their aim and purpose to destroy all laws prohibiting racial intermarriage, and thus bring about mongrelization, total amalgamation of the races. They intend to destroy the white race if they can. I have in my possession documentary proof that those are their objectives," he declared.

The attorney said the campaign of the NAACP against Jones was started because Judge Jones fined the Negro organization $100,000 for contempt of court because of Jones' widely known stand on segregation legal matters, and because of the famous article by Jones entitled "I Speak For the White Race."

Further, Harris said that the people who are opposing Jones in this campaign are a "small group of disgruntled and disappointed men."

He charged that chief backers and supporters of Jones' opponents are Dave Birmingham and Lea Harris.

Discussing rates of public utilities, Harris said:

"Judge Jones' opponent knows, or as a lawyer should know, that every rate fixing case that has been appealed from the Circuit Court of Montgomery County to the Supreme Court has been affirmed on its merits except one case which is now pending in the Supreme Court.

"The pending case in the Supreme Court is the only rate fixing case that has been decided by Judge Jones since 1949."

On the segregation issue, Harris said:

"The NAACP knows that Judge Jones stands four square against their objectives, their aims, and their purposes. Judge Jones has taken his stand, and all white people who believe in complete separation of the races should answer the clarion call and join with Judge Jones in saying 'They shall not pass!' Judge Jones has been weighed in the balance and found not wanting.

"We cannot, we must not, we dare not entrust the powers of the great office Judge Jones now holds into untried, unknown and incapable hands. Even today, the NAACP speaking through Roy Wilkins, the NAACP secretary in New York, is urging the secretary of war to make the holders of the federal bayonets in Little Rock use their bayonets more effectively to continue the integration of that school.

"When the winds of political sophistry and intrigue threaten to tear from her moorings the ship of state and the beating waves of impatient change would bear it out to the unknown deep it is the voice of the judge speaking here in the Cradle of the Confederacy that must bid the winds and the waves peace be still."

GUBERNATORIAL CANDIDATE JIMMY FAULKNER AT NORMANDALE
Made Seven Stops In County Tuesday, Ended Day With Prattville Talk

Faulkner Swings Tour Here With 7 Gruelling Appearances

By BOB INGRAM

Gubernatorial candidate Jimmy Faulkner made an impressive stump tour of Montgomery County Tuesday, speaking to an estimated 2,000 people during a gruelling day of seven appearances in widely scattered sections.

Overcast skies and intermittent rain failed to discourage Faulkner or his well-oiled and enthusiastic local organization. The tour went off like clockwork from its start in Ramer at 9:30 a.m. until its conclusion in West End at 5:30 p.m.

It was the arm-waving, shouting Faulkner who stumped Montgomery Tuesday and this approach earned him good response at all his stump stops.

Accompanying Faulkner was the Statesman Quartet, who applied bumper stickers as well as singing. They excelled at both.

Following the opening appearance at Ramer, where some 100 people stood in a drizzling rain to hear Faulkner, the candidate moved to Cloverland Shopping Center where he had one of his largest crowds.

The final pre-noon stop was at the Capital Stockyards where a cattle auction was interruped to allow Faulkner to speak briefly.

During the afternoon session Faulkner spoke at Normandale Shopping Center, Eastbrook Shopping Center, Chisholm and West End.

Faulkner had his best turnout at Normandale, where more than 500 persons stood under the arcade to hear the candidate and the quartet.

The Statesman did a remarkable job on the crowd at Normandale with their swing - time gospel singing. The musical climax came when most of the crowd joined in singing "He's Got The Whole World In His Hands," a gospel favorite.

At Eastbrook Faulkner unleashed a fierce dig at one of his opponents, a spur-of-the-moment remark which was not in the script.

At the height of his address, a group of teen-agers drove noisily by in a "Model-A" of doubtful vintage, the vehicle gaily decorated with "Win With Wallace" stickers.

Faulkner paused momentarily, then commented:

"The people of Alabama have been very kind to me in this campaign and it's very seldom that I have any trash around my feet."

WINCED AT REMARK

Even a few Faulkner fans winced at that remark.

Faulkner continued to use the almost identical speech he has delivered throughout the campaign, vowing that "white boys and girls ain't going to school with colored boys and girls."

He also scored well in recalling his 1954 campaign, observing that the competition "ain't nearly so rough this time."

Faulkner's Montgomery organization was at its best throughout the day, with perhaps 75 to 100 hearing the candidate at all seven sites.

Following the Faulkner bandwagon were Earl James, county chairman for Faulkner; Warren Reese, Max Baum, C. T. Fitzpatrick, Bibb Folmar, Ed Taylor, Revenue Board Chairman Tom Jones and Commissioner Chappell Gray (both giving out Faulkner buttons), Chris Sherlock, Bob Fain, John Drinkard, Tyre Russell, Haygood Paterson, I. Berman, Henry Altheimer, L. B. Sullivan, Pleas Looney, Francis Kohn, Sonny Paterson, John Boswell, C. M. Sellers, Earl Shelton;

Paul Shelton, Billie Parker, Churchill Marks, Bob Hodgson, John C. Tyson III, John Pemberton, Knight Berman, Claude Wampold Jr., Jimmie Fenton, Russell Cole, Neal Cole, Parker Gray, Clyde Royal, Bill Milligan, Dr. A. D. Cole, Ollie Mount, Addie Mosely, Jimmy Rushing and Ernest Russell.

In addition a number of Montgomery women working in Faulkner headquarters here also made the seven-stop swing.

A number of local candidates for public office took advantage of the Faulkner crowds to do some campaigning of their own. Included in this group were Reps. Joe Goodwyn and Joe Dawkins; Ed Brown (candidate for Senate), Ernest Gossett (sheriff candidate), Harold McGlynn (probate judge candidate), and three candidates for the House — Bill Cleghorn, Leon Clardy and Ramon Farnell.

Chief Executives Of Alabama

ALABAMIANS should not make an easy-going approach to the May ballot. It is not just a chief executive, or governor, that is to be chosen, but a number of independent officials of enormous powers.

Consider the lieutenant governor. The measure of his importance lies in the provision that he shall become governor in the event of a vacancy caused by death, incapacity or disqualification. He presides over the State Senate and appoints the members of the all-important committees. If, as we have seen, a governor turns out to be a lemon or goes into a spin, a lieutenant governor possessing personal prestige and knowledge of politics can do a great deal to stabilize the situation.

The attorney general is also entirely independent of the governor made so as a safeguard by the authors of the Constitution who were skeptical or even cynical about the trustworthiness of men possessing the powers of a governor. The attorney general can be either a lackey or an adversary of the governor. Or, if the right man is chosen, he can be a man of proper independence, neither ally nor adversary, who deals with the administration at arm's length. A man indifferent to graft or one given to rash acts should not be entrusted with the large powers of this office.

The state auditor, endowed by the Constitution with appointing powers in the case of county boards of registrars, can wield much control over the qualification of new voters.

The state superintendent of education is the central figure in the expenditure of millions for education and the methods of classroom instruction. Some first-rate men have held this office in the past and have contributed mightily to the advancement of Alabama. Such a one is needed now as before.

In choosing legislators, citizens are more sensitive to the need of a fish-eye examination of the candidates when they consider that these men will make not only state laws, but in many cases laws governing their counties and cities through "local legislation."

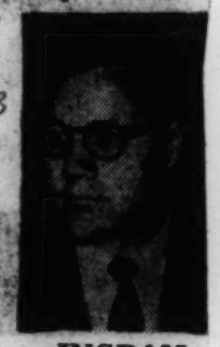
It requires civic energy to become informed about so many candidates, with whom a majority of voters never get to shake hands. But failure to become informed about the candidates is what produces the invariable bumper crop of lemons.

Voting Records Of Five Candidates

34 a (2) 1958 a

By Bob Ingram

IN THE FIELD of 14 candidates for governor are five men who at one time or another served in the Alabama Legislature. And their very action is reflected in the hated House and Senate Journals, bulky volumes which have driven many a man to an early political grave. Advertiser P.S.B



INGRAM

The five candidates who have legislative records are Karl Harrison (12 years), George Hawkins (8 years), George Wallace (6 years), Jimmy Faulkner (4 years) and A. W. Todd (4 years). Jan 3 - 30 - 57

Only in one regular session, however, did the terms of all five overlap. In the first regular session of Gov. Gordon Persons' administration in 1951, Faulkner and Todd were Senate colleagues while Harrison, Hawkins and Wallace all occupied seats in the House.

And the journals of this session make an interesting comparison as to how these men voted on the same issues at approximately the same time. Montgomery, Ala.

The voting records submitted here reflect only the major issues of the 1951 session, and how the five would-be governors voted.

Wallace Opposed $3 Tag

ONE OF GOV. Gordon Persons' main campagin promises in the 1950 primary was to slash the price of automobile tags to $3, and legislation to carry out this promise was introduced early in the '51 regular session.

The record shows that four of the candidates voted for the measure, one against. The lone objector was George C. Wallace, then a representative from Barbour County. Harrison, Hawkins, Faulkner and Todd supported the bill.

A little bill, which touched off a major controversy still raging, was a proposal which would prohibit retailers from selling cigarettes below a fixed price.

Many grocery and drug stores had drastically reduced the price of cigarettes as a "loss leader," in an effort to attract customers, and it was this practice which certain groups sought to outlaw.

The legislative journals show that the Unfair Cigarette Sales Act resulted in a wholesale exodus of lawmakers to the cabbage patch. In fact Hawkins was the only man of the five in question to vote on the bill.

Neither Faulkner nor Todd voted, although the Senate Journal indicated they were both present. The same route was followed by Harrison and Wallace. They too were present, but sat on their hands when the vote was taken.

All five men got together a couple of times on major bills. The quintet went down the line together in support of a bill taking the State Docks out from under the direct control of the governor and turning the reins over to the board.

They also agreed on the $25,000,000 road bond issue which came up during the '51 session.

The Relative Responsibility Law

PROBABLY the most politically significant vote of the entire session was on the extremely unpopular Relative Responsibility Law which was enacted. This law required relatives of needy persons to contribute to their support rather than making them wards of the state.

On paper the proposal must have looked good, as it passed both Houses by a substantial margin. But in practice the law did not work. The needy old folks, perhaps justifiably, resented being compelled to beg for aid from their relatives, and, in turn, the relatives resented being told they had to contribute to the support of their needy kin.

Probably no law enacted in Alabama in recent years was more universally unpopular. Much of Gov. Folsom's support in 1954 came from his promise to repeal the Relative Responsibility Law.

The legislative journals show that only two of the candidates for governor voted against the bill. They were Wallace and Hawkins, and each of them consistently voted against it at every opportunity.

Jimmy Faulkner and Karl Harrison voted for the Relative Responsibility Law. Harrison had the opportunity to confess his sins in a 1955 special session when he voted to repeal the law after admitting on the House floor that it hadn't worked.

The fifth candidate, Todd, did not vote on the bill. He was in the Senate chamber when it came up for a vote but did not answer when the roll was called for the passage of the bill.

Farm Bills

THREE other measures which came up in 1951 of considerable Importance to Alabama farmers brought an unusual vote from stuffs, fungicides, and insecticides from the state's three per cent he five candidates. The bills in question proposed to exempt feed sales tax. These measures won the unqualified support of Faulkner, Harrison and Wallace. But Todd, who today is running as the farmer's friend, did not act that way in 1951.

Todd was present when each bill passed in the Senate, but he did not vote on any of them.

'Advertising,' Not A Contribution

SEVERAL candidates for governor have come up with a new gimmick this spring which is being used effectively in raising campaign funds.

One of the major handicaps in the past has been that such donations were not deductible for income tax purposes. This meant that the man who tossed $5,000 in the pot for his favorite choice was not only out that much, but had to pay income taxes on the full amount.

But this expensive problem has apparently been solved, or so the collectors are claiming privately. It will be up to the revenue boys to prove otherwise.

The collection plan is briefly this: When a contribution is made, the donor is given a receipt from the advertising agency handling the candidate's campaign, the receipt indicating the money went for public relations in behalf of the contributor. Public relations expenses are deductible.

This means a contributor in a high income bracket — and only those in such brackets can afford to make sizable contributions — will be able to save in taxes a substantial portion of the original donation.

It's a clever approach which has appealed to a lot of contributors. It not only saves them some cash, but the investment could be more rewarding if they bet on the right horse.

LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR RACE

(Editor's Note: This is the first in a series of articles concerning the races for state office other than governor. The purpose of this series is to acquaint readers of The Advertiser with the candidates, their background, and their duties in the event they are elected.)

By BOB INGRAM

The frequently overlooked race for lieutenant governor has come into its own in 1958.

In the past the campaign for this high state office has been lost in the shadows, with voter interest centered on the campaigns for governor and attorney general.

BUTLER

One reason for the new-found interest in the scrap for lieutenant governor has been that in '58 it has attracted a field which includes several widely known political figures.

Another reason is the tremendous influence which goes with this office was brought sharply in focus during the 1957 regular session of the Legislature.

But it has been personalities, rather than the power of the position, which has aroused the voter attention.

In the race are three members of the State Senate, a former member of the House, and a segregation leader from Birmingham. Earlier, a Negro candidate had qualified for this race but withdrew.

The Senate colleagues who aspire to become lieutenant governor are Sens. Albert Boutwell of Birmingham, Sam Engelhardt of Shorter and E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa.

In addition, former Rep. R. T. (Bob) Butler of Clay, now a Montgomery resident, is a candidate as is Asa (Ace) Carter, one-time head of the North Alabama Citizens' Council.

ENGELHARDT SKIDMORE

PRESIDES OVER SENATE

The office they seek is not a full-time job under normal circumstances, nor does it carry a fixed salary. Instead, the lieu-lieutenant governor merely presides over all sessions of the State Senate, and receives the same compensation of all legislators—$30 a day. When the Legislature is not in session he has no duties and receives no pay.

However, in the role of presiding officer of the Senate the lieutenant governor has vast authority. The rulings he makes, the men he recognizes, can and frequently does go a long way toward determining which legislation is passed and which is killed.

The lieutenant governor also has the vital responsibility of appointing members of the various Senate committees.

And finally, the man the voters elect to the office could conceivably become governor. In the event the office of governor is vacated, either through death, incapacity or impeachment, the vacancy is filled by the lieutenant governor.

The alphabetical order, here is a biographical sketch of the candidates for lieutenant governor in the May 6 primary:

BOUTWELL — Born in Montgomery, Boutwell moved to Greenville at a young age. He was educated in the public schools there and upon his graduation from Greenville High he enrolled at the University of Alabama where he received his law degree in 1928. Boutwell opened private practice in Birmingham the same year where he has since remained. He was elected to the State Senate in 1946, re-elected in 1950 and again in 1954. He served as Gov. Persons floor leader in the Senate for the 1951-53 sessions. Boutwell was chairman of a special interim committee on segregation legislation, and helped draw up the measures enacted into law to maintain racial separation in the public schools.

BUTLER — Born June 18, 1907, in Jackson County, Butler later moved to Montgomery where he was graduated from Sidney Lanier High School. Butler earned a B.S. degree from Auburn in 1930, and a Master's degree two years later from the same institution. He taught school in Clay County for a number of years, and also served as president of the Bemiston town council. He was elected to the House in 1950 from Clay, and in 1955 became superintendent of the Masonic Home here.

CARTER — Now employed by a dry cleaning firm in Birmingham, the 33-year-old Carter was a one-time head of the Alabama White Citizens' Council, which claimed 10,000 members in the Birmingham-Anniston area. He was born in Calhoun County and served in the Navy during World War II. He first drew attention as an outspoken segregationist when working as a radio announcer in Birmingham. Carter was an unsuccessful candidate for the Birmingham City Commission, and earlier, he initiated a move to impeach Gov. James E. Folsom.

ENGELHARDT — Born March 21, 1914, in Montgomery, Sen. Engelhardt received his early education in public schools here and in nearby Shorter where his family moved while he was still a child. He later attended Washington and Lee University in Washington, D. C. A farmer, merchant and ginner, Engelhardt was elected to the House from Macon in 1950 on a five-word platform: "I believe in white supremacy." He was elected to the Senate in 1954 where he continued to be one of the more outspoken supporters of segregation legislation. Engelhardt sponsored a bill to gerrymander Negro voters out of Tuskegee and also conceived the proposal to abolish Negro-dominated Macon County. From 1955 until early this year Engelhardt was executive secretary of the Alabama Assn. of Citizens' Council.

SKIDMORE — Born Nov. 16, 1909 in Abbeville, S.C., Skidmore moved to this state at a young age. He was educated in the public schools of Alabama and upon earning his law degree began his practice in Tuscaloosa. He was elected to the Senate in 1950 and reelected in 1954 from Tuscaloosa County. He won wide publicity last year when he conducted a long but futile filibuster in support of legislation proposing to raise the corporate income tax, with the proceeds earmarked for education. Skidmore was recently appointed to the State Board of Education by Gov. Folsom.

Fireworks Explode In 3-Man Battle

ATTORNEY GENERAL RACE HOTTEST OF YEAR

(Editor's Note: This is another in a series of articles on the campaigns for state office other than governor. The purpose of this series is to acquaint readers of The Advertiser with the candidates, their backgrounds, and the duties of the office they seek.)

By BOB INGRAM

The voters of Alabama today are perhaps more familiar with the duties and responsibilities of the attorney general than with any other state office except governor.

Only in recent years has this been true, and it was a tragic event which first aroused interest in this office.

The assassination of Atty. Gen. Nominee Albert L. Patterson in 1954 projected the office into public limelight, and it has remained there since.

Certainly the three-man battle for the office this spring has done little to lessen interest in the office—this campaign has produced more fireworks than any other 1958 state campaign.

The attorney general of Alabama is the highest legal officer in the state. He is, in fact, the state's attorney. In any court action involving the state, either in the form of an individual state official or a state department, it is the attorney general's duty to serve as legal counsel.

GALLION McKAY FLOWERS

His legal responsibilities are so great that the office holder has in his employ a number of assistant attorneys general, many of them permanently assigned to the various state departments. But all are responsible to the attorney general.

In addition to representing the state and its officials in courts throughout the state and nation, the attorney general is authorized to interpret the law in advisory rulings.

These rulings are by no means final, as the constitutionality and intent of the law still rests with the judiciary. But a ruling of the attorney general does provide protection for office holders.

If the attorney general rules on a law the official involved may proceed to carry out that law, even though it may later be held invalid by the courts. In such an event, the official is protected from prosecution.

In addition to his many and important legal responsibilities the attorney general by law is a member of a number of key boards and commissions. He is also State Securities Commissioner, and in this capacity determines what stocks and securities can be sold in the state and who can sell them.

The responsibilities of this office have increased tremendously in recent years due to the U.S. Supreme Court's school segregation decision. The attorney general, perhaps more than any other state official, will be called on to lead the legal fight aimed at preserving segregation.

The candidates for the office in the May primary are State Sen. Richmond Flowers, former Chief Asst. Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion and State Rep. Charles W. McKay Jr. Here is a biographical sketch on the candidates:

FLOWERS — A native of Dothan, Flowers was born on the day World War I ended—Nov. 11, 1918. He was educated in the public schools of Dothan, attended Auburn three years (1936-39) then enrolled at the University of Alabama Law School. His education was interrupted by four years' service with the U.S. Army Medical Corps, being discharged as a captain in 1946. He received his law degree in 1948. Flowers has devoted most of his time to the insurance business in Dothan. He was elected to the Senate in 1954 where he became one of Gov. Folsom's leaders in the upper house. He helped organize the Alabama General Insurance Co. here, a company which he served as president until it went into receivership last November. This is his first race for a state office.

GALLION—Born 45 years ago in Montgomery, Gallion was educated in the public schools of Birmingham and the University of Alabama. He served in the United States Marine Corps during World War II, seeing extensive combat duty and being awarded the Purple Heart for wounds received in combat. He joined the attorney general's department in 1946 and in 1954 was an unsuccessful candidate for that office. He became chief assistant attorney general in 1955, a post he held until his resignation last December to begin his campaign for office.

McKAY—Born in Clay County, McKay will be 37 years old late this month. After graduation from Ashland High School where he was valedictorian, McKay enrolled at the University of Alabama. His college training was interrupted by service with the Army Air Corps, where he flew 27 combat missions in the Pacific as a bomber navigator. He received his law degree in 1946 and opened his practice in Sylacauga. McKay was elected to the House in 1954, and in 1955 sponsored the noted "Nullification Resolution." In the '56 primary he administered a crushing defeat to Gov. Folsom in the race for Democratic National Committeeman.

Down The Way

MOBILE, ALA.

WHEREUPON the candidates for governor, less Jimmy Faulkner, assumed the position on a stump mounted in the ballroom of the Admiral Semmes Hotel before about 450 delegates to the convention of the Alabama League of Municipalities.

Each had 10 minutes to talk about that time "when I'm your governor up there in Montgomery." This vision of January-to-come is extraordinarily firm and substantial in the minds of the candidates after they have said it a hundred or so times.

Running for governor is a strain to tax the wind and limb of a Percheron. Almost to the man, the candidates appeared flushed, way-weary and slack-jawed, except when ingesting the benzedrine of their 10 minutes on stage.

They poured the soup alphabetically:

LAURIE BATTLE—Battle is one campaign behind. Which is to say he is now doing what he did not do in his 1954 campaign against Senator John Sparkman. He specialized in the race issue, including a pilgrimage to Little Rock.

JOHN CROMMELIN — Here they had the Admiral of the Ocean Sea, ashore and yet awash. Crommelin, a man who has blue eyes that are at once icy and fiery, has what is perhaps a finer stage presence than the other candidates. He speaks well from the hatch set below his flat-topped sneer.

He beaned Atty. Gen. John Patterson for acquiring an interest in a small loan firm of the kind he was crusading against.

Thence to what he calls the "communist-Jewish conspiracy," which he said had already ensnared the newspapers.

The Admiral referred first to The Birmingham News, saying that it was owned by Samuel Newhouse and Herbert Lehman. He called Lehman an "Eskimo," his standard word for Jew.

But that was a gentle introduction to his references to The Montgomery Advertiser and the author of this dispatch.

"The newspaper situation in Montgomery," said Crommelin, "is serious. In 1950 I put Aubrey Williams and Grover Hall in bed together. Now I've caught Grover Hall right in the middle of it."

Crommelin referred to the editor's former connection with the American Civil Liberties Union (which was announced at the time in The Advertiser under a two-column head). He said that Earl Browder, the communist leader, had said the Union was a "transmission belt for the Communist Party."

"Hall is after a Jewitzer Prize," Crommelin said. "His father won one once for fighting the Klan."

Of the whole, Crommelin said that "Alabama is a proving ground for these rats."

He disclosed that in the case of Buford Boone, a Tuscaloosa publisher, he had had him under surveillance since 1946.

Crommelin also denounced Minnie Pearl.

SHEAREN ELEBASH—He did a take-off on the other candidates to fine effect. But he couldn't stay the course and his last word was solemnly intoned: "Rise up, O men of God, and have done with lesser things."

KARL HARRISON—This is the country lawyer from Columbiana in Shelby. He is a gentle, genteel, wonderfully agreeable fellow who picked an odd time to run and did so late.

GEORGE HAWKINS — Hawkins, a Gadsden labor lawyer, made one of the more substantial presentations of a program, briskly and with characteristic candor. His idea for maintaining school segregation was the soundest and most realistic expressed — lot of new school buildings, for white and black in "strategic locations."

JACK OWEN—He is the most indefinite and least inspired personality among the candidates.

JOHN PATTERSON—"I'm not a politician," said Patterson. All the candidates beside him at the table and all the mayors and commissioners in his audience are politicians. He did not take advantage of the opportunity provided by Crommelin to explain about his equity in a small loan firm. Nor did he tell how he was going to raise $32,000,000 necessary to provide $75 pensions for old folks. He talked about his rulings in municipal law.

SHORTY PRICE—His presence in the race for governor of Alabama is an obscenity amid what ought to be the grave rites of the temple. Nevertheless, he convulsed his audience, including your correspondent, with his delightful vulgarities. He made much of the fact that he is the same height as Napoleon—five feet even—("All my folks are lowdown.").

"Well," piped Shorty, "I never heard no kick about Napoleon from Josephine or none of them other mademoiselles."

The ballroom thundered with laughter until all eyes were purging the water of belly laughter. Amid this tribute to his clowning prowess, Shorty wheeled upon a fellow candidate and wailed: "I didn't come down here to take the place of Shearen Elebash."

Down came the house again.

ARVIL TODD—Todd was brief, factual and restrained. He is by nature and record the opposite of this. Nevertheless he so presented himself on this occasion, a plausible figure.

BILL WALKER—He's a preacher in quest of a congregation of 3,000,000.

GEORGE WALLACE — This convention of one of the powerful factions in Alabama politics was in every sense a George Wallace show. It began on the opening night when Ed E. Reid, the mayor of the mayors, went so far as to lead the Barbour Bantam to a front pew after everybody else was seated, just like the mother of the bride.

And finally, Wallace's position alphabetically on the roster of candidates conferred upon him the advantage of speaking last. This he did with skill. Thereupon he received an ovation which italicized the private remarks of the mayors—Wallace without doubt is the leading candidate, and this by a country mile, with the city officials.

On this one occasion at least, Wallace was a scatback who took it around left end, down the sideline and over the stripe upright.

PHENIX CITY HEARS PATTERSON PLEDGE

Candidate Promises Freedom From Gangsterism

PHENIX CITY, Ala., March 13.—(AP)—Atty. Gen. John Patterson promised a hometown crowd Thursday night gangsters will "never again" run Phenix City if he is elected governor.

It was Mr. Patterson's first appearance as a gubernatorial candidate in the once-wild racketeering mecca where his anti-vice crusading father, Albert L. Patterson, was slain four years ago.

The elder Patterson was shot down the night of June 18, 1954, after winning the Democratic nomination for attorney general on a promise to clean up the vice dens which had long made Phenix City notorious. John Patterson became attorney general in his father's place.

The murder touched off an unprecedented vice cleanup that sent several gambling bosses to prison. The former chief deputy sheriff in Phenix City, Albert Fuller, was convicted of Patterson's slaying and got life in prison.

The younger Patterson said in a campaign speech:

"As governor, I will see to it that your elections, your jury boxes and your voting lists remain free and honest, for these are the vital spots where the underworld can do deadly harm.

"During my administration there will be no room for gangsters to operate in this state. I don't want to ever have to live again in a town where you have to carry a pistol when you go downtown to get your mail and where you have to worry about someone putting dynamite up under your house where your wife and children are sleeping."

Alabama Candidates' Use Of Hillbillies Ridiculed

Many Employing Singers, Bands In 14-Man Governor's Campaign

By FRED TAYLOR
Staff Writer, The Birmingham News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 15—They're now ridiculing the use of hillbilly bands, gospel-singing quartets and other campaign gimmicks in the Alabama governor's race as 14 candidates churn toward the May 6 Democratic primary election.

A lot of the fun-poking is being done by some of the candidates who don't have any singers, fiddlers or banjo plunkers and say they don't intend to hire any.

But many of the voters apparently like the rustic music makers.

Shearer Elebash, well-to-do Montgomery businessman and Yale graduate and an accomplished pianist and vocalist who performs the musical chores at his own rallies, ribbed his gubernatorial opponents when they all appeared together at a Mobile rally.

Acid Comment

Addressing hundreds of mayors and other city officials, as well as his opponents, at the Alabama League of Municipalities convention, Elebash had this acid comment:

"This campaign has resolved itself into three things: Promise 'em, confuse 'em and straddle 'em. Can't you just imagine the confusion of a lot of voters when they go to the polls on election day and won't be able to find the names of their favorite gospel-singing quartet on the ballot!"

Other barbed gibes have been directed at Jimmy Faulkner of Bay Minette, 1954 runner-up to Gov. James E. Folsom and generally regarded as one of the front-runners in the present campaign, for employing the famed gospel-singing Blackwood Brothers and the Statesmen Quartet.

Derisive remarks also have been hurled at Judge George Wallace of Clayton, very much a contender in the tussle for the governorship, who at first scoffed at other candidates for using such entertainers. But Judge Wallace decided to use the same tactics and brought in Minnie Pearl and Webb Pierce, both of Grand Ole Opry fame, for his kickoff rally.

Scoffers also have had much to say about State Commissioner of Agriculture A. W. Todd, likewise a potent contender for the gubernatorial nomination, who has several Folsom lieutenants plugging for him, for his entourage of entertainers.

Todd has gospel-singing Wally Fowler and the Sons of Song, plus the Chuck Wagon Gang, Western musicmakers, and his 13-year-old daughter, Nancy, an accomplished accordionist.

ALABAMA

Other Imports

Caustic comment has been tossed at Jack Owen, president of the Public Service Commission and very much an up-and-coming candidate for governor in his second bid for the state's top office, for the rustic music talent he's using at his rallies.

Owen imported Grand Ole Opry's Roy Acuff and his band, together with Porter Waggoner and his band, both from Nashville, for his campaign-launching rally at Athens. Also stumping with him are 17-year-old Marlin Greene of Town Creek, billed as a "budding Elvis Presley," and Shorty Sullivan and his Confederate Colonels from Montgomery.

Atty. Gen. John Patterson, who has been developing potent support in his campaign for governor, likewise has been chided for using Rebe Gosdin and his Sunny Valley Gang and other country music-makers on his stumping tours of the state.

Patterson also is putting "Crime and Corruption," "Loan Sharks" and "The NAACP" on display as campaign gimmicks in his bid for votes. These three, against which Patterson has been campaigning for months, are caged on a float in a Patterson-for-Governor caravan.

State Rep. Karl Harrison of Columbiana, veteran legislator and the fastest-gaining candidate in the governor's race, has a campaign headquarters-on-wheels.

It all was started in Alabama by Gov. Folsom when he was elected the first time in 1946. He used the hillbilly Strawberry Pickers Band, with "Down Yonder" as his campaign song.

Former Gov. Gordon Persons campaigned in a helicopter to win in 1950. And Folsom bounced back for a second term in 1954 when he employed the hillbilly Corn Grinders Band and wowed 'em with "Y'all Come" as his campaign song.

Bob Ingram Evaluates Candidates

A runoff appears almost certain in Alabama's gubernatorial campaign and Judge George Wallace of Barbour County, and Jimmy Faulkner of Bay Minette, are the most likely runoff candidates, members of the Montgomery Junior Chamber of Commerce were told Tuesday.

The speaker was Bob Ingram, policital writer for The Montgomery Advertiser, who has traveled in 59 counties in the past few recent weeks talking to prospective voters about the relative strength of the 14 candidates for the Democratic nomination for governor.

Ingram called Wallace the "hottest item" in the race at the present time and said he is the "surest bet for a run-off berth." Faulkner is not far behind, he said, and Patterson is pulling up to third.

TELLS HIGH LIGHTS

Ingram began his talk by relating some high lights of past gubernatorial campaigns in the state. He then presented a brief biographical sketch of each of the 14 candidates in the May 6 primary, along with his opinion of their prospects.

He credited Wallace's growing strength on his ability to arouse the enthusiasm of his supporters—an ability which, he said, Faulkner lacked.

He listed as Faulkner's chief assets his well-known name, his "excellent" record as a state senator and the organization which supports him.

Patterson, he predicted will poll a large number of votes, many of them coming from people "who are not saying much" about the campaign at this point. Patterson's name, he said, has been mentioned as a possible contender in all of the counties he has visited.

TODD CAMPAIGN

A. W. Todd, the present commissioner of agriculture, is a "hard campaigner" and will also receive a considerable number of votes, Ingram said. But he said Todd is not so strong now as he was believed to be when the campaign began.

Ingram was introduced by Nelson C. Cole, Jaycee program chairman.

It was announced at the meeting that the state Jaycee convention will be held in Huntsville April 25-26-27.

C. B. Doyle was inducted as a new member of the club.

Wallace Raps 'Smut' Tactics

Charges Attempts To Mislead Voter

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Candidate George Wallace denounced what he called smear and smut tactics in the governor's race yesterday and promised his part to "stay away from this type of campaign."

Without mentioning anyone by name, the Clayton circuit judge charged that attempts are being made to distort the voters' minds with such [illegible].

"This is sort of like running rabbits," Wallace said. "The hounds way back in the rear yelp their heads off while the rabbit who's running well ahead doesn't say a thing."

The judge also renewed his promise, if elected, to close any public school threatneed with integration enofrced by Federal troops.

"If the Brownell brownshirts come down here with bayonets on the ends of their rifles to enforce integration in our schools," he said, "then they'll be pointing them at empty buildings."

He said he would transfer the students to another school "till things blow over, and we'll beat them (the Federal authorities) at their own own game by outlitigating and outwitting them at every turn."

Wallace spoke yesterday in Huntsville, New Hope and Madison's Crossroads in Madison County.

Candidate George Hawkins meanwhile told an audience at Albertville that no tradition of "first time loser, second time winner" will determine the winner of the govenor's race this time.

Instead, he said, "the voters are going to select the man they feel best qualified to meet the challenge of the next four years, regardless of whether or not he bears the distinction of having lost one governor's race."

"Don't let anybody tell you I'm making 58 speeches a week just to hear the sound of my voice," the Etowah County House member added.

His remarks apparently came in reply to a recent statement by ex-State Sen. Jimmy Faulkner that tradition requires a candidate for governor to run at least twice before he can be elected in Alabama. Faulkner was the runnerup to Gov. James E. Folsom four years ago.

Another gubernatorial candidate, Ralph (Shorty) Price of Louisville, meanwhile injected a humorous note into the campaign with a dig at Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd, still another of the 14 in the race.

Price, with tongue in cheek, said he was unable to send a telegram to Gov. James E. Folsome because "Todd has the lines tiel up with his messages to Benson." He referred to the agriculture commissioner's frequent telegrams to Secretary of Agriculture Benson protesting against Administration farm policie.

[illegible] som, he said, was that he wishes him a pleasant trip to the World's Fair in Brussels, Belgium. Short said he sent the message by letter.

In a more serious vein, a young candidate for the State Democratic Executive Committee challenged opponents who say the controversial loyalty oath is the paramount issue in that race.

Morris Dees, Jr., of Mount Meig[illegible] Montgomery, said the No. 1 issue is whether a Democrat or Republican is elected President of the United States two years from now.

Dees said the voters in electing a new state committee also will decide what he called meat and bread issues which he described as "Republican-caused unemployment, high cost of living, high interest rates and a poor farm program."

Advocating retention of the loyalty pledge, the candidate who is running for the committee in the Second Congressional District, said "Alabama will lose what power she now has in national politics if we leave the Democratic Party."

If the loyalty oath is rescinded in 1960 by the state committee elected this year, candidates for presidential elector will be free to vote for someone besides the party's presidential nominee.

Otherwise, before they can run in the primaries they will have to pledge their support to the national nominee no matter who he may be.

Shearen Elebash: Alabama's Adlai

By Bob Ingram

THIS BUSINESS of electing a governor goes back a long time. It all started, for better or worse, in September, 1819, when William Wyatt Bibb was elected the first governor of Alabama.

INGRAM

Bibb had the advantage of having served as territorial governor, but he still had to hustle to win. When the votes were counted Bibb had polled 3,342 while his one opponent, Marmaduke Williams, had received 7,140.

Bibb's victory was a triumph for the settlers from Georgia, who had moved into South Alabama, as opposed to the North Carolina settlers in North Alabama. This was the first of a long series of political scraps between the "Georgia Machine" and the "North Carolina Machine" which later resolved to the present day fight between the Black Belt and the Tennessee Valley.

Since that first election, six score and 19 years ago, there have been many campaigns for governor and countless candidates for that office. But it seems safe to say, broad though the observation might be, that there has never been a candidate quite like Shearen Elebash, one of 14 now running.

Running For Choir Director

GOV. JAMES E. FOLSOM once described one of his opponents as a Johnny-come-lately who "joined the church this morning and wants to be choir director tonight." The description fits Elebash like a glove.

At 36, Elebash is now making his first bid for public office and all he wants in this maiden voyage is to be elected governor. In the card game called "Hearts" this is known as shooting for the moon.

To say that it is unlikely that Elebash will be elected is being exceptionally kind to a real nice guy. Alabama voters have been known to make strange political decisions in the past, in fact in the very recent past, though nothing quite so strange as what Elebash now hopes for.

But if nothing else, Elebash is a different type of candidate and a refreshing one. If his opening rally in Selma is any indication, Elebash is about as politic as a stump.

Among other things he generously commended the "progressive program" of Gov. James E. Folsom, admittedly an unusual approach but not one generally accepted as being conducive to attracting votes. And certainly not in Dallas County, where Folsom has never been looked on with much favor.

Too Honest For His Own Good

ELEBASH WAS disarmingly honest in discussing the other issues. He made no outlandish promises about aid to the old folks, instead indicating it was possible they might receive from $40 to $50 a month. Here he submitted a low bid in a game where high bids are supposed to be in order.

On the question of education and its needs Elebash was no less outspoken.

Pointing out that the state appropriation to education has been increased $36,000,000 during the past four years, Elebash posed the question as to why schools were still in financial trouble.

"It could be because they are spending too much time and money on life adjustment courses, such as whether Johnny should date on Friday night or how Johnny can get along with his fellow man," Elebash observed. "It's time we dropped these adjustment courses and returned to the teaching of reading, writing, and arithmetic."

All in all Elebash's speech was well prepared and well delivered. It was realistic and at times idealistic. Had it been delivered by a Faulkner, Wallace or a Todd it would have been quoted and reprinted throughout the state. It would have also probably killed the chances of any of the three being elected governor.

But if nothing else, Elebash is a breath of fresh air on the political scene (as he was so described by Selma's Harry Gamble in his pitch for campaign funds).

Improbable Name

THERE ARE A great many reasons why Elebash, despite his honest approach and speaking ability, can't be elected governor. Not the least of these is the very name of Shearen Elebash. It would have been better had he been christened Bill Brown or Joe Smith.

Nor is Elebash well enough known to be considered other than a minor candidate. He has appeared before many audiences in all parts of Alabama, but he is remembered for the role that he played — an entertaining buffoon.

Elebash's very manner and his dress will do him no good, though he be a highly personable gentleman, well bred and well dressed. An Ivy League graduate, he dresses accordingly.

Even the rally — and that hardly seems the proper word to describe it — Thursday night in Selma was of the same cloth as the candidate.

The 250 people in attendance were for the most part representatives of Selma's aristocracy from which the candidate came. They came in their long black cars, the ladies draped in their furs and the men in their tailored suits. There were more silver cigaret holders per capita in this crowd than snuff dippers at a Folsom rally. It was, pardon the pun, a real couth crowd.

When the rally concluded the guests moved to a parlor in the historic Albert Hotel for the most proper of coffees. There was no back slapping, no spitting on the floor to emphasize a point.

Cold, Cold Coffee

WHEN THE PRESS arrived the guests were beginning to depart and the coffee was long since cold, a fact which mortified an attractive young lady at the serving table.

"We just don't do things like this here," she said, in reference to the cold coffee. "Not in Selma we don't."

On this occasion they did, but in fairness they usually don't.

It was left up to little Barbara Elebash, a four-year-old bundle of energy, to break a little crust off the genteel gathering at the junior high auditorium.

In the best of little girl fashion, she ran down the aisle of the auditorium during the opening prayer, and later let forth with a burst of appreciative applause during the speech when a photographer's flash bulb fired in her direction. She climaxed her evening with an enormous sneeze which shook the foundation of the building, the explosion timed just as Elebash reached the climax of his address. Otherwise she was a doll.

The two older children also seated on the stage — Dean and Brian — use the same tailor as their father. They have also been taught manners, an education which apparently has been overlooked by some parents of today.

A Fine Also-Ran

MRS. ELEBASH appeared to be the least at ease of the entire family, a fact which she later admitted to be true. She was a bit unnerved by it all.

Elebash will probably never be governor of Alabama. With luck he may finish in the first 10, ahead of the Prices, Dodds, Walkers and Crommelins. But he will be a good man to bring the voters back down to earth after they have been promised the moon by the group of candidates from whom our next governor will come.

Came To Laugh, Remained To Pray

Editor Jep V. Greer In The Sylacauga News

THAT just about explains the many of us who listened to Gubernatorial Candidate Elebash in his press panel interview Sunday afternoon. An unknown in politics, Mr. Elebash's candidacy for governor has not been taken too seriously by the voters, but he changed a lot of minds Sunday, at least to the seriousness of it.

As a matter of fact, his interview was of the top-level sort and, as for the direct and intellectual approach, he leads the field to date. A pleasing personality, and with total confidence he met issues head-on. He favored the right-to-work law as being fair to both labor and management; he ridiculed those who would make political hay of welfare for the poor; he accepted the party loyalty oath as arbitrarily acceptable at this time, but undemocratic in structure, and he does not favor more taxes. These were just some of the issues he met, and it could be that his answers were along with our own way of thinking, but when the interview was over we were definitely among those who came to laugh and remained to pray.

We are for you Mr. Elebash—whoever you are. Not for governor, but for anything short of the mark. Come back in four years and you might be Alabama's Mr. Willkie.

Wise North Alabama Voters; Book Notes

By J. Fred Thornton
Associate Editor, The Advertiser

FROM THE WAY the race is shaping up, it looks like the voters of North Alabama are getting ready to rise up again and elect another South Alabama man governor. We are constantly reminded that the biggest concentration of votes is north of Montgomery. But North Alabamians instinctively recognize the superior statesmanship of leaders from the Black Belt and points south. With us, politics is not just a sideline; it is a profession, a way of life. North Alabama is wisely inclined to look south for leadership, especially since in modern times the further north we go for a governor the worse we get stung. From what I hear, the two main contenders at this writing are from Clayton and Bay Minette, respectively, which indicates that North Alabama voters are going to cast another vote of confidence in South Alabama brains and leadership.

THORNTON

A look at the record shows that we had more governors from North Alabama 30 to 50 years ago than since then. There was a time when they actually had two governors in a row, both of them pretty good men, incidentally, which was doubtless due to the fact that, although they hailed from north of Montgomery they were not from way up north. These two were Kilby of Anniston, 1919-1923, and Brandon, Tuscumbia, 1923-1927.

Folsom, Comer & Homer

SINCE then the state has elected only two governors from north of Montgomery. One of these the "present encumbrance," Jim Folsom, is not strictly speaking a North Alabama man. He was indeed elected from Cullman, whither he had moved to head an insurance agency. But he was born and raised in Coffee County, lived there until past 30 and started on his political career there. The quality of getting close to the cool hat boys, the native sagacity sometimes masked by a dumb-appearing exterior—these are Folsom assets developed in the Wiregrass and not on Sand Mountain. Similarly, the great Gov. B. B. Comer is proudly numbered by Barbour County among her most eminent sons, though he had moved to Birmingham when elected governor. It may be that the day will come when Coffee and Cullman will argue hotly over which has the best claim to Jim Folsom, as the seven ancient Greek cities did over Homer, though I have discerned no sign of that yet.

Aside from Folsom, we have elected only one governor from North Alabama since Bill Brandon was elected in 1922, thirty-six years ago, that one being Dixon of Birmingham, 1939-1943. In that time we have had four South Alabama governors: Graves (two terms) and Persons, Montgomery, Miller, Camden and Sparks, Eufaula.

They Left The Dome

IN THE last half-century we have had only one governor from the far north end of the state: Emmet O'Neal of Florence, 1911-15. His administration is shrouded in the most unhappy memories of any since Reconstruction; it was downright deplorable, like the administration of President Warren G. Harding. Gov. O'Neal himself was an honest man, but his appointees stole nearly everything execept the capitol dome and would doubtless have taken it but for the transportation problem. There was a shortage of $117,000, a huge sum in those days, in the convict department. Its chief clerk, Theodore Lacy, was sent to the pen, but there was a widespread belief that Lacy was the fall guy, and that guilty higher ups escaped the punishment they richly deserved. Gov. O'Neal himself voiced this belief when he declared in his last message to the legislature that Lacy "was but the weak and pliant tool of others who conceived and carried out the conspiracy." Public confidence in state government was shaken as it has never been since, not even in recent years; people are not so easily shaken nowadays. Since O'Neal, the farthest north Alabama has gone in picking a governor was when it elected Folsom, if we concede him to Cullman; I am not of course suggesting any other points of similarity between the two administrations. While we have had such unhappy experiences with governors from the north end, there is general feeling that with a South Alabama man we will at least be spared the worst—if the treasury is looted it will be done within the law, in a smooth and polished manner, no crude, boorish stuff like toting off the cash in a pine box as was done under O'Neal.

Parsees To Pizarro

NOW FOR a few observations on books. There has never been a time when people have been so interested in history; perhaps they figure the time is drawing nigh when there ain't gonter be any more history, or if so, it will be recorded on the walls of caves instead of books, after the bombs are unleashed. The literature of our time features a veritable flood of books about the past, some in fiction form and others straight history. Some of these are excellent, but there are others not so good, to put it mildly. There are writers who have found that if they take a 'know-it-all" attitude they can get away with murder and they do just that. Publishers seem to take most anything that is offered them as gospel truth, without having it checked for accuracy. I do not refer to controversial issues, but to absurd errors as to facts which are apparent on their face.

An example of the not so good book of this kind is "The Living Past," the story of 7,000 years of civilization, by a German author, Ivar Lissner. This book has been a best seller in several European countries; it has been praised by American reviewers who apparently read only the blurb on the jacket; it has been adopted by at least one American book club. Actually, it abounds with ridiculous "boners" of which I will cite several.

On page 114, in an account of the Parsees or fire-worshippers, the remnant of a once powerful religion, it refers to "the last surviving followers of Zoroaster, ninety million Parsees in India." Although not exactly an expert on Parsees, I had read about them before, and the figure of 90,000,000 looked absurdly high. I checked up and found that the number of Parsees in India, including Pakistan, at the last census was 117,225. It cannot be claimed that the author confused the Parsees in India with those elsewhere, because most of the Parsees in the world today are in India.

On page 128, speculating on the fate of the Lost Tribes of Israel: "The final destination of the ten lost tribes has been 'discovered' almost everywhere in the world: In Mexico, where Pizarro was welcomed as the 'White Saviour' . . .". When I was in high school we were taught that Cortez conquered Mexico and that Pizarro's fame was won in Peru; German inventive genius may have changed that.

On pages 196-197: "Genghis Khan and his horsemen covered nearly a hundred degrees of latitude, trampling into the dust such cities as did not submit voluntarily." Genghis Khan really was rough on cities, but there are only 90 degrees of latitude from the equator to the North Pole, and as Genghis did not get anywhere near either, we are confused again. The Mongol armies did cover a tremendous distance east and west, and the author may have meant to say longitude instead of latitude. When a man of my modest attainments can pick out such "bloopers" there is no telling what an expert might do. These errors would be bad enough in a newspaper story written in haste to meet a deadline; they are inexcusable in a book.

Formal kickoff

Wallace pledges full segregation

BY FRED TAYLOR, News staff writer

Judge George Wallace declared Saturday that "we shall continue to maintain segregation in Alabama completely and absolutely," as he got his campaign formally underway with a rally at Ozark.

And he said it can be done without "violence or ill will." He disavowed race hatred, saying, "I advocate hatred of NO man. Hate will only compound the problems facing the South."

THE CLAYTON CIRCUIT JUDGE sounded a plea for "patience and tolerance and an earnest request that we be allov to handle state and local affairs without outside interference."

In earlier developments, State Rep. Karl Harrison of Shelby opened his campaign for the governorship with the first of a series of "reports to the people" over WBRC-TV last night, and Atty. Gen. John Patterson address a rally at Lanett.

Patterson had Rebe Gosdin and his Sunny Valley Gang, hillbilly performers who helped the attorney general kick off his gubernatorial campaign Monday night at New Site.

JUDGE GEORGE WALLACE
. . . Launches campaign

RALPH PRICE of Louisville, candidate for lieutenant governor four years ago, announced he would launch his bid for governor at a rally Friday at Troy. He said he would have hillbilly Tony Senn and his Cotton Pickers to help with his kickoff.

State Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd, who will take his bid for the governorship to Carbon Hill for another "friendship" rally Thursday night, spent Friday conferring with Birmingham business men.

He said he discussed with them his proposal for building a $50 million canal from Guntersville Lake to Locust Fork of Warrior River. He announced plans for constructing this 20-mile canal at a Geraldine rally earlier in the week.

JUDGE WALLACE stressed industrial development, school aid, "fair and equitable treatment for both labor and management" and reapportionment in his speech prepared for delivery at Ozark.

Wallace's Montgomery campaign headquarters announced that the Ozark rally was preliminary to a statewide meeting March 7 at the Montgomery Municipal Auditorium. This will be carried over a statewide radio-TV network.

"I shall press for fair legislative reapportionment in our governing bodies," Judge Wallace declared. "We should represent all the people, not just land acres."

WALLACE, in advocating a plan for more and better roads, said he would remember the needs of the state's smaller counties in a road building program. And he promised full participation in the interstate highway program.

As to municipalities and counties, Judge Wallace said "I've long been a true friend of local government. I believe that towns, cities and counties should have the right to administer their affairs without undue pressure from other sources."

Rep. Harrison outlined a four-point "program of progress to be developed to further Alabama's industrial, educational, health and agricultural standing."

Harrison, Columbiana attorney and veteran legislator, who has sponsored numerous health, education and industrial development measures, will deliver another "report to the people" Monday night on Mobile's WKRG-TV. He will speak on Decatur's WMSL-TV Friday night.

JIMMY FAULKNER, who spent a busy week campaigning, will adress another "home folks" rally at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday at Georgiana, in Butler County. He will have the gospel-singing Statesmen Quartet with him again.

Public Service Commission President Jack Owen, after campaigning several days in the Mobile area, centered his activities at Tuscaloosa Friday.

Former Ninth District Congr. Laurie Battle, State Rep. George Hawkins of Etowah, Shearen Elebash, Montgomery businessman, and the other gubernatorial candidates pressed their campaigns over the state.

14 Candidates Campaigning For Alabama Governorship

Several Others May Enter Race Prior to Deadline of March 1

By FRED TAYLOR
Staff Writer, The Birmingham News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 22—Alabama's race for governor, with 14 on-the-line entrants and one other aspirant planning to file, appears to have taken fairly definite shape for the May 6 Democratic primary. Even so, a full week remains for qualifying before the March 1 midnight deadline. And one or two more may jump in.

Thus indications are that the big field of gubernatorial candidates this year may equal, if not exceed, the record-breaking number in the 1950 election when 15 entries went to the post.

That was the year former Gov. Gordon Persons was nominated.

Persons had been very much a prospective candidate this time for a second term as governor until he was forced to withdraw because of a light stroke. He has recovered rapidly from that illness, but his physician advised him not to attempt an arduous statewide campaign.

To Seek Judge's Post

Then the former governor surprised most political observers by qualifying as candidate for probate judge of his home county of Montgomery, saying his doctor had agreed to his making this race since it will require comparatively little traveling.

Several candidates for the governorship have been scrambling for potent support that would have gone to Persons, with State Rep. Karl Harrison of Columbiana, Jimmy Faulkner of Bay Minette and Jack Owen, president of the Alabama Public Service Commission, getting much of it.

Observers generally agree that Faulkner, weekly newspaper publisher and former state senator, who was runnerup to Gov. Folsom four years ago, is pretty well in the lead at this juncture.

They believe that State Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd, who was chosen for that post with Gov. Folsom's help and who has a lot of Folsom followers backing him, and Circuit Judge George Wallace of Clayton, also a long-time Folsom lieutenant, are running strongly for second place.

Another late entry, who is sure to get strong backing from organized labor, is State Rep. George C. Hawkins of Gadsden, an attorney and legislative veteran. He started out as Gov. Folsom's House floor leader at the beginning of the present administration, but his relations with Folsom have cooled somewhat. Hawkins long has been an attorney for labor unions.

Others Campaigning

Laurie C. Battle, Birmingham insurance man and former congressman from the Ninth District, which is made up of populous Jefferson County, and Atty. Gen. John Patterson of Phenix City are two other gubernatorial candidates who have been busy seeking votes for months. Both have generated considerable strength.

But Faulkner, who has been staging "home folks" rallies since last August with the aid of the gospel-singing Blackwood Brothers and Statesmen Quartet, has done more preliminary campaigning than most of the other aspirants.

A man with remarkable musical talent as well as business acumen — Shearen Elebash of Montgomery — is furnishing his own entertainment at gubernatorial rallies.

Others who have qualified for the gubernatorial tussle are Winston Gullatte, Selma insurance man, who ran in 1954; retired Adm. John G. Crommelin of Wetumpka, who has made three races for U.S. Senate; the Rev. Billy Walker, 27-year-old Baptist preacher of St. Clair County; Ralph Price of Louisville, who ran for lieutenant governor four years ago, and W. E. Dodd, millwright and dairy farmer of Genery's Gap, in Jefferson County.

Sam L. Chesnut Jr., youthful McIntosh chemist, says he's going to qualify as candidate for governor if he can raise the $500 entrance fee — 2 per cent of the $25,000 yearly salary to be paid the next governor.

House record shows–

Wallace attended but failed to vote often

BY HUGH W. SPARROW, News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 22—Circuit Judge George Wallace, now in the midst of a campaign for the 1958 Democratic gubernatorial nomination, is one of several candidates with legislative records.

He served in the 1947, 1949 and 1951 sessions as representative of Barbour County in the House.

THIS ARTICLE is one of a series dealing with the records of those gubernatorial candidates who served in the Alabama House or Senate at one time or other.

The present account, however, concerns Judge Wallace's 1947 and 1949 record—how he voted, or refrained from voting, as the case may be, on important legislation of the sessions.

An additional report will be given later as to Judge Wallace's stand during the 1951 session.

IN 1947 AND 1949 Wallace was a supporter of Gov. Folsom. He was punctural in attendance. He was marked up as present on opening roll calls on all but one day of the two sessions. However, he failed to vote on a number of questions and issues.

Judge Wallace did not introduce a great many bills. But of those he did introduce, several were of the socalled "do good" kind. In other words he offered a number of measures having a sociological or corrective purpose.

In some cases Judge Wallace's "do good" measures didn't get very far in 1947. Several of them were reintroduced in 1949 and again apparently got lost in the shuffle.

The one bill which Judge Wallace did pass, however, is one which he regards very highly today. It proposed to set up several trade schools for under-privileged youths.

AMONG HIS 1947 bills were:

H. 156 providing special educational benefits for children of widows of dead war veterans.

H. 298, creating a new state housing commission.

H. 502, providing for payment of funeral expenses of indigent war veterans.

H. 115, tightening the law regulating pawn shop inspections.

H. 459, creating the office of state freight rate counsel.

H. 582, exempting homesteads of War II veterans.

H. 583, regulating interest charges of pawn shops.

H.593, licensing and further regulating loan sharks.

H. 619, establishing a school of Nursing at the University of Alabama.

H. 817, boosting the tax on night clubs.

Judge Wallace jointly sponsored H. 688 which proposed to knock out many sales tax exemptions.

AMONG JUDGE WALLACE'S 1949 bills were:

H. 4, providing for TB hospitals.

H. 5, imposing an additional tax on liquor.

H. 7, providing for cancer examinations.

H. 122, providing for advertising of Alabama resources.

H. 123, establishing a school of nursing at the University of Alabama.

H. 210, providing for special treatment of persons under 21 who have been found to be delinquent.

H. 211, requiring registration of lobbyists.

H. 201, licensing and further regulating loan sharks.

H. 289, exempting veterans from payment of the poll tax.

H. 290, providing special education benefits for children of widows of deceased veterans.

H. 293, creating office of freight rate counsel.

H. 239, requiring segregation of youthful first offenders.

H. 231, creating a mineral sources board.

H. 230, providing vocational training for prisoners.

H. 396, creating a new state housing commission.

JUDGE WALLACE in 1947 voted to table a more economical substitute for the general appropriation bill. Also he voted to table an amendment reducing the governor's emergency fund from $200,000 to $100,000 a year. And he led an unsuccessful fight to defeat an amendment paring down the appropriation for the attorney general from $100,000 to $80,000.

He led another unsuccessful effort to kill an amendment reducing the annual appropriation for the Industrial Relations Department from $175,000 to $110,000.

JUDGE WALLACE did not vote on an amendment striking out a conditional appropriation of $500,000 for the Conservation Department.

He refrained from voting on H. 610 legalizing Sunday auto races, and on H. 431 tightening up the law relating to cruelty and non-support as grounds for divorce.

ALTHOUGH the House approved an amendment increasing the per week allotment for support of inmates in state hospitals from $8 to $10, Judge Wallace voted to table it.

On the education appropriation bill, Judge Wallace did not vote on an amendment increasing the appropriation for the Negro A. & M. College from $170,000 to $225,000, nor on a proposal making a special appropriation for the State Teachers College.

On one occasion he voted for a bill raising the tax on liquor 8 per cent.

Also, he voted for a bill prohibiting employment of persons under 16.

Judge Wallace, on still another occasion, voted for an amendment cutting a proposed liquor tax increase from 10 to 5 per cent.

He voted against an amendment proposing to the people vote on the proposed liquor tax increase.

Her refrained from voting on H. 631, authorizing counties to use voting machines.

WHEN THE House was considering S. 66 creating an independent State Department of Examiners of Public Accounts, Judge Wallace voted for an amendment to keep the department as an agency of the Finance Department. That was the reverse of the purpose of the bill.

Judge Wallace voted against a substitute for H. 221, the farmers' tractor gas tax rebate bill. He was present but did not vote on a bill creating a legislative committee to investigate state departments.

He was present but did not vote on H. 246 legalizing racing.

He did not vote on H. 707 tightening up on law regulating food handling establishments.

He voted to postpone indefinitely H. 427 prohibiting use of force, intimidation or threats of violence to influence a person's right to work. He did not vote on S. 107 changing the name of the Negro Reform School to the Alabama Industrial School for Negro Children.

JUDGE WALLACE did not vote on H. 310 reorganizing the office of state toxicologist.

And he refrained from voting on a motion to indefinitely postpone the 67-senator proposal. He did, however, vote to indefinitely postpone H. 111 proposing an amendment to the constitution reapportioning the House.

He voted to repeal the legal provision requiring candidates to take anti-dueling oaths.

Judge Wallace did not vote on H. 869 making an annual appropriation for rehabilitation of alcoholics, or on S. 164 exempting disabled war veterans from payment of state and local occupational license taxes.

He refrained from voting on S. 189 making an appropriation for establishment of a machinery building at Auburn.

JUDGE WALLACE did not vote on a bill making an additional appropriation to construct new market facilities.

S. 315, creating a water improvement advisory commission, got no vote from Judge Wallace, nor did S. 208 making it an offense to sell or give a minor under 18 a drink of liquor.

He voted for the socalled legislative "self-starter" amendment and on H. 1 levying a special 2 per cent sales tax on liquor.

DURING THE 1949 session the No. 1 issue was a bill to close a loophole in the law by which Gov. Folsom was able to put hundreds of his supporters on the state temporary clerk hire payroll.

The House voted overwhelmingly for the bill, but Judge Wallace refrained from voting.

Also he avoided voting on a bill relating to penalties for inducing abortions.

Judge Wallace backed bills regulating loan sharks, but refrained from voting on a Senate amendment to H. 228 requiring licensing of small loan companies.

He did not vote on a bill increasing the number of supernumerary circuit judges, but he did vote for a measure increasing pay of APSC members.

JUDGE WALLACE voted for H. 188, relating to a state racing commission, and he voted for a special appropriation for Tuskegee Institute.

On H. 710, the 67-senator amendment, Judge Wallace voted to table an amendment also reapportioning the House.

Later he voted for the 67-senator amendment, but it failed to receive the 64-vote minimum required to pass a constitutional amendment in the House.

Judge Wallace voted to postpone a bill recommended by a special committee which had studied prison conditions. The bill would have put into effect reforms recommended by the probers. Also he failed to vote on a similar measure.

H. 601, reorganizing the Department of Corrections.

Judge Wallace did not vote on a bill creating a dog racing commission, and he refrained from voting on a bill making dog owners responsible for injuries suffered by persons bitten by their dogs.

He didn't vote on a bill reducing the minimum school

Carter Seeks State Office

Montgomery, Ala.

Birmingham segregationist Asa E. (Ace) Carter qualified yesterday as a last-day candidate for the Democratic nomination for the office of lieutenant governor.

This increased the field in that race to six, including one Negro.

Carter organized and is executive secretary of the North Alabama Citizens Council and has made numerous appearances in support of his organization and of segregation.

He is now awaiting trial on charges of assault with intent to murder a Ku Klux Klan member in Birmingham. The charges grew out of a shooting during a Klan meeting in the darkened headquarters of the Citizens Council in Birmingham's Central Park area.

Other candidates for the position are State Sens. Albert Boutwell of Birmingham, Sam Engelhardt of Shorter and E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa; Robert T. Butler of Montgomery; and Negro radio announcer Perry L. (Tiger) Thompson of Bessemer.

Hard-Running Politicians Flock Democratic Conclave

By GEORGE PRENTICE

The caucus site of the Alabama Democratic Executive Committee here last night was a mass of hand-shaking, hard-running politicians.

Currying the favor of committeemen, state officials and followers of various political camps were candidates and potential candidates for almost every state office.

The lobby of the Jefferson Davis Hotel bustled with those aspiring to win seats in the state Senate and House of Representatives, professed gubernatorial candidates, and others seeking election as secretary of state, and state treasurer.

Sitting on the sidelines were incumbents and their opponents for city and county offices from all over the state.

FRIENDLY ATMOSPHERE

Everyone smiled. Candidates shook hands with candidates. Men who will turn the state into an uproar of bitter political opposition tapped the till of hospitality and brushed shoulders in friendship on the eve before the committee was to open the gate for official qualifications.

But behind the smoke screen the field was being tested.

The strain was especially apparent among the candidates for governor. They were in the spotlight.

And candidates and hopefuls bidding for other offices were wishing it would remain that way. With the shadows in their corners, the race might be a "shoo-in."

Above the din of voices in the jammed lobby, as hands gripped and the chaff in the political mill the question uppermost in all minds was:

"What does this greeting mean to me? How many votes can I turn from this source?"

At least part of the answers will come in the May primary.

Announced candidates for governor at the gathering were Jimmy Faulkner, Bay Minette; George Wallace, Clayton; A. W. Todd, Russellville; Jack Owen, Montgomery; Rep. Karl Harrison, Columbiana, and Shearen Elebash, Montgomery jeweler.

MacDonald Gallion who plans to qualify for attorney general was there. No other candidates have announced for the office, but still being mentioned seriously as possible entries are Rep. Charles W. McKay, Sylacauga, and Sen Richmond Flowers, Dothan.

Bob Butler, Masonic Home manager here who will qualify for lieutenant governor, was in the crowd.

Others in the crowd included: R. C. (Red) Bamberg, J. C. Gentle, and Crawford Roquemore, for agriculture commissioner.

LEGISLATURE HOPEFULS

For the Legislature, those who will qualify today:

Reps. McDowell Lee and Sim Thomas of Barbour, for re-election to the House; Eufaula Mayor Marvin Edwards, for the Senate from Barbour; Rep. Hugh Merrill, Anniston, re-election; and Reps. Pat Boyd and Gardner Bassett from Pike, for re-election.

Also

Rep. Malcolm Edwards of Escambia, to qualify for the Senate; Rep. Bob Kendall of Evergreen, Senate; Sen. Kyser Leonard of Talladega, re-election; Rep. Homer Cornett, Russell, re-election; Rep. George Mathison and Em Solomon of Henry, both for re-election.

Others were Rep. F. L. (Hello) Ferrell, DeKalb, re-election; Sen Joe Davis, Lowndes, re-election and Francis Speaks of Chilton re-election to the House.

Mrs. Agnes Baggett, state auditor who will run for treasurer, was there, as was Rep. Pete Mathews of Clay, seeking election as Secretary of State.

DIFFERENT MISSION

Sen. Ben Reeves, Troy, too was among the handshakers but his was a different mission.

Reeves, a candidate for some public office in Pike County since he was old enough to vote, "is retiring from politics temporarily."

He served four consecutive terms as Pike County sheriff before being elected to the state Senate.

The flow of political figures is expected to continue through today.

Hotels over the capital city are packed. Rooms are at a premium. It's a fitting prelude to the state of pandamonium due early in the week as candidates bid early leads in their prospective races.

LIEUT.-GOVERNOR CANDIDATE AND POSSIBLE
Sen. Albert Boutwell (left) And E. W. Skidmore

Livingston, Hardwick Out Of Alabama Governor's Race

Boutwell to Seek No. 2 Spot; Spirited Campaign Indicated

By FRED TAYLOR

Staff Writer, The Birmingham News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 25—Alabama's gubernatorial race underwent highly significant changes as the State Democratic Executive Committee met here and opened the way officially for May 6 primary election campaigning.

In rapid succession, Supreme Court Chief Justice J. Ed Livingston and Lt. Gov. Guy Hardwick bowed out as candidates for governor, while state Rep. Karl Harrison of Shelby was jumping in.

And state Sen. Albert Boutwell of Jefferson, who had received strong encouragement to run for the state's top office, carried out earlier plans for qualifying as a candidate for lieutenant governor. Poised to plunge into the gubernatorial tussle, which already had drawn a large field of aspirants, was state Rep. George C. Hawkins of Etowah. Hawkins, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee and House floor leader for Gov. James E. Folsom at the outset of his administration, had been talked for lieutenant governor.

Heated Contest

The race for lieutenant governor, who presides over the state Senate, gave promise of becoming just about as furiously fought as that for governor.

Already running with Boutwell were state Sen. Sam Engelhardt Jr. of Macon, executive secretary of Alabama Citizens Councils and chief sponsor of the recently adopted constitutional amendment to abolish heavily Negro populated Macon County, and former state Sen. Graham Wright of Talladega.

Two other state senators—E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa and Joe Calvin of Morgan—were set to run for the state's No. 2 office.

Rep. Harrison, Columbiana attorney and legislative veteran, emphasized he would maintain segregation, declaring, "I will use the full force and power of the governor's office to make certain that there is no integration or violence."

Sen. Boutwell, in seeking to become lieutenant governor, cited his record as sponsor of much of the segregation legislation passed in recent years. He was author and chief sponsor of the "freedom of choice" constitutional amendment adopted overwhelmingly by state voters in 1956 to help maintain separation of the races in the classroom.

Boutwell, a Birmingham attorney, and other lawyers who helped draft that measure, are convinced it will stand up under court attack. The amendment permits all-white, all-Negro or mixed schools. But it also empowers districts and counties to abolish public schools and establish private schools in cases of extreme tension and threatened violence.

Strong Segregationist

Chief Justice Livingston, whose term expires this year, announced he would seek re-election to the high court. One of the state's staunchest segregationists, Judge Livingston had received strong offers of support to run for governor.

Lt. Gov. Hardwick, widely known Dothan attorney, said he planned to devote full time to law practice. Likewise a strong backer of segregation measures, Hardwick had a strong lineup of support if he had entered the gubernatorial race.

Observers believed that much of the support that would have gone to Hardwick and Livingston will veer to the camps of Jimmy Faulkner of Bay Minette, runnerup to Gov. Folsom in 1954; Judge George C. Wallace of Clayton and Rep. Harrison. Wallace and Faulkner have been running for months.

Harrison, who was one of former Gov. Gordon Persons' legislative leaders, also will get backing from potent forces that were ready to step with the ex-governor before he was sidelined by a stroke.

But some of this support already has lined up with Jack Owen, president of the Public Service Commission, who is making his second race for governor.

State Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd, Atty. Gen. John Patterson and former U.S. Rep. Laurie Battle of Birmingham are among other avowed gubernatorial aspirants who have been busy with preliminary campaigning.

Speculation mounted last night, but was promptly denied, that Atty. Gen. John Patterson of Phenix City might not qualify as a candidate for governor.

Patterson was noticeably absent from the small army of political figures who converged on the Jefferson Davis last night. While most other gubernatorial candidates were busily lining up support, neither the attorney general nor any of his supporters were on hand.

The attorney general was also missing the previous night at the banquet of the Alabama Cattlemen's Assn., an event which always attracts a bumper crop of office seekers.

Despite his unexplained absence from the political gathering last night, one of Patterson's aides insisted later the attorney general intended to qualify as a candidate for governor "in the near future."

ENGELHARDT PLANNING NORTH ALABAMA TOUR

Comm Appeal

State Senator Running For Lieutenant Governor

Memphis Sun

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 26.—(UP)—State Senator Sam Engelhardt of Macon, an avowed candidate for lieutenant governor, said Sunday he will tour North Alabama this week to seek support for his campaign.

Senator Engelhardt, who is running on a strong segregation ticket, did not qualify with the state Democratic Executive Committee meeting here but said he would officially enter the race later this week.

Mar 27-58

He said he would visit Huntsville and Decatur Monday and Tuesday and Florence and the Tri-Cities area on Wednesday.

Senator Engelhardt, who is executive secretary of Alabama Citizens Councils, will appear on a television panel show in Jackson, Miss., next Sunday as a representative of the Citizens Councils of America.

He represents Macon and Bullock Counties and is author of the voter-approved constitutional amendment giving the Legislature authority to abolish Macon County in order to break up a large concentration of Negroes.

Governor Vows To Steer Clear Of May Primary

Gov. James E. Folsom declared yesterday he was "absolutely sure" he would not become involved in the governor's race nor would he endorse any of the candidates.

In his first press conference in more than three months, Folsom answered a barrage of questions, most of them related to politics and state revenue.

Folsom had said earlier he intended to go to the Holy Land during the campaign, but he hedged a bit on this promise yesterday.

"I'd sure like to go to the Holy Land," Folsom said, "but any place where a governor can go to get out of state politics is a holy land."

DOOR AJAR

While insisting he intended to divorce himself entirely from the race, Folsom did leave the door slightly ajar.

"Of course I'd probably have something to say if some of the candidates advocate repealing part of my program," Folsom said. "In fact, if they convince me that something I've done is wrong I might even call a special session and repeal it myself."

Folsom was also asked to comment on Atty. Gen. John Patterson's charges of graft and corruption in state government. Patterson has made such charges in the campaign for governor.

"I haven't read anything about it, so I wouldn't be able to comment," Folsom said. "About this graft and corruption I wouldn't comment except to say I never practiced law in Phenix City."

FRIENDIES SUPPORT

The governor also denied he was privately supporting the candidacy of his House floor leader, Rep. George Hawkins of Gadsden in his bid for the governorship.

"He came by one morning and I introduced him to the cabinet, but that was when he was speaking on the amendment election last December," Folsom said. "There wasn't any politics mentioned."

As to who is going to win, Folsom replied:

"How many have qualified? You say 14. Well, one of the 14 is gonna win if all 14 live long enough."

On the matter of state finances Folsom admitted tax collections were down but said he was still confident there would be no proration.

When asked if he felt "deep concern about the revenue, Folsom replied "I sure don't have any deep concern about the revenue, but maybe the press does."

The governor also fanned the special session rumors yesterday, admitting there is "always a possibility" he might call such a session.

"I haven't heard any of the candidates for governor take a positive stand on reapportionment or a constitutional convention," Folsom said. "And I see no likelihood any o fthem will be elected who takes such a stand. So I might have to call a session for that purpose myself."

TO ATTEND DINNER

Hitting lightly on other subjects, Folsom said he planned to go to Washington this weekend to attend a dinner honoring former President Harry Truman, whom Folsom called "one of the greatest Americans living."

He again predicted a Democratic victory in the 1960 presidential election, adding that "I hope it is one of my colleagues, a Democratic governor."

Asked for comment on the new moon in orbit—Redstone's Explorer—Folsom indicated he didn't like to talk about it too much.

"It was built at Redstone just 35 air miles from my home, and that is just too close for comfort," Folsom said. "Redstone is the No. 1 target. That's too close to talk about."

Record shows—

Todd failed to cast vote on many issues

BY HUGH W. SPARROW, News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 8—Just how today's gubernatorial candidate voted a few years ago when a member of the Legislature presumably should give some insight into the type of man he is.

For that reason, this column expects to give a run-down on each candidate for governor who has had legislative experience and a voting record to check.

Today's study deals with Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd. He represented Marion, Franklin and Colbert Counties in the 1951-53 Senate.

This story, however, is centered on Todd's 1951 voting record, both in the regular session and a special session which preceded it.

A composite report covering Todd's 1953 votes will be given later on.

Voting records also will be given of Rep. Karl Harrison of Shelby, Rep. George Hawkins of Etowah, former State Sen. Jimmy Faulkner of Baldwin and former representative, now Judge George Wallace of Barbour.

IT WOULD APPEAR that Todd did quite a bit of vote dodging. The record shows he was present on all but one legislative day. Yet on about 50 proposals, some of them of considerable signifance, Todd's name did not appear among the ayes or nayes.

SPARROW

Commissioner Todd presently is stumping the state as a friend of the farmer and a staunch advocate of agriculture. The record shows, however, that Todd did not vote on a few important bills relating to agriculture.

He was present at the time, but he is not listed as voting on House Bills 92, 93 and 94, respectively, exempting feed stuffs, fungicides and insecticides from the sales tax.

TODD VOTED to boost the sales tax from 2 to 3 cents, but voted against an amendment which would have earmarked one-third of the proceeds from the increase for teacher salaries.

He did not vote on S586, allowing an appropriation for the board of veterinary medical examiners, or on H241 seeking to encourage and advance the poultry industry in Alabama.

Without much ado, the Senate speedily passed two similar bills. One would require the holding of sexual psychopathic offenders indefinitely

Candidate for governor

if necessary, to assure they have had adequate treatment. The other proposed a vigorous crackdown on "Peeping Toms."

Todd was present on opening roll call the day those bills passed but he did not vote for either.

HE DID NOT vote at all on a bill requiring the showing of the Democratic "white supremacy" symbol at the top of ballots. Todd also remained silent when the Senate was passing a bill putting a ban on bargain sale of cigarets. Besides, he failed to vote on S291 outlawing lotteries.

In addition, Todd remained silent at voting-time when the Senate was passing S322 limiting length of motor buses.

He voted against a bill boosting pay of the commissioner of agriculture and industries—the job he now holds, to which he was appointed by Gov. Folsom.

TODD VOTED for the $3 automobile license tax bill, but, he didn't vote either way on measures increasing fees for probate judges for issuing the new tags.

A bill requiring kin of persons on the welfare rolls to assist in their support got a brushoff from Todd.

Todd also sidestepped a vote on a bill proposing a full regulation of state automobiles.

He voted for pay boosts for all members of the Persons cabinet, but in turn failed to vote for increases for the state health officer, state circuit judges, the Supreme Court justices and judges of the Court of Appeals.

IN 1951 the Legislature was much interested in creating a State Commission on Education with Respect to Alcoholism. Todd refrained from voting on it.

Todd also sidestepped at least two bills seeking further regulation of trucks and buses. In addition he failed to vote yea or nay on two bills regulating disposition of profits of the ABC system.

Todd didn't vote on a bill licensing persons selling air conditioning equipment.

Apparently he was absent when they were voting on a bill increasing drivers' licenses, but he did vote a little later for a 67-senator bill.

NOT ONLY did he refrain from voting on S66, further regulating the small loan business in Alabama, but he failed to vote on passage of the motor vehicle safety responsibility law.

Todd voted for a bill clipping the wings of justices of the peace and he also supported another, which he sponsored, abolishing the Russellville Board of Education and creating a makeshift city board to take over.

That was perhaps Todd's toughest piece of legislation.

He was charged with having a direct interest in abolishing the board.

THE RECORD shows he did not vote on S651, making a special appropriation for the physical restoration of crippled children. Likewise he refrained from voting on a bill outlawing use of electric devices in catching fish.

Among other bills he supported was a measure creating a new judicial circuit in Franklin County. That gave him the right to dictate appointment of the new judge.

Besides supporting legislation to abolish the Russellville Board of Education, Todd shoved across a bill abolishing the Franklin County Commission.

SHORTLY after Gov. Persons was installed there was a statewide clamor because of large-scale abuses in connection with the issuance of pardons and paroles.

A bill authorizing a full-fledged investigation of parole and pardon abuses went through both houses in a flash. But Rep. Todd did not vote for it.

Todd Details Racial Stand

BIRMINGHAM, Feb. 9 (AP)—Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd today said provision of equal facilities for whites and Negroes will "go more to eliminate some of the racket" than anything else suggested.

Todd, a candidate for governor of Alabama, said:

"We're going to have segregation and we're going to have it peacefully. I stand for segregation as strong as any man in the race."

Todd said his support is coming from farmers and small businessmen. He said he didn't have any big groups behind him but "there are a lot of 'little mules' supporting me."

The state agricultural chief said the farm problem is Alabama's prime trouble. He bladed U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Benson for the plight of the state's shrinking farm population.

Candidate A. W. Todd

'From Farm Boy To Governor,' Is Agriculture Commissioner's Hopeful Slogan; He's Counting On Farm Support But There Are Those Who Doubt It

By George Prentice
Of The Advertiser Staff

"ALABAMA'S farm vote will determine who is to be the next governor of the state."

That's the way Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd is reasoning and it's an even bet he's coddled that thought since he entered politics as a member of the state Senate back in 1950.

There are those who say he has almost a solid front among the farm folk, and there are others (some of them farmers) who say he hasn't. From Todd's point of view there is little room for doubt. "They know we have a job to do for the farmer, and the little man of Alabama; and they know I can help them get it done," he says.

With a political history that includes a term as Franklin County's representative, in addition to the election as senator from the 31st Senatorial District, Todd was no fawn in the political pasture even when he came into the office of Agriculture & Industries in 1954.

His service in the Legislature branded him as "brash," and "downright radical" to many political observers, as well as laymen. His proposals to control the Alabama milk and egg markets since coming into the agriculture office have been no less frightening to some.

These things have led some observers to believe that with Todd in the gubernatorial race it'll be no "turn the other cheek," type of campaign. "With the Commissioner it's 'an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth,'" they say.

THE MILK BARRIER

Criticism rained down on the commissioner's head when he presented a bill to control the flow of milk from other states into Alabama. Some branded it an effort to gain czarist contr... of the milk industry here. Others saw it as an aid to Alabama dairymen trying to offset income lost in the decline of cotton.

He was accused of creating confusion when he proposed certain standards for eggs sold on the state markets. On the other hand he has been credited with bringing uniformity to the business of egg production.

There have been few peaceful valleys in the political world of A. W. Todd. But even some of Todd's most ardent opponents say he has "grown with the job during the last year or so."

Signs that some of the "radical" may have been replaced by "reason" were apparent in plans for his campaign opener.

He praised the press for the job it has done, "although at times we have been at odds." He declared himself firmly in favor of segregation, but said under his leadership "Alabama would live in peace." He then directed his attention to what he termed a "constructive program for Alabama," and said he would stay on that track throughout.

Explaining his attitude, he said, "I want segregation, and the people of Alabama want segregation. But I'll not waste time on overemphasis of something they know we're all going to fight to preserve, when I can be helping them toward a constructive program of progress."

He said too that he would remain free of any mudslinging tactics throughout the race. How his pledges will stand in the heat of the campaign still remains to be seen.

THE ISSUES

But there was little hesitation as Todd poured out answers to the six questions which The Advertiser has asked all gubernatorial candidates to date.

Q. Have you or would you accept campaign contributions from loan sharks?

A. That depends on what you call a loan shark. I wouldn't accept contributions from strictly loan sharks, but I would accept them from reputable finance people. I think they are an honorable part of our economy.

Q. Have you addressed any rallies of the Ku Klu Kxlan? Would you address such rallies if invited?

A. I have never spoken at a Klan rally, and wouldn't speak at one.

Q. Where do you stand on the right to work law?

A. I fought it. I filibustered against it in the Legislature. I am committed against the right to work law.

NO STRINGS

Q. Are you for or against federal aid to education?

A. I am against federal aid to education unless it comes with no strings attached, to be handled and spent by state, county and city authorities.

Q. Do you feel you would have any trouble getting the money to wage a campaign for office.

A. I do not anticipate any trouble. But I am not a wealthy man and will have to raise my campaign funds from farm and working people. It will take a lot of effort to do the job.

Q. What is your stand on segregation?

A. "I stand strong for segregation. We must work especially hard to keep our schools segregated and to maintain our Southern way of life. We have had no trouble to speak of in maintaining segregation in our rural communities. It is my opinion that one way to maintain our Southern tradition is to keep our farm units strong in Alabama.

Q. Where are you getting your campaign funds?

A. From the good farm folk of Alabama.

NATIVE OF BELGREEN

On the streamer which backs the stage at Todd's "Friendship" rallies, large red letters proclaim, "From Farm Boy to Governor."

He was born on a small farm at Belgreen, Ala., in 1915. His parents are A. K. and Mannie Lou Todd of Franklin County, long time residents of the north section of the state.

He was the second of five children.

When he was 13 years old, Todd lost his left arm in a hunting accident and was confined to bed for more than two years. He later overcame the handicap, however, took an active part in school and church work and became president of his senior class.

He was president of his high school FFA and later became first president of the Tennessee Valley FFA Council which worked with hundreds of boys throughout the area.

He graduated from Belgreen High School in 1936, entered Auburn and worked his way to a B.S. degree in agricultural science in 1940.

In 1942 he was employed by the Nebraska Consolidated Mills and worked his way up to Southeastern Division Sales manager. He resigned in 1944 and returned to Russellville where he opened a feed, seed and tractor business. He is presently part owner of the Franklin Lumber Co. of Russellville and president of the Todd-Lincoln-Mercury Co.

FAVORED BY FOLSOM

Todd won a large majority on the first ballot in 1950 to win the race for the state Senate, representing Franklin, Colbert and Marion counties. After his election as state representative in 1954 he got the nod from Gov. James E. Folsom for the job as Agriculture Commissioner to fill a vacancy created by the death of Haygood Paterson.

He took the appointment of the state Democratic Executive Committee and has sat in the commissioner's chair since then.

The significance of the Todd-Folsom association is another of the uncertain factors in the commissioner's bid for office. The voters will rule on this when they take down wash after the spring house cleaning.

Todd married the former Robbie Lou Smith of Belgreen. They have three daughters, Nancy, Jeannie and Beth.

"They put up with a lot in this business of politics," Todd said of his family. "But they've been wonderful through it all."

A. W. TODD

Hate Candidate

The Tuscaloosa Graphic

OVER a dozen candidates are in the race for governor. At least it is encouraging to know that there is only one John Crommelin. The ex-admiral is the hate candidate. But he has run last before. We trust he does this time, too.

Elebash Kicks Off Governor Race Tonight

Montgomery's Shearen Elebash kicks off his campaign for governor tonight with a rally in his native city of Selma.

A local jeweler and entertainer, Elebash emphasized in a Sunday television interview that he intended to wage a serious campaign for the governorship. This is his first try for a public office.

The Selma rally will be held at the junior high school auditorium at 7:30 p.m., and all candidates for office in allas County have been invited to attend.

Meanwhile, Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd and his musical troupe will be in Cargon Hill tonight for a rally at the National Guard Armory.

In two previous rallies Todd has set the pace in crowd appeal, speaking to audiences totaling 15,000. Tonight he will seek to top the crowd which attended Jimmy Faulkner's rally at Carbon Hill earlier this year.

Another of the 14 candidates in the governor's race will kick off his campaign Friday night.

Ralph (Shorty) Price of Guntersville, said yesterday his first rally would be held at the National Guard Armory in Decatur.

Price has lined up a hillbilly band for the occasion and also has two singers, Tony Senn and Jimmy Hicks, to assist him.

Circuit Judge George C. Wallace, in a bid for the farm vote, wired Alabama's congressional delegation yesterday asking for emergency action in behalf of the state's farmers.

He suggested an emergency appropriation be made so that farmers who signed up for the soil bank allotment could receive the compensation they are entitled.

Wallace said he feld his proposal was the first "sound suggestion" offered to correct the critical farm problem in the state.

In another development yesterday, candidate Laurie Battle of Birmingham called for a billion dollar a year tourist industry in Alabama.

Battle said that with Alabama's wealth of natural beauty, scenic spots and moderate climate, "it is potentially one of the nation's top playgrounds."

Hectic Maneuvering Begins In Alabama Governor's Race

Bids for Support Touched Off By Gordon Persons' Withdrawal

By FRED TAYLOR
Staff Writer, The Birmingham News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 4—The new year brought some of the most frenzied backstage political maneuvering by gubernatorial aspirants witnessed in Alabama since the sudden death early in 1942 of Bibb Graves, who had been governor twice and was an odds-on favorite to win a third term.

This time, avowed and prospective candidates for the governorship were seeking feverishly to line up backers of former Gov. Gordon Persons, who was forced by illness to abandon plans to run for a second term.

Incidentally, Persons, whose administration from January, 1951, to January, 1955, was considered one of Alabama's soundest, was a protege of Graves. And seasoned observers conceded that Persons would have been a formidable contender for another term.

The hurry of behind-the-scenes manipulations was touched off when the former chief executive suffered what his wife described as "a light stroke" just as aspirants prepared to toe the starting line for the May 6 Democratic primary election. The State Democratic Executive Committee will meet here Jan. 25 to fix qualification requirements and set entrance fees for candidates for governor and scores of other offices that will be at stake in the May and June primaries.

Definitely Out

Persons suffered the attack on Christmas Eve while he was at his Montgomery home. It was not disclosed until four days later. Mrs. Persons said their family physician made it emphatically plain that her husband would not be able to make a campaign.

Developments the first few days after the sidelining of Persons indicated that Jimmy Faulkner of Bay Minette, runner-up to Gov. James E. Folsom in 1954, and Public Service Commission President Jack Owen, who made his first bid for the governorship in that race, could be expected to benefit most from Persons' withdrawal. Both are avowed candidates.

Persons had served several years on the Public Service Commission with Owen and had been closely allied with him. Owen pointed to this as among the reasons he expected to receive "a lot of support" from Persons' backers.

There were others who felt that Lt. Gov. Guy Hardwick of Dothan, now expected to plunge into the governorship race with full force, would receive strong support from potent groups in the Persons camp. A formal announcement was expected soon from Hardwick.

There also was specualtion that one or more new faces might emerge in the gubernatorial picture, now that the former governor definitely was out of the race.

Other Prospects

Both State Rep. Karl Harrison of Shelby, a veteran of House and Senate, and State Sen. Albert Boutwell of Jefferson, serving his third consecutive term in the state Senate, suddenly loomed as prospective gubernatorial candidates. Since both were administration leaders in the Legislature during Persons' administration, neither could have been expected to run against the former governor.

Another close friend of Persons—Alabama Supreme Court Chief Justice J. Ed Livingston—was considering jumping into the governor's race instead of running for renomination in the May primary. The chief justice, long boomed for governor, never would have run against Persons, who had elevated him from associate justice to presiding officer of the high court.

Former U.S. Rep. Laurie Battle of Birmingham, who is presently in the insurance business, said he believed Persons' withdrawal would give his bid for the governorship a big boost. And other aspirants felt they would be able to grab off some of Persons' followers.

Among the other avowed or prospective candidates for governor are Judge George Wallace of Clayton; State Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd; Atty. Gen. John Patterson; Sam L. Chestnutt, McIntosh chemist; Starr Smith, Montgomery public relations man; Billy Walker, Baptist preacher of St. Clair County; Circuit Solicitor Emmett Perry of Birmingham; Shearen Elebash of Montgomery, and Winston Gullatte of Selma, who was a 1954 candidate.

Gov. Folsom says he's going to keep strictly hands off, planning a visit to the Holy Land during the heated weeks of the campaign.

POLITICAL TALK GETS HOT AND HEAVY & DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE MEETS
Chairman Roy Mayhall, Candidate A. W. Todd, Judge F. B. Embry of Pell City

McDowell Lee Plans Race For Reelection

State Rep. McDowell Lee of Clio said last night he would qualify as a candidate for reelection "the first thing" after the adjournment of the State Democratic Executive Committee.

Lee will be seeking another term in the House from Barbour County, place No. 2. Barbour County observers expect Lee to be renominated without opposition.

The young lawmaker will play an active role in the gubernatorial race, serving as George Wallace's south Alabama campaign manager.

Robison To Qualify For Reelection Bid

State Sen. Vaughan Hill Robison of Montgomery said last night he intended to qualify as a candidate for reelection today immediately after the adjournment of the State Democratic Executive Committee.

Robison will be seeking his third consecutive term from this county, and indications are that he will be renominated without opposition.

The local attorney was unopposed in 1954 in his successful bid for a second term.

Alabama Democrats Head For Showdown On Segregation Oath

Parley Here To Kick Off '58 Campaign

A majority of the State Democratic Executive Committee reportedly agreed tonight to reject a segregation oath that would bar Negro candidates unless they abandoned their integration fight.

The decision came at a caucus of approximately 40 of the 72 members of the committee who will take formal action at a meeting here tomorrow if the segregation pledge is proposed, said a party leader who declined to be quoted by name.

National Committeeman Charles W. McKay Jr. of Sylacauga has proposed an oath which would bind candidates to support the state's segregation laws before they could run in the democratic primaries this spring.

Negroes as well as any others who refused to sign the pledge would be disqualified.

MIGHT NULLIFY PRIMARY

The party official who told the action at the caucus said there was no opposition to the segregation pledge as such but that most of the committee members felt it might bring a court test that could nullify the primary elections.

Rather than skirt the segregation issue entirely, however, committee members reportedly agreed to adopt a separate resolution endorsing Alabama's segregation laws as a matter of party policy.

That would enable Negroes to run as candidates without signing a segregation pledge and is designed to endorse racial separation without risking a court suit. A similar resolution was adopted four years ago.

He also said a committee majority agreed to readopt a controversial party loyalty pledge which disqualifies any prospective candidate who voted for President Eisenhower in 1956.

The oath, if re-enacted, will require candidates running in the primaries to sign a statement that they didn't oppose or vote against the Democratic ticket in the presidential election.

The committee session was called to fix rules and regulations for the May 6 party primary and the June 3 runoff. Matters like the segregation oath and loyalty pledge will be considered in writing the qualifications candidates must meet.

The disclosure that McKay would try to get the segregation oath embodied in the rules brought a warning from party chairman Roy Mayhall of Jasper, who said it might jepordize the party primary system.

McKay isn't a member of the state committee but he said he could get some member to offer the pledge.

NULLIFY PRIMARY

Recalling that the Supreme Court knocked out Texas' primary years ago, Mayhall, a circuit judge, said he feared a segregation oath for candidates might invite the courts to "nullify our entire primary."

The committee chairman didn't say it in so many words, but what he obviously had in mind was the possibility that a Negro might try to qualify without signing the oath, and then test it in court.

McKay insisted, however, that the party has a right to fix its own rules and that "any Negro who wants to can run if he signs the oath like anyone else."

The national committeeman, a member of the Alabama House of Representatives from Talladega County, pointed to the party loyalty oath which he is supporting. The Supreme Court has upheld that, and McKay said the state committee has as much right to require allegiance to segregation laws as party loyalty.

The loyalty oath also had its genesis in racial controversy. It was first written in 1952 to bind candidates for presidential elector to support the national party ticket. Two years later it was broadened to disqualify Democrats who voted for Eisenhower for his first term.

PREVENT REPETITION

Its purpose was to prevent a repetition of the famed 1948 party revolt when Alabama's 11 presidential electors, all Democrats, refused to support Harry Truman because of his civil rights program. They cast their votes instead for the Thurmond-Wright States Rights ticket.

Voters participating in the primaries this year will choose Democratic nominees for governor, lieutenant governor, the Legislature, all nine Alabama seats in the U.S. House of Representatives and lesser state and district offices.

At the same time they will elect a new Democratic Executive Committee whose members in turn will tell candidates what kind of pledge they must take in the 1960 presidential election.

Governor Vows To Steer Clear Of May Primary

Gov. James E. Folsom declared yesterday he was "absolutely sure" he would not become involved in the governor's race nor would he endorse any of the candidates.

In his first press conference in more than three months, Folsom answered a barrage of questions, most of them related to politics and state revenue.

Folsom had said earlier he intended to go to the Holy Land during the campaign, but he hedged a bit on this promise yesterday.

"I'd sure like to go to the Holy Land," Folsom said, "but any place where a governor can go to get out of state politics is a holy place."

DOOR AJAR

While insisting he intended to divorce himself entirely from the race, Folsom did leave the door slightly ajar.

"Of course I'd probably have something to say if some of the candidates advocate repealing part of my program," Folsom said. "In fact, if they convince me that something I've done is wrong I might even call a special session and repeal it myself."

Folsom was also asked to comment on Atty. Gen. John Patterson's charges of graft and corruption in state government. Patterson has made such charges in his campaign for governor.

"I haven't read anything about that, so I wouldn't be able to comment," Folsom said. "About this graft and corruption I wouldn't comment except to say I never practiced law in Phenix City."

DENIES SUPPORT

The governor also denied he was privately supporting the candidacy of his House floor leader, Rep. George Hawkins of Gadsden, in his bid for the governorship.

"He came by one morning and I introduced him to the cabinet, but that was when he was speaking on the amendment election last December," Folsom said. "There wasn't any politics mentioned."

As to who is going to win, Folsom replied:

"How many have qualified? You say 14. Well, one of the 14 is gonna win if all 14 live long enough."

On the matter of state finances Folsom admitted tax collections were down but said he was still confident there would be no proration.

When asked if he felt "deep concern about the revenue, Folsom replied "I sure don't have any deep concern about the revenue, but maybe the press does."

The governor also fanned the special session rumors yesterday, admitting there is "always a possibility" he might call such a session.

"I haven't heard any of the candidates for governor take a positive stand on reapportionment or a constitutional convention," Folsom said. "And I see no likelihood any o fthem will be elected who takes such a stand. So I might have to call a session for that purpose myself."

TO ATTEND DINNER

Hitting lightly on other subjects, Folsom said he planned to go to Washington this weekend to attend a dinner honoring former President Harry Truman, whom Folsom called "one of the greatest Americans living."

He again predicted a Democratic victory in the 1960 presidential election, adding that "I hope it is one of my colleagues, a Democratic governor."

Asked for comment on the new moon in orbit—Redstone's Explorer—Folsom indicated he didn't like to talk about it too much.

"It was built at Redstone just 35 air miles from my home, and that is just too close for comfort," Folsom said. "Redstone is the No. 1 target. That's too close to talk about."

Todd To Hold Rally Tonight At Clanton

Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd moves his campaign for governor into central Alabama tonight with a "Friendship Rally" at Clanton.

It will be the fourth such rally Todd has conducted since opening his campaign from his hometown in Russellville, Jan. 17.

Other meeting have been held at Geraldine and Carbon Hill.

Appearing with the commissioner will be Walley Fowler, the Sons of Song and the Chuck Wagon Gang.

It will be the first time Todd has ventured out of his home territory of North Alabama and his last major rally before taking to the stump for a heavy speaking schedule.

Jimmy Faulkner, taking a breather after a series of 12 "Homefolks Parties," announced yesterday he would resume his active campaigning March 15 with a rally at Clanton.

Plans are already in the making for a big turnout for this event, Faulkner said, with 500-car motorcades expected from both Birmingham and Montgomery. The rally will be held outdoors at the Clanton airport.

Two other major rallies are scheduled Friday night and another Saturday afternoon.

C. C. (Jack) Owen opens his campaign in Athens tomorrow night, while Atty. Gen. John Patterson has a rally set for Sheffield.

Saturday in Troy Judge George C. Wallace has a rally scheduled. His campaign headquarters announced yesterday that Wallace's statewide kickoff rally would be held at Montgomery City Auditorium March 7.

Meanwhile, Selma's Winston Gullatte, making his second bid for governor, released his 21 - point platform yesterday in which he promised a "positive, Christian approach to promoting racial harmony and good will."

Vowing that there would be no integration while he is governor, Gullatte suggested the creation of a bi-racial council to work out the problems that arise.

On other issues, Gullatte promised to work for the repeal of the right-to-work law, promised old folks $80 a month, declared his approval of jury service for women, a lowering of the voting age to 18, and reapportionment of the Legislature.

Third party man in race for governor

BY FRED TAYLOR
News staff writer

Alabama's 14 Democratic primary candidates for the gubernatorial nomination today were challenged by a third party aspirant—John F. Duggar III, Montgomery architect and staunch segregationist.

He filed with the secretary of state's office as representing the Segregation Party of Alabama "to oppose whoever becomes the Democratic nominee for governor in the November general election. A Democrat will be chosen in the May 6 and June 3 primary elections.

DUGGAR DECLARED if "a strong segregationist" wins the Democratic gubernatorial nomination he would withdraw as a third party aspirant. However, he said that if anyone of the so-called moderates wins the Democratic sweepstakes, then he would fight it out with him in November. He did not name any of the "so-called moderates."

Third party or independent candidates must qualify before the May 6 Democratic primary, under Alabama law.

Duggar, 36, native of Hope Hull, near Montgomery, was one of the presidential elector candidates on an independent slate opposing the Democratic and Republican candidates for the 11 presidential-elector places in 1956. The Democrats won.

THE SECRETARY of state's office waited on a ruling it requested from the attorney general regarding qualification papers filed by the Segregationist Party candidate for governor. Legal question raised by the secretary of state was:

Did the fact that the Segregation Party withdrew its slate of presidential elector candidates two years ago affect the official status of the party? Three of the 11 Segregation Party candidates pulled out of the race in 1956. The remaining eight and three new ones then ran as independents.

THIS DEVELOPMENT came as five of the 14 candidates for the Democratic nomination for governor addressed a political rally staged last night at Redmont Hotel by Birmingham's Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Addressing the Jaycees and their wives were John Crommelin, Karl Harrison, W. E. Dodd, Laurie Battle and Shearen Elebash, speaking in that order. They briefly outlined their views.

And all four candidates for lieutenant governor—State Sens. E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa, Sam Engelhardt Jr. of Macon and Albert Boutwell of Jefferson, and former State Rep. Robert T Butler of Clay and Montgomery, in that order—spoke briefly.

IN ANOTHER development, Raymond M. Arnott of Bessemer, retired motel operator, jumped into the race for secretary of state to boost the number of qualifiers to five. Already running for this post are State Rep. Pete Mathews of Clay, Mrs. Bettye Frink of Birmingham, Mrs. Eloise Stewart and Roy T. King, both of Montgomery.

Meanwhile, Jimmy Faulkner was climaxing a series of 12 "home folks" rallies before a turnout estimated at 3000 in the Holt National Guard Armory. Sgt. W. B. Butler, in charge of the armory, made the crowd estimate. The gospel-singing Blackwood Brothers helped warm up the throng.

Faulkner, who said it was the largest crowd for any of his "home folks" meetings since his first rally at Robertsdale, in his home county of Baldwin, last August.

HE REEMPHASIZED his pledge to maintain segregation, build up the schools, boost industrial development to help provide "more pocket dollars" for Alabamians and to see that the aged needy get $50 a month pensions.

Faulkner returned to Birmingham for an "open house" for the ladies, which began at noon in his newly-opened Jefferson County campaign headquarters at 108 20th-st, n. Raiford Ellis is his county campaign chairman, with Rush Lester co-chairman and Mrs. Amos Culp chairman of the women's division.

Faulkner and Judge George Wallace of Clayton drew the fire of Crommelin, who asserted they "are members of Foots Clement's (Marc Ray Clement of Tuscaloosa) political gang in Alabama."

Crommelin rapped Alabama newspapers, assailing two or three editors in particular. And he charged that there is "a Communist-Jewish conspiracy to control the world, with headquarters in Israel and the UN."

HARRISON DECLARED, if elected governor, he would see that at least one new industry is located in each of the 67 counties.

Harrison, who said he would "make it easier for industries to come to Alabama," bore down hard for reapportionment, health and school measures and plans to help the aged needy.

Dodd, in discussing his stand for segregation, said Negroes don't want to mix with white people, and they're not going to." A Bessemer dairy farmer and millwright, Dodd said, "There's a lot of cussing and discussing of industry, but the way things are going, the farmer is going to be left out in the cold."

Battle promised if elected governor, he would name a woman to his cabinet, saying "It's my aim to give women a more direct voice and influence in state affairs." He said he would ask outstanding women's organizations to select a woman for such appointment.

HE SAID HE would not try to outbid other candidates in providing aid for the aged needy, but "I will do my level best for our elder citizens."

Elebash got a laugh when he told the Jaycees "I love you and I want you to love me." He added that he would offer the Lord's Prayer, and the 10 Commandments as part of his platform, saying "attack that, if you will."

He stressed his stand for segregation and said "nowhere in the world has the Negro made more progress than here—under the system worked out by our fathers and forefathers. We shall continue the progress we have made with the white and Negro race working side by side."

Sen. Skidmore said if elected lieutenant governor, he would stand for the same things he had as senator for eight years.

"I am a Democrat—a loyal Democrat," said Skidmore. "I was a loyal Democrat in 1952 and in 1956. I am a Democrat in season and out of season."

The Tuscaloosa senator said Alabama would face "some weighty problems" in next four years, as he stressed his stand for maintaining segregation and declared "we must resist coercive forces from outside the state unhesistatingly and uncompromisingly."

SEN. ENGELHARDT, who said "I have always been a good Democrat," referred to "racial problems" in his home county of Macon, adding "I don't want you people in Jefferson County to have to face the problems we face."

He said he had treated "all segments of our population fairly" and "I have always fought waste, extravagance and skullduggery." He said he had sponsored and co-sponsored numerous segregation measures, emphasizing his stand for retention of the right-to-work law.

SEN. BOUTWELL, a former president of the Junior Chamber, commended each of the other three candidates for lieutenant governor, saying "I don't think the people need to worry about who is elected.

"I've always been a good Democrat," Boutwell said, in pointing out that he had twice served as member of the State Democratic Executive Committee. "I've always fought for and stood up for segregation. And I've insisted on rigid economy in government and tought for reapportionment, good roads and good health and education programs."

Butler, who formerly represented Clay County in the House and who is now superintendent of the Masonic Home at Montgomery, emphasized his stand for segregation, reapportionment and more aid for schools. He said he had worked to improve the teacher retirement and tenure laws.

"I did not vote for the right-to-work law and I'll do everything I can to repeal it," said Butler.

Elebash Opens With Promise To Follow Up Folsom Gains

BOB INGRAM
Advertiser Staff Writer

SELMA, Ala., Feb. 20—Sheldon Elebash of Montgomery opened his campaign for governor here tonight with a promise to carry on the programs initiated by Gov. James E. Folsom.

In an unexpected move, Elebash shattered precedent by commending Folsom for the progressive programs he has initiated in the state during his current administration.

"During the past 12 years Alabama has made much progress, but during the past four years, the state has made tremendous progress in industrial development, road construction and river development," Elebash said. "If elected governor I shall carry on these programs as developed by Gov. James E. Folsom."

Elebash, a Montgomery jeweler and entertainer, poked fun at his 13 opponents, describing them as "nice fellows who have platforms that are 'separate but equal'."

"Some of them will promise you a little more than the other, a little bit bigger piece of that old moon pie, but you all know it's the same old moon pie," Elebash said.

In his kickoff rally at the junior high auditorium, Elebash provided his own entertainment, quipping that he was a poor candidate, and could not afford "those high proced Tennessee-Texas entertainers."

5 Mobile Citizens Qualify For Executive Committee Race

MOBILE, Ala. (ANP)—Five Negro citizens have qualified as candidates seeking election to the 84-member Mobile County Democratic Executive Committee, it was disclosed Monday by Chairman Charles M. Bancroft.

The latest to qualify was Calvin E. Powell, retired school principal, who entered the committee race Wednesday.

Prof. Powell, militant NAACP worker before the organization was put under an injunction forbidding its operation in Alabama, is his initial bid for public office. He hopes to be elected to one of the three posts in the predominantly Negro 10th ward.

Other Negroes who qualified as entrants for the Democratic Committee election are Jessie Thomas, labor leader, 20th ward; Conrad Deane, also a labor leader, Ward 22; and Alex L. Herman and Clarence H. Montgomery, local businessman, Ward 10.

Herman and Montgomery were elected as committeemen in the old 7th ward, now the 10th, four years ago. They were the first two Negroes to win public office in Alabama by the ballot box since the Reconstruction period, and are now seeking reelection.

The 10th ward, with more than 2100 voters, is entitled to three members on the County Democratic Executive Committee. Rules set by the committee allow a ward one committeeman for every 700 voters.

A statewide Democratic primary election will be held May 6.

1958 Campaign

The deadline for qualifying for the May 6, 1958 primary is a thing of the past in Alabama. Now, the campaigning will begin at a faster, nosier, and more earnest pace.

Usually Alabama statewide, and some local elections are marred and narrowed by single-issue politics. Alabama is part of a changing world, one of new needs, higher longings, and nobler challenges. No single-issue candidate would seem to meausure up to what Alabama needs in these dynamic days.

Yet during the campaigning, it is to be hoped that these will be candidates who are broader than one-issue politics. Alabama is not so primitive, nor backward, nor simple that this state's affairs can be summed up in a solitary issue. What is needed are candidates with a program that will help to put Alabama in the front ranks of enlightened, attractive, and progressive states.

Voters should, we think, begin to check the records of the candidates, examine their programs (not merely platforms), analyse their abilities and experiences, and weigh their words. Windy, hysterical, bitter emotionalism offers nothing constructive. One day some of our civic leaders will perhaps initiate a campaign for better candidates to run for public office. Until better candidates appear the voters will have to decide, it seems, between the lesser of the evils.

We hope that Alabama voters will see some constructive, positive, mature campaigning based upon the economic, industrial and general welfare issues which face this state. Let there be high-class debate and discussion of basic, even irritating, issues. Light, not loudness, is needed.

Elmore County Votes For Winner 10 to 1

34a(2) Ala

By C. M. Stanley
Editor-in-Chief, The Alabama Journal

THE ODDS ARE 10 to 1 that the candidate for Governor who carries Elmore County in the May primary will carry the state.

Through 40 years and 11 state elections for Governor Elmore County has failed but one time to vote as the state votes. It voted for Brandon in 1918 when Kilby won, but Kilby beat Brandon in the state by only 3,404 votes.

STANLEY

Elmore County can therefore be regarded as Alabama's political barometer in naming a Governor.

As goes Elmore, so goes Alabama. It was true in 1914 when the state's total vote was 144,000 and Elmore's total vote was only 2,256. And it was true in 1954 when 518,000 votes were counted in the state and Elmore counted 7,635. We have compiled and present today the official figures covering the last forty years.

Voting Etiquette, Felons & Great Men

By J. Fred Thornton
Associate Editor, The Advertiser

IS IT A SIN to lie about how you vote? Is voting against a man something to be ashamed of? When a candidate solicits your vote should you tell him what you really think of him or be polite? These and other matters of election etiquette arise at this time.

THORNTON

As a general proposition, I believe in being open and above board; some of my friends have accused me of being too much that way for my own good. But there are limits. We do not go around saying what we actually think about everything; if we did, this world would be a wild and wooly place indeed.

The bulwark of a free people is the voter's right to privacy.

That right is embodied in our secret ballot. It is the difference between democracy and a dictatorship where people are herded to the polls and voted like cattle in mock elections. There are times when a man may expose himself to embarrassment and injury, to wholly unwarranted reprisals, by making his vote known. It is perfectly all right to solicit, appeal to and try to persuade a voter. But to pin him down, to demand how he will vote, is an unwarranted intrusion upon his privacy; he is justified in defeating such a presumptuous demand by any means.

Don't Overdo It

I DO NOT think a voter should lie without provocation, like going to a candidate voluntarily and making a false promise of support. Also, the privilege should be restricted to honest citizens with no axe to grind. The man who takes an active part in politics, who expects to get a job or some other direct, personal reward, should stand or fall with his man and not try to ride two or more horses. Unfortunately, the latter kind are often the biggest liars, while the simple, gullible citizen goes around popping off and perhaps incriminating himself in the eyes of the mighty. Of course, if some really great issue arises, a man should stand up and be counted, but that does not happen often; usually it is nothing more inspiring than a clash between individuals or rival bands of treasury raiders.

In covering up, there is more involved than protecting the voter's interests; there is the matter of good taste and simple kindness to your fellow man. Suppose you are approached by a candidate running, say for a seat in the Legislature. He may impress you as a man whose idea of statesmanship does not extend beyond trading his vote for patronage, or promoting another round of salary boosts for the boys at the courthouse or the city hall. He may even have a record that indicates as much. But there he stands with proferred card extended, respectfully asking your support. In such a case a flat rebuff would sound rude and churlish; you are justified in being as gentle as possible.

Records And Obsessions

THE PRACTICE of voting against a candidate is widely condemned, but there are times when it is entirely correct. If a candidate already has a public record, and a good one, that is a powerful argument for giving him your vote. If his record is bad, a refusal is clearly indicated. In the latter case, and especially if his opponent is a newcomer who makes a good impression but with no record of his own as yet, a voter may be fully justified in casting what is in the main a negative vote. It is true that some voters carry this too far; there are some men who take the negative side of any issue, even to the extent of voting against any incumbent no matter how good, which is of course absurd.

It is, I trust, needless to say that it is well to turn thumbs down on the candidate who is not his own man, who will be dictated to by some group, clique, or individual. In this connection I want to point out that a man can be oversold even on a good cause. When we speak of "special interests" we think of something objectionable. But some special interests are good things in themselves. The danger is that a man, especially one in legislative or high executive position, may get so wrapped up in and committed to one worthy cause that he neglects all others. I always fight shy of the candidate with a pet project, like providing a home for abandoned housecats, which shows signs of becoming an obsession with him. The need is for one capable of grasping the whole picture and taking a well-rounded view of the general welfare; such a one is hard to find.

Criminals And Victims

AN ENGLISH newspaper, the London Star, has come up with a suggestion that is different. It wants the government to pay compensation to people who are set upon and injured by criminals. The paper mentioned the case of a man who, a year ago, was in good health, had a fine job, was happily married and his success apparently assured. He was wantonly attacked by three thugs, kicked and beaten into insensibility; his health and career were hopelessly ruined. Two of the gangsters are in prison, but that does not help the broken man or his destitute family, who got nothing.

The above suggestion appears hopelessly old fogey and reactionary, in an era in which the emphasis is all on reforming and coddling criminals. But why not? Since we harp so much on the responsibility of 'society" to the criminal, why not a little solicitude for the honest men and women who are his victims? We might start by providing government compensation for victims of paroled convicts. A certain number of persons are bound to be robbed, murdered or raped every year by paroled felons; that is part of the price we pay for being progressive and enlightened and we should take such things in stride, though I imagine it would be hard to shrug it off if it happened to a member of one's own family. Still, since the paroled prisoner is released ahead of time and is a ward of the state, "society" bears a greater than usual responsibility here and might well pay off.

Reward Of Greatness

I HAVE never had any hallucinations about being a great man, and have never even wanted to be one. My wants are few and easily met: A wife who realizes how lucky she is, a few tried and trusted friends; my books, a garden, a shotgun, a dog, an occasional hunting trip. But looking back I have decided that I have made a big mistake. It is too late now to do anything about it, but if I had my life to live over again I would strive to achieve greatness. I would aim high, not to win wealth, or the applause of the multitude, but for a reason I have never been given before.

I would like to be a great man so I could be lazy and stupid without being called to account or blamed in any way, in fact without anyone even daring to call attention to my boners. That is the true, dazzling reward of greatness as I see it.

Voter Interest Is In Local Races

Advertiser 1-3-B Montgomery Ala.

By Bob Ingram

NINE WEEKS from Tuesday the voters of Alabama will elect a new governor.

At this late date it might be presumed that the race is taking shape, that one candidate or another is beginning to pull away from the field. News 1-3 2-38

INGRAM

Nothing seems further from the truth. If anything, the race appears to grow more unsettled by the day.

In traveling through Alabama and talking politics with people in all walks of life one fact is strikingly apparent—a great number of voters, perhaps a majority of them, have not as yet given the governor's race much more than a passing thought.

It is difficult to find a voter who has decided who he will support and who is determined to stick with his choice, win or lose.

Politics is being discussed everywhere, but the interest is local rather than state. The average citizen is far more interested in the legislative race in his own county, or perhaps the contest for probate judge or sheriff. At the moment, it seems, most voters don't give a tinker's damn about the governor's race.

Wrong Year

34a (2) Ala -

AN EXTREME example of this lack of interest came from a Heflin merchant who was asked about the governor's race. He replied:

"Ole Big Jim'll be hard to beat."

Maybe so in '62 but not in '58.

For want of a better scapegoat the blame for this indifference must be laid at the feet of the candidates. They've done little to excite themselves, much less the voters.

The emphasis to date has been to entertain rather than to arouse the voter. It's a safe bet nowadays that if you hear a hillbilly band or gospel quartet a candidate for governor is bound to pop up with a promise of a $100 a month for the old folks.

And the money these git-fiddlers and rock 'n' roll gospel singers get is enough to make Auburn's engineering professors break into tears.

The Gold Is in the North

BUT THE significant fact still remains that there is still in existence a tremendous bloc of voters in Alabama who have no idea who they will support. And the direction they take will to a large extent determine who the next governor of Alabama will be.

For the most part these uncommitted voters are to the north. The lines of battle have been vaguely drawn in a number of South Alabama counties, but nowhere in the Tennessee Valley is this the case.

It is generally conceded, though perhaps even this is a dangerous concession, that Judge George C. Wallace and Atty. Gen. John Patterson will run strong in the Black Belt and Wiregrass counties.

There are at least two good arguments in support of this contention—both live in these sections of the state and both have segregation records which appeal to a majority of the Black Belt and Wiregrass voters.

For much the same reasons Jimmy Faulkner and Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd are out front in northwest Alabama. Todd is a product of Franklin County, while Faulker was born and reared in neighboring Lamar.

These four candidates—Faulkner, Patterson, Todd and Wallace—have been mentioned here for a particular reason.

If nothing else is agreed upon in this race, there is a near unanimous belief that a run-off will be necessary.

And in no case has a candidate other than the four mentioned above been suggested as making the run-off. This is not to imply that Harrison, Hawkins, Battle or Owen won't make the grade, but as yet they have not been considered as serious contenders.

Slowing the Front-Runners

IN FAIRNESS to this group, however, it should be pointed out that none of them began any serious campaigning until this weekend, while Faulkner, Wallace, Todd and Patterson have been moving at full force for weeks.

Some 60 days ago it was fairly well agreed that Faulkner, the best known candidate in the race and runner-up in 1954, and Wallace, the most energetic of the lot, were leading the field by a detectable if not substantial margin. Further, there appeared to be a slight gap between these two, with Faulkner out in front.

There seems to be no such gap today. Patterson's advances were at the expense of Wallace, while Todd, George Hawkins and Karl Harrison cut into Faulkner's strength.

Of the late-comers, Todd has probably made the most headway. He has come from far back in the field into a challenging position.

The 12,000 crowd at Russellville, more than any one thing, gave him the boost he needed. There are many who feel Todd's strength is vastly overrated, and perhaps it is, but there's no question that he is much more of a factor today than a few weeks back.

Patterson is and will remain the mystery candidate in the race. Nobody knows how well he will do. He has never run a political race before so there are no past election records which might give a clue to his strong and week points.

But his name continues to be mentioned in surprising frequency throughout Alabama. A majority still looks for a Faulkner-Wallace run-off, but Patterson has been listed as a possible second primary contender more often than Todd.

Ginning for Todd

ALABAMA'S COTTON ginners are being called on to aid financially in the election of Todd.

Ed Mauldin of Town Creek, a towering, remarkably handsome guy who looks like anything but the dirt farmer he is, has made the pitch for funds for Todd.

In letters to ginners in all parts of Alabama, Mauldin has suggested that each of them should contribute to the campaign on a graduated basis, depending on the amount of cotton they gin.

"I was talking to a group of ginners the other day and they felt we should all put in from $100 to $300 each, depending on the volume of cotton ginned, stored, etc," Mauldin suggested in his letter.

Mauldin is one of the leaders of the Cotton Hardship Committee, a group which has been active for several years seeking to improve the farm problems of the state. He long ago placed his trust in Todd.

Family Affairs

IT IS NOT unusual for several members of the same family to be running for office at the same time, and it's true this year as before.

Take the Wallace clan for example. Judge George Wallace is running for governor, his brother Jack is running for judgeship George is vacating. S. Kirke Adams of Ozark, an uncle of Jack and George, is running for probate judge in Dale, and Charles Adams, a brother of S. Kirke, is running for the Legislature from Houston.

Probably the most diversified political family is the Nolen clan. Probate Judge W. B. Nolen is running for reelection in Clay, son Wilbur is running for Congress from the Second District, while another son Jack is running for the Legislature from Fayette County.

Legislative Field Cut As Carter Falls To Qualify

Advertiser Ala Montgomery April 3-5-38

The field of candidates running for the Legislature from Montgomery County was reduced by one yesterday when it was learned one of the aspirants had failed to qualify with Democratic Committee Chairman Roy Mayhall.

A. L. (Ace) Carter filed papers here Saturday with the Secretary of State to run for Place No. 1 in the House, but later decided not to drive to Jasper to qualify.

"I left the Capitol at noon Saturday to go to Jasper but it was so late and all that I just decided not to go," Carter explained yesterday. "I had already gassed up the car and was ready to go, but it was such a long drive I just decided against it."

As the deadline for qualifying was Saturday midnight, Carter will not be a candidate in the May primary.

Still in the race for Place No. 1 are four other candidates—incumbent Rep. Joe M. Dawkins and William E. (Senator) Cleghorn, J. S. (Johnnie) Collier and Alfred Goldthwaite.

The Governor Save One

THE CANDIDATES for lieutenant governor make it a more fascinating race in some respects than that for governor.

Advertiser

The lieutenant governor has two chief duties: presiding over the sessions of the Alabama Senate and appointing its committees and (2) discreetly but keenly keeping an eye on the health of the governor and the amount of his air travel.

P 4 A 34a(2)

Candidates for lieutenant governor are:

"Tiger" Thompson, Bessemer Negro, graduate of Xavier University, former pugilist and now radio announcer. Whence and why came Thompson into the race is not yet known. The chances are that his candidacy is displeasing to Dr. King and other Negro leaders. The box returns in the case of Thompson will be interesting for the light they throw on whether he gets the vote of his people, a large part or little of the vote. The King leadership might campaign against Thompson to avert an example of Negro bloc voting.

Ace Carter, an extremist white supremacist, is another candidate.

A third one is State Senator Sam Engelhardt of Macon County, who begins his White Citizen Council speeches, "Hello, white folks."

Yet another is State Senator E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa, who is more identified with the education fund filibuster and marriage to organized labor than with any viewpoint on race relations.

Finally, there is State Senator Albert Boutwell of Jefferson, one of the hardest working, most seasoned and versatile of our legislators. He is genial and never says anything crude or showy about race relations, but is nevertheless the chief sponsor of the most effective legislation Alabama has enacted to sidestep the Supreme Court school ruling.

There is no reason for hasty prophecies about the course of this race. One only is ventured. If there is a runoff and "Tiger" Thompson is eliminated, the two candidates running it off will not engage in the usual cajolery and maneuver to win the endorsement of the eliminated.

Colonel Sibyl Commanding

- Go to jail to preserve segregation;
- Arrest the FBI to preserve segregation;
- Die to preserve segregation.

These positions have already been taken and patented by candidates for governor.

Candidate Jack Owen had to get himself a suitably Desperate Ambrose position and he didn't do bad, not bad at all.

To preserve segregation, Owen has proposed to deputize every white man in the state as a highway patrolman and in turn discharge the National Guard to prevent it from being federalized to force race mixing in schools.

Owen's idea certainly beats going to jail" or "dying," and obviously is safer than putting the cuffs on the FBI. And possibly the proposal will attract many men, for any male citizen would be proud to wear one of those nifty blue and gray highway patrol uniforms. Think what they would be with the addition of a cavalry sword or a swagger stick.

The weakness of the Owen statesmanship is that it totally excludes the ladies. This is a time when women demand and get citizenship parity with men. They are being elected to state office in droves, the League of Women Voters makes more racket than the American Legion and Young Democrats.

They, too, will wish to be highway patrolmen, with skirts of blue and gray. Owen had better add a WAC division pledge and promise to make some snappy number like Sybil Pool the colonel in command.

If An Alabama Governor Became Disabled

HAD THE U.S. Constitution been as explicit in one respect as the Constitution of Alabama, there would be no occasion for the irresolute debate now centered on Presidential disability.

Such questions as when is the President disabled, the process by which his duties devolve on the Vice President, when and whether he might regain office once surrendered and how this disability is certified—these would be largely answered if the Alabama model were followed.

The Alabama Constitution is quite explicit on gubernatorial disability:

In case of impeachment of the governor, his absence from the state for more than twenty days, unsoundness of mind, or other disability, the power and authority of the office shall, until the governor is acquitted, returns to the state, or is restored to his mind, or relieved from other disability, devolve in the order herein named upon the lieutenant governor, president pro tem of the Senate, speaker of the House of Representatives, attorney-general, state auditor, secretary of state and state treasurer.

WHEN IT appears that the governor is of "unsound mind," any two officers named in the succession order above, but "not next in succession to the office of governor," may request the Supreme Court "to ascertain the mental condition of the governor. . . and if he is adjudged to be of unsound mind, to so decree. . ."

In this event the lieutenant governor, or the officer next in line, shall perform the duties of governor until he "is restored to his mind."

If there is a question whether the governor's disability has been removed, that, too, is for the Supreme Court to decide.

The Constitution thus is clear on the matter of mental unsoundness; physical disability is something else. The course of action is not prescribed in that event, the Constitution framers apparently holding that a man's physical impairment, however severe, is not so important as mental condition. It could be assumed, however, that disability of any sort would be for the Supreme Court to determine.

JUDGE WALTER B. JONES, who was an "honorary page" at the 1901 constitutional convention, and whose father was chairman of the committee which wrote the section on the executive branch, says to his knowledge the section has never been challenged in court and only invoked once.

The one exception was in the administration of Gov. William D. Jelks, who was out of the state for several months in 1904 and 1905 recuperating from an illness. During that time, Lt. Gov. Russell M. Cunningham acted as governor.

Peter Brannon, director of the State Department of Archives and History, also remembers only Jelks.

Alabama's first governor, Dr. William Wyatt Bibb, who fell from a horse and was injured soon after his inauguration in 1820, considered resigning, but his brother Thomas, president of the senate, talked him out of it. Dr. Bibb wrote to his old friend, Charles Tate, first federal judge in Alabama:

> The business of office. . . with his [Thomas'] aid and that of the secretary of state being discharged as much to the public advantage as if I were well, without giving me any trouble, except signing my name, I have yielded to his wishes and if possible will continue in office.

Dr. Wyatt died shortly thereafter and his brother became governor.

Patterson cages crime, NAACP, 'Sharks' for tour

Campaigners for Gubernatorial Candidate John Patterson are getting ready to put "Crime and Corruption," along with "Loan Sharks" and "The NAACP" on display in Northwest Alabama.

These three, against which Patterson is campaigning, will be caged on a float in a Patterson-for-Governor caravan that will tour that section of the state preliminary to a rally at 6 p.m. Saturday, at the Bankhead School at Cardova.

THE CARAVAN, which will be led by a motorcycle escort, will leave Birmingham that morning and travel through Sumiton, Jasper, Double Springs, Haleyville, Gold Mine, Boston, Brilliant, Winfield, Eldridge, Carbon Hill, Townley, Oakman and Parrish.

Atty. Gen. Patterson, who will address the Cardova rally, also will make schort talks at Jasper, Haleyville, Carbon Hill and Winfield to reemphasize his program for governor.

House record shows—

Wallace has stiffened views on segregation

BY HUGH W. SPARROW, News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 1—Circuit Judge George Wallace, now running for governor in a substantial measure on a segregation platform, apparently has stiffened his views on the subject since he was in the Legislature.

During his service as Barbour County House member in 1951, the official House journal reveals, Judge Wallace voted to kill a pro-segregation amendment to the education appropriation bill.

The amendment was offered by Sen. Sam Engelhardt, and was backed by the Black Belt's House members almost to the man. Judge Wallace voted to table the amendment.

HERE, IN the official words of the House journal, is what happened:

"Mr. Engelhardt offered the following amendment to the bill, H 263, as amended:

Amend Sec. 15 of H. B. 263 by adding the following:

"Provided, that if the Supreme Court of the United States renders any judgment or decision which effectually nullifies the requirements of Art. XIV of the constitution respecting separate schools for white and colored children, this act shall be of no further force or effect, and it shall be unlawful for any person or officer to allot or pay any appropriation made herein after such judgment or decision has been rendered.

"On motion by Mr. Harrison of Shelby, the amendment offered by Mr. Engelhardt was laid upon the table; yeas 66, nays 25."

THE JOURNAL went on to identify those voting for and against the motion to table. Judge Wallace's name was listed among the 66 favoring tabling.

A check of the 1951 House journal reveals other aspects of Judge Wallace's record.

Late in January, 1951, the Legislature was called into special session. It was to consider legislation setting up a joint legislative committee to make a top-to-bottom investigation of the release of hundreds of hardened criminals from Alabama prisons on pardons and paroles in 1949 and 1950.

When the investigating committee bill finally reached the House floor, according to the journal, Judge Wallace became active. He waged a stubborn, but losing, fight first to block passage of the bill and later on to weaken it.

The bill, however, was passed. An investigation which brought to light full details of the sordid story of the so-called pardon and parole scandals of 1949-50 was conducted.

Later on, during the regular session, the House passed a bill recommended by the "investigating committee. It sought to strengthen the pardon and parole law so that a repetition of what happened in 1949 and 1950 could not happen again.

Judge Wallace, the record showed, voted against the bill.

DURING THE PAST 30 or more years many new and increased taxes have been imposed. But during the same period there has been but one bill passed giving the general public the benefit of a tax reduction. That was in 1951 when the Legislature passed the bill reducing the automobile license tag cost to $3.

Judge Wallace voted against the bill when it came up for House passage.

THE RECORD discloses also that when the House was considering the bill increasing the sales tax from 2 to 3 cents, Judge Wallace sought to put over several amendments. Some of them proposed to earmark certain amounts of the proposed new revenue for salary increases for classroom teachers.

When the bill itself came up for a final vote, Judge Wallace voted against it.

A previous story listed his voting on important or key measures in the 1949 and 1950 sessions.

This article deals exclusively with how Judge Wallace voted in 1951, which was his last session as a lawmaker.

Voting records of other candidates who have served in the Legislature will be given in later articles. They include former Sen. Jimmy Faulkner of Baldwin, Rep. George Hawkins of Etowah, and Rep. Karl Harrison of Shelby.

The voting record of Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd, when he represented Franklin, Marion and Colbert Counties in the 1951 and 1953 Senate, already has been given.

THE JOURNAL shows that Judge Wallace answered present on each opening roll call during the 1951 organizational and special session, and also during the regular session.

Bills he offered were, in some instances, similar to those he sponsored in 1947 and 1949.

He sponsored again legislation providing educational benefits to certain disabled veterans and dependents and survivors of veterans.

He offered bills prohibiting numbering of ballots, authorizing confiscation and destruction of pistols after a person has been convicted of carrying concealed weapons and prohibiting possession and transportation of lottery paraphernalia.

JUDGE WALLACE voted to raise pay of most of the Persons administration cabinet officers from $5700 to $10,000.

During the regular session Judge Wallace was present but did not vote on a resolution which would have raised pay of legislators from $20 to $25 a day.

He did not vote on a motion to elect members of the Building Commisison and members of the Committee on Public Accounts.

Judge Wallace voted to increase the gas tax in Montgomery 1 cent a gallon. He refrained from voting on H. 33 providing for the arrest and eradication of contagious and infectious diseases of animals.

He did not vote on a bill making a pecial appropriation of $10,000 for the Milk Control Board, or on H. 189 providing for payment of license taxes on a monthly declining basis.

He voted to reduce the powers and duties of justices of the peace. Although present, Wallace did not vote on H. 36, amending the Constitution to provide a state bonus for World War veterans.

The judge did not vote on S. 18 regulating operations of livestock markets, and he refrained from voting on H. 241 promoting the poultry industry.

SENATE BILL 49, proposing a penalty on "Peeping Toms," received his favorable vote.

On a House Joint Resolution calling for relief from federal income taxation he refrained from voting.

When the House was considering a bill raising pay of all county commissioners, Judge Wallace voted for an amendment increasing the amount of the boost. When the bill came up for passage he did not vote.

He voted for all amendments to H. 325 regulating insurance brokers and salesmen. On the bill itself he voted "no."

Judge Wallace voted for H. 274 doubling cost of automobile drivers' licenses and he tried to get the House ways and means committee to make an immediate report to the House on H. 511, adding a 3 per cent tax on the retail price of alcoholic liquors.

Along with 72 others, Judge Wallace voted acceptance of a major amendment to H. 277, increasing and extending the powers of the barber commission. But on passage, he refrained from voting.

Also he did not vote on H. 427 proposing a heavier penalty for those found guilty of driving motor vehicles while under drivers' license suspension.

THE JUDGE did not vote on H. 61 providing legal counsel for the chief examiner of public accounts, or on H. 159 requiring all foreign corporations doing business in Alabama to maintain an office in this state.

On a bill requiring the listing in each county of all persons receiving public assistance Judge Wallace refrained from voting on it. Also he did not vote on H. 178 requiring parental consent for sons under 21 to wed.

A bill exempting from the sales tax merchandise sold by vending machines received a favorable vote from Judge Wallace.

On H. 773 proposing to reimburse ABC Board members of a former administration on a financial claim he did not vote.

Along with Reps. Hawkins of Etowah and Fite of Marion, Judge Wallace sponsored an amendment to the educational appropriation bill earmarking $600 each for across-the-board annual pay increase for school teachers.

Later he voted aye on an amendment sponsored by Reps. Miller and Hawkins of Etowah—along with virtually the entire House—giving teachers an annual pay increase of $300 a year.

ON ANOTHER OCCASION Judge Wallace voted against tabling HJR 95 calling for a "thorough investigation" of the financial polices of the Auburn and University of Alabama athletic departments. The resolution lost, 57 to 15.

On H. 908, exempting certain property from ad valorem taxation, Judge Wallace did not vote on an amendment exempting property of fraternal organizations.

During consideration of S. 413, Judge Wallace offered an amendment providing for a House of 173 members with no county having fewer than two members nor more than 14.

On H. 918, another bill relating to legislative reapportionment, Judge Wallace refrained from voting. Also he did not vote on H. 245, tightening the law on drivers licenses.

Judge Wallace voted against HJR 122 calling on Alabama's congressional delegation to oppose efforts of the Price Stabilization Office in Washington to reduce price of beef cattle.

He voted against pay raises for deputy circuit solicitors and the state superintendent of education. He did not vote on the bill raising pay of circuit solocitors.

Judge Wallace voted against an appropriation for the Alabama Real Estate Commission.

He was present but did not vote on H. 444, requiring the immunization of dogs against rabies.

Also he failed to vote on S. 284, increasing pay of court reporters.

Bills increasing pay of circuit judges and abolishing bills of exception received a negative vote from Judge Wallace.

Judge Wallace refrained from voting on H. 754 exempting from taxation crushed limestone when used for fertilizer. He did not vote on a bill making it a special offense to sell infected hogs.

Judge Wallace voted against indefinite postponement of S. 385 outlawing bargain sales of cigarets. He later refrained from voting when the bill was passed.

Suppose Tiger Wins

The Tallassee Tribune

BY EDICT of the Alabama State Democratic Executive Committee almost one half of the white citizens who voted in the 1954 general election were forbidden to qualify as candidates for office in the May 6 primary.

This comes about because these citizens either: (1) voted for Republican candidates, Messrs. Eisenhower and Nixon, or (2) did not vote at all, in effect, did not support the Democratic nominees, Messrs. Stevenson and Kefauver.

Many of the barred citizens have done more for Alabama and for the Alabama Democratic party over the years than a dozen party hacks the like of which are responsible for their disbarment.

So now comes one colored disc-jockey, name of Tiger Thompson, who has qualified for lieutenant-governor of the state of Alabama. He will run "subject to the action of the Democratic Primaries of May 6 and June 3, 1958."

Let us suppose that Thompson is nominated. And let us suppose a man of the stature of Donald Comer or Thomas W. Martin or Gessner McCorvey were to decide to oppose him in the general election. Where would you as a voter be? When you take the so-called "loyalty oath" you will be conscience bound to support Thompson against whoever would be the independent candidate in the general election.

We can hear the hue and cry now from the "loyalists." No, we would never do that. And why not?

If the new state committee to be elected is of the same stripe as the present one, there will be another path like the 1954 one. It will make it mandatory for you to pledge support long before the next Democratic National Convention to its standard bearer, be they Joe Louis, Martin Luther King

Scapsuds Williams, or the ghost of Joseph Stalin.

The best deal the average Alabama voter can make for himself is to support candidates for the committee who openly declare their unconditional opposition to such hog-tying. We hope to have their names and will publish them time and again so you will know the sheep from the goats.

Dignified Segregation Vowed By Wallace In Telecast Here

By BOB INGRAM

Circuit Judge George C. Wallace told an enthusiastic crowd at City Auditorium here last night that when he is elected governor "segregation shall be preserved with dignity and respect."

Bringing his campaign for governor into Montgomery for the first time, Wallace (without Minnie Pearl) attracted a crowd of approximately 1,500 into the muggy auditorium. Practically all 1,366 seats on the ground floor were occupied, while another 200 stood at the rear or sat in the balcony.

What the crowd might have lacked in numbers it more than made up in enthusiasm. For some 15 minutes before the statewide telecast began at 8 p.m. the crowd had rehearsed its cheers, whistles and applause. By the time Wallace walked down the aisle the audience was in a near frenzy of excitement.

Nobdy worked any harder at the rally than Wallace. He had 20 minutes of television time in which to deliver a 40-minute address. As a result he was forced to cast aside much of his prepared speech, while speeding through the rest at a breathless clip.

The crowd did little to help Wallace in the matter of television time. He was frequently interrupted by thundering ovations—to be exact, he was applauded 21 times in his 20-minute address.

Wallace was introduced by former Gov. Chauncey Sparks of Eufaula, who described the judge as the only candidate in the race "with the vision, courage direction and ability" to be governor.

Also speaking briefly were Mayor Leonard Beard of Sheffield, John E. Toomey of Mobile and Robert K. (Buster) Bell of Huntsville. The latter was an unsuccessful candidate for governor in 1950 and is now Wallace's campaign manager in Madison County.

The invocation was delivered by Lee Roy Ussery, prominent Montgomery insurance executive and a lay leader in the Methodist Church.

Scattered throughout the crowd were placards designating Wallace supporters from various counties throughout Alabama. Counties represented included Coffee, Pike, Henry, Coosa, Conecuh, Etowah, Barbour, Montgomery, Perry, Cullman, Macon, Lee, Jefferson, Mobile, Dale, Clay, Clarke, Monroe, Tallapoosa, Talladega, Butler, Lowndes, Bibb, Baldwin and Madison.

A Wallace campaign worker explained that Minnie Pearl was unable to be present due to inclement weather which grounded her private plane in Nashville. As a substitute, the crowd was entertained by Dale Stone, identified as the official organist for the state of Georgia, and Leaborn Eads and the Blue and Grey gospel singers, a local group.

Candidates by the dozens were outside the auditorium on North Perry, dealing out their cards.

Those seeking office were three candidates for secretary of state —Mrs. Bettye Frink, Mrs. Ruby Folsom Ellis and Rep. Pete Mathews—and Mrs. Agnes Baggett, a candidate for state treasurer.

Representatives of other state office seekers were also present, as well as a quorum of candidates running for Montgomery County offices.

MUNICIPAL LEAGUE SPEAKS

City Officials Poll Favors Wallace

By BOB INGRAM
Advertiser Staff Writer

MOBILE—Alabama's municipal officials in convention here are pretty well agreed on two points concerning the 1958 governor's race.

First, they are convinced a run-off will be necessary, and second, they are reasonably certain one of the candidates in the run-off will be Circuit Judge George C. Wallace.

From that point on there was considerable disagreement, as evidenced in a poll taken among mayors and councilmen representing cities in 27 Alabama counties.

In each instance the municipal officials were asked if they felt a run-off was necessary, and if so, who did they consider as the strongest contenders in their respective cities and counties.

WALLACE POPULAR

Wallace won in a breeze. He was mentioned as a run-off candidate by officials from 25 of the 27 counties included in the poll. No other candidate was even close.

A distant runner-up was Jimmy Faulkner of Baldwin County. Officials from 11 counties picked him as a run-off candidate.

Next came Atty. Gen. John Patterson with seven mentions; Rep. George Hawkins of Gadsden with five, and Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd with four.

None of the other candidates were mentioned by any of the city fathers as having much chance of cracking the run-off.

In all fairness, Wallace's impressive showing was certainly due in part to his own personal popularity among city officials.

But the point should also be made that Wallace's support was not limited to the Wiregrass counties where he admittedly holds the upper hand. Included in the counties polled were 12 lying north of Jefferson and Wallace fared almost as well in the north as he did on the friendly soil of south Alabama.

Some of the officials were rather outspoken in their support of Wallace.

WALLACE FAULKNER PATTERSON HAWKINS

FRONT RUNNERS IN LEAGUE POLL

Mayor Buddy Crawford of Abbeville, a neighbor of the candidate, predicted without hesitation his city would "go for George by 80 per cent."

Mayor R. B. (Speck) Searcy of Huntsville in the Tennessee Valley predicted Wallace would lead the ticket in vote-heavy Madison and a similar observation from Mayor Leonard Beard of Sheffield, one of Wallace's most active supporters.

Mayor Ned Moore of Opp, a Folsomite in 1954, declared his intention to work for Faulkner in '58. But he conceded Wallace would probably lead the ticket in his county.

For the most part the strength of Todd and Hawkins appeared to be localized.

Todd got most of his support from the counties surrounding his home county of Russell, while the same was true with Hawkins in the oppostie corner of north Alabama.

The one exception in Wallace's case was in Tuscaloosa County, where several members of his family reside. Tuscaloosa Mayor George Van Tassel said Hawkins would run well there.

Todd's biggest booster was Red Bay Mayor David Morrow.

"I'm responsible for Todd getting into politics," he declared.

PATTERSON GAINS

"In 1950 I was approached about running for the State Senate, but I referred the delegation to Todd. He ran and was elected. I got him in politics and I'm proud of it."

Patterson, like Wallace and Faulkner, received favorable mention in widely scattered sections of Alabama. And most of the mayors agreed that Patterson has made some headway in the past few weeks.

There was also several observations that Faulkner had perhaps lost some ground.

Huntsville Mayor Search was one who made such an observation.

"I am convinced that Faulkner is not as strong in Huntsville today as he was 30 days ago," Search said.

Counties represented in the survey were Madison, Geneva, Escambia, Pike, Russell, Calhoun, Jackson, Macon, Tallapoosa, Cherokee, (33), Cleburne, Covington, Etowah, Fayette, Talladega, Crenshaw, Barbour, Baldwin, Henry, DeKalb, St. Clair, Marion, Tuscaloosa, Colbert, Jefferson and Mobile.

Powers Butler ouster—

McKay backs Demo oath on segregation

BY FRED TAYLOR
News staff writer

Alabama's public and party office aspirants seeking to qualify as candidates in Democratic primaries should be required to take a firm stand for segregation of the races.

This was emphasized by State Rep. Charles W. McKay Jr. of Talladega, Alabama's Democratic national committeemen, who not only favors keeping the party's loyalty oath, but who wants to broaden it to require an affidavit pledge to help maintain segregation.

McKay, who will go to Washington Feb. 21 for a meeting of the Democratic National Committee, wants to see Paul Butler replaced as chairman of the party's national governing body. But he doubts that this will happen.

"I'M VERY MUCH in favor of Mr. Butler being retired and put out to pasture in his home state of Indiana," said McKay, 'because he has deserted those people of the South who got him elected as national chairman at New Orleans."

He asserted that "I have felt that Mr. Butler was using the office of Democratic national chairman to help him get elected U. S. senator from Indiana (to the place being vacated by Sen. Jenner).

"I hope he is successful," addd McKay. "He will then give up his post as Democratic national chairman."

REP. McKAY MADE these statements on Sunday's "Alabama Press Conference" sponsored by The Birmingham News and Stations WABT and WAPI.

Rep. McKay pointed out that he is not a member of the State Democratic Executive Committee, which will meet at Montgomery Jan. 25 to fix qualification requirements for candidates entering the May 6 primary.

But he said "I have many warm friends on the committee" and would seek to get his proposed "segregation pledge" adopted as part of the Democratic loyalty oath. It would require candidates to pledge:

"I BELIEVE in and will support the principle of segregation upon which the Democratic Party in Alabama was founded and will support in the general election all candidates of the Democratic Party who take this oath."

The loyalty oath for those seeking to qualify as Democratic primary candidates requires that they sign an affidavit they supported Democratic nominees in the last general election, and will back party nominees this year in the general election next November.

McKAY EMPHASIZED that "I do not favor going behind the 1956 presidential election." He added it was his understanding that state committee members don't contemplate going any further back in provisions of the new oath.

Rep. McKay declreda that he is opposed to Alabama cutting loose from the national Democratic Party, as proposed by those seeking to junk the loyalty oath.

He emphasize that the loyalty oath "does not and will not block any voter from voting as he or she pleases in the Democratic primary election."

REP. McKAY pointed out that Republicans, Socialists and others participate, with "Republicans voting in droves" in the Democratic primary elections.

Asked if he would favor a National Democratic Party fealty oath, McKay replied that he would, but said "the national party does NOT make any rules or rules binding on Alabama, Arkansas or on any of the other states."

As to Alabama being the only state in which Democrats require a loyalty oath, Rep. McKay pointed out that in 1948 Alabama was the only state which did NOT permit the National Democratic Party's presidential ticket o appear on the ballot.

"I don't think that was fair," he added.

McKAY CITED the fact that a number of states require voters to register themselves as to party affiliation (whether they are Democrats, Republicans or belonging to some other party. But he said he is opposed to doing this in Alabama.

"I am proud that Alabama is a Democratic state," he said.

He pointed out that cross-filing by candidates was unique only to California.

Questioned about his opposition in the Legislature to variations of the 42 per cent small loan proposals, Rep. McKay emphasized that "I have been on record consistently for good small loan legislation."

"LET ME SAY here and now that I'm on the little end of this small loan question," declared McKay. "I'm on the borrowing end and NOT on the lending end.

"And I'm against any legislation to legalize a 42 per cent interest rate to permit multimillion dollar finance concerns to put a fence around Alabama. These big outfits (he named Beneficial and Household companies) not only want to legalize a 42 per cent interest rate, but want authority to go into court and collect such an interest rate."

In commenting on the fact that his father (Sam McKay of Clay County) is a Republican leader, Rep. McKay said "my father has never tried to influence me in being a Democrat. But my father has been a good Republican and I have great respect for him."

HE ADDED THAT "so far as I know, my father has never gone into the Democratic primaries and voted."

Asked if he planned to run for governor, lieutenant governor or attorney general, as reported, McKay said "I'm seriously considering running for one of them."

When asked if the office he would campaign for is that of attorney general, he added "perhaps."

McKAY, WHO DEFEATED Gov. James E. Folsom in 1956 for Democratic national committeeman, was questioned as to whether he thought Folsom "may be pushed" into calling a special session of the Legislature.

His reply was: "It has been my experience that you don't push the governor into anything."

McKAY ADDED he does not believe Folsom again will put out a slate of candidates for governor and other offices.

Questioning Rep. McKay were George Whittington, political writer for The Selma Times-Journal, and this reporter. Charlie Davis, WABT-WAPI news editor, was moderator.

Judge Roy Mayhall of Jasper, chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee, will be a special guest on "Alabama Press Conference" next Sunday.

Mayhall Voices Illegality Fear Of Proposed Segregation Oath

Circuit Judge Roy Mayhall of Jasper warned yesterday that a suggested segregation oath for candidates in the Democratic primaries might invite the federal courts to nullify the primaries.

Judge Mayhall, party chairman, said he isn't opposed to the pledge but that he questioned its advisability. The controversial party loyalty oath will be up for readoption or rejection when the state Democratic Executive Committee meets here Jan. 25.

In the fixing of rules and regulations for this year's party elections, the oath would disqualify would-be candidates who voted for President Eisenhower in 1956.

Readoption of the loyalty oath was advocated by National Committeeman Charles W. McKay Jr., of Sylacauga. The segregation pledge, a further provision of the oath, reads like this:

"I believe in and will support the principle of segregation upon which the Democratic Party in Alabama was founded and will support in the general election all candidates of the Democratic Party who take this oath."

As head of the state committee, Mayhall questioned the "wisdom and need for such a pledge."

"It might get us in trouble if someone should appeal," he said. "That would result in the courts declaring our entire primary null and void."

The judge recalled that a Texas law limiting the party election to white voters was outlawed several years ago by the Supreme Court.

There was no need for a segregation pledge anyway, Mayhall, said, "because anyone who qualifies as a candidate will support segregation anyway. If he doesn't he might as well not run."

He said, however, that he would readily sign the oath if it is adopted.

Group Drops Oath On Ala. Primary

MONTGOMERY, Ala. —Fear of the U. S. Supreme Court caused members of the pro-segregation state Democratic Executive Committee to defeat an oath which could bar Negroes as candidates in Alabama's Democratic primaries.

The oath would have required candidates seeking office in the May 6 primary and June 3 runoff to pledge to defend Alabama segregation laws.

It was advocated by National Committeeman Charles W. McKay, Jr., of Sylacauga, but was never introduced as opposition from party leaders who feared a court test.

Party Chairman Roy Mayhall said he feared the segregation oath would invite a court suit which could "nullify our entire primary." He recalled that the U. S. Supreme Court eliminated the Democratic white primary in Texas and said similar reasoning might be applied if an oath in Alabama kept Negroes from seeking office.

nail down racial stand

BY FRED TAYLOR, News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 25—Alabama's Democratic Executive Committee Saturday readopted a loyalty pledge for candidates by the lopsided vote of 56 to 1, went on record strongly for segregation and officially opened campaigning for the May 6 primary election.

Except for fear of federal court action to knock out results of the Democratic primary, the 72-member state committee apparently would have written a segregation pledge into the loyalty oath.

But instead, the party governing body adopted a resolution offered by State Rep. Hugh Merril Jr. of Anniston, Fourth District member, declaring that "we believe in and support the principle of segregation of the races and we abhor and are unalterably opposed to racial integration in any and all forms."

Hits at bolters

THE LOYALTY OATH, as adopted, places no restrictions on rank and file voters.

But it bars as candidates in the primary election those who bolted to the Eisenhower-Nixon ticket in 1956.

Action of the committee in adopting the segregation resolution came after Alabama Democratic National Committeeman Charles W. McKay Jr. of Sylacauga abandoned his plan to include this provision in the loyalty oath, which he favored.

McKay, attorney and member of the House of Representatives, but not a member of the state committee, congratulated the party governing body for adopting the segregation resolution.

"I'm for it 100 per cent," said McKay, adding that he regretted not being able to congratulate committee members for including the provision in the loyalty oath, as he had advocated.

If the segregation declaration had been embodied in the oath, it could have barred Negroes as candidates in Alabama's Democratic primaries.

The new oath

ALABAMA DEMOCRATS have had a loyalty pledge since 1930, when the late U. S. Sen. Tom Hemlin was barred as a candidate in the party primary because he bolted the Democratic presidential ticket headed by Al Smith in 1928.

The oath was spelled out, after the 1948 Dixiecrat revolt, to disqualify any prospective candidate in a Democratic primary election who had bolted the party to support Republicans or others who put out a presidential ticket.

The new oath, which will be effective this year, will prevent any persons who voted Republican in 1956 or who "openly and publicly" opposed the Democratic presidential ticket.

Frank Mizell Jr., Montgomery attorney and one of two committee members opposing adoption of the new loyalty oath, said he thought the party governing body should relent and permit Ike voters to become candidates if they desired.

Grady W. Hurst Jr. of Chatom was the only other committee member voting against the oath.

Merrill's segregation resolution assailed what it termed "illegal and high-handed action" by President Eisenhower in sending federal troops to force school integration at Little Rock.

This resolution also called for the U. S. Supreme Court to back down from its 1954 desegration decision "in order that white and colored people may continue to live together in peace and harmony."

Judge Roy Mayhall of Jasper, state committee chairman, lashed out bitterly at President Eisenhower and his supporters in Alabama and attacked "Republican-flavored and Ike-liking newspapers" for backing the GOP ticket in 1956.

Elebash To Wage 'Serious' Race

A young Montgomery businessman best known as an entertainer reemphasized last night he intended to be a candidate for governor in the May Democratic primary.

Shearen Elebash, a local jeweler, said he intended to pay his $500 qualifying fee today and wage a "serious campaign" for the state's highest office.

A native of Dallas County, Elebash has resided in Montgomery for a number of years.

Politics—

Wallace To Back Reapportionment

Patterson Takes Stand On Vice

Circuit Judge George Wallace came out for "fair reapportionment" in a Montgomery speech last night, while Atty. Gen. John Patterson charged that "certain people who want organized vice and gambling back in Alabama" have set out to defeat him for governor.

And A. W. Todd, Alabama's commissioner of agriculture, promised yesterday that all of Alabama's milk market will go to Alabama farmers if he is elected governor.

Judge Wallace, who once served in the Alabama House as a representative from the Black Belt, said he proposes to recommend a program that will protect the smaller counties but at the same time give added representation to the larger counties.

"I shall do all within my power to see that a fair reapportionment program becomes a reality in Alabama," he said.

Patterson, in Grove Hill last night, said he had "learned just this week that certain people who want organized vice and gambling back in Alabama have launched an all-out campaign against me in this governor's race."

"There are a few people in this state that do not want to see the law enforced," he said, "and they bought automobiles and hired men to ride the state to work against me."

He mentioned no names.

The attorney general vowed he will never allow "another Phenix City to spring up in Alabama. . . There is no room for gangsters to operate and if any try, we will drive them out."

Patterson was elected attorney general four years ago after his father, Albert L. Patterson, was killed in Phenix City. The elder Patterson had won the Democratic nomination for attorney general on a pledge to drive racketeers out of Phenix City.

Wallace, in Montgomery, advocated jury service for women on a voluntary basis, and said he will work to improve the lot of Alabama's hard-pressed farm families.

Wallace said he lived on a farm in South Alabama during the depression-hit 1930s.

"As one who has felt the sting and discomfort brought about through the loss of farm income," he said, "You can be assured that no group will have my interest any more than the farm people of Alabama.

He said he will fight for continued racial segregation in Alabama in "the same sensible and non-hypocritical manner by which the races have lived in peace and harmony for many years."

"We have only to look to such states as New York," he said, "Where there is more hypocrisy practiced on the matter of race relations per square inch than there is practiced per square 100,000 miles in our state."

Todd, speaking in Lamar and Pickens counties yesterday, said that 1100 dairy farms have been started in Alabama since he became agriculture commissioner and that he expects to see 400 more producers go into business when he is governor.

He said these can supply Alabama's milk needs, without outside milk being brought in.

Todd said the U. S. Department of Agriculture yesterday assured him that $65,000 in additional federal funds will be put into the state's anti-brucellosis vaccination program during the remainder of this fiscal year, which ends June 30.

He said the money was assured him after talks with department officials in Washington Tuesday.

He appeared before the U. S. Senate Agriculture Committee, testifying about the plight of Alabama farmers.

Governor's Race Is Still Formless

By Bob Ingram

THE ALABAMA governor's race appears today to be right back where it was three months ago. Wide open.

In mid-January it seemed that the lay of the land was becoming vaguely discernible. With Guy Hardwick and Ed Livingston out of the way, candidates Jimmy Faulkner, George Wallace and A. W. Todd shaped up as the big three.

Then Rep. Karl Harrison, with considerable support from the Gordon Persons group, jumped in and muddied the water.

INGRAM

Next came Atty. Gen. John Patterson, and the visibility lessened even more. And on Friday Rep. George Hawkins made the leap. As of now the field is as confused as it could be, and it's apt to remain the same until the votes are counted May 6.

The point has been made frequently and it can be made again—the governor's race is completely lacking a "take charge" candidate. There is not a man in the field who can be expected to muster the strength and the enthusiasm necessary to break the race wide open.

There is certainly no one like the Folsom of '54, or even the Persons of '50. In both their cases it was apparent long before election day that they would lead the field. The only surprise was the size of their leads, particularly Folsom's.

Field Of 15

THE '58 RACE shapes up now as a dog-eat-dog affair in which any one of perhaps five or six candidates could make the run-off.

Just how many votes it will take to qualify for the second go-round in June is anybody's guess, but it is not difficult to determine that any man who can poll in the neighborhood of 150,000 votes will be near the top of the heap, if not the leader.

It now looks like a field of 15 will be in the running, and this group can expect to have approximately 600,000 votes to scrap for.

There are at least seven candidates in the race who, realistically speaking, are running more for exercise than anything else. Their chances of winning are all but nonexistent. Yet they are bound to get some votes.

It is not inconceivable that this group might poll a combined vote of perhaps 30,000 votes.

That leaves some 570,000 votes to be split among the remaining eight candidates — Laurie Battle, Faulkner, Harrison, Hawkins, Jack Owen, Patterson, Todd and Wallace.

It is all but unthinkable that any of these candidates could be elected without a run-off. Faulkner polled 151,900 votes in 1954, which means he would have to double that to get a majority May 6. There is no indication that his strength has increased that much. In fact, that '54 vote included an undetermined but sizable number of ballots which were more anti-Folsom than they were pro-Faulkner. Some of these Faulkner will lose in May.

Hawkins Added More Confusion

IF ANY one development had to be cited as the biggest single cause of the present unsettled race, it would have to be Hawkins qualifying. Hawkins might be appropriately called the great equalizer of the 1958 governor's race. Certainly he is more deserving of that title than any of the other late entrants.

Patterson's entry into the crowded field was interpreted as a blow to Wallace's chances. But Faulkner seemingly was wounded even more painfully by Hawkins' entry.

The Gadsden attorney will come into the race with a solid home county (Etowah) vote, a county which cast 24,000 votes in 1954. He can also expect considerable backing from the surrounding and big-voting counties of DeKalb, Marshall, Jackson and Calhoun.

And then there is organized labor, unquestionably an overrated yet nonetheless important factor. Organized labor has never shown any ability or inclination to vote as a bloc; if it ever did, it would be a tremendous factor in state politics. Its leaders frequently give their blessings to a particular candidate, but the card-carrying members usually ricochet off in a half-dozen directions.

However, if any man can get anything like a bloc vote from labor, Hawkins will be the man. He is their pride and joy as he should be.

Had Hawkins not qualified, many of these voters would have gone with Faulkner. They have now been subtracted from his total. The effect has been a delicate redistributing of the votes.

If a gap ever existed between Faulkner and the field, or if there was a distinguishable gap between the Faulkner-Wallace-Todd trio from the field, that gap has been all but dissolved.

The pros still are betting on a Faulkner-Wallace run-off, but they are somewhat less assured than they were a month ago.

Negro To Seek Jefferson Seat In State House

BIRMINGHAM, Feb. 1 (AP) — A Negro motion picture machine operator, Arthur B. Tiddle, said today he expected to run for the Legislature from Jefferson County in the May 6 Democratic Primary.

Tiddle said he had been a voter for three years and is a property owner in Birmingham. Arthur D. Shores, Birmingham Negro attorney, was a candidate for the Legislature in the Democratic Primary four years ago. Shores, who often represents members of his race in suits arising from integration efforts, polled about 4,000 votes.

Tiddle said he does not represent any particular group, is not a member of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People and does not "think anything can be accomplished by force or violence."

NEGRO TO SEEK OFFICE

Second In Alabama History To Enter House Race

BIRMINGHAM, Feb. 2.—(UP) —Arthur B. Tiddle, Negro motion picture machine operator, said Sunday he would seek election to the state Legislature from Jefferson County.

Tiddle, who is 49, said he is not a member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People nor is being sponsored by any particular group.

He is the second Negro to ever seek election to the House from the state's largest county. Attorney Arthur D. Shores ran for a seat four years ago, polling only 4,000 votes.

Faulkner Set, 14th To Enter Governor Race

The already crowded Governor's race officially gained its 14th entry yesterday and another candidate who once ran for governor qualified for a new term in the Legislature.

Former State Sen. Jimmy Faulkner of Bay Minette, an acknowledged contender for months, formally filed his declaration of candidacy with the Secretary of State to run in the May 6 Democratic primary.

Faulkner, a weekly newspaper publisher and radio executive, ran second to Gov. James E. Folsom in 1954. He has been actively engaged in his second campaign for some time, but waited until yesterday to make it official.

Meanwhile, State Sen. Reuben L. Newton of Jasper, who ran eighth in a field of 15 for Governor eight years ago, qualified as a candidate for the House of Representatives from Walker County.

Newton is ineligible for another term in the Senate under the rotation system which gives another county in his district the right to choose a Senator this year.

Before he ran for Governor, Newton was runnerup in the race for Lieutenant Governor in 1946.

Another candidate who filed yesterday was State Democratic Party Chairman Roy Mayhall of Jasper, seeking a new four-year term on the State Democratic Executive Committee.

Mayhall, a Circuit Court judge who also seeks renomination to that office, has taken a leading part in the successful fight to keep the controversial party loyalty oath in force.

The pledge, readopted by the committee last month, disqualified prospective candidates who voted Republican in the 1956 presidential election.

Mayhall seeks reelection to the committee from the Seventh Congressional District.

OTHER CANDIDATES

Four candidates for the Legislature and two Circuit Court judges seeking renomination qualified. They are:

Woodrow Wilson Roberts of Fayette, running for the Senate in the 12th District (Fayette, Lamar and Walker Counties).

J. Marvin Davis of Hodges, for the Senate in the 31st District (Colbert, Franklin, and Marion counties).

Freeman R. Samples of Rainsville, for the House from DeKalb County.

V. Burean Davis of Nanafalia, for Marengo County House Seat No. 1.

Circuit Judges Bowen Simmons of Opp for renomination in the 22nd circuit (Covington and Geneva Counties) and Cecil H. Strawbridge of Vernon, in the 24th Circuit (Fayette, Lamar and Pickens counties).

Rep. W. L. DeSear of Uniontown, qualified for another term in Perry County.

Others filing with the Secretary of State are:

Jerry Hillard of Opelika, for House Place No. 2 from Lee County.

Joe H. Pattillo of Tuskegee, for the House from Macon County.

Emmett D. Norton of Centre, for the House from Cherokee County.

Rep. N. S. (Nick) Hare of Monroeville, for Judge of the 21st Judicial Circuit (Conecuh, Escambia and Monroe Counties).

Todd Pledges Action To Hike Farm Income

By BOB INGRAM
Advertiser Staff Writer

GERALDINE, Ala., Feb. 12—Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd brought his gubernatorial campaign to frozen Sand Mountain tonight where a crowd of 2,800 people turned out in 20-degree weather for his second "Friendship Rally."

Some 2,200 people jammed into the high school gymnasium to hear Todd while another 600 crowded into an adjoining auditorium to hear the speech by remote control.

Continuing his campaign for the farm vote, Todd received a rousing ovation when he told the crowd that his first executive order as governor "will be something to improve the farm income of Alabama." He did not elaborate on what he proposed to do.

The commissioner also continued his verbal assault on Agriculture Secretary Benson, terming him the "biggest disaster of any agriculture leader in the history of our nation."

At the very outset of his 28-minute address, Todd touched very lightly on the segregation question. He vowed that he would maintain segregation and the Southern way of life "but we will do it peacefully."

Among other things, Todd promised $60 a month for the old folks, which is $10 a month higher than any other candidate has offered to date, more farm-to-market roads, increased industrial development and reapportionment of the Legislature.

CROWD NUMBER

One of the hottest issues here on this cold night was the number of people in attendance.

Todd supporters insisted the crowd was in excess of 5,000. They supported this contention with a statement from the Geraldine Police Chief Frank McKinney, who estimated there were 4,500 automobiles surrounding the school property.

However, an actual count of the two auditoriums showed the absolute maximum seating capacity to be roughly 2,100. In addition, a large number of people were standing in the rear of the two auditoriums. The estimate of 2,800 at the rally was if anything, favorable to Todd.

GOSPEL SINGERS

For more than an hour before Todd spoke, two gospel-singing groups entertained. First was the Sons of Song trio, followed by the Chuck Wagon Gang, a quartet.

Also participating in the songfest was Wally Fowler of all-night singing fame.

Fowler introduced Todd, calling him "a very sincere, Christian gentleman and a great statesman." At the beginning the rally took on the atmosphere of a revival, with the entire crowd standing and singing an old hymn "Love Lifted Me."

Engelhardt Officially Enters Lieutenant Governor's Race

State Sen. Sam Engelhardt of Macon qualified yesterday with the secretary of state as a candidate for lieutenant governor, vowing he would continue his efforts to preserve segregation in Alabama.

The widely known segregationist also called for the retention of the Right-to-Work Law, declaring "it enables the laboring people of Alabama to remain free, independent and segregated in their jobs."

Another member of the Senate qualified yesterday as a candidate for office in the May primary. Sen. George Yarbrough of Randolph qualified to run for the House seat from his county.

In addition, two incumbent members of the House filed for reelection. They were Reps. Charles Franklin of Coosa and Ralph Windle of Pickens.

Other qualifiers yesterday were:

Benard Cabiness, Scottsboro, House, Place No. 2, Jackson County; M. J. Williams, Anniston, House, Place No. 2, Calhoun County; W. Wallace (Pop) Gross, Scottsboro, House, Place No. 1, Jackson County; Circuit Judge James A. Hare, Selma, renomination, 4th Circuit; Circuit Judge Oakley W. Melton Sr., Wetumpka, renomination, 19th Circuit; Alston F. DeVan, Mobile, reelection to the State Democratic Executive Committee, First District.

Elebash Offers State-Backed Loan Program For Students

By BOB INGRAM

Gubernatorial candidate Shearer Elebash yesterday proposed a plan to allow the state to underwrite the expense of a college education for deserving students.

Elebash unveiled his new plan in a political speech delivered at the weekly luncheon meeting of the Montgomery Junior Chamber of Commerce.

He proposed that students who desired a college education but could not afford it could borrow the necessary money from a bank, with the note co-signed by the state of Alabama.

The student would not be required to begin repaying the loan until three years after he had completed his education. If for some reason a student should default on the loan, then the state would pay off the indebtedness.

"I am convinced that the type of boy or girl who would take advantage of such a program would be the type who would repay the loan in full," Elebash declared.

He said similar plans had been used elsewhere with "great success" and that the idea had won "wholehearted endorsement" from Alabama educators who he had discussed it.

Devoting most of his time to the issue of education, Elebash said the firing of Sputnik into outer space "had aroused America to the fact it is undercapitalided in trained minds."

"Education is no longer a matter of our pleasure," he declared, "but is is now a matter of mass survival."

Elebash was introduced by Nelson Cole, Jaycee program chairman.

Earlier in the program John Doramus was installed as a new member of the organization.

Report From Dixie

By TREZZVANT W. ANDERSON
(Courier Roving Reporter)

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—While the super-ambitious Alabama Attorney General John Patterson of Phenix City has been busy building himself to run for Governor of Alabama, there has been another extra-vicious white supremacist also building himself. This one started many months ago in the State Senate.

Anderson

He is State Senator Albert Boutwell of Birmingham, who represents Jefferson County of which Birmingham is the county seat.

Boutwell, colorless, and by no means in the same "publicity" league with Patterson, has been building himself by means of an almost endless stream of anti-Negro bills which he introduced in the State Senate. He went into action, minus the propaganda flare of the fraternal State Senator Sam Englehardt of Macon County, vicious foe of Tuskegee.

Boutwell omitted the histrionics, but quietly pushed through bill after bill. With the exception of Englehardt's bills aimed at Tuskegee Negroes, Boutwell authored most of the other anti-Negro legislation. Some was vetoed by Governor Folsom. Some are now state law.

UPON THESE laws Boutwell will base his campaign for Governor of Alabama. He will flaunt his legislative record in support of segregation as the reason why he should be elected. He figures to give ex-State Senator Jimmy Faulkner, now the favorite candidate, a stiff race because of his anti-Negro legislation. This is an indication of the mental stature of the average white Alabama voter, sad to say.

As for Patterson, this reporter hasn't thought much of that worthy since last August when the Attorney General failed to show up for an appointment which had been made for me. Alabama Negroes haven't thought much of him from the start.

SENATOR BOUTWELL

It could also be mentioned here that there have been hints from the Governor's office that all hasn't been told in the Phenix City story. But that's the white folks' business. They'll have to handle that one.

NOW, LET'S put the "bad egg" of the Alabama race question to rest. State Senator Sam Englehardt of Shorters, Ala., Macon County near Tuskegee, is not considered in any manner whatever for further advancement in Alabama politics, not even by white citizens. They say "he is not prepared" for any post above that which he has been holding as State Senator. They don't even think his frustrated father-in-law, former State Senator J. Henderson Bonner of Wilcox County, Ala., can help him advance.

In other words, the whites feel that the executive secretary of the Alabama White Citizens Councils is okay to get in ill repute making the silly statements they don't wish to be publicly allied with and pushing the inflammatory legislation involving Macon County, and they will even let him spend his own money pushing these things, but they just can't see him as timber for any higher position.

Which reminds this reporter that a few weeks ago I was reliably informed exactly "who" is really behind Englehardt and who pulls the strings that make him jump and jiggle. Maybe I'll write it here soon. Some high-placed whites are involved, which convinces me Englehardt is "a tool" who thinks he is a little god. One of his alleged "bosses" is a millionaire!

Batting Average .000

Alabama State Senator Sam Englehardt, as executive secretary of the Alabama Association of White Citizens Councils, has proclaimed himself as sort of an authority on racial affairs. Last week, without anyone asking for it, he gave forth with one of his numerous predictions of late.

If racial integration of public schools is ordered in Alabama, he opined, "it will make Little Rock look like a garden party."

But few thoughtful Alabamans bothered to raise an eyebrow.

They remember too well his past calamity howls that "mass riots would occur" if the white primary were abolished;

That white Southern draftees would desert if compelled to serve in mixed Army units; and

That "blood would surely run in the streets" if Montgomery bus segregation were ended.

All of these changes came to pass and the world still revolves in its orbit.

As a prognosticator, Sam Englehardt's batting average is a miserable .000.

Macon County Abolition Group

MONTGOMERY — State Senator Sam Englehardt Jr. held an executive organization meeting of the Macon County Abolition Committee here Monday.

For lieutenant governor—

Engelhardt to run; resigns CC post

BY FRED TAYLOR, News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 1—While a dozen gubernatorial candidates maneuvered for campaign advantage, State Sen. Sam Engelhardt Jr., of Macon Saturday resigned as executive secretary of Alabama Assn. of Citizens Councils to push his bid for lieutenant governor.

The governorship race was expected to draw State Rep. George C. Hawkins as the 13th entrant early in the week. His formal announcement as candidate has been indicated for Monday, but may be delayed a few days.

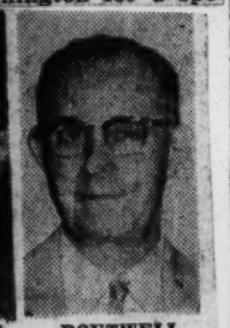
R

State Sen. Albert Boutwell of Jefferson, one of the porters of an strongest supporters of an expanded health program in the Legislature and an indigent patient plan panelist on the Alabama Hospital Assn. program at Tuscaloosa, was the only candidate who had qualified for lieutenant governor.

Boutwell will take time out from a busy schedule this week to go to Washington for a special conference called by the International Council for Christian Leadership for Thursday.

President Eisenhower and members of his cabinet will attend this meeting.

ENGELHARDT



BOUTWELL

Wants to be fair

SEN. ENGELHARDT said his resignation as executive secretary of the association would become effective Feb. 14 "in order to be fair to both the councils and myself."

Engelhardt, Shorter farmer-business man and one of Alabama's outstanding segregationists, said he plans to continue working closely with Citizens Councils even though he will no longer hold office in the group.

"I intend to carry my campaign for lieutenant governor into every section of Alabama," said Sen. Engelhardt, who was chief sponsor of the constitutional amendment approved by Alabama voters Dec. 17 empowering the Legislature to abolish outright or carve up his home county of Macon. This would be done to prevent Negroes, who outnumber white persons nearly seven to one, from gaining political control of tre county.

"I feel we have accomplished a great deal in the Citizens Council movement," Engelhardt added. "The Alabama Assn. of Citizens Councils has never been connected with violence of any kind, yet we have brought about a decided slackening of pressure from the North.

This is indicated by the increased publicity Northern newspapers are giving their own race problems and their own violence.

"There's no doubt that this has come about because of our continued presentation to the world of the moral and legal right to our own way of life. We shall continue to do this in the future, and I shall work very closely with Citizens Councils leaders throughout the South to see that our segregated way of life is maintained."

Cotton study session

SEN. BOUTWELL, member of the joint legislative cotton study committee, will go to Decatur for a public hearing Monday on the acute problems facing Alabama's cotton farmers.

Former State Rep. R. T. Butler of Clay, who is now superintendent of the Masonic Home at Montgomery, announced recently he will run for lieutenant governor.

And former State Sen. Graham Wright of Talladega announced several months ago he would be a candidate for the state's No. 2 office.

State eSns. E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa and Joe Calvin of Morgan both are "seriously considering" entering this race.

Todd and Faulkner

JIMMY FAULKNER, 1954 runnerup to Gov. James E. Folsom, and State Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd, both of whom have gospel-singing campaign helpers, are preparing to stage more vote-seeking rallies.

Faulkner, who opened up with a new series of "home folks" meetings last week at Boaz, will stage another at 7 p.m. Tuesday at the National Guard Armory in South Huntsville. He again will have the gospel-singing Blackwood Brothers with him. The Statesmen Quartet will sing at Faulkner's next two rallies at Childersburg, Feb. 11, and Georgiana, Feb. 18. The Blackwoods will rejoin Faulkner for another "home folks" rally at Holt, Feb. 25.

Todd, who kicked off his campaign for governor with a huge turnout in his hometown of Russellville, has announced three more "friendship" rallies.

These will be at Geraldine, in DeKalb County, Feb. 12; Carbon Hill, Feb. 20 and Clanton, Feb. 27. Todd has gospel-singing Wally Fowler, the Sons of Song and the Chuck Wagon Gang to help him warm up the crowds.

Harrison in Mobile

STATE REP. KARL HARRISON, after appearing on the Alabama Hospital Assn. indigent care program at Tuscaloosa, journeyed to Mobile to push organizational work in behalf of his campaign for the governorship.

Jack Owen, president of the Public Service Commission, who stressed the need for "greater health facilities and more hospitals," addressed the association convention at Tuscaloosa.

Former Ninth District Congressman Laurie Battle of Birmingham, the Rev. Billy Walker of Pell City, Winston Gullatte of and Ralph Price of Barbour were among other gubernatorial candidates appearing on the association program.

Judge George Wallace of Clayton, Faulkner and Todd all had representatives there to speak for them.

And all the gubernatorial candidates emphasized personally, or through their representatives, the need for an expanded health program in Alabama.

Others busily pressing bids for votes in the big field of candidates for governor were Atty. Gen. John Patterson of Phenix City, Shearen Elebash of Montgomery and W. E. Dodd, dairyman and millwright of Genery's Gap, in Jefferson County.

ENGELHARDT TO RUN FOR ALABAMA POST

Announces Candidacy For Lieutenant Governor

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 18.—(AP)—State Senator Sam Engelhardt Jr., known throughout the South as a segregationist leader, announced Saturday he will run for lieutenant governor of Alabama this year.

Senator Engelhardt issued a statement saying he will qualify as a candidate in the Democratic primaries after the State Democratic Executive Committee officially opens the campaign here Jan. 25.

The 45-year-old legislator is executive secretary of the pro-segregation Alabama Association of Citizens Councils. He also sponsored a recently approved constitutional amendment empowering the Legislature to abolish Macon County, his home, as a means of preventing Negro political control.

Senator Engelhardt pointed out that Sunday is the birthday anniversary of Robert E. Lee and said his announcement was timed to coincide with that occasion.

"I feel it is proper for me to select this day to make my official announcement and launch my fight to help preserve the southern way of life for which Lee fought," the senator said.

Legislators Cite Abolishment Club

Study Committee Members Agree Power Will Deter Negroes From Seeking Office

BY DONALD F. MARTIN
United Press Staff Writer

MONTGOMERY, Jan. 16—The Macon County study committee agreed today the "legislative threat" of abolishing the county would tend to prevent Negroes from seeking public office in the Black Belt, where whites are outnumbered seven-to-one.

Several committee members would lead to reduction of the territory to maintain white supremacy rather than immediate abolition.

Rep. Joe Dawkins of Montgomery said, "we hold the ball now and are running with it. And Macon knows the Legislature can abolish the county the next time it meets, 10 years from now or even 16 years from now.

"The people also know if they elect a Negro to Capitol Hill the Legislature will abolish the county immediately. It's this legislative threat that guides me in my thinking to reduce the county."

Dawkins said reduction also would eliminate the "multitude of problems" involved with wiping out the county.

"Tuskegee would become nothing but a ghost town," he said if the county is abolished. All state, county and local offices would be eliminated. There would be unemployment and surrounding counties would have to share the burden of maintaining branch offices in Tuskegee."

Sen. Sam Engelhardt of Shorter, chairman of the committee, acknowledged Dawkins' statement, but added, "I hope this is just not putting off the funeral."

Dawkins snapped back, "the funeral can be held any time."

Earlier Engelhardt remarked that "some people in Macon County prefer reduction in size rather than abolition."

The executive secretary of the White Citizens Council also said he thought the "starting point" of the committee's work began with the judiciary subcommittee followed by the boundaries and census committees.

Rep. Charles Adams of Tallapoosa said the census subcommittee is convinced "we can get more information from the 1950 Federal census than we could by taking a special census.

"Because of special influences and opinions now, I doubt seriously that a special census also agreed the threat probably would do us much good," Adams reported.

He said he had written the Bureau of Census in Washington for a breakdown into political subdivisions of the 1950 census and that the subcommittee would get population trends and other facts from the State Department of Health.

Dawkins reported the finance subcommittee has written the probate judge, superintendent of schools and the Macon Board of Revenue and "we hope to get a complete financial picture within the next three weeks."

The committee adopted a tentative budget which allows $25,500 for committee members' pay ($30 a day for 17 members for 50 meetings), travel expense, $7000; staff salaries, $7500; office expense, $2000; supplies, $1000, and reserve, $7000. The Legislature appropriated $50,000 for the committee study.

Wallace Sets Opener Today In Ozark Rally

Circuit Judge George C. Wallace of Clayton officially opens his campaign for governor today with a rally set for the courthouse in Ozark at 2 p.m.

Wallace, considered one of the leading contenders at the present time, has been traveling throughout the state for weeks but this is his first major rally.

And following the precedent set earlier by other candidates for the same office, Wallace will have with him two widely-known entertainers—Minnie Pearl and Webb Pierce, both stars of the Grand Ole Opry.

Atty. Gen. John Patterson, who kicked off his campaign Monday night at New Site, moved into Lanett last night where he addressed a rally at the elementary school auditorium.

Delivering the same speech which he used Monday night, Patterson reemphasized that "there will be no mixing of the races in the public schools when I am elected governor."

Patterson also went all other candidates one better by promising to raise the monthly pension for the aged needy to $75 a month. The present payment averages approximately $39 a month.

The attorney general said such an increase could be accomplished "if we stop up the holes in the public treasury, cut out the graft and corruption in Montgomery, and cut out the padding of contracts and payment of commissions to political favorites."

In another development in the gubernatorial campaign, Rep. Karl Harrison moved into the field of television to open his campaign last night.

In a "TV Report to the People" last night over a Birmingham station, Harrison outlined his gubernatorial platform and also discussed his 12-year record in the Legislature.

Harrison will make three other similar reports during the next 10 days — in Decatur, Mobile and Montgomery.

W. D. Dodd of Bessemer, another of the 14 in the race for governor, will speak today at the Perry County courthouse in Marion at 10 a.m. today.

Candidacy Raises Question—

Segregation Party Ruling Is Sought

FROM PRESS REPORTS

MONTGOMERY, Feb. 26—The secretary of state's office waited on a ruling from Atty. Gen. John Patterson today before deciding whether to accept the qualification papers of a Segregation Party candidate for governor.

John F. Dugger III, a Montgomery architect, filed a declaration of candidacy yesterday to run under the Segregation Party embled in the November general election.

Alabama law requires third party candidates to qualify on or before the date of the Democratic primary, which will be May 6 this year.

The secretary of state's office asked the attorney general for an advisory opinion on this question:

"Did the fact that the Segregation Party withdraw its slate of presidential elector candidates two years ago affect the official status of the party"

Three of the 11 Segregation Party candidates pulled out of the race in 1958. The remaining eight and three new ones then ran as independents.

Llewellyn Duggar, brother of the gubernatorial candidate, said the party withdrew its emblem at that time. He said, however, that the party complied with all regulations to insure its legal status.

The party emblem contained the quotation—"We dare to defend our rights."

The secretary of state's office said today that "nothing like this has ever happened before. Alabama has never had a party formed, the candidates resign, and the party then join with the independents to run."

Charles Cooper, head of the Legislative Reference Service, said the Segregation Party would not be eligible to hold a primary at state expense.

"To be qualified for a primary at state expense, a party must collect 20 per cent of the entire state vote in the last general election. The Segregation Party did not, because it did not run under that emblem," he said.

But Cooper added, "any party or slate of candidates can qualify for a general election, however, by submitting a petition containing 300 signatures by the first Tuesday in May.

Duggar, a native of Hope Hull near Montgomery, has made it plain he will not run in the general election if a white supremacist wins the Democratic primary May 6.

"There are some good men in the primary who are campaigning strongly on the segregation issue," he said. "But there are some others in the race who claim they are for segregation but at the same time admit they are 'moderates.' And I believe they would accept gradual integration."

He did not list the candidates he was talking about.

"If a strong segregationist wins in the primary or the run-off, I shall withdraw, but if one of the so-called 'moderates' wins in the primary, as may happen, I shall remain in the race."

9 Candidates Post Fee In Demo Govenor Race

More Names Appear Likely By Deadline

By BOB INGRAM

The 1958 Democratic Primary campaign officially opened at 1:20 p.m. yesterday and before sundown no less than nine men had qualified as candidates for governor.

The men who qualified yesterday by forking over the $500 fee were, in alphabetical order:

Former Congressman Laurie Battle of Birmingham; W. E. Dodd, political newcomer from Bessemer; Shearen Elebash, Montgomery businessman; Winston Gullatte, Selma insurance man; State Rep. Karl Harrison of Columbiana; Jack Owen, president of the Alabama Public Service Commission; Ralph (Shorty) Price, insurance man of Barbour; Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd of Russellville, and Circuit Judge George C. Wallace of Clayton.

FIRST CANDKATE

Judge Wallace, considered one of the front-runners at the present time, was the first gubernatorial candidate to qualify. He was officially in the race only minutes after the State Democratic Executive Committee had adjourned.

The other eight were right on his heels, to the man exuding confidence on the outcome of the important election.

With nine already in the race the field was still by no means complete. Former State Sen. Jimmy Faulkner of Bay Minette, a certain candidate, said Friday that he would not actually qualify until mid-February.

OTHERS MENTIONED

Two other men mentioned for the office—Atty. Gen. John Patterson and Rep. George Hawkins—did not qualify yesterday. Howkins was in Mobile still seeking additional support in his behalf.

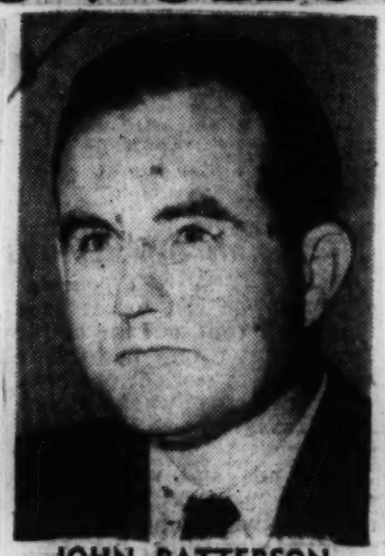
Patterson's absence, one of the most discussed topics during the two-day meeting of Democrats, was still unexplained. The attorney general failed to make an appearance at any time during the gathering.

This absence gave added strength to reports that Patterson might pass up the governor's race this year.

In addition to Faulkner, Patterson and Hawkins, at least three others have indicated they too will make the race—Adm. John Crommelin of Wetumpka, Sam L. Chesnut of McIntosh and the Rev. Billy Walker of Pell City.

If all six qualify it will mean a field of 15 candidates, which equals the all-time high established in the 1950 primary in which Gordon Persons was victorious.

The deadline for qualifying in all races is midnight March 1.



JOHN PATTERSON
. . . In governor's race

Patterson, Crommelin in governor race

Atty. Gen. John Patterson, who has been running for months, today formally announced his candidacy for governor and promised to see that there is "no mixing of the races while I am in office."

PATTERSON, who made the expected announcement at a press conference pledge to wage a "continuous battle to keep troublemakers like the NAACP out of this state."

Simultaneously, retired Adm. John Crommelin of Wetumpka, qualified as candidate in the governor's race which already has 12 entrants and was expected to draw more.

Crommelin is a World War II naval hero, who was retired from the service after criticizing national defense policies. He has since made three races for U. S. Senate and has been associated with John Kasper, segregationist leader.

IN ANOTHER development House Speaker Rankin Fite, Hamilton lawyer, qualified as a House candidate from Marion County for a fourth term in the Alabama Legislature.

The attorney general instituted a court suit several months ago which resulted in an injunction prohibiting the NAACP from doing further business in Alabama. It was fined $100,000 for refusal to make its membership lists and other records public in this state.

PATTERSON, son of the late Albert L. Patterson of Phenix City, pledged to "stamp out graft and corruption in our government." His father was slain, after winning the Democratic nomination for attorney general in 1954 on a promise to clean up vice-ridden Phenix City.

Meanwhile, other gubernatorial candidates pushed ahead with campaigning.

State Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd lambasted the Eisenhower-Benson farm program in a speech before Cahaba Heights Civitan Club here last night, declaring it had resulted in driving more than 350,000 farmers from Alabama.

Jack Owen, president of the Public Service Commission, moved into what his backers termed the "victory circle" in his second bid for the governorship as he opened campaign headquarters in Montgomery's Exchange Hotel. It was the same headquarters used by Former Gov. Gordon Persons in his successful campaign in 1950, and it also was used as base of operations for Gov. James E. Folsom.

Jimmy Faulkner, runner-up to Folsom four years ago, journeyed to Boaz on Sand Mountain to open up with a new series of "home folks" rallies at 7 p.m. in the National Guard Armory.

Faulkner spent yesterday pressing his bid for votes in the Mobile area.

There was a big rush of candidates for State Senate and House seats, as qualifying papers poured into offices of State Democratic Chairman Roy Mayhall and the secretary of state.

Patterson held a press conference in his Montgomery office shortly before noon to announce his plans.

ALABAMA REPUBLICANS were preparing to converge on Birmingham tomorrow for a meeting of the 78-member State Executive Committee to make preparations for the state and congressional elections.

State Chairman Claude O. Vardaman said Republicans also would put out tickets in Jefferson, Winston and several other counties, as well as nominate candidates for congressional seats from the Fourth, Seventh, Eighth and Ninth Districts.

State Rep. George Hawkins of Etowah was expected to enter the race for the Democratic nomination for governor during the week.

State Rep. Karl Harrison of Shelby, who qualified for governor Saturday, and other qualifiers, including Judge George Wallace of Clayton, former Ninth District Congr. Laurie Batttle and Shearen Elebash, stepped up campaign plans.

Commissioner Todd cited to Civitan Club members the state's "tremendous resources," which he plans to help develop, if he is elected governor. And he pointed to accomplishments as commissioner of agriculture and industries.

FAULKNER, who held a series of "home folks" rallies in November and early December, will be rejoined at Boaz by the gospel-singing Blackwood Brothers.

Seven members of the outgoing Legislature qualified for renomination, as one House member filed for state senator, among the 18 new qualifiers for legislative seats.

State Rep. Ryan deGraffenried, one of Tuscaloosa's two House members, filed for the post presently held by State Sen. E. W. Skidmore.

Sen. Skidmore, Tuscaloosa attorney, is considered virtually certain to run for lieutenant governor in a race by State Sens. Albert Boutwell of Jefferson, Sam Engelhardt Jr. of Macon, Joe Calvin of Morgan, former State Sen. Graham Wright of Talladega and former State Rep. R. T. Butler of Clay, who now lives at Montgomery.

John H. Hawkins Jr., Birmingham business man, and Joe W. Reid, Birmingham insurance salesman, qualified as candidates for House posts from Jefferson County.

State Rep. McDowell Lee of Barbour County and Rep. James A. Brahyon of Fayette qualified for renomination.

Robert V. Woolridge Jr., Tuscaloosa attorney, announced he would run for the No. 2 House seat from Tuscaloosa being given up by Rep. deGraffenreid to run for state senator.

Three Begin Race For County Legislature Spot

Macon County politics erupted into a flurry of activity this week as three candidates, qualifying to make the race for member of the Legislature, began their campaign for votes. Although eight county offices are to be filled in the Spring Democratic primaries, the only contest up to Thursday morning was in the race for the Legislature.

The three seeking the seat now held by Rep. Jack Rodgers are Grady Rogers, David Jenkins and James M. (Kayo) Fox, the latter from Notasulga. Rogers was a candidate four years ago but was unable to campaign the full time because of illness.

All formally announced as candidates and began canvassing for votes.

Also filing papers as candidates were Sheriff Preston Hornsby, seeking his third term, and F. Conyers Thompson, Shorter, and J. C. A. Huddleston, of Rt. 1, Tuskegee, both seeking to succeed themselves on the Macon County Board of Revenue.

Meanwhile, reports persisted that several others were planning to get into the race for the Legislature, with the possibility that six or more would make it a dog fight.

The was little talk of additional candidates for the Board of Revenue and only vague rumors of possible opposition for Sheriff Hornsby.

Probate Judge William Varner has announced to friends that he will seek a new term but had not qualified up to Thursday morning. Henry Watson, whose office as clerk of Circuit Court also will be at issue, is likewise expected to seek re-election.

In another race affecting the county, Lawrence K. (Snag) Andrews, of Union Springs, qualified Wednesday as a candidate for the state Senate to represent Bullock and Macon Counties, which rotate the office. State Sen. Sam Engelhardt, Jr., of Shorter, has announced as a candidate for lieutenant governor. Andrews was state senator before Engelhardt.

Two members of the Macon County Board of Education and 10 members of the Macon County Democratic Executive Committee also will be named in the Spring primaries.

With $32,000,000 Patterson Could Keep His Promise

THE CRUDEST phase of the race for governor is, as usual, the shameless kidding of the old folks about the amount of pension money they're going to get.

There are about 243,000 Alabamians over age 65. Nearly half this group—104,000—get old age pensions of $39 a month. At these the carnival hucksters pitch.

Candidate Jimmy Faulkner, winning the potential of 104,000 pensioner votes, was the first to set a figure, and it turned out to be modest by comparision—$50 a month.

Peanuts, said Arvil Todd. He looked the old folks gently but steadfastly in the eye and promised $60.

But Candidate John Patterson, who came in late and had the advantage of having seen the earlier bids, went straight up to $75 a month — nearly double the present $39 .

Patterson is the candidate of many conservative business men. None jumped off the Comer Building in Birmingham, but you could hear them gasping like a chicken with the pip.

IT MUST BE understood that old-age pensions are a joint state-federal matter. Of the first $30 paid to a pensioner, $24 is supplied by the federal government, $6 by the state.

Over $30 (and up to $60), the money is supplied 50-50 by the state and federal governments. Over $60, it's all state money.

THUS, OF $39, the government furnishes $28.50 and the state $10.50. This year, then, the $39 pension is expected to cost the state $13,500,000 and the federal government $36,000,000.

If Faulkner's $50 a month were paid, it would cost the state an additional $6,700,000.

Faulkner's theory: Economists estimate that each dollar is spent 10 times before it reaches a savings account or is otherwise "retired" from circulation. Each time the dollar is spent, a 3¢ sales tax is paid.

Thus, when a pensioner spends his $50, it will eventually pass through 10 sets of hands, each paying 3¢ tax, for a total of $15, which is only $1 less than the $16 the state would have to put up to get $34 from the federal government (making a total of $50 a month). This remaining $1, Faulkner is confident he can wring from the legislature.

Faulkner says, in short, that the pensioners will provide the additional millions needed to pay them the additional millions. It is something like perpetual motion, patent pending, and the most intriguing of the explanations.

PATTERSON has the biggest job before him if he is elected governor, for he must raise an additional $32,000,000. How will he get it? He'll cut out graft, require competitive bidding and generally "stop up the holes in the treasury."

TODD, WHOSE $60 a month might be called moderate in the limited sense that it is between Faulkner's $50 and Patterson's $75, must find an additional $13,000,000. Todd hasn't said where he'll get it.

IT SHOULD be noted that even if these additional millions were raised to increase old-age payments, say, next year, a governor's battle would not be over. Each year, the number of persons 65 and over is increasing—from 198,648 in 1950 to 243,000 today. That's an increase of 22%, while the state population as a whole was increasing by only 3%.

Therefore, not only must Faulkner, Todd and Patterson raise enough money for the present aged population, they must reckon on a steady increase in pensioners.

OTHER candidates for governor may yet promise $100. They'll have to in order to beat the present offerings. But at least one candidate, Gadsden's George Hawkins, is sticking to a "common sense pledge" of $45 to $48 a month, which is within reaching distance.

I will not [said Hawkins] insult anyone's intelligence or raise false hopes regarding pensions. At the rate this campaign is moving, I don't doubt that before election day arrives, the going figure in pension promises might exceed $200 a month.

Hawkins might have added that, before election day, even the old folks may have despaired of the extravagant promises and have settled on a man offering something that is attainable. After all, age is supposed to convey some wisdom.

Sam Engelhardt Enters Race For Lieutenant Governorship

He pledged himself to fight to maintain the Southern way of life

State Sen. Sam Engelhardt Jr., known throughout the South as a segregationist leader, announced yesterday he will run for lieutenant governor of Alabama this year.

Engelhardt issued a statement saying he will qualify as a candidate in the Democratic Primaries after the State Democratic Executive Committee officially opens the campaign here Jan. 28.

ENGELHARDT

The 45-year-old legislator is executive secretary of the pro-segregation Alabama Assn. of Citizens Councils. He also sponsored a recently approved constitutional amendment empowering the legislature to abolish Macon County, his home, as a means of preventing Negro political control.

Engelhardt pointed out that today is the birthday anniversary of Robert E. Lee and said his announcement was timed to coincide with that occasion.

"I feel it is proper for me to select this day to make my official announcement and launch my fight to help preserve the Southern way of life for which Lee fought," the senator said.

Engelhardt said the South needs men in public life with strong segregationist principles.

"The next four years will be the darkest in the South's history since Reconstruction," his statement said. "Forces from other parts of the nation will be attempting to ram integration down our throats.

"The best insurance we of Alabama can have to maintain our

Along with the Macon County Abolition Amendment, he sponsored Alabama's Placement Law which seeks to preserve school segregation by giving local boards almost unlimited power to say where individual pupils attend school.

A native of Montgomery County, Engelhardt is a graduate of Washington and Lee University. His wife is the daughter of former State Sen. J. M. Bonner of Wilcox County, himself one of Alabama's best known segregationists.

Engelhardt served one term in the House before his election to the Senate in 1954.

Faulkner Pledged To Oppose Integration, Anti-Labor Laws

CHILDERSBURG, Ala., Feb. 11 —Jimmy Faulkner promised a capacity crowd in the National Guard Armory here tonight that if he is elected governor he will uphold segregation and oppose any anti-labor legislation.

Also, he said, he will remove all bars that keep out-of-state trucks from entering Alabama. Faulkner said he would remove the gates and presently in use at ports-of-entry on highways entering the state.

Faulkner said he plans to qualify today, and drew a big laugh when he said he will do so "if I can raise the $500."

The gubernatorial aspirant promised that if he is elected he will work for better roads, more employment, and improved school conditions.

RACE STAND APPLAUDED

Loudest applause greeted Faulkner's statements on the segregation issue.

"I tell you right now," he said, "that we are not going to have integration in Alabama. White boys and girls are not going to school with black boys and girls."

"But," he added, "we in Alabama believe in fair treatment and separate but equal rights."

Faulkner promised to provide "more jobs and more pocket dollars" if elected.

EDUCATION ISSUE

Regarding education, he observed that only Mississippi is rated below Alabama in school facilities. He promised to work to remedy Alabama's educational situation.

Also in need of aid, said Faulkner, are Alabama farmers, who he said are not receiving fair treatment at the hands of federal farm officials.

The crowd was estimated by Highway Patrolman John Hindmond at 2,200. Included were a number of local officials, as well as a large contingent from Birmingham.

Racial Oath Ban Expected In Alabama

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 25 (AP).—A proposed new segregation oath which would bar Negro candidates from the Democratic primaries in Alabama appeared destined for defeat at a meeting of party leaders here today.

But an equally controversial party loyalty pledge, disqualifying Eisenhower Democrats from seeking office in the party elections this spring, seemed assured of readoption.

The two issues, stemming from the struggle over southern white supremacy, held the center of interest at a meeting of the State Democratic Executive Committee called to kick off the election campaign.

A majority of the 72 committee members caucused last night and reportedly agreed to reject the segregation pledge advocated by National Committeeman Charles W. McKay, jr.

The oath would bind candidates to support the doctrine of racial separation before they could run in the May 6 Democratic primary and the runoff June 3.

A Negro or any other office seeker who refused to sign the pledge would be disqualified.

Committee members, unwilling to write the segregation oath into the rules for the primaries, agreed to support a separate resolution indorsing racial separation as a party policy.

That would commit the party in Alabama to a pro-segregation stand without disqualifying candidates who refused to take an oath.

Patterson clarifies law on peanut vending machines

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 11 —(AP)—Vending machines dispensing candy bars, cakes and other confections containing peanuts cannot qualify for a lower license fee set up by the 1957 Legislature, Atty. Gen. John Patterson's office ruled Friday.

The lower fee was set on machines vending "only peanuts, peanut butter sandwiches and peanut products," under the new law. Vending machines must dispense only products directly derived from peanuts in order to qualify, the attorney general's office ruled.

The opinion was requested by the State Commissioner of Revenue, W. L. Horn.

The new law set up a license fee of $1 for the state, $1 for the county and a possible $1 for the city, making a $3 total. A similar license fee had already been set on other vending machines if they could be operated by pennies. Other machines which could be operated by nickles or larger coins have a license fee totaling $12.50, $8 for the state and $4.50 for the county.

Wallace Pledges 'Southern Way'

MONTGOMERY, Feb. 16 (U.P.) —Circuit Judge George Wallace asked South Alabama voters yesterday to appraise his past record to prove he will "keep Alabama Southern within the law" if elected governor.

"I advocate hatred of no man," Wallace said. "Hate will only compound the problems facing the South. I sound a plea for patience and tolerance and an ernest request that we be allowed to handle state and local affairs without outside interference."

The circuit judge, formally kicked off his campaign at a rally at Ozark, said he "fought the civil rights portion of the Democratic Party platform before the Senate Committee on Civil Rights and fought for the Southern way of life."

Wallace said he would "press for fair legislative reapportionment of Alabama. I feel that the people are entitled to full representation. nI other words, in our legislature, we should represent all the people, not just land acres.

Wallace also cited his legislative record in regards to education, old age benefits and indigent hospital care.

Rep. Kenneth Roberts (D., Ala.) has announced in Washington he will seek his fifth consecutive term in the House from the Fourth District.

The 45-year-old Piedmont native promised a continued fight for segregation and state's rights, for "full utilization" of the Coosa-Alabama River and for the needs of his district.

Gubernatorial Canadidate Jimmy Faulkner of Bay Minette said he will hold his next "home folks" party at eGorgiana Tuesday.

International Affairs To Ease Rights Pressure, Says Wallace

By GEORGE PRENTICE
Advertiser Staff Writer

CALERA, Jan. 27 — Congressional attention on international affairs will save the South further "civil rights pressure," this year, Judge George C. Wallace of Clayton said here tonight.

Wallace, speaking before about 200 members of the Calera White Citizens Council, explained what he termed "detrimental aspects" of last year's civil rights legislation.

In his first speaking appearance since qualifying as a candidate for Governor last Saturday, Wallace made only brief mention of his campaign.

He told council members meeting at the high school here that the South "must maintain peace, but stand firmly."

Setting out three points which he said the people of the South should use as guides, he said:

1. "Never succumb to the idea that schools and our constitutional government are doomed.

2. "Fashion legal remedies and not resort to malicious, illegal methods to fight segregation.

3. "Don't let minority groups (Negroes) forget that we're still the best friends they have."

"We must continue to extend the hand of compassion to all people," he said.

Early in his speech, which lasted about 40 minutes, Wallace told the group that he was not going to deal in politics, "if one can stay away from that topic very long these days."

He went into a rather lengthy explanation of civil rights laws passed by Congress last year. He warned against additions to the law, which he said is designed to kill "individual liberties."

Wallace said one of the most detrimental aspects of the bill was the "virtual abolition of the right of trial by jury."

Wallace said the attention focussed on national defense and generally "on affairs of international importance" would keep Congress from spending so much time on racial issues.

He said he considered time spent by national legislators on civil rights and other race legislation as "wasted effort when we should have been concentrating on our defense programs."

Civil rights issues, he said, were designed to bring disunity within the nation.

"What we need to work on now is a program of unity within the country," he said.

Judge Wallace Closes Records To Rights Inquiry

Jurist Bars All Supoenas From Probers

CLAYTON, Ala., Jan. 19 (AP)—A south Alabama judge declared today that records of his court will be closed to federal civil rights investigators.

Circuit Judge George Wallace said he is uncertain whether the order can include voting records but that he is "studying that possibility."

Voter registration is handled by a separate board whose members themselves are defined by law as judicial officers.

VERBAL INSTRUCTIONS

Wallace, a probable candidate for governor in the Democratic primary in Alabama this spring, announced his action in a prepared statement. He said he has given verbal instructions to the clerk of his court and a formal order is being prepared. His circuit, composed of Barbour, Bullock and Dale counties, has a heavy Negro population.

JUDGE GEORGE WALLACE
Bars Rights Probing

The judge said the new Civil Rights Commission as a part of the executive branch of the government has no constitutional right to "review or condemn" the actions of state courts.

GROSS USURPATION

"Only a higher court has such authority under our separation of powers theory of government," the statement declared.

"Any attempt by the Civil Rights Commission to collect information for such purpose would be a gross usurpation of authority by the executive branch . . . and a direct encroachment . . . upon the judicial branch of state government."

Wallace said any subpoena issued by the Civil Rights Commission to see the records of his court will be refused and "the legality of such subpoenas shall be tested in the courts of the land." He said further that any federal agent who persists in trying to get information in violation of his order "will be treated as a contemptor having committed contempt in the presence of the court." That could mean a fine or jail sentence.

Asked if he knew of anything to indicate that federal investigators might be interested in checking records of his court, the 39-year-old jurist said "not at this time."

"We just want to let the anti-South politicians in Washington know that any effort by the Civil Rights Commission to intimidate us will be resisted to the fullest extent legally."

Wallace said inflamatory statements on the racial question by Sens. Javits (R-N.Y.) and Douglas (D-Ill), "use of storm troopers" to force integration in Little Rock, and passage of the civil rights law by Congress last summer supply "any provocation we need" to bar federal investigators in Alabama.

Wallace, who previously threatened to jail any FBI agent who tried to investigate jury rolls in his circuit, said the records of his court are public documents, but only to be used "for a lawful purpose."

Wallace presided at a hearing in his home county of Barbour in October, 1956, when an effort was made to purge the names of 32 newly registered Negroes from a voting list. The action later was dropped.

About that time an assistant U.S. attorney general, Warren Olney III, announced plans to investigate alleged disfranchisement of Negro voters in the South.

Olney resigned as Asst. Atty Gen. Oct. 15, 1957. Was appointed by Chief Justice Warren as director of Administrative Office of U.S. Courts Jan. 7.

Olney said FBI investigations were then designed to lay the basis for post-election criminal prosecutions "in every instance" where it could be shown that a Negro was denied the right to vote because of color in the November general election that year.

There was no direct reference to the lawsuit pending in Judge Wallace's circuit.

He said it would be "an illegal action" for the Civil Rights Commission to review the court records to see if the judge has denied "equal protection under the laws." Therefore, he said, the records would not be available for such use.

Wallace said his refusal to let federal agents see his court files "is not defiance, but legal resistance within the law."

He also disavowed any race-baiting intent, saying his action is taken solely for "preserving that system of government which has made it possible for all citizens regardless of race, creed or color to enjoy freedom and

Wallace, along with threatening to jail FBI 'agents, also told a grand jury recently that Southern officers should refuse to cooperate with federal law enforcement officers in all civil rights investigations a legal development, he continued, and if a part of the executive branch is allowed to "stigmatize or condemn it . . . the orderly processes of government provided by the Constitution would begin to disappear.

"When such happens, the personal liberties of all citizens will be in grave danger . . ."

The judge said the civil rights law empowers the commission to "study and collect information concerning legal developments which constitute a denial of equal protection of the laws under the Constitution."

Jasper Attorney Opposes Mayhall

B. G. Wilson Seeks Circuit Judgeship

MONTGOMERY, Feb. 20 (AP)—Circuit Judge Roy Mayhall of Jasper, chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee, picked up opposition today for the judgeship he has held many years.

Benjamin Grady Wilson, a Jasper attorney, qualified to oppose the Democratic Party chieftain, as judge of the 14th Judicial Circuit.

Wilson also filed to run for one of the eight places on the State Democratic Committee, of which he now is a member, representing the Seventh Congressional District.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Ellen Taylor Cooper of Burnsville, a longtime teacher in Dallas County schools, filed her papers to run for one of the county's three seats in the State House of Representatives.

Mrs. Cooper became the fourth member of her sex to qualify as a candidate for the Legislature in the May 6 Democratic primary.

Oddly enough, the first woman every elected to the Alabama Legislature, Mrs. J. C. Wilkins, was from Dallas County. The Selma woman was elected to the House in 1923 in a bitter campaign which climaxed a national woman's suffrage movement.

Miss Sibyl Pool, first woman ever to win a constitutional office in Alabama, was elected to the House from Marengo County in 1936. She is the last woman to serve in the Legislature.

She resigned to accept appointment as secretary of state and later was elected to a full term in this office. She has held a state elective office ever since and now is a member of the Alabama Public Service Commission.

Other women candidates running for the Legislature are Mrs. Carole Tuggle of Birmingham, Mrs. Elizabeth Edwards of Wetumpka and Mrs. Lena Wade Adams of Linden.

Mrs. Cooper qualified to run for Dallas County's seat No. 3 now held by Rep. B. Val Hall of Selma.

Alabama's Seventh District congressman, Rep. Carl Elliott of Jasper, also qualified today to seek renomination to his House seat for another two years.

State Rep. J. Emmett Wood of Washington County got his qualifying papers in to the secretary of state today to seek a fourth term as representative for his county.

Also filing for renomination to the House was Rep. Harry J. (Jack) Huddleston of Sheffield, who represents Colbert County.

Another member of the State Democratic Executive Committee, Mayor J. E. Brentley of Banks, qualified today to run for one of the committee seats in the Second Congressional District.

Solicitor W. E. Hollingsworth Jr. of Talladega filed to seek renomination to his position as solicitor in the 29th Judicial Circuit.

Alabama Governor Candidate Gives Segregation Views

BIRMINGHAM, — (ANP) — A. W. Todd, state agriculture commissioner and a candidate for governor, announced his stand on segregation here last week by saying:

"We're going to have segregation and we're going to have it peacefully. I stand for segregation as strong as any man in the race."

He added that provision of equal facilities for whites and Negroes would "do more to eliminate some of the racket" than anything else that has been suggested.

LEGAL STATUS UNDECIDED

Duggar Enters Gubernatorial Race Under Segregation Flag

A Montgomery architect has entered the gubernatorial race under the banner of the Segregationist Party to help make sure a "moderate" on the segregation issue isn't elected.

John F. Duggar III filed qualifying papers yesterday. However, it was reported at the office of the secretary of state yesterday afternoon that the legal status of the party had not been determined.

The party was organized in 1956. It was duly qualified and offered a full slate of electors in the Presidential election. However, three of these resigned, and the slate was completed with independent candidates, Llewellyn Duggar, Hope Hull, a brother of the gubernatorial candidate, said last night.

Duggar said the party withdrew its emblem at that time, but that he believed it has complied with all regulations to ensure its status.

Duggar, 36, a native of Hope Hull and Auburn graduate, said in announcing his candidacy:

"There are some good men in the primary who are campaigning strongly on the segregation issue, but there are some others in the race who claim they are for segregation, but at the same time admit that they are 'moderates,' and I believe they would accept gradual integration. The Segregation Party is unequivocally dedicated to segregation for now and the future as being the only approach to an answer to the problem of racial tension.

"If a strong segregationist wins in the primary, or in the runoff, I shall withdraw, but if one of the so-called 'moderates' wins in the primary, as may happen, I shall remain in the race. Then the people of Alabama might have a chance to decide in the general election in November whether they prefer gradual integration or a powerful stand against integration which would be assayed by the Segregation Party."

Meanwhile, within the Democratic Party, two candidates who opposed each other four years ago were at it again.

Joseph W. Smith defeated J. E. (Jimmy) Putnam for the State Senate in the 27th district. Now they are running against each other for the House.

Smith defeated Putnam in 1954 in a controversial Democratic primary election marked by charges of vote fraud in Phenix City where both candidates live. The incubent senator is a Phenix City lawyer; Putnam is former city clerk.

The charges of election irregularities in Russell County brought an investigation by a three-man subcommittee of the State Democratic Executive Committee.

Although nonimees for most other county offices were ousted by the state committee, the senatorial race in which Smith defeated Putnam was left undistrubed. The committee said it found no evidence of fraud in that contest.

Smith qualified today as a candidate for House Seat No. 2 from Russell County in the May 6 Democratic primary. Putnam had filed for the same place some time ago.

The outgoing senator is ineligible to seek renomination because it is Lee County's turn to elect a senator under the rotation system prevalent in the upper chamber.

Among the other candidates qualifying yesterday ahead of the approaching March 1 deadline was Christie G. Pappas of Eufaula, who simultaneously became a candidate for two offices.

Pappas filed for the State Senate in the 24th District (Barbour County) and also for a place on the State Democratic Executive Committee from the 3rd Congressional District.

Two more candidates qualified for the state committee from the 8th District. They were Thomas D. McDonald of Huntsville and W. L. Chenault of Decatur.

A previously unheralded candidate meanwhile moved into the already crowded field for secretary of state. Raymond M. Arnott, a retired motel operator from Bessemer, joined four other contenders already in the race.

Cheif Justice Ed Livingston qualified earlier in the day for another six-year term on the State Supreme Court where he has sat for 18 years.

Former Sen. George Quarles of Selma filed for Dallas County House Seat No. 3, and ex-Sen. Virgil Smith of Leesburg qualified for the Senate again in the 29th District (Cherokee and DeKalb Counties).

Other qualifiers were:

Elwood Rutledge of Haleyville for the Senate from the 3rd District (Blount, Cullman and Winston counties).

H. E. Ray of Haleyville for the House from Winston County.

Wiley Salter of Evergreen, running for the House in Conecuh County.

Joseph J. Jasper of Birmingham, for the House in Jefferson County.

Freeman Walton of Greensboro for House Place No. 1 from Hale County.

Glenn Hewett of Arab for the House from Marshall County.

Roland H. Bounds of Thomasville for House Seat No. 2 in Clarke County.

F. J. Carnes of Albertville for the 4th District solicitor of the 27th Circuit (Marshall County).

Paul E. Delchamps of Mobile, David R. Coley III of Mobile, John M. Coxwell of Monroeville and W. H. Bruce of Catherine, all running for the State Democratic Committee in the 1st District.

C. W. Johnson and Dan R. Morgan of Dothan for the committee in the 3rd District.

P. H. Farnham of Talladega in the 4th District.

Faulkner Bears Down On Segregation Issue

HOPE, Ala., Feb. 25—Gubernatorial candidate Jimmy Faulkner brought his campaign to this small Tuscaloosa County community tonight, where he re-emphasized his earlier vow that segregation will be maintained.

A crowd of about 950 was on hand for this last of Faulkner's "Home Folks Parties." Starting next Monday, Faulkner will begin an extended stumping tour of the state.

Appearing on the program with Faulkner tonight was the Blackwood Brothers Quartet. The rally was held in the National Guard Armory here.

Using much the same material as he had in his other rallies throughout the state, Faulkner put extra emphasis tonight on a stepped-up industrial development program for Alabama.

Two Abandon Plans To Enter Lieutenant Governor Running

Two expected candidates for lieutenant governor in the May primary withdrew from the race yesterday but another is scheduled to qualify today.

State Sen. Joe Calvin of Decatur issued a statement yesterday declaring he would not be a candidate for lieutenant governor in May, nor would he run for any other public office.

Meanwhile, former State Sen. Graham Wright of Talladega, who announced in Jan. he would run for lieutenant governor, backed out of that race yesterday but immediately jumped into another.

Wright, a member of Alabama's famed "walkout delegation" at the 1948 Democratic National Convention, filed qualification papers with the secretary of state to run for the State Senate from the 8th District.

Scheduled to qualify today for lieutenant governor is Sen. Sam Engelhardt of Macon.

The veteran Macon lawmaker issued a statement yesterday in which he said he would campaign for "substantial aid to the schools, the mentally and physically ill, the aged, the needy and the blind."

Engelhardt also reiterated his stand to oppose any effort to repeal the Right-to-Work law.

Engelhardt will be the fourth and apparently the final candidate to qualify for lieutenant governor. Already in the race are State Sens. Albert Boutwell of Birmingham and E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa and former Rep. R. T. (Bob) Butler of Clay.

Two More Enter Race For Board Of Revenue Position; One For Education Board

Competition developed in two additional county races this week with entry of a third candidate for the Board of Education posts and two candidates seeking the Board of Revenue post now held by F. Conyers Thompson, who is seeking re-election.

Meanwhile, with the deadline for qualifying set for Friday at midnight, some discussion was heard that a last-minute entrant might make a five-man race of the scramble for the Macon County seat in the Legislature.

The two new candidates seeking the Board of Revenue post from District 3 were R. Harold Segrest, of Chesson, and Rudolf E. Burks, of Shorter.

W. W. "Bill" Gowan, of Chesson, Thursday morning qualified to make the race for the Board of Education.

Two board of Education positions are to be filled, with Wiley D. Ogletree and A. B. Hope, incumbents, both seeking re-election.

Of the two new candidates for the board of Revenue, Mr. Segrest is currently employed by a local petroleum product agency and Mr. Burks is a cattleman and farmer.

Mr. Segrest is an Army veteran and was a farmer before joining the local concern. He has a wife and one child.

Mr. Burks is a prominent cattleman of Shorter and has had experience in engineering and construction. He has a wife and three children.

The new aspirant for the Board of Education, Mr. Gowan, has a wife and four children, two of whom are attending Shorter School and two at Troy State Teachers College.

Candidacy Raises Question—

Segregation Party Ruling Is Sought

FROM PRESS REPORTS

MONTGOMERY, Feb. 26—The secretary of state's office waited on a ruling from Atty. Gen. John Patterson today before deciding whether to accept the qualification papers of a Segregation Party candidate for governor.

John F. Dugger III, a Montgomery architect, filed a declaration of candidacy yesterday to run under the Segregation Party emblem in the November general election.

Alabama law requires third party candidates to qualify on or before the date of the Democratic primary, which will be May 6 this year.

The secretary of state's office asked the attorney general for an advisory opinion on this question:

"Did the fact that the Segregation Party withdraw its slate of presidential elector candidates two years ago affect the official status of the party"

Three of the 11 Segregation Party candidates pulled out of the race in 1956. The remaining eight and three new ones then ran as independents.

Llewellyn Duggar, brother of the gubernatorial candidate, said the party withdrew its emblem at that time. He said, however, that the party complied with all regulations to insure its legal status.

The party emblem contained the quotation—"We dare to defend our rights."

The secretary of state's office said today that "nothing like this has ever happened before. Alabama has never had a party formed, the candidates resign, and the party then join with the independents to run."

Charles Cooper, head of the Legislative Reference Service, said the Segregation Party would not be eligible to hold a primary at state expense.

"To be qualified for a primary at state expense, a party must collect 20 per cent of the entire state vote in the last general election. The Segregation Party did not, because it did not run under that emblem," he said.

But Cooper added, "any party or slate of candidates can qualify for a general election, however, by submitting a petition containing 300 signatures by the first Tuesday in May.

Duggar, a native of Hope Hull near Montgomery, has made it plain he will not run in the general election if a white supremacist wins the Democratic primary May 6.

"There are some good men in the primary who are campaigning strongly on the segregation issue," he said. "But there are some others in the race who claim they are for segregation but at the same time admit they are 'moderates.' And I believe they would accept gradual integration."

He did not list the candidates he was talking about.

"If a strong segregationist wins in the primary or the run-off, I shall withdraw, but if one of the so-called 'moderates' wins in the primary, as may happen, I shall remain in the race."

elected, he promised to promote better race relations and to work for greater economy in state government.

NEGRO WILL SEEK ALABAMA OFFICE

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UP) A Birmingham Negro announced Friday night that he will enter the race for lieutenant governor of Alabama, opposing three segregationist candidates.

Perry [illegible] Thompson, 48-year-old radio announcer, said he could play my hand on almost 10,000 votes right now." He predicted he would win on a platform of better schools and good government.

One of the white candidates is arch-segregationist Sam Engelhardt, state senator who sponsored the gerrymandering of Tuskegee, Ala., to disfranchise practically all of the town's Negro [illegible]

Negro to Run For 2d Place In Alabama

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 1 (AP)—The first Negro to run for a statewide office in 56 years has entered the race for Lieutenant Governor.

Perry O. Thompson of Bessemer was one of two members of his race who qualified yesterday for the Democratic primary May 6.

The second was Arthur B. Tiddleman of Birmingham, who filed for the Jefferson County seat in the House of Representatives.

Thompson is the owner of a public relations firm and an announcer for a Bessemer radio station. This is his first campaign for political office. A middleweight prize fighter he fought in more than 200 amateur and professional bouts from 1927 to 1938 under the name Tiger Thompson. H

Wallace Votercade To Attend Ozark Kick-Off

News Tuskegee Ala. P. 1
Thurs. 2-6-58

A Wallace Votercade of 40 to 50 cars from Macon County will take the highway Saturday morning, Feb. 15, to join other supporters of Judge C. Wallace from over Southeast Alabama at a big rally at Ozark to mark the formal opening of the Wallace campaign for governor. Judge Wallace, who has been campaigning informally for the last few weeks, will take the wraps off his drive with an address starting at 2 p. m.

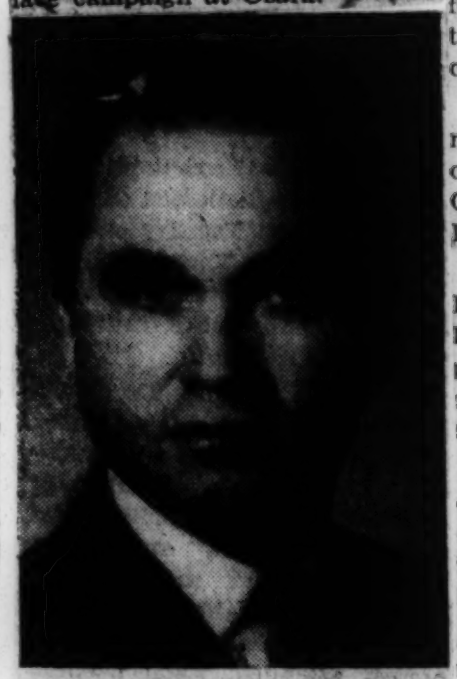
Leading the Macon County delegation as Grand Marshal of the Votercade will be Ed Reynolds, Tuskegee and Notasulga attorney, who has a committee working on assignment of cars and passengers which will make up the Wallace Votercade. Tentative plans call for cars from Notasulga and the eastern end of the county to assemble at Tuskegee and pick up other cars from Shorter and South Macon at Fort Davis.

Grand Marshal Reynolds will announce assembly points and time when arrangements have been completed. He said all persons who favor Wallace for governor are invited to fill up their cars and join the Votercade.

Macon County supporters of Judge Wallace for governor have held several preliminary organization meetings and have set up committees to begin work of swinging all the county behind the Wallace campaign.

Judge Wallace has made several visits to Tuskegee to speak at civic club meetings and has rallied influential support in the county. Campaign headquarters for Southeast Alabama have been set up in Montgomery and is assisting the Macon group in organizing the drive for votes in this county.

Wallace Votercades from other counties in this section also are being organized to swell the crowd at the formal opening of the Wallace campaign at Ozark.



JUDGE GEORGE C WALLACE

Seven Sign Up On First Day Of Qualifying

Daily Home
Talladega Ala.
Thurs. 2-6-58

It looks like the race for sheriff of Talladega County is going to be as crowded as had been predicted.

P. 1

On the opening day for qualifications, seven candidates including the incumbent, Joh W. Robinson, had qualified for the contest, reported John North, secretary-treasurer of the Talladega County democratic executive committee and a Talladega city commission.

In addition to Robinson those qualifying for sheriff were Harry G. Embry, employee of Beaunit Mills; Clinton Perkins, Talladega County coroner; William A. Romine, former ABC officer; J. L. Norred, Talladega County chief deputy; Luke Brewer, former deputy and now Talladega policeman; James Costner, Munford merchant and former Georgia highway patrolman.

Indications are that the race for county commissioner of district one will be another hotly contested event.

The incumbent Alfred J. Turner already is faced with three opponents — Luther F. Ellan, George G. Brooks and Oscar Phillips.

There has been some talk at Lincoln that Shelton Allred of Dry Valley also would seek the position. Allred has not announced and has not qualified, however.

Turner was appointed to fill the vacancy on the county commission caused by the death of John Shaddix, who died in December, 1956.

Bradford Caldwell, road commissioner of district three, also has opposition. J. A. Hubbard has qualified to run for the office now held by Caldwell.

Caldwell has announced that he will seek re-election but has not qualified yet.

Probate Judge D. Hardy Riddle qualified immediately after a meeting of the county executive committee Tuesday night and Circuit Clerk Arthur Wood qualified Wednesday.

Bruce "Pop" Brown of Talladega is expected to oppose Wood and there has been talk of a candidate from Sylacauga in the contest.

Skidmore Declares Candidacy In Lieutenant Governor Race

Advertiser Montgomery Ala.
Fri 2-7-58

State Sen. E. W. Skidmore of Tuscaloosa jumped into the race for lieutenant governor yesterday. Another aspirant for the same office declared he would qualify next week.

Skidmore's announcement came in the form of a brief telegram dispatched to members of the press:

"Mailing qualifications lieutenant governor today. Will work for the same things I did during eight years as senator."

On the heels of Skidmore's announcement came a statement from Sen. Sam Engelhardt of Macon that he would qualify next week.

Engelhardt announced earlier he would make this race, but has delayed in qualifying pending his final separation from the office of executive secretary of the Alabama Assn. of Citizens' Councils.

His resignation from that office was officially accepted here yesterday by the executive board of that pro-segregation group.

Engelhardt also announced his platform yesterday, which included a vow to maintain segregation "every day in every way."

He also promised to work for more aid to education, the mentally and physically ill, the aged, needy and blind.

Advertiser

Engelhardt also promised to work for the retention of the controversial right-to-work law, a measure strongly opposed by organized labor.

P 2A

Skidmore had been expected to enter the lieutenant governor's race, although he was also under strong pressure to run for attorney general.

Fri 2-7-58

A two-term veteran of the State Senate, Skidmore gained wide recognition in the closing days of the 1957 Legislature when he waged a vigorous fight seeking passage of a proposed measure raising the corporate income tax with the proceeds earmarked for education.

Skidmore is a strong opponent of the right-to-work law, and is expected to receive strong backing from organized labor.

Already qualified for the same office are Sen. Albert Boutwell of Birmingham and R. T. (Bob) Butler, a former member of the House from Clay County.

Hawkins 13th Candidate For Governor

Dailey Home
Talladega Ala
Fri 2-7-58

GADSDEN —(AP)— State Rep. George Hawkins announced his entry in the race for governor today. That brings the number of candidates to 13.

P. 1

They will run in the Democratic primary May 6. A runoff primary June 3 between the two high men will determine the party nominee provided the leader fails to get a majority in the first balloting.

Hawkins said he would make "a new common-sense approach" to Alabama's problems.

Hawkins, a floor leader for Gov. James E. Folsom and chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, said his friends "believe my prospects of winning are good."

The Etowah legislator said issues in the race would include:

"More adequate compensation for school teachers, improved and equalized segregated school facilities, practical aid for the farmer and unemployed workers, development of waterways and natural resources, improvement of health facilities and continuation of the road building program."

Hawkins had been listed as a probable candidate for governor for several months.

Author Faulkner Cites South As Negro Learning Grounds

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Feb. 19—Author William Faulkner said tonight Southerners must teach the Negro responsibilities of equality with the white man "and the place for this to begin is Virginia."

Faulkner, winner of a Nobel Prize for literature, told a University of Virginia audience this must be accomplished either by educating the Negro "into our white schools, or giving him white teachers in his own schools until we have taught the teachers of his own race to teach and train him in these hard and unpleasant habits.

"Whether or not he (the Negro) ever learns his A-B-C's or what to do with common directions, won't matter," said the native Mississippian, who is beginning his second period as writer in residence at the university. "What he must learn are the hard things—self restraint, honesty, dependability, purity; to act not even as well as just any white man, but to act as well as the best white man."

Faulkner said the program of second class citizens may stem from inability or unwillingness to accept "first class responsibilities." The Negro must be taught, he added, "that in order to be free and equal he must first be worthy of it, and then for ever afterward work to hold and keep and defend it."

"It is easy for the North to blame on us, the South, the fact that the problem is still unsolved," he said. "Nor will it help us any to remind the North that, by ratio of Negro to white in population, there is probably more of inequality and injustice there than with us.

"Instead we should accept that gambit. Let us say to the North: all right, it is our problem, we will still solve it. For the sake of argument let us agree that as yet the Negro is incapable of equality for the reason that he could not hold and keep it even if it were forced on him with bayonets; that once the bayonets were removed, the first smart and ruthless man, black or white, who came along would take it away from him because he, the Negro, is not yet capable of, or refuses to accept, the responsibilities of equality."

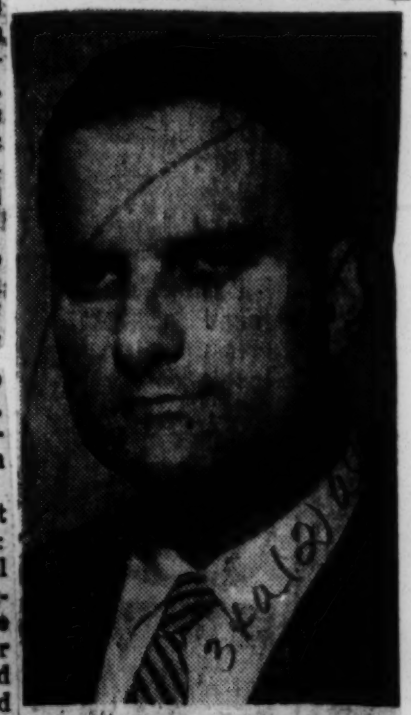
Elebash Opens With Promise To Follow Up Folsom Gains

By NOB INGRAM
Advertiser Staff Writer

SELMA, Ala., Feb. 20—Montgomery's Shearen Elebash opened his bid for governor here tonight with a promise to "expand and develop the progressive program of Gov. James E. Folsom."

Speaking to a hometown crowd of 250 people, Elebash displayed a speaking ability far superior to any other candidate in the crowded gubernatorial race.

For 32 minutes, Elebash appeared to have a partisan audience in the palm of his hand. So enthralled was the crowd at Elebash's oratorical eloquence—born of his long experience as an entertainer—that not once was he interrrupted with applause.



SHEAREN ELEBASH
Opens Race For Governor

Elebash's endorsement of the Folsom program in a county which has historically opposed the present governor came as a surprise.

"What I have to say may or may not please you but I ask you to give it some thought," Elebash declared. "For the past 12 years Alabama has made tremendous strides, but during the last four years it has made immense progress in the matter of industrial development, road construction and river development."

"I want you to know as your governor I will extend and develop the progressive program of Gov. James E. Folsom," Elebash said.

In discussing the other major issues of the campagn Elebash declared he stood "firm and resolute in the defense of segregation."

"I shall strive to drive out fear and hate and preserve peace," Elebash continued. "I shall not be a part of persecution and irresponsibility."

The Montgomery jeweler described as "unfair, cruel and unthinkable" the promises being made by some candidates concerning old-age pensions.

"We must not buy a vote on an improper promise and the promise of $75 a month for the old people is impossible," Elebash said.

Turning to the question of education, Elebash observed that there is "something wrong somewhere."

Four years ago, education was given $80 million a year and this year it is psending $116 million and yet we are still in trouble," Elebash said. "When I am elected governor I intend to find out what is wrong with our education system."

Prior to his address in the junior high school auditorium here Elebash provided his own entertainment, including his well known take-offs on international orators.

Earlier the A. G. Parrish High School Combo entertained the group with a rock 'n 'roll session. The audience composed almost entirely of middle-aged and elderly people appeared to be more amused than entertained by the fired-up teenagers.

Appearing on the platform with Elebash were a number of candidates for Dallas County public offices. They included Probate Judge V. A. Reynolds; Board of Revenue Commissioners Furniss Ellis, Tom Martin, John Traylor, Seawell Jones and board candidates Eugene Rush and Doug Pickering; Sen. Walter C. Givhan, Rep. Val Hain and his opponent, Mrs. Ellen Taylor Cooper, Sheriff Jim Clark and opponents Frank Dozier and Wilson Baker.

Elebash was introduced by Paul Grist, director of the YMCA here.

At the conclusion of the rally baskets were passed through the crowd seeking contributions to finance Elebash's campaign.

Present with the candidate were his wife and three of their four chilrdren—Dean, 12; Brian, 9 and Barbara, 4. The children helped in distribution of Elebash campaign literature before the program started.

The auditorium — seating capacity of 756—was one-third filled on this brisk night.

Youth Is Served In Governor's Race

The next lieutenant governor is likely to remain that; certainly he can have no unusual expectations based on the ages of the candidates for governor. It is a young field of candidates with the oldest being [illegible].

They are: Patterson, 36; Wallace, 38; Hawkins, 39; Owen, [illegible]; Battle, 45; [illegible] 42; Faulkner, 42; Harrison, 50.

J was 38 when he was elected in 1946 and 39 when sworn in January, 1947.

Teddy Roosevelt became president at 42 when McKinley was shot and became the youngest man ever elected in 1904 —age 46.

Six Presidents took the oath of office while in their forties.

Whoever is elected out of the youthful field will still have a long life ahead of him and opportunity to make other races. Probably more than one of the young men now running has to himself thought that perhaps after a term as governor, an opportunity to run for the U.S. Senate will sooner or later beckon. Or perhaps another term as governor.

It would seem even more certain that of those defeated, a number will be on the ballot for [illegible] try for governor four years from [illegible].

Patterson Rules Segregation Party Eligible For Campaign

Atty. Gen. John Patterson's office ruled yesterday that the Segregation Party which has offered a candidate for governor is still in existence under Alabama law.

But the advisory opinion written at the request of the Secretary of State didn't say "yes" or "no" whether the candidate, John F. Duggar III of Montgomery, has properly qualified.

Patterson's office said it didn't; that the party is still in existence as far as the law is concerned.

But whether the party has completed all the requirements for nominating a candidate, such as holding a convention or primary, wasn't determined because, the Attorney General's office said, that question wasn't presented.

Duggar filed qualifying papers with the Secretary of State earlier this week to get his name on the general election ballot in November. He said he would withdraw, however, if a "strong segregationist" wins the Democratic nomination for Governor.

Would Ban Integrationists In Alabama Primary

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 24. —(AP)—Democrats in Alabama will begin the 1958 election campaign Saturday facing a showdown over a segregation oath which would bar Negro candidates unless they abandon their integration fight.

Memphis, Tenn. Jan 25-58

The pledge, suggested by National Committeeman Charley W. McKay Jr., would require candidates to take an oath to support the state's segregation laws before they could run in the Democratic primaries.

Negroes as well as any others who refused to sign the pledge would be disqualified.

The state Democratic Executive Committee will meet here Saturday signaling the formal start of the election campaign. But a caucus of the 72 members Friday night was expected to determine whether the segregation oath stands a chance of adoption in the face of expressed opposition from the party chairman.

Committee members also will decide whether to readopt a controversial party loyalty pledge which disqualifies any prospective candidate who voted for President Eisenhower in 1956.

The committee session was called to fi xrules and regulations for the May 6 party primary the the June 3 runoff.

DEMOCRATS FEAR SUIT

Alabamans Reject Segregation Oath

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 24 (AP)—A majority of the state Democratic executive committee reportedly agreed tonight to reject a segregation oath that would bar Negro candidates unless they abandoned their integration fight.

Memphis, Tenn. Jan 25-58

The decision came at a caucus of approximately 40 of the 72 members of the committee. The committee will take formal action at a meeting tomorrow if the segregation pledge is proposed, a party leader said.

Knoxville, Tenn. Jan 25-58

National Committeeman Charles W. McKay Jr. of Sylacauga has proposed an oath which would bind candidates to support the state's segregation laws before they could run in the Democratic primaries this spring.

Negroes as well as any others who refuse to sign the pledge would be disqualified.

The party officials who told of the action at the caucus said there was no opposition to the segregation pledge as such. However, most of the committee members felt it might bring a court test that could nullify the primary elections, the official said.

Rather than skirt the segregation issue entirely, however, committee members reportedly agreed to adopt a separate resolution endorsing Alabama's segregation laws as a matter of party policy.

That would enable Negroes to run as candidates without signing a segregation pledge and is designed to endorse racial separation without risking a court suit. A similar resolution was adopted four years ago.

The party official also said a committee majority agreed to readopt a controversial party loyalty pledge which disqualifies any prospective candidate who voted for President Eisenhower in 1956.

The disclosure that McKay would try to get the segregation oath embodied in the rules brought a warning from Party Chairman Roy Mayhall of Jasper, who said it might jeopardize the party primary system.

Mayhall, a Circuit Court judge, said he feared a segregation oath for candidates might invite the courts to nullify the entire primary.

Segregation Oath Is Killed In Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. Jan. 25 (AP)—Opposition from party leaders who feared a court test killed today a segregation oath which could have barred Negroes as candidates in Alabama's Democratic primaries.

No attempt was made to write the pledge into the rules for the 1958 party election because a majority of the state Democratic Executive Committee had made it clear before hand they would reject.

Courier, W. Va.

The oath would have required candidates seeking office in the May 6 primary and June 3 runoff to pledge themselves to defend the state's segregation laws.

Jan 26-58

A strong party loyalty oath which also had its origin in the fight over Southern white supremacy was readopted by the committee, with only two negative votes.

Charleston, S.C.

It disqualifies any prospective 1958 candidate who voted Republican in 1956 or who "openly and publicly" opposed the Democratic presidential ticket.

The vote on the loyalty pledge was 56-2.

Although committee sentiment blocked the proposed segregation oath for candidates, a separate resolution endorsing the doctrine of racial separation was approved unanimously as a statement of party policy.

Although the policy statement commits the party in Alabama to a prosegregation stand, it enables candidates to seek office without signing an oath to uphold it.

No Negro, or other prospective candidate who refused to sign the pledge, would have been eligible to run in the primaries.

The loyalty oath rewritten into the party election rules applies only to candidates and makes no effort to keep Eisenhower Democrats from voting in the primaries this year.

Alabama Demo Drops Effort to Bar Race Oath

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 25. (AP)—Democratic National Committeeman Charles W. McKay Jr. Saturday abandoned his efforts to get the party to adopt a segregation oath which would bar Negroes from the primaries in Alabama.

McKay made the announcement as the State Democratic Executive Committee met to fix rules and regulations for the party election May 6 and a runoff June 3 for candidates which fail to get a majority of the votes in the first primary.

Atlanta, Ga.

The state committee was expected, however, to readopt a party loyalty oath which would bar Eisenhower Democrats from seeking office in the primaries. It requires candidates to swear that they didn't vote against the Democratic presidential ticket in 1956.

THE SYLACAUGA attorney, who is also a member of the State House of Representatives, said his decision was based on the action of a majority of the committee members in a caucus Friday night. Party leaders said enough of the committeemen agreed to reject the segregation oath to assure its defeat.

McKay pointed out that he is not a member of the state committee and could not offer the oath himself and that he was unwilling to ask any committee member to do it in the face of likely defeat.

The pledge, as advocated by the national committeeman, would disqualify any prospective candidate who refused to sign an oath supporting the doctrine of racial segregation.

Negroes as well as any others who refused to sign the pledge would have been ineligible to run as candidates.

Demo Fear Of Court Test Kills Segregation Oath

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 25 (AP)—Opposition from party leaders who feared a court test killed today a segregation oath which could have barred Negroes as candidates in Alabama's Democratic primaries.

The vote on the loyalty pledge was 56-2.

The vote on this controversial issue came after Frank Mizell of Montgomery, a Second District committeeman, objected vigorously and at length to the loyalty oath.

He was particularly critical of the clause which would disbar candidates who did not vote at all in the 1956 general election.

"There are many life-long Democrats who could not take Adlai and Kefauver in 1956, so they did not vote at all," Mizell said. "I do not think they should be penalized for their action."

Mizell failed to win much support for his position despite his oratory. Only one other committee member—Grady Hurst Jr. of Chatom—joined with Mizell in voting against the loyalty oath.

Although committee sentiment blocked the proposed segregation oath for candidates, a separate resolution endorsing the doctrine of racial separation was approved unanimously as a statement of party policy.

Although the policy statement commits the party in Alabama to a prosegregation stand, it enables candidates to seek office without signing an oath to uphold it.

Segregation Party Enters Alabama Governor's Race

Duggar Says He'll Withdraw If Democrats' Nominee Suits Him

By FRED TAYLOR
Staff Writer, The Birmingham News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 1—Although all of Alabama's big field of Democratic primary candidates for governor are pledged to maintain segregation in this state, they are being challenged by an aspirant running under the emblem of the Segregation Party.

He is John Frederick Duggar III, youthful Montgomery architect and staunch segregationist, who filed this week with the secretary of state's office to become standard-bearer of the Segregation Party.

Thus the Democrat who finally is nominated for governor in the second Tuesday primary election will face opposition from the Segregation Party gubernatorial hopeful as well as from the Republican nominee in the November general election.

Qualification Check

That is, if the Alabama attorney general's office rules favorably on qualification papers filed by Duggar in his declaration of candidacy. Other legal authorities believe the papers are in order.

And, further, if Duggar and future as being the only approach to an answer to the problems of racial tension."

In saying he would remain in the race as the Segregation Party standard-bearer, in event one of the Democratic candidates described by him as a "moderate" emerges victorious, Duggar added:

"Then the people of Alabama might have a chance to decide in the general election in November whether they prefer gradual integration or a powerful stand against integration, which would be assured by the Segregation Party."

The Segregation Party was formed in Alabama in late August of 1956 after the Democrats again had nominated Adlai Stevenson for president and President Eisenhower again was the choice of Republicans.

But after just three weeks, it was announced by some of those who were included on its presidential elector candidate slate that the party would become inactive.

Joined Independents

It was then that eight of the presidential elector candidates, who had qualified as Segregation Party aspirants, decided to join with three other presidential elector candidates on an independent ticket.

Duggar was one of the eight. The secretary of state's office asked the attorney general's office to rule on the qualifying papers filed this week by Duggar for governor.

Legal question raised by the secretary of state was:

Did the fact that the Segregation Party withdraw its slate of presidential candidates two years ago affect the official status of the party?

If it did, all the Segregation Party leaders are required to do is file another petition bearing names of at least 300 qualified voters with the secretary of state on or before May 6 to get Duggar qualified as a third party candidate.

his Segregation Party backers are not pleased with the Democrat nominated by the voters for the state's top office.

The 36-year-old Duggar said that if a "strong segregationist" wins the Democratic nomination for governor, which is usually tantamount to election, he would withdraw as a third-party aspirant.

However, he declared that "if one of the so-called moderates" becomes the Democratic Party nominee, then he would oppose him in a three-way fight in the November general election when a Republican nominee also will be running.

Duggar was one of the presidential elector candidates on an independent slate opposing the Democratic and Republican nominees for Alabama's 11 presidential-elector places in 1956. The Democrats won decisively.

Commenting on the governor's race, Duggar said "there are some good men in the Democratic primary race who are campaigning strongly on the segregation issue."

Opposes Moderates

"But there are some others in the race who claim they are for segregation, but at the same time admit they are 'moderates,' and I believe they would accept gradual integration," he added.

He said the Segregation Party is "unequivocally dedicated to segregation for now and the

Faubus Landslide Is Seen as Woe for Demos in '60

Stiffer Dixie Opposition to Mixing Seen

BY JACK BELL

WASHINGTON (AP) — The landslide victory of Gov. Orval Faubus in Arkansas spells 1960 trouble for the divided Democratic party.

It also means stiffened political opposition to racial integration.

That is the view veteran national politicians are taking of the sweeping primary triumph Tuesday of the governor whose actions last September were followed by President Eisenhower's dispatch of federal troops to Little Rock.

THIRD PARTY HINTS

The avalanche of votes rolled up by Faubus in winning Democratic renomination — equal to reelection in his state—appear likely to bring rallying around the governor elements of the electorate who would not hesitate to break with the Democratic party in 1960 if it takes its expected stand against segregation.

Faubus has said he intends to remain in the Democratic party. But most professional Southern politicians here think he will be subjected to a great deal of pressure to break away and lead a segregationist ticket in 1960.

These professionals, who shudder at the thought of another abortive third party movement, are not likely to flock to Faubus as their leader. Unless events change their minds he will not be the symbol for the fight they expect to make within the party to prevent the nomination of an all-out integrationist as a presidential candidate.

SETBACK CONCEDED

That Faubus' victory was a setback for school integration was conceded by two foes of segregation.

Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-NY) said he has no doubt the demonstration of sentiment registered in Arkansas indicates even stiffer opposition to integration in the future.

Sen. Richard L. Neuberger (D-Ore) said in a separate interview that Faubus' victory was "a disappointing thing and, unfortunately, it may set the pattern in the South."

Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss), a leading segregationist, said he thinks that the vote for Faubus represents widespread sentiment in the South against integration.

Sen. Robert S. Kerr (D-Okla) commented: "This is a manifestation of the collapse of any support for Eisenhower. I predict there are going to be some additional disclosures of the resurgence of Democratic and anti-Eisenhower sentiment as time goes on."

Shows People Devoted to Principles—Griffin

ATLANTA (AP)—Georgia's governor Wednesday congratulated Gov. Orville Faubus of Arkansas on his victorious campaign for a third term.

Gov. Marvin Griffin wired Faubus:

"Congratulations on your splendid victory! Your precedent-shattering third-term election substantiates the devotion of the people of your great state to the principles of local self government and state sovereignty. I am looking forward to this fall when we can enjoy a day or two of duck hunting."

Virginia Governor Wires Good Wishes

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Gov J. Lindsay Almond Wednesday telegraphed his congratulations to Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas on Faubus' overwhelming victory in Tuesday's primary.

"Congratulations on your renomination. You have my cordial good wishes," Almond said.

Protest Against U.S. Troops—Gov. Hodges

RALEIGH, N. C. (AP)—North Carolina Gov. Luther Hodges said Wednesday he believes the smashing election victory by Arkansas Gov. Orville Faubus "indicated the intensity of feeling against President Eisenhower for sending federal troops into Little Rock."

Asked for comment on Faubus' victory, Hodges said:

"The nomination of Gov. Faubus was a matter, of course, for the good Democratic voters of Arkansas to decide. I do believe, however, that the overwhelming vote he received indicated the intensity of feeling against President Eisenhower for sending federal troops into Little Rock."

Proof of State Rights, 'Bama Governor Says

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP)—Alabama's Gov. James E. Folsom said Wednesday the renomination of Gov. Orval Faubus in Arkansas means the South will "settle our differences in our own neighborhoods."

He interpreted Faubus' overwhelming victory, too, as a blow to "bureaucracy in Washington."

Folsom said the outcome of the Democratic primary in Arkansas proves first that "bureaucracy in Washington cannot take the military authority of the National Guard away from the state."

Second, he continued in a prepared statement, it shows that "sooner or later the bureaucracy in Washington will have to stop shaking our people down with burdensome taxes to dump millions to dukes, kings and Hottentots all over the world."

The Alabama governor said Faubus' victory also proves that the federal government "will have to stop destroying our farms through bureaucratic directives, orders and legislation."

"And above all," Folsom concluded, "it proevs the old theory that those powers not granted to the federal government are reserved to the states, which means we will settle our differences in our own neighborhoods."

Faubus Favored for Third Term

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., July 2 (AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus, 48, catapulted into international limelight by the Little Rock integration crisis, is favored to ride his pro-segregation stand to a third term victory in tomorrow's Democratic primary.

The governor, who blocked the entry of nine Negro students at Central High School until a Federal injunction forced him to cease interfering with integration, could become the second man in the state's history to win a third term.

Not since Jeff Davis smashed the anti-third term tradition in the early 1900's, has a governor been able to "override" it.

The Arkansas Gazette, winner of a Pulitzer gold medal for its editorial stand against Faubus actions in the integration crisis conceded the governor will lead the ticket.

"The only question to be resolved," said Executive Editor Harry Ashmore, "is whether he will be forced into a runoff." The Gazette has opposed Faubus' third term.

Faubus is opposed for nomination by Chris Finkbeiner, 37, a Little Rock packing house executive; and by Lee Ward, 51 state court judge from Paragould.

Both have declared themselves sympathetic to segregation but have denounced what they called Faubus' "reckless and illegal" means of fighting integration.

Antidote to Demagogy

There was, surprisingly enough, an element of truth in the vainglorious and self-serving statement issued by Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas on his victory in the Democratic primary on Tuesday. "The voting today," he declared, "was a condemnation by the people of illegal Federal intervention in the affairs of the state and of the horrifying use of Federal bayonets on the streets of an American city and in the halls of a public school."

There was, of course, nothing illegal about Federal intervention to enforce a Federal court order in a situation where state authorities were thwarting observance of that order. Governor Faubus knows very well that he himself made Federal intervention unavoidable at Little Rock. He knows, too, that the use of bayonets there, while horrifying, was made necessary by the mob violence he incited. Nevertheless, he is probably right in attributing his triumph to a condemnation of this Federal action by the people of Arkansas. He sought to know about this; he planned it. The whole of his campaign for renomination was a demagogic incitement of local feelings against the United States and the democratic concept of racial equality.

Faubus succeeded in this demagogy in part because of the lack of Federal leadership to awaken the people of Arkansas, or of the South generally, to the real issues involved. The President of the United States has never spoken out in support of the moral imperatives behind the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision. He has done little to rally moderate Southerners to the defense of law and order or to evoke their national allegience. It is true that he acted with vigor and decision in the Little Rock crisis—but only after that crisis had been allowed to develop in part at least through lack of leadership. And since then Faubus has been left a free field to exploit latent sectionalism and racism and bigotry. If his noisome nonsense is not effectively countered, it will spread its poison throughout the South.

Faubus' renomination in the circumstances was a foregone conclusion. The Arkansas electorate has spoken; and the calm acceptance of its mandate by the rest of the Nation is, in a sense, a testimonial to the vitality of the democratic process. There are not so many countries in the world today where an avowed opponent of national authority could be elected to an important local office and allowed to assume it without forceful interference by the national government. This respect for local autonomy should not, however, preclude the use of democratic means to win the local electorate to a more enlightened view. Responsible leadership is the democratic antidote to demagogy.

FAUBUS FAVORITE IN THIRD-TERM BID

Arkansas Governor Is Seen Winning a Clear Majority in Tuesday's Primary

By CLAUDE SITTON

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., July 26—Arkansas voters will decide Tuesday whether Orval E. Faubus will become the state's first governor in fifty-four years to win a third two-year term.

The key to the outcome of the Democratic gubernatorial primary appears to lie in the public reaction to a dispute between Mr. Faubus and the Federal courts last September over the racial integration of Central High School here.

All signs indicated that the sentiment of a majority of the voters favored the Governor in that controversy and that he would win the nomination outright. This would assure his re-election in predominantly Democratic Arkansas in the November general election.

A total of 563,978 persons paid their $1 poll tax this year and are eligible to vote. About 300,000 of them are expected to turn out in Tuesday's preferential primary.

Faubus Has 2 Rivals

In the event that an unforeseen development denies Mr Faubus a majority of the ballots cast, the two leading candidates would face each other in a run-off primary two weeks later.

The 49-year-old Governor is opposed by Chris Finkbeiner, 37 president of a Little Rock meat packing concern, and Lee Ward, 51, a civil court judge from Paragould.

The two contenders demonstrated a large measure of agreement in their platforms. Both accused the Governor of having broken a campaign pledge by raising taxes. They attacked him for having defied the Federal courts by calling out National Guard troops last Sept. 2, a step that barred nine Negro students from Central High. They declared themselves in favor of continued segregation, but through legal and orderly means.

Dictatorship Seen Aim

Both accused Mr. Faubus of seeking dictatorial powers through a third term. They contended that this would enable him to control the state's independent regulatory boards and commissions through his right to appoint their members.

However, Mr. Finkbeiner sought to avoid the Central High controversy and the race problem. His stress was on his contention that he could cut state expenses 25 per cent.

On the other hand, Mr. Ward came to grips with the Governor on the issue that both agreed overshadowed everything else—the use of guardsmen to thwart the courts and the subsequent stationing of Army troops at Central High by President Eisenhower.

The judge accused Mr. Faubus of a "coldly calculated" course to drive a wedge between the state and the rest of the nation. He contended that the Governor had fomented trouble between the races.

Faubus Is Confident

Mr. Faubus refused to state publicly whether he was a segregationist or an integrationist. But he vowed repeatedly to fight any attempt at what he termed "forced integration."

Discussing the campaign in an interview, he acknowledged that the sentiment resulting from the use of Federal troops at Central High had enabled him to overcome easily the obstacles posed to his re-election by opposition to a third term and by his administration's tax increases.

In his campaign Mr. Faubus cited improvements made during his administration in the state's educational, medical and welfare services and the success of his efforts to attract new industries to Arkansas.

He also attacked "interference from without" and singled out for repeated criticism Harry Ashmore, executive editor of The Arkansas Gazette, and Mrs. L. C. Bates, head of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in this state.

Aside from the Central High issue, factors seen to favor Mr. Faubus are a powerful political organization, ample campaign funds and the advantage generally conceded to an incumbent.

The campaigns of both of his opponents suffered from political ineptness, a lack of money and the absence of any effective organization on a statewide level.

Mr. Ward is expected to receive a large share of the anti-Faubus vote, some backing from labor and church groups and the support of many Negroes.

Mr. Finkbeiner, as a result of his business connections and frequent appearances on television to advertise his products, has a sizable personal following.

FAUBUS' SWEEP WEIGHED IN SOUTH

Primary Victory Underscores Resistance to U. S. Efforts to Desegregate Schools

By CLAUDE SITTON

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, July 30—The renomination of Gov. Orval E. Faubus to a third term underscored the massive resistance of Arkansans to Federal efforts to enforce racial integration in the public schools.

The Governor's success in yesterday's Democratic preferential primary also appeared to raise serious implications for the White House in its efforts to carry out the desegregation orders of the Supreme Court here and elsewhere in the South.

Some observers said the election's outcome might discourage moderate Southern political leaders in their search for a middle ground on racial issues.

The record majority for Mr. Faubus left no doubt as to where the voters stood on President Eisenhower's use of Federal troops to keep the doors of Little Rock's Central High School open to Negroes last year.

Endorsement Implied

It also implied an endorsement of the Governor's own use of troops. He called out National Guard units on Sept. 2 that turned away nine Negro students from the school.

Mr. Faubus made a clean sweep of all the state's seventy-five counties in defeating Chris Finkbeinre, a Little Rock meat packer, and Lee Ward, a civil court judge from Paragould. By receiving more than 50 per cent of the otal vote hew as assured the nomination without a run-off. Nomination is the equivalent to election in this Democratic state.

Unofficial returns from 2,241 of the state's 2,321 precincts showed 255,086 votes for Mr. Faubus, 57,966 for Mr. Ward and 56,846 for Mr. Finkbeiner.

Few Faubus supporters believed that he could have overcome traditional antipathy to a third term had it not been for the reaction to the Central High controversy. Jeff Davis was the only other Governor in Arkansas history returned a third time. And his renomination came fifty-four years ago before the majority rule had been introduced into the preferential primary.

The Governor's statement called the election result "a condemnation by the people of illegal Federal intervention in the affairs of the state and the horrifying use of Federal bayonets in the streets of an American city and in the halls of a public high school."

Segregation Vey Issue

Mr. Fabus had pitched his campaign to a pledge to fight any further attempts at what he called "forced integration." Both of his opponents hadd voiced support of segregation but through legal and orderly methods.

An indication that Federal armed force, rather than segregation as such, was the principal issue was seen in the Governor's strong showing in northwestern Arkansas. The area has few Negroes and many schools there have been integrated voluntarily.

The Governor was asked today in a new conference what plans he had for action on integration. It has been known for sometime that he has a series of measures on the subject ready if he decides a special session of the legislature was necessary.

Mr. Faubus replied that he was prepared to deal with the situation but that any decision on a special session would have to await the outcome of an appeal of the "Lemley decision."

He referred to a ruling handed down here June 21 by Federal District Judge Harry J. Lemley granting a request from the Little Rock school board for a delay of two and one-half years in its plan for gradual desegregation.

Decision Appealed

The decision was appealed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit in St. Louis. A hearing on the appeal will be held Monday.

One of the Governor's chief critics during the campaign, Harry S. Ashmore, executive editor of The Arkansas Gazette, also referred to the ruling in an editorial for tomorrow's edition on Mr. Faubus's victory.

"Certainly the interest of the people of Little Rock and Arkansas cry out for the relief granted in the decision," Mr. Ashmore wrote. "Judge Lemley found the conditions that existed in the high school during the last session intolerable. It is a mild word for the conditions that will exist in September if the Negro children are ordered back to school by the higher court."

"Yet this is a possibility that Arkansans must consider. It would result in a showdown of state force against Federal force, with only limited room left now for further legal maneuvering. We can oly hope that if this dread eventuality does arise Mr. Faubus can find a way to bring about a peaceful settlement."

Commenting on Mr. Faubus's victory, Mr. Ashmore said that it represented an overwhelming endorsement for the Governor's course of resistance to integration.

"The moderate position formerly espoused by many Southern political leaders, and by this newspaper as a matter of principle, has been rejected by the mass of voters in this upper Southern state and is now clearly untenable for any man in public life anywhere in the region."

Politicians View Vote

WASHINGTON, July 30 (AP)—The landslide victory of Governor Faubus spells 1960 trouble for the divided Democratic party. It also means stiffened political opposition to racial integration.

That was the view national politicians took today of the Democratic primary in Arkansas yesterday.

Most professional Southern politicians think Mr. Faubus will be subjected to a great deal of pressure to lead a segregationist ticket in 1960.

enator Jacob K. Javits, Republican of New York said he had no doubt the demonstration of sentiment registered in Arkansas indicates even stiffer opposition to integration in the future.

Senator Richard L. Neuberger, Democrat of Oregon said in a separate interview that Mr. Faubus's victory was "a disappointing thing and, unfortunately, it may set the pattern in the south."

Senator James O. Eastland, Democrat of Mississippi, a leading segregationist, said he thought that the vote for Mr. Faubus represented widespread sentiment in the south against integration.

Senator Robert S. Kerr, Democrat of Oklahoma commented: "This is a manifestation of the collapse of any support for Eisenhower. I predict there are going to be some additional disclosures of the resurgence of Democratic and anti-Eisenhower sentiment as time goes on."

Negro Loses In Ark. Primary Bid

TEXARKANA, Ark., July 30 (UPI)—G. C. Mackey, first Negro to run in an Arkansas primary, was soundly defeated Tuesday in an election for Democratic committeeman.

Mackey was appointed to the post by Gov. Orval E. Faubus in 1956. Arkansas' legislature made the position elective in 1957.

Mackey, a Texarkana liquor dealer, was swamped by two other opponents for committeeman from Congressional District 4.

The apparent winner was William Judge Rogers of Camden. Joe T. Templeton of El Dorado was listed unofficially as second. Both men recorded about 2,000 votes. Mackey had approximately 350.

A Vote for Faubus Is a Vote for...

Folks, Orval Faubus has just announced he's going to run for a third term as Governor of Arkansas, so we thought we'd tick off his qualifications for you:

¶ Courage. He chased those kids right out of school. Not only the girls, but the boys, too. And he didn't care how old they were: that didn't faze him. It took the United States Army to put them back in, and during his third term Orvie might even figure out how to beat the Army.

¶ Adaptability. He can talk out of both sides of his mouth better than almost any politician we know. He left President Eisenhower thinking one thing up at Newport and then he went right ahead and did the opposite at Little Rock.

¶ Persuasiveness. Some envious folks might call it rabble-rousing. But every segregationist in Arkansas draws constant inspiration from Faubus' example.

¶ Support for a free press. This means, of course, a press that is free in its support of Faubus. The "Akansas Democrat" has opposed Faubus, so can you blame him for calling it "slanted"?

¶ Party regularity. Even though some of his fellow-Democrats tried to cold shoulder him, Faubus demonstrated there were no hard feelings by showing up at the big party wing-ding in Washington last month.

¶ Phrase-coining. Well, he didn't exactly coin it himself, but "Faubusism" sure has a mintful of meaning.

¶ Honesty. He says that he'd do it all over again. Can you doubt him?

That's it, folks. Now get out there and vote.

Faubus Scored By Finkbeiner

Candidate For Governor In Arkansas Puts Stress On Third Term

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, April 30.—Gubernatorial candidate Chris Finkbeiner Wednesday night called upon voters to reject Gov. Orval Faubus if on no other basis than the third-term issue.

"Dictator control has no part in Arkansas government," he declared in a televised appearance which marked official opening of his campaign. He noted, however, that his speech was but the "first chapter of the open book" which he will outline to voters as the campaign progresses.

To Outline Program

Appearing on the program with members of his family, Mr. Finkbeiner said he will outline a platform under which he would work "for the basic good for the greatest number in our state."

Touching on the integration question, Mr. Finkbeiner declared himself to be a segregationist but pointed out that he had worked locally for the improvement of Negro housing.

"I am convinced that the majority in both races is not ready for integration in Arkansas. So let me make it very clear, I do not stand for the principle of school integration," he declared.

Gov. Orval Faubus, who has announced for a third term, will try to make it appear that "the race question is the only issue in this campaign," said Mr. Finkbeiner. The young businessman added, however, that the third term issue overshadowed that.

'Too Much Power'

"If elected to a third term, the present Governor will then have the privilege of appointing a third and controlling member of the Highway Commission. How can you and I as citizens interested in the orderly growth and expansion of Arkansas give one man so much power?"

"With two more years in the governor's chair he will then be able to control all the state institutions and organizations," Mr. Finkbeiner charged. His entire address was devoted to Governor Faubus.

Also in the race is Chancellor Lee Ward of Paragould and a last-minute entry Wednesday was Robert J. Brown, a Little Rock attorney.

2 Congressmen Win In Arkansas

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)— Two veteran Arkansas congressmen were assured of new terms Wednesday as a result of sweeping victories in Tuesday's Democratic primary.

Rep. Brooks Hays of Little Rock received 26,610 votes in the Fifth Congressional District while Amis Guthridge of Little Rock got 16,578 and E. M. Harrington of Pelgohachia received 834. The figures included 197 of 240 precincts.

Rep. J. W. Trimble of Berryville beat three opponents in northwest Arkansas' Third District. With 461 of 511 boxes reported, Trimble had 39,239 votes; Chancellor Franklin Wilder of Fort Smith had 11,282; Donald Poe of Waldron had 6,446, and Lee M. Whittaker of Fort Smith had 1,244.

The clear majorities achieved by Hays and Trimble meant that no runoffs would be necessary. W. W. Fletcher opposes Rep. W. F. Norrell of Monticello for the Sixth District seat in the Aug. 12 primary.

Reps. E. C. Gathings of West Memphis, Wilbur Mills of Jennett and Oren Harris of El Dorado were unopposed in the three other districts.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — The renomination of Gov. Orval E. Faubus to an almost unprecedented third term underscored the massive [illegible] to federal efforts to enforce racial integration in the public schools.

The governor's success in Tuesday's Democratic preferential primary also was seen to raise serious implications for the White House in its efforts to carry out the desegregation orders of the Supreme Court here and elsewhere in the South.

STRICTLY SCHOOL AFFAIR

Few Faubus supporters believed that he could have overcome traditional antipathy to a third term had it not been for the reaction to the Central High controversy. The late Jeff Davis was the only other chief executive in Arkansas history returned a third term. And his renomination came 54 years ago before the majority rule had been introduced into the preferential primary.

Dems Fear Faubus' Win Trouble Sign

By JACK BELL

WASHINGTON (AP) — The landslide victory of Gov. Orval Faubus in Arkansas spells 1960 trouble for the divided Democratic party.

It also means stiffened political opposition to racial integration.

That is the view of veteran national politicians here. Leaders of the sweeping primary triumph Tuesday of the governor whose actions last September were followed by President Eisenhower's dispatch of federal troops to Little Rock.

The avalanche of votes rolled up by Faubus in winning Democratic renomination—equal to reelection in his state—appear likely to bring rallying around the governor elements of the electorate who would not hesitate to break with the Democratic party in 1960 if it takes its expected stand against segregation.

COURT RULING AIDS FAUBUS CAMPAIGN

Arkansas Governor Seeking a Third Term—Need for Run-Off Appears Likely

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., June 28 —Gov. Orval E. Faubus picked up new support this week in his bid for a third two-year term as a result of a Federal court order suspending school integration here until 1961.

However, his two opponents still appeared to be able to muster enough backing before the Democratic primary on July 29 to prevent him from receiving a majority.

This would set the two leading candidates in a run-off two weeks later, giving anti-Faubus forces an opportunity to prove their strength. The winner of the run-off is virtually assured of election in this one-party state.

The 49-year-old Governor is opposed by Chris Finkbeiner, 37, president of a Little Rock meat packing concern, and Lee Ward, 51, a chancery judge from Paragould. A third contender withdrew Monday.

No Arkansas Governor has won a third term since the reelection of the late Gov. Jeff Davis fifty-four years ago. His victory came before the primary rules were changed to require that the nominee receive a majority instead of a plurality of the votes cast.

Faubus Stands as Symbol

Sentiment against a third term would be a formidable obstacle to Mr. Faubus in the campaign were it not for his position as a symbol in the controversy over integration.

Some here regard him as a leader in the fight against what they consider unwarranted Federal interference in the state's schools. Others contend that he brought Arkansas into disrepute last Sept. 2 by calling out National Guard units that blocked nine Negro students from Little Rock's Central High School.

The Governor has refused to state publicly whether he favors integration or segregation. But he has denied that the Supreme Court's ruling against separation of whites and Negroes in the public schools is the law of the land. He also has declared that, given the same circumstances, he again would use National Guard troops "to prevent violence."

All sides in the campaign agree that Mr. Faubus gained support a week ago when Federal District Judge Harry J. Lemley granted a Little Rock School Board request for a delay of two and a half years in the board's plan for gradual integration.

The judge held that the board had shown that violence, intimidation and tension growing out of the Negro students' presence had seriously disrupted the educational process at Central High.

While conceding that the rulings gave Mr. Faubus an initial advantage, leaders in the Finkbeiner and Ward factions said that the long-term effect might be to ease tensions and push the integration issue into the background.

They added that this would enable the two candidates to hammer home their argument that a third term would give the governonr control of the state regulatory agencies through his powers of appointment.

The anti-Faubus strategists saw their efforts to steer the campaign away from the integration issue threatened by court action sought by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The N. A. A. C. P. has asked the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St Louis to reverse Judge Lemley's refusal to permit the Negro students to return to Central High next fall until that court has reviewed the case on its merits.

Supreme Court Petitioned

The organization also has petitioned the United States Supreme Court to take extraordinary measures to hear a direct appeael on the District Judge's suspension order.

Backers of Mr. Finkbeiner and Judge Ward said that if the Supreme Court took up the case as a whole it probably would not adversely affect their chances in the campaign.

However, they added, if either court immediately overruled Judge Lemley's denial of a stay without considering the evidence upon which he based his suspension order the resulting public reaction might sweep Mr. Faubus into office. Asked if this would be the result, one of the Governor's leading supporters replied: "We wouldn't even have to pray."

Another significant development in the campaign has been the unexpected show of strength by Mr. Finkbeiner, who is making his first race for public office. Even his opponents say that he is winning considerable support on hand-shaking tours of the state in his private plane.

Both he and Judge Ward have attacked the Faubus administration for raising taxes and have accused it of "extravagance and waste." They have warned that a third term would lead to "machine control" of the state.

Push For Probe Of Ark. Voting

By RONALD NESSEN

WASHINGTON — (UPI) — Rep. Brooks Hays (D-Ark.) said a Little Rock citizens' group would protest to a House committee certain "irregularities" in his election defeat by a write-in segregationist candidate.

Hays, an avowed moderate on the race issue, told United Press International that he personally would not contest his defeat by Dr. Dale Alford because he did not want to stir up more tension in his Little Rock District. But he said he would not "disavow" the complaints.

He said in an interview that "steps are being taken" to protest the balloting to the special House Committee on Campaign Expenditures.

Hays laid the blame for his surprise defeat squarely on Arkansas Gov. Orval E. Faubus earlier on a television interview (CBS-Face The Nation). Alford declared himself a write-in candidate for Hays' seat with Faubus' backing just one week before the election.

Hays, who served 16 years in the House, said he had been told that in one precinct 100 more votes were cast than there were registered voters.

He also said the citizens group would protest the stickers which Alford distributed. These stickers bore Alford's name with an "X" beside it. Voters were able to glue them to their ballots instead of actually writing in the candidate's name.

Rep. Kenneth B. Keating (R.-N. Y.) suggested last week that the Campaign Expenditures Committee look into Hays' defeat. The group decided it could not investigate the balloting unless it received complaints.

Keating all but invited Hays' supporters to contest the vote when he said later that the committee might investigate if "even a single voter in Hays' district complained." The committee has the power to look into all facets of elections.

Hays, president of the Southern Baptist Convention, said on the TV program that Faubus was the "primary influence" in his defeat. He said the governor might have "instigated" Alford's candidacy.

He accused Faubus of going back on his promise to stay out of the Congressional race. He said it "coincided with Faubus' political interests" to defeat him because the governor could not accept his belief in settling racial conflicts by mediation.

Hays said Faubus' dislike for him may have begun in September 1957 when he arranged a meeting between President Eisenhower.

Hays Facing Upset Loss

Little Rock Votes Gives Lead To Segregationist Dale Alford

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Segregationist Dale Alford took the lead away from Democratic Rep. Brooks Hays in their race for 5th District Congressman today on the basis of unofficial results from all but 19 of the 257 precincts.

A heavy vote for Alford in yesterday's general election in Pulaski County (Little Rock) canceled an earlier Hays margin from less densely populated areas of the six-county district.

With 238 boxes was reported from Pulaski County, Alford had 30,620; Hays 29,044.

With only three small boxes of votes missing, the vote in Pulaski County was Alford 33,798; Hays 33,178.

Under the conditions, Alford's first emergence as a serious contender against Hays' bid for a fourth term appeared would have been considered a political miracle.

Hays had won Democratic renomination, traditionally equivalent to election in one-party Arkansas, by a 3-2 margin. And Alford, whose only previous political experience was his election to the school board three years ago, did not announce his write-in candidacy until a week before the general election.

BACKED BY FAUBUS

But Alford seemingly had the support backing of Gov. Orval Faubus, undoubtedly the strongest political figure in the state. The 50-year-old eye doctor also appealed to strong segregationist feelings by declaring that Hays' moderate position on the racial issue could only lead to integration.

Hays, 60, known southwide as a former president of the Southern Baptist Convention, asserted that Little Rock needed a moderate in Congress to gain a forum. He expressed belief that the current dilemma could be solved through a constitutional amendment.

The congressman also stressed "party loyalty," while Alford asserted that he was running as an independent Democrat.

Evidence of Faubus' tacit backing came when Alford named Claude Carpenter Jr., a close friend of the governor, as his campaign manager. Carpenter, state commander of the American Legion, resigned as head of Arkansas' "Dollars for Democrats" fund raising drive and gave up a high-level state job to devote his energies to the congressional race.

COOL RELATIONSHIP

A coolness had been noted between Faubus and Hays. Last September, at the height of the Central High School integration crisis here, Hays had sought to act as a mediator between the governor and President Eisenhower.

Faubus intimated later that the congressman wanted him to surrender his position in the federal-state power struggle. Hays denied this.

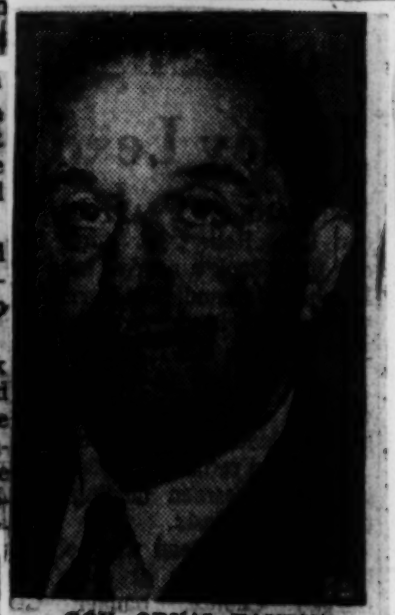
Thus, the brief but bitter fifth district contest commanded interest in and out of Arkansas.

In a recorded election-eve statement, used on television here, Gov. J. P. Coleman of Mississippi endorsed Hays. Coleman said the South needed Hays' experience, and expressed hopes that the fifth district would not "stampede."

In statewide voting, Gov. Faubus handily swept aside feeble Republican opposition for a third term election.

He was the only state officer with general election opposition.

Faubus also successfully led a campaign effort to retain a 1957 law which increased the state sales tax from two to three per cent. In addition, the state's voters turned down an attempt to repeal the railroad full crew laws, while approving a salary increase for state legislators, authorization of local bond issues to attract industry and a constitutional amendment removing the state from the property tax field.



GOV. ORVAL FAUBUS
Easy Winner

Faubus Holds 10-1 Margin

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Democratic Gov. Orval E. Faubus, object of criticism within his party because of his strong states rights stand, Tuesday night rolled up a 10 to 1 majority over his Republican opponent to win a third term as Arkansas' chief executive.

Election of Faubus, who drew a record vote in the July 29 Democratic primary, over George W. Johnson, Greenwood attorney, was a formality.

Faubus gave the governor 9,398 votes to 1,285 for Johnson with 183 precincts of 2,316 reporting.

Segregationist Doctor Takes Arkansas Seat on Write-Ins

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. —(AP)— A Little Rock eye doctor who made a week's campaign as a write-in candidate won Arkansas' Fifth District Congressional seat from Rep. Brooks Hays (D., Ark.), on racial issues.

ALFORD

So close was the vote in Tuesday's general election that the decision was in doubt until early Wednesday. Hays conceded about noon after it was apparent that Dr. Dale Alford's 2,000-vote lead could not be overcome by the nine small boxes unreported.

Alford, a political freshman who had never sought an office except the local school board, attacked the moderate stand of Hays on the integration issue. The congressman, who had served 16 years from the Fifth (Little Rock) district, is a prominent Baptist layman and president of the Southern Baptist Convention.

The doctor, who will enter Congress as a Democrat despite his technical bid for the office as an independent, seemed to have the unspoken support of Gov. Orval E. Faubus. Faubus' close associate, Claude Carpenter Jr., managed the whirlwind seven-day campaign.

Hays, 60, said his role as a mediator between Faubus and President Eisenhower in September, 1957, when the Little Rock integration crisis was at its peak, apparently was his political downfall.

"Some of my friends tell me this was a mistake," Hays said.

Alford, a successful medical specialist, is the only outspoken segregationist on the Little Rock School Board.

The doctor, a black-haired man with piercing eyes under bushy brows, made effective use of a television appearance to hammer away at Hays' moderation, the Supreme Court and federal usurpation of power.

His victory statement declared his first action would be to battle the Supreme Court in Congress. "We've got to put a bridle on the Supreme Court. I consider that the major task before us today," he said.

Little Rock Unseats Rep. Hays

Hays Concedes As Alford Sets Write-In Precedent

By KENNETH JOHNSON
From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Nov. 5.—Dr. Dale Alford, Little Rock eye specialist, laid undisputed claim Wednesday to an unprecedented write-in victory over United States Representative Brooks Hays of the Fifth Congressional District.

It was the first known time a write-in candidate ever won a state or district election in Arkansas.

Mr. Hays, with "no bitterness toward anyone," conceded victory to Dr. Alford in Tuesday's general election balloting shortly after noon Wednesday. With but two precincts yet to report from the total of 151, the unofficial count stood:

ALFORD 30,677
HAYS 29,416

Mr. Hays said he didn't plan to contest the election, and indicated he had no present plans for again seeking the office he held 16 years. He was seeking his ninth term in Tuesday's race.

Dr. Alford entered the race only about 10 days ago with apparent—though not openly declared—backing from Gov. Orval Faubus.

Gov. J. P. Coleman of Mississippi in a last-minute move to aid Representative Hays endorsed him as being true to Arkansas and the South.

The Little Rock and Pulaski County vote spelled the outcome. Mr. Hays took four counties of the six-county district, but Little Rock gave a 6,000-vote majority to Dr. Alford, who also carried slim-voting Perry County.

Mediation Cost Job

Mr. Hays took Pope County, where his father now lives, as well as Conway, Faulkner and Yell Counties.

President of the Southern Baptist Convention, Representative Hays had tried—as a member of Congress and also as head of the convention — to serve as mediator of the Little Rock integration dispute.

It proved his undoing. Dr. Alford, an avowed segregationist, devoted his brief campaign to an attack on the "fence-straddling" stand of his opponent.

Indirect Slap By Faubus

Heading Dr. Alford's campaign was Claude Carpenter Jr., a recently resigned member of Governor Faubus' administration. The Governor had declined to say whether he had passed the word among his supporters to support the Little Rock specialist and school board member. But both Dr. Alford and Mr. Hays Wednesday conceded the Governor had played a part.

Hays Sees Clearly Because Of Alford

From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Nov. 5.—This story well could be another illustration that in politics anything can happen.

It came to light Wednesday after Dr. Dale Alford's victory over Representative Brooks Hays in the Fifth District congressional race.

Representative Hays wears glasses. Who fit them?

You're right. Dr. Alford, who is an eye specialist.

Mr. Hays said he had Dr. Alford fit him with his present pair of glasses about two years ago.

"They've been very satisfactory," he commented.

race was my own decision. However, I feel he was sympathetic to our cause," said Dr. Alford.

"I assume from Mr. Carpenter's identification with the campaign that the Governor was not favorable to my candidacy, and I am saddened by that," said Mr. Hays.

The Governor himself took an indirect slap at Mr. Hays.

"I think the outcome indicates the strongest thing in American politics is public sentiment and when the people feel, rightly or wrongly, that their best interests are not being represented by a particular candidate they will get someone they feel will represent them," Governor Faubus said.

Little Rock voters ousted veteran Rep. Brooks Hays yesterday in a further show of their resistance to school desegregation.

They replaced him in Congress with Dr. Dale Alford, segregationist member of the Little Rock School Board, who announced as a write-in candidate only a week ago.

The victory was one of two surprises to come out of the South in Tuesday's election. In the other, a Negro housewife was elected to the Houston, Tex., School Board with the help of white voters.

Faubus Involved

Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas figured in both.

In Little Rock, Dr. Alford, 42-eyar-old eye specialist, put the desegregation issue squarely on the line. He accused Hays of being moderate on the race question and promised voters he would fight desegregation by congressional action if elected.

Dr. Alford's campaign apparently was more carefully planned than his sudden write-in candidacy indicated.

Hays, eight-term House veteran, had successfully turned back the challenge of arch segregationist Amis Guthridge in the Democratic primary. But that was before a ground swell of anti-integration sentiment erupted in September when Faubus closed the city's high schools to thwart desegregation.

Up until a week ago, Hays had conducted no campaign for the general election since he was unopposed. He spent much of his time working as president of the Southern Baptist Convention and visiting his ailing father in Russellville.

Alford, meantime, had consulted Faubus about the possibility of running as a write-in cvandidate. His campaign manager was a close adviser to Faubus. His record as an unyielding segregationist was clear. He alone had opposed the compliance policy of the School Board.

When segregationist groups had obtained 9000 signatures to oust School Board members recently, Alford was excepted.

Whirlwind Campaign

Alford's eight-day campaign was a whilwind affair, complete with television appearances and heavy campaign advertising. He called himself an independent Democrat. Voters got convenient stickers to place on the ballot for his candidacy.

Hays attempted to meet the challenge by asking Democrats to uphold their party's nominee. He said the way for the South to gain in its fight against desegregation was to win friends in Congress, and Hays pointed out he has many friends from the North here.

On Tuesday, voters in the Fifth Congressional District went to the polls. So close was the result that Hays did not concede the election until yesterday. Incomplete but conclusive results showed Alford with 30,278 and Hays with 28,322.

The 60-year-old Hays tried to mediate the impasse over Central High School's desegregation last year in a meeting between President Eisenhower and Faubus in Newport, R. I.

First Negro Elected

Known as a man with a gentle sense of humor and the best story-teller in Congress, Hays was a respected member of Congress and a powerful member of the House Foreign Relations Committee. He had served in the House since 1942.

In Houston, where all schools are segregated, Mrs. Charles E. White, 42, became the first Negro elected to a public office. She ran at-large for the Houston School Board on a desegregation platform and could not have been elected without white support.

A wife of an optometrist and mother of four children, Mrs. White called her election a "victory for tolerance and good will." Of the desegregation problem in Houston, she said:

"Gov. Orval Faubus and Little Rock have shown the people of Houston that violence and strife are not the means of working out the problem."

In Virginia, Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D-Va.), architect of that State's "massive resistance" to desegregation, won easy reelection to a fifth, and he said last, Senate term. A protest vote against Virginia's school closing laws cropped up in Norfolk and Charlottesville, where schools have been shut down, and in some other areas. But Byrd captured 70 per cent of the State-wide balloting, compared to 73.4 per cent in 1952.

Arkansas Backs Third-Term Bid Of Gov. Faubus

Victor Given 70 Per Cent Of All Votes

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus, receiving overwhelming endorsement of his rigid stand against integration, Tuesday night rode an avalanche of votes to a third-term nomination in Arkansas' Democratic primary.

The voting today was a confirmation by the people of illegal Federal intervention in the affairs of the state and of the horrifying use of federal bayonets on the streets of an American city and in the halls of a public school," Faubus said in a victory statement.

Faubus' two opponents — Chris Finkbeiner, 37, Little Rock meat packer, and State Judge Lee Ward, 51, of Paragould g8 had conceded defeat by 9:30 p.m., three hours after closing of the polls.

PRESIDENTIAL ACTION

The governor's victory statement referred to President Eisenhower's action last fall when he ordered federal troops to Little Rock and federalized the Arkansas National Guard to enforce the Federal integration at Little Rock Central High School. The President acted after Faubus had used state troops to block integration of the school.

Faubus jumped into an early lead with the first returns and steadily increased his margin throughout the tabulation.

With 2,066 precincts reporting of 2,321, Faubus held a 127,000-vote margin over the combined total of his opponents at 10:30 p.m. Needing only a majority to win renomination, Faubus held 70 per cent of the votes counted.

The vote was Faubus 217,837; Finkbeiner 45,278; and Ward 44,989.

Faubus got his first term by a scant 7,000 votes four years ago by defeating the then governor, Francis Cherry, in a bitter runoff battle. Two years later, he won a second term in the preferential primary, easily defeating two opponents including arch-segregationist Jim Johnson of Crossett.

In Arkansas, emocratic nomination is tantamount to election.

A crowd of several thousand roamed the street in front of Faubus' headquarters in downtown Little Rock as the outcome of the voting became certain.

A sound truck blared "Dixie" and some people danced in the street.

Faubus' statement of victory said the returns had clearly indicated the sentiments of the people.

"The voters have spoken for constitutional government as envisaged by the founders of the Republic — government by the people," he declared. "They have expressed their approval of the right of the people to control their own schools and other local governmental affairs at the local level.

"They have expressed their approval of my efforts to retain the rights of a sovereign state as set out in the federal Constitution."

Arkansas Republicans will chose a nominee to oppose Faubus in the November general election at their first statewide primary Aug. 12. The two GOP candidates are Donald D. Layne, 34, Little Rock, a civil engineer, and George W. Johnson, 75, Greenwood, an attorney.

No Republican has won state office in Arkansas since the post-Civil War Reconstruction era.

Gov. Faubus Sweeps In On Avalanche of Votes

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus Tuesday night won an overwhelming endorsement of his strong stand against school integration. In an avalanche of votes he swept to a landslide triumph in his bid for a third-term Democratic nomination.

By 9 p.m., 2½ hours after the polls closed, Faubus held a 100,000-vote lead over two opponents. Faubus needed only 50 per cent of the total to win renomination without a primary runoff. He held a margin of 70 per cent.

EQUIVALENT TO ELECTION

In heavily Democratic Arkansas nomination is equivalent to election.

With 1,655 of 2,321 precincts tabulated, Faubus had 166,193 votes of the 230,538. Chris Finkbeiner, 37, Little Rock packing company executive, had 32,030 and Lee Ward, 51, state judge from Paragould, 32,315.

On television, at 9:10 p.m., Faubus issued a statement of victory.

Despite Secretary of State C. G. Hall's pre-election prediction of a relatively light 300,000 votes and scattered rainshowers which pelted the state during the faternoon, a heavy vote seemed probable.

TENSE CAMPAIGN

Faubus and his opponents waged a tense, emotional campaign centered around the governor's controversial actions last September in ordering Arkansas National Guard to turn away nine Negro children seeking to enter Central High School here. Neither Finkbeiner nor Ward were successful in their attempts to turn attention to other issues.

Both of Faubus' opponents, while pronouncing themselves segregationists, criticized the governor's attempt to block integration. They said segregation could only be maintained through "law and order."

They had banked on a "silent vote" to force the governor into a runoff Aug. 12 against the next highest candidate.

The only other Arkansas governor ever to win a third term was Jeff Davis in the early 1900s.

DEMOCRATS PICK ARKANSAS SLATE

Faubus Bid for Re-election Captures Major Interest—Primary Vote Heavy

By CLAUDE SITTON

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., July 29—Issues raised by racial integration in Arkansas' public schools brought a moderately heavy turnout today in the Democratic gubernatorial primary.

Showers failed to discourage voters, who began streaming to the polls at 8 A. M. Central standard time (10 A. M. New York time) to decide whether Gov. Orval E. Faubus would become the second governor in Arkansas history to win a third term. The polls closed at 6:30 P. M. local time.

Reports from election officials indicated that the total vote might run substantially higher than the 300,000 that had been predicted.

Governor Faubus was opposed by Chris Finkbeiner, head of a Little Rock meat packing concern, and Lee Ward, a civil judge from Paragould.

A victory by Mr. Faubus would be considered by many as an endorsement of his opposition to Federal court orders that admitted nine Negro children to Little Rock's Central High School. The nomination would assure him of another two-year term in this predominently Democratic state.

Another race involving the Central High dispute pitted Representative Brooks Hays against Amis Guthridge, both of Little Rock. Mr. Hays defeated Mr. Guthridge by 16,551 votes in 1952. A third candidate withdrew from active participation in today's vote but his name remained on the ballot.

Mr. Guthridge, an attorney for the Capital Citizen's Council, accused Mr. Hays of asking the Governor to "knuckle under to forced integration" during the Representative's attempt to mediate in the Central High controversy. Mr. Hays denied this.

The only other Congressional race was in western Arkansas' Third District, where Representative James W. Trimble faced three opponents.

The Governorship was the only state-wide office to be decided on the short ballot and there were few local contests.

A total of 499,955 whites and 64,023 Negroes were qualified to vote. This includes a small number of Republicans, who are prohibited from taking part in the Democratic primaries.

Candidates had to receive more than 50 per cent of the vote cast in their races to win outright nomination. Where no candidate won a majority, the contest will be decided in the runoff primary Aug. 12.

Faubus Re-Election Rapped By Truman

He Says Arkansas Voters Acted In Ignorance

CHICAGO, Aug. 6. — (AP) — Former President Harry S. Truman said the voters of Arkansas acted in ignorance in virtually electing Gov. Orval Faubus to a third term as chief executive of their race-troubled state.

With a chuckle at his graying hair belying his 74 years, Truman tackled the Arkansas issue at a news conference. Faubus is opposed to integration of public schools in Little Rock. He was renominated July 29 as Democratic candidate for governor.

Asked whether this might lead to a split in the Democratic Party and hurt the party's chances in the 1960 general election, Truman conceded that it might mean the loss of some votes. But the important thing, he said, is that it hurt us around the [illegible] people of color—red, yellow and black." He implied America could lose the esteem of these people because of the turn of events in Arkansas.

He said those who voted for Faubus were wrong and acted in ignorance and hysteria.

ARKANSAS VOTE TURNS ON INTEGRATION ISSUE

Faubus Seen Almost Sure to Win Third Term on Little Rock Record

By CLAUDE SITTON
Special to The New York Times

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., July 26—Although voting in the Arkansas Democratic primary does not take place until Tuesday, all indications are that the outcome of the gubernatorial election was decided last September on the grounds of Central High School.

It was there that the Governor first used the troops at his command to block racial integration that had been ordered by a Federal court. And it was there that a President first employed the Army to enforce an integration decree.

These acts by Governor Orval E. Faubus and President Eisenhower constitute the overriding issue in Mr. Faubus' attempt to become the first three-term chief executive in Arkansas in fifty-four years.

The controversy stirred strong emotions in this state. Some praised Mr. Faubus for what they viewed as a fight against unjustified Federal intervention in the state's education system. Others contended that his action had brought shame to Arkansas in the eyes of the nation and of the world.

'THE QUESTION'

Fiction in The Dallas News

Bitterness Remains

There was widespread bitterness against the President's use of the Army, a bitterness still found in varying degrees throughout the state. This is true even of the northwestern counties, where there are few Negroes and where many schools have been integrated voluntarily.

All normal indices point to a Faubus victory in the first, or preferential, primary. If, for some unforeseen reason, he fails to receive a majority of all votes cast for him and his two opponents, the two leading candidates will face each other in a run-off primary two weeks later. The Democratic nomination is virtually equivalent to election in a state-wide race here.

The Faubus forces have made an overwhelming outward show of strength. Many cars and trucks bear his campaign stickers. Some stores and shops display placards carrying the 49-year-old Governor's photograph. On these is printed his campaign slogan: "It Takes Courage. It Takes Courage," referring to his stand against the Federal court. Mr. Faubus has consistently outdrawn his opponents on speaking tours.

One of the Governor's opponents, Chris Finkbeiner, 37, president of a Little Rock meat packing concern, has varied the usual pattern of campaigning in Arkansas by flying from town to town and holding coffee and soft drink parties to discuss the issues.

Helicopter Campaign

The other, Lee Ward, 51, Civil Court Judge from Paragould, used a helicopter until a week ago to fly from one speaking engagement to another. Mr. Ward has been forced to curtail his activity by a shortage of funds.

Much has been said in the campaign about the "silent voter"—persons opposed to Mr. Faubus who, for various reasons, do not wish to speak out. A swing through a section of the state not generally conceded to be solid for the Governor turned up some evidence of such a vote but not in sufficient numbers to overcome the Governor's apparent lead in most counties.

The campaign has stirred some apprehension in Little Rock and elsewhere among the moderates, those who have sought a middle ground on the race question. These persons fear that the Governor's use of the race issue in his speeches may foment trouble between the two races.

Evidence of the rising emotional tenor of the campaign was seen in a rally for the three candidates at near-by Pine Bluff, a week ago. An audience of 3,000 cheered Faubus. But his opponents, both of whom have been critical of the Governor's use of Guardsmen at Central High, were interrupted time after time by jeering.

At one point Judge Ward asked his hecklers if they actually wanted state forces to fire on Federal representatives who might be sent into Arkansas to force compliance on integration. "Yes!" they shouted. "Let's shoot! They used bayonets against us."

The Governor views his opposition to forced integration as a most valuable political asset and brings it to the voters' attention at every available opportunity.

On a speaking tour in the Ozark Mountains this week, he declared that the Federal Government "wanted me to take the Guard and beat my people over the head and stick them with bayonets to get them to integrate."

Opponent's Accusation

Judge Ward has accused the Governor of leading Arkansas down the road to civil war by fomenting animosity toward the Federal Government on the school issue.

While declining to state his personal stand on the question, Mr. Faubus contends that his critics do not give him credit for Arkansas' progress on integration. He points to the state's desegregated transportation systems, and argues that Arkansas has more integrated schools than seven other Southern states combined.

Both challengers have pledged to maintain segregation, but through legal and orderly means.

Also at issue is the contention of the Governor's opponents that a third term would give Mr. Faubus a stranglehold on State Government through the use of his appointive powers to the independent regulatory boards and commissions. They also have contended that the state can cut costs and hold the line on taxes.

Review Still Pending

There has been little discussion here recently of the outlook for a return to desegregated classes at Central High School this fall. On June 21 a Federal District judge here granted a school board request for a delay of two and a half years in its plan for gradual integration. The decision was appealed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. It will be reviewed by the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, which has set a hearing on the case at St. Louis for Aug. 4.

Although the popular feeling here is that the delay will be upheld, close observers consider it likely that the District Court's decision will be overturned. This would remove the legal barrier to the reentry of Negro students to the school.

Both Federal officials and Governor Faubus have indicated a reluctance to stage a repeat of last year's performance by calling out troops. However, the climate of opinion resulting from the heated election campaign may touch off incidents that would call for drastic remedies.

FAUBUS VOTE CLOUDS INTEGRATION OUTLOOK

Majority Seen Encouraging South To Stiffen Stand on Schools

By CABELL PHILLIPS

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2—The issue of school segregation in Arkansas—and in the South—was poised in a delicate state of suspense this week-end.

Last Tuesday, Arkansas' Gov. Orval E. Faubus, leading symbol to most Southerners of last-ditch resistance to racially integrated schools, won an impressive third-term victory. He campaigned chiefly on his promise to continue to fight the Federal Government's authority to enforce the desegregation order, as it did throughout the 1957-58 school year by posting troops at Little Rock's Central High School.

Next Monday the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis will begin hearings on a lower-court order setting aside the Little Rock desegregation program for two-and-one-half years. This order was handed down June 20 by Federal District Judge Harry J. Lemley, on application by the Little Rock school board. The basis of the order was that mixing of the races had created an "intolerable situation" from which some respite was necessary.

Resounding Victory

The effect of the Lemley decision was to give legal sanction, and a resounding victory, to the position taken by Governor Faubus and other foes of integration everywhere.

If this decision is sustained by the Circuit Court, the "Battle of Little Rock" will be over for the time being. The Negro children in Little Rock will return to their segregated schools, and there will be no cause to reintroduce the Federal soldiers on the grounds at Central High.

If, however, the Lemley decision is reversed—and this is viewed here as the higher probability—the Little Rock story will be back exactly where it was when the school term ended last May. Negro students will have to be accepted for the new fall term in September, and if Governor Faubus is to be taken at his word, Federal soldiers will be necessary to guarantee them admission to the school.

Not Sobering

Any prospect that the people of Arkansas had learned a sobering lesson from their experience with forced integration during the last school year seems clearly to have been dissipated by the size of the vote by which Mr. Faubus won renomination (with election assured) in the Democratic primary.

His victory has, of course, been hailed in most Southern newspapers as a vindication of the region's resistance to school integration. It inevitably stiffens the backs of other political leaders in the region, such as in Virginia and North Caroline, where some local school authorities stand at the brink of defiance of Federal courts.

The conjunction, then, of the Faubus victory and the probable action this week of the Eighth Circuit Court, strongly suggests that the lines of battle over Little Rock—actually and symbolically—are soon to be redrawn in their familiar and explosive pattern, with new salients opening up in two or three Virginia communities.

Meeting Challenge

It can be said with reasonable assurance that having once met the challenge to the prestige of the Federal courts by sending troops to Little Rock to enforce its orders, the Federal Government will not renege when and if the second challenge comes.

There are several things it might do but it has done none of them so far.

The first is that it might make emphatically clear that if Federal troops are again necessary to uphold the order of the Federal courts in Little Rock, or elsewhere, that they will be used. There is good reason to suppose that this determination already has been reached; it would seem, indeed, to be inevitable. But neither the President nor any official of the Department of Justice has asserted the fact in plain language. Such an assertion, it is felt here, would have a sobering effect in Little Rock and other communities where the brink of defiance has been reached.

Another course might be an informal reminder to Governor Faubus that he is still under an injunction not to employ the Arkansas National Guard to prevent the entry of Negro students at Central High. This injunction was issued by Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies in September of last year, and is still in effect. Thus, a direct employment of the guard by the Governor to prevent integration, a course which he has recently intimated he might follow, would place him in contempt of the court.

Presidential Plea

Finally, President Eisenhower might try to bring the great prestige of his office and his personal popularity to bear in a direct appeal to the people and leaders of the more embattled southern states, asking their forebearance and cooperation. By the President's failure to take any firm initiative in this controversy, it is argued, he has allowed the advantage to pass to the most vocal and embittered of his opponents.

There is a good deal of feeling that it already is too late for any such appeal to be effective in Arkansas, or in the Deep South states like Mississippi, Alabama and South Carolina. When not even a token gesture toward compliance has been made. But it might strengthen the wavering moderate forces in other states like Virginia, North Carolina and Florida.

The device might be a summons of the Southern Governors to a White House conference, or a series of televised fireside chats by the President.

Such an exercise would at least, it is felt in some quarters, help greatly to clarify the real issue at stake. It would also help to remove the impression in many minds that the Executive is dodging its responsibility by leaving virtually the whole burden of compliance on the doorstep of the courts and the few local authorities who have dared to challenge pro-segregation sentiment in their communities.

There is no present indication, however, that any of these steps are now being contemplated. The Administration apparently is willing again, as it was in 1957, to see what happens before deciding what to do.

Faubus' Victory

Nearly a year has passed since the day—Aug. 29, 1957—when Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas first walked onstage in the drama of Little Rock. He appeared as a surprise witness in court to support a petition seeking to halt the integration of Central High School. Integration, he said, would lead only to bloodshed.

In the critical events that followed—his use of militia to bar Negroes from the school, President Eisenhower's dispatch of paratroops to insure their admission, the series of injunctions, petitions and appeals—the Governor's actions were widely interpreted as an effort to lay the groundwork for his election in 1958 to a third term. Only one other Arkansas Governor had been elected three times—the late Jeff Davis in 1904.

Almost daily in his campaign he hammered away at what he called Federal "interference." He did not state his position on integration itself, but pledged rather that he would "stand in the way of anyone who tries to force integration down anybody's throat." His opponents, Chris Finkbeiner, a meat packer, and Lee Ward, a judge, said they would seek to preserve segregation, but only by legal means.

Landslide

Last Tuesday, the Democratic voters of Arkansas went to the primary polls. The result was a landslide victory for Governor Faubus—in solidly Democratic Arkansas, tantamount to re-election. He won 255,000 votes, twice as many as those of his opponents combined. It was a clean sweep of the state's seventy-five counties. The Governor said: "The voting today was a condemnation of illegal Federal intervention and the horrifying use of Federal bayonets in the streets of an American city and in the halls of a public school."

The implications of the Faubus victory were far-reaching, with special significance throughout the South. Involved were questions of integration elsewhere, the President's future course and the impact on the Democratic party.

As for integration, the consensus was that the Faubus victory had not only stiffened opposition to desegregation but dealt a heavy blow to the position of Southern moderates. Harry S. Ashmore, executive editor of The Arkansas Gazette, said the "overwhelming endorsement" of Governor Faubus' actions "will set the pattern for other Southern politicians. The issue has been compliance with the law and defiance of the law."

As for the President's future course, the Arkansas landslide was a clear repudiation of his employment of troops. It came at a time of uncertainty over whether there will be a recurrence of crisis in Little Rock as the result of further legal maneuvering. Federal District Judge Harry J. Lemley has granted a delay in the integration program because, he said, it caused an "intolerable" situation at Central High. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People appealed his decision, and the Eighth Court of Appeals at St. Louis will begin hearings tomorrow.

If the delay is overturned, any new show of defiance would mean a ticklish enforcement problem for the White House. Furthermore, another crisis is developing in Virginia, whose "massive resistance" laws have met head-on with Federal court desegregation orders. Unless some judicial process is found that will avoid a showdown, the President is likely to have another enforcement problem on his hands.

As for the Democrats, some leaders on the national level fear trouble in 1960. Governor Faubus has become a likely rallying point for elements who would not hesitate to break with the party if it takes a stand against segregation, as is expected. Mr. Faubus has said he intends to remain a Democrat, but many professional Southern politicians believe he will be subjected to increasing pressure to lead a segregationist ticket, thus widening the historic North-South split in the party.

Faubus renomination causes press to cry 'shame' on Ark.

While the southern press continued to rejoice the sweeping renomination of Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas, the northern press cried out to the people of Arkansas, "Shame on You."

Here's what the nation's press said:

Newark Evening News:

"Arkansas has Orval Faubus, and Orval Faubus has Arkansas, and jolly good luck to both of them.

"One of these fine days, suh, the lights will go on in Arkansas. When they do, they'll go out for Orval Faubus and his kind, and the happy day, now seemingly only distant, can't come too soon."

New York Post:

"The people of Arkansas have placed their stamp of approval on the shame of Little Rock."

Louisville (Ky.) Courier-Journal:

"The news from Arkansas is as bad as it can be. . . .It is a dark day for Arkansas, for the South, for America."

Newark (N.J.) Star-Ledger:

Faubus' landslide victory "is generally credited to his spectacular stand against school integration and the use of troops by the President to protect colored school pupils from lawlessness."

"Those who view the Faubus victory as an endorsement by the people of Arkansas of his demagoguery will be deeply discouraged. More likely the vote was less an endorsement of his methods than a popular protest against the use of Federal troops."

Elizabeth Daily Journal:

"It is a pity that there has to be such jolting results as the Arkansas election to stir realization that the education millenium is still not at hand and that the inevitable solving of a discrediting problem may yet take some time before all our states will be New Jerseys."

Trenton (N.J.) Evening Times:

"The victory by Faubus was significant and impressive."

"It leaves no doubt that the course followed on the issue of school integration is exactly what the people of Arkansas desire."

Baltimore Evening Sun:

". . .Arkansas Democrats have indorsed a man who stands for nullification by force of the surpreme law of the land,

And although only one-third of the Arkansas Democrats voted against Faubus, "there are still enough of them to count."

"In earlier conflicts over great issues, the future has nearly always been with the saving remnant."

Baltimore Morning Sun:

"The nomination of Governor Faubus. . .is a powerful encouragement to anti-integrationists in other places to go and do likewise. . . .We see trouble ahead for Democratic strategists."

New York Herald Tribune:

"The renomination of Governor Faubus is "the shame of Arkansas--a national tragedy."

New York Times:

"We hope he (Faubus) will not be so flushed with his electorial victory as to try to use Arkansas bayonets, as he once did to keep children out of school."

The picture in Arkansas is "a most depressing one."

New York Daily News:

Faubus' "landside victory is an indicator of the Civil War passions revived in the South by the surpreme Court's well-meaning decision."

St. Louis Post-Dispatch:

"Gov. Orval Faubus says his renomination in Arkansas is a mandate to resist integration. If so, it is also a challenge to the Federal Government to assist compliance with the court orders of integration.

"Integration is, after all, the law of the land. The Federal Government—and this means the Eisenhower Administration—cannot permit a governor indefinitely to defy the U.S. Constitution."

Arkansas Gazette, Little Rock:

"Governor Faubus' overwhelming vicotry. . .stands as Arkansas's endorsement of the course of massive resistance against the desegregation decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court.

". . .Certainly a period of struggle and turmoil lies ahead as the South stands a powerful political minority committed to massive resistance to Federal policies generally approved in the remainder of the nation.

"Mr. Faubus' famous victory at the polls places him, and all of us, in the forefront of that struggle."

Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser:

"As we have said, Orval Faubus strikes us as a slobbering incompetent. Nevertheless, we would have voted for him had we lived in Arkansas and if the election officials had been nodding, we might have voted for him twice.

"We rejoice in his victory.

"It seems that in the future a few colored children can be rammed into this school and that one, but they cannot get an education in that hostile environment among people who do not want them and there won't be race mixing on large scale."

Gov. Orval Faubus' Reelection

Integration has suffered a set back in election of Orval Faubus to a third term as Governor of Arkansas. It amounts to a consolidation of the forces that have opposed the new social order while dampening the spirit of the few Southern liberals.

Though many persons had anticipated victory for Faubus, no one, not even Faubus himself, had thought that he would have won by so wide a margin. The Arkansas Governor considers his landslide renomination as a popular condemnation of what he calls "illegal Federal intervention" in the affairs of his state.

He feels that President Eisenhower has been rebuked for sending troops to Little Rock to enforce the Court's integration order. No doubt, Gov. Faubus is interpreting his triumph at the polls as a mandate to carry on his crusade against the abolition of segregation in the public schools of Arkansas.

He will proceed with the formulation of plans to resist the re-entry of the nine Negro children in the Little Rock's Central High School next month. Whether the Circuit Court reverses Judge Lemley's "peaceful interlude" decision or not, Faubus will pursue the same negative course. The question now: Will President Eisenhower send back Federal troops to sustain the court's affirmative ruling?

We do not believe that the Lemley decision will stand either before the Court of Appeals or the Supreme Court. We know what Faubus will do; but we don't know what step Ike will take.

The President has been hedging on integration for quite awhile. He has even refused to whisper justification of his military action in Little Rock. His single allusion to civil rights was when he spoke before a special meeting called by the National Association of Negro publishers. It was a brief reference in which he cautioned "patience." Since this is an election year, those who expect the Administraton to stand up for civil rights will have nothing but grief. As a matter of fact Faubus and Ike may play golf together before long. We wouldn't be surprised.

Faubus Victory Is Challenge To Redouble Effort

NEW YORK. The victory of Gov. Orval E. Faubus in the Arkansas Democratic primary should be regarded as a challenge "to redouble our efforts to expand our membership, to enlist support from every decent American and to increase our financial resources in order to continue the fight for desegregation, Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, says in a letter dispatched today to 400 local units of the Association in ten southern states.

"We cannot be frightened by the Faubus victory, Wilkins asserts. "We must continue our work for desegregation more intensely than ever."

By ordering state troops to keep Negro children out of Little Rock's Central high school, the Governor brought on the present situation, the NAACP leader points out. "All that has happened since the state troops moved in last September can be traced to the policies and actions of Gov. Faubus," he charges.

Expressing confidence that nothing can stop the progress of desegregation, Mr. Wilkins sees the Faubus triumph as something "of the moment" which "cannot last unless we succumb to defeatism. We have known setbacks before. And we have overcome them. We will likewise overcome this latest development."

The issue, the letter points out, "is now between Gov. Faubus and the Federal Government. It is the duty of the Federal Government to support and protect its courts, including the United States Supreme Court."

The events in Arkansas, Wilkins asserts, calls for "men and women and childen of couage—such courage as has already been demonstrated at Little Rock, Montgomery, Clinton and a doben other cities in the South."

COLLINS SHRUGS OFF FAUBUS WIN, PUSHES BID FOR '60 CONVENTIONS

By CHARLES HESSER

Staff Writer, The Miami News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MIAMI, Fla., Aug. 9—Gov. LeRoy Collins shrugged off the landslide victory of Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus as not indicative of a third-party move in the South and is pushing full speed ahead to secure the 1960 presidential conventions for Miami Beach.

Charles Hesser

Although many National Democratic leaders are predicting that Faubus' sweeping triumph spells trouble for 1960 for an already divided party, Collins said he doubted that it increases the possibility of a third party.

"I wouldn't anticipate that," said Collins. "I haven't found any support anywhere for a third-party movement in the South."

Collins has this to say of Faubus' victory:

"I think it indicated the very strong resentment the people of Arkansas had toward the intervention of federal force. I said the night before that action was taken that I thought it would be a grave and grievous mistake. I have always thought so since, and I think so now."

Collins, chairman of both the National and Southern Governors Conferences, was a member of a special committe of state chief executives who met with President Eisenhower in a fruitless effort to work out the Little Rock situation.

Encouraged over his reception in Washington, when he made a bid before the

FLORIDA

Democratic and Republican national chairmen, Collins has begun an all-out drive to bring both party conventions to Florida in 1960.

Collins has selected twin committees made up of prominent Florida Democrats and Republicans to work in close liaison with political figures of both parties in the nation's capital.

"We've got a good chance to get the conventions—a chance we're certainly going to fight for and work for to the fullest of our ability," Collins declared.

He said he was "quite pleased" to find both national committees anxious to hold their next conventions in the same city, and "I feel sure if we get one, we'll get both."

Gov. Faubus' Victory Leaves It Up to Him

As was anticipated, Gov. Orval Faubus won renomination in Arkansas' gubernatorial contest by a large majority. The Republicans will offer a candidate in November but there are not many GOP voters in that state. Gov. Faubus will have his third term.

History will show that this was the best thing, all factors being considered, which could happen. It was Gov. Faubus who, after asking for a presidential audience, promised to comply with the District Court instructions and didn't. It was Gov. Faubus who met with Southern governors and accepted a compromise and then changed his mind.

And in all the emotional reaction to federal troops in Little Rock, it generally is overlooked that it was Gov. Faubus' use of troops in circumventing a court order which made it necessary for the President to sustain a federal court or allow defiance and anarchy to triumph over due process of law.

The State of Arkansas had three cities in which similar voluntary agreements by the school board were in force and none had been obstructed by the governor. It was assumed, and charged, he made the Little Rock move to assure himself a third term.

Gov. Faubus now has it. It will be up to him to solve the crisis he created. This, from the standpoint of the long view, is the way it should be.

Voters Endorse His Segregation Stand

By CLIFTON WELLS

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus, receiving overwhelming endorsement of his rigid stand against integration, Tuesday night rode an avalanche of votes to a third term nomination in Arkansas' Democratic primary.

The voting today was a confirmation by the people of illegal federal intervention in the affairs of the state and of the horrifying use of federal bayonets on the streets of an American city and in the halls of a public school," Faubus said in a victory statement.

Faubus' two opponents — Chris Finkbeiner, 37, Little Rock meat packer, and State Judge Lee Ward, 51, of Paragould — had conceded defeat by 9:30 p.m., three hours after closing of the polls.

The governor's victory statement referred to President Eisenhower's action last fall when he ordered federal troops to Little Rock and federalized the Arkansas National Guard to enforce court-ordered integration at Little Rock Central High School. The President acted after Faubus had used state troops to block integration of the school.

TAKES EARLY LEAD

Faubus jumped into an early lead with the first returns and steadily increased his margin throughout the tabulation.

With 2,066 precincts reporting of 2,321, Faubus held a 127,000-vote margin over the combined total of his opponents at 10:30 p.m. Needing only a majority to win renomination. Faubus held 70 per cent of the votes counted.

The vote was Faubus 217,837; Finkbeiner 45,278; and Ward 44,989.

Faubus got his first term by a scant 7,000 votes four years ago by defeating the then governor, Francis Cherry, in a bitter runoff battle. Two years later, he won a second term in the preferential primary, easily defeating two opponents including arch-segregationist Jim Johnson of Crossett.

In Arkansas, Democratic nomination is tantamount to election.

CROWDS CELEBRATE

A crowd of several thousand roamed the street in front of Faubus' headquarters in downtown Little Rock as the outcome of the voting became certain.

A sound truck blared "Dixie" and some people danced in the street.

Faubus' statemtnt of victory said the returns had clearly indicated the sentiments of the people.

"The votes have spoken for constitutional government as envisaged by the founders of the Republic — government by the people," he declared. "They have expressed their approval of the right of the people to control their own schools and other local governmental affairs at the local level.

"They have expressed their approval of my efforts to retain the rights of a sovereign state as set out in the federal Constitution."

Arkansas Republicans will chose a nominee to oppose Faubus in the November general election at their first statewide primary Aug. 12. The two GOP candidates are Donald D. Layne, 34, Little Rock, a civil engineer, and George W. Johnson, 75, Greenwood, an attorney.

No Republican has won state office in Arkansas since the post-Civil War Reconstruction era.

Faubus Victory Is Ill Omen for '60

WASHINGTON—When Northern Democratic leaders say privately what they cannot yet bring themselves to say publicly, namely, that Gov. Orval Faubus' reelection gives them a foreboding chill, this is what they mean:

They mean the massive voter support Gov. Faubus received in his third-term campaign—turning exclusively on the Little Rock issue—sets in motion a chain of events leading to a devastating split in the Democratic Party and likely to make the election of a Democratic president in 1960 almost unattainable.

Is this too jittery an estimate of what may flow from the Faubus triumph? Not necessarily. The reasons are these:

The ability of Faubus to use the school-integration issue so productively, even to the extent of breaking down his state's long resistance to a third term, is a clear signal that this kind of extremism pays off more handsomely than ever at the polls in the South and will submerge most remaining Southern moderates who would like to stand for obedience to the courts however much they disapprove of integration.

This can hardly fail to have three consequences.

It will increase the power of the Southern Democrats to stand out against any civil rights plank in the 1960 Democratic platform which Northern Democrats would consider absolutely essential if they are to win, and to resist the only kind of presidential nominee the Northern Democrats believe could be elected.

It will persuade the voters in populous, industrialized Northern states, including Negro voters, that the Southern Democrats have become so strong and so opposed to the majority position of the Democratic Party that the Democratic Party cannot be relied upon to serve them.

If these two projections from Gov. Faubus' reelection are sound—and it seems to me they are—then nearly every Democratic candidate for Senate and House will suffer and the chances of electing a Democratic president will be sternly, perhaps fatally, reduced.

Can you imagine more than two or three Southern Democratic politicians, after noting how the Arkansas voters rewarded Faubus, supporting even as moderate a civil-rights plank as appeared in the 1956 platform?

This means in all candor that while many Northern Democrats used to wonder whether, come 1960, the Southern wing would walk out on the convention and on the ticket, they are now wondering whether they dare do other than force the Southerners to walk out.

This would bring a gaping breach in the Democratic ranks. It would mean, not just a negative walk-out, but almost certainly a Southern states rights movement bigger than nearly undid Truman in 1948.

Griffin, 2 Candidates Praise Faubus' Victory

Gov. Griffin and two of the candidates for governor sent congratulations Wednesday to Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus on his thumping reelection victory to a third term.

Griffin wired Faubus that his "splendid victory" to a "precedent-shattering third term election substantiates the devotion of the people of your great state to the principals of local self government and state sovereignty."

Lt. Gov. Ernest Vandiver, leading candidate in Georgia's gubernatorial race, told Fabus in a telegram that his reelection "indicates the feelings of the people throughout the South."

"We are with you in your efforts to uphold constitutional government and the reserved rights of the state," Vandiver said. "In Georgia we will not have a single mixed school or college."

"It is most gratifying to know that the people of the sovereign state of Arkansas have served warning to the entire nation that they intend to resist the forcing of the mixing of the races on an unwilling population," the lieutenant governor said.

Rep. William T. Bodenhamer, Vandiver's chief rival in the governor's race, issued a statement congratulating Arkansas on returning Faubus to the governorship. He also got in a plug for his own candidacy.

"Georgia will likewise show the Atlanta Newspapers, Inc., that they cannot cram a weakling on segregation down the people's throats of Georgia any more than Harry Ashmore's Daily Gazette was able to do in Arkansas," Bodenhamer said.

Faubus in Victory Hints New Plan on Integration

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., July 30 (AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus, relaxing in pajamas at his mansion, said today he had further plans to deal with the integration crisis which swept him to third term in a landslide Democratic primary victory.

But the Governor said he preferred not to disclose the plans until the outcome of the lengthy integration case at St. Louis.

He reiterated that the record vote for him yesterday vindicated his states rights stand.

"I remember I would tell the out-of-state reporters I was doing what the people wanted me to do," the Governor said. "They would give me that look of doubt. Now they have their answer."

The answer was a massive turnout that at latest count gave the 48-year-old Governor some 255,000 votes and left his two opponents—meat packer Chris Finkbeiner and State Judge Lee Ward—trailing with more than 55,000 each.

Faubus said all of his tentative proposals dealing with the racial situation hinge on the integration case.

U. S. District Judge Harry Lemley recently granted the Little Rock school board's request for a 30-month delay in integration. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People appealed. The case will be heard by the U. S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals Aug. 4

Faubus said he hoped a special session of the legislature on the integration issue would not be necessary. Such a session has been rumored since last September when National Guardsmen called out by Faubus blocked nine Negroes from entering Central High School.

The Governor beamed as he referred again to the vote.

"My margin with a big turnout is much more satisfying than . . . the same margin with a light vote," he said.

Jim Johnson And James H. Pilkinton Say They Will Not Be Candidates

By KENNETH JOHNSON

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 25.—Two down but who knows how many to go?

That has been one reaction to recent announcement by two possible gubernatorial candidates in Arkansas that they don't plan to make this year's race, after all.

Mr. Johnson

First, it was Jim Johnson of Crossett who spoke up. He told reporters several weeks ago that he didn't have any plans to run in this summer's race, unless certain things happened, which apparently won't.

Mr. Johnson, a strong segregationist campaigner in 1956 against Mr. Faubus, said he would devote his time this year to trying to make further changes in the state Constitution, some of which appear aimed as a barb at Governor Faubus.

Still another, and the latest, statement came from Chancellor James H. Pilkinton of Hope, who last September had actually gone so far as to announce publicly he would be a candidate. About a week ago, though, he disclosed he was withdrawing.

The question now arises—is Governor Faubus, with his strong stand against integration now well planted in the public mind, scaring out all potential opposition?

Eye On Bennett

The Governor and his supporters would like nothing better, and certainly weren't going to be in the position of encouraging any opponent. However, the Faubus camp was keeping a close eye on the activities of Atty. Gen. Bruce Bennett.

Some Faubus backers appear to feel that Mr. Johnson's recent move in disavowing campaign intentions this summer was designed to aid Mr. Bennett in a race. They noted privately that the 1956 contender against the Governor had raised a few issues in his proposed changes to the Constitution which Mr. Bennett just might seize as campaign issues.

Governor Orval Faubus
Too Strong To Be Challenged?

The attorney general still was not saying much, but also was known to be keeping a close eye on the activities, and the statements of the Governor.

The third "most rumored" candidate continued to be Chris Finkbeiner, Little Rock businessman.

The reasons which Chancellor Pilkinton gave for withdrawing were significant. He said he thought there would be no room for "moderates" in the race, which he predicted will be waged almost exclusively on the integration issue, and that since he considered himself a moderate, he might as well face the fact now that he didn't have a chance, and bow out.

Not in so many words, but that was about the gist of what he said, which was somewhat remarkable for its candor, since candidates usually think up other reasons to state publicly in case they feel they don't have a chance.

Liberal Needed

The narrowing of the race, so to speak, has pointed up in the minds of some Capitol observers the need, perhaps, for a candidate of a sharply contrasting nature from that of Mr Faubus. In other words, a liberal on the integration issue.

One spokesman said he thought it would be "interesting" to see what would happen if a candidate with sharply opposing views to Mr. Faubus, or someone who had sharply criticised him, would run against him.

At least, he pointed out, it would give the voters an opportunity to prove whether or not the Governor was right when he said 85 per cent of the state's voters approved of his actions in the Little Rock integration controversy.

This same anonymous observer said he thought a race between Governor Faubus and former Gov. Sid McMath would give voters a "clearcut" issue in the race, namely, extremism versus liberalism.

Acts Like Candidate

Mr. McMath has been critical of Mr. Faubus' actions in the integration dispute, and generally is viewed as a liberal in Arkansas as well as national political circles.

However, there has been no movement uncovered by this department to get Mr. McMath interested, and the above remarks are quoted merely as political musings of a certain official who's in a position to keep up with political talk as it progresses. Matter of fact, if anything there has been more speculation on former Mayor Woodrow W. Mann of Little Rock as a possible opponent to Governor Faubus, than there has been on Mr. McMath.

Mr. Mann has written a series of newspaper articles criticising Governor Faubus' role in the Central High dispute, and Governor Faubus at times has acted as if the mayor might be a potential opponent. He has blasted back at the former mayor so vigorously, at times that some are inclined to wonder if the Governor isn't trying to "take him out of the field," politically speaking.

There also have been reports that segregationist forces are trying to center on a candidate other than Governor Faubus, which suggests that not all of them are completely satisfied that the Governor is as completely segregationist as his actions at Central High would bespeak.

Adding fuel to that belief are such statements as the Governor has made recently, the latest in a speech he delivered about a week ago before a group of magazine publishers.

For States Rights

In the speech, the Governor emphasized that he was "neither segregationist nor integrationist," but was acting largely in behalf of States Rights.

In fact, the Governor views himself as a "moderate," despite his actions having labeled him generally as an extremist.

The fact that he has continued to hold off announcing his political intentions has served to convince some of his opposition that he does intend to run for a third term. They point out that if he didn't plan to run, he probably already would have nounced it, and perhaps have ndorsesd someone else.

By holding off as l as possible, he can play guessing game, and keep his opposition off balance, they point out.

However, there's still time for sentiment to crystallize before the April 30 filing deadline. There's at least one member of the Arkansas Senate who is cautiously trying to work into a "contender" position, and there probably are still others yet to be heard from.

Governor Replies To Hints That He's Unwelcome

Wed 2-19-58

AT EVENT FOR TRUMAN

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 18.—Gov. Orval Faubus pointedly reminded Democratic leaders Tuesday that the Democratic Party "doesn't belong to any particular group or clique."

That was his reaction to speculation that he may get a "cool reception" Saturday in Washington when he shows up there to attend a party fund-raising dinner honoring former President Harry S. Truman.

The Governor referred to remarks carried in a column by Washington columnist Doris Fleeson and also to talk in Little Rock that because of his role in the integration controversy, he may not be "welcome" at the dinner.

No Red Carpet

"I don't expect the red carpet for me there, but on the other hand the same courtesy should be extended to me as to any other Southerner or to any member from any other section of the country," the Governor said.

"As a matter of fact, if any state has a right to be represented, it's Arkansas, because has been solidly Democra longer than any other state the union with one possible ception — the state of Georgi he exclaimed.

It will be a $100-a-plate aff to swell the party treasury. T Governor said he expected to pay the amount out of his own pocket.

He plans to leave here about midnight Thursday from Hoxie following two East Arkansas engagements he has planned that day.

Thursday noon he plans an appearance before civic clubs at Helena, and Thursday night he will speak at a Rotary Club meeting in Lepanto, where he will receive a "man of the year" award.

Board Special Train

He will be driven later that night to Hoxie and board a special train bearing him and other Arkansas Democrats to Washington. He's expected to arrive there early Saturday morning. He and other state party officials will be guests at a breakfast staged by Mrs. Jack Carnes of Camden, national Democratic committeewoman.

Democratic Party Chairman Tom Harper of Fort Smith will be among those making the trip.

Asked about previous critical remarks former President Truman has made about the Governor's role in the integration dispute, the Governor replied that he "didn't fall out" with the former President because of that.

He said it was possible for people to disagree within the Democratic Party and "still remain friends." He considers Mr. Truman as "still my friend," the Governor added.

What About Southerners?

"If I am not welcome in Washington to this dinner, then what about all the other Southern Democrats who will be there? Most of them feel the way I do," the Governor observed.

He added that if it hadn't been for the South in the past two elections, Adlai Stevenson, the Democratic presidential nominee, would have been "skunked."

MeatPacker To Oppose Faubus

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (INS)— A prominent Little Rock meat packer has announced he will be candidate for governor of Arkansas, a post now held by Orval Faubus, segregationist.

Chris Finkbeiner, 34, father of four children, Purple Heart holder and World War II infantry officer, said he will oppose Faubus in the primary for the Democratic nomination, tantamount to election in Arkansas.

CHRIS E. FINKBIENER

Faubus, serving his second two-year term, has said he will announce his third term intentions before March 1. Political insiders insist he will run, seeking to be the second governor in Arkansas history to win three terms.

A SEGREGATIONIST

Finkbeiner, active in Boy Scout and Chamber of Commerce work in the state, so far has made no public comment about segregation. But in political circles, he is regarded as anti-segregation minded.

Little Rock's Central High school last year was the scene of several racial disorders which saw National Guard troops called up to keep order.

If only Faubus and Finkbeiner seek the nomination, the election will be held July 29. If others enter the race, the July 29 primary will eliminate all but two candidates, who will meet in a runoff Aug. 12.

If any one candidate receives a majority of the votes cast, however, he will win the nomination.

Gen. Johnson Calls for Unity at NCCJ Meeting

Prejudice's Cost Placed at $30 Billion

By TOM LOWNES
Herald Staff Writer

Prejudice costs an estimated 30 billion dollars a year, the annual Brotherhood dinner of the National Conference of Christians and Jews was told Tuesday.

Gen. Robert Woood Johnson said the conference's budget—three million dollars—is small compared to such a loss.

Johnson, national special gifts chairman of the conference, spoke to 750 persons at the Florida region of the NCCJ at the Fontainebleau Hotel.

He called for "unity in purpose" as the only answer to the problems of 1958 — a year which he said "threatens disaster."

Dr. John W. Fisher, director of the Candian Travel Association, picked up Gen. Wood's remarks on prejudice and told the group that the failure of brotherhood would bring greater expense that could do not be measured in money.

"We will never be out of a crisis," said Johnson. "We must live together in brotherhood or we will not live at all."

Fisher called for Americans to "strike a balance between your pleasure and your power" to make technological advances to keep up with the Russians.

Six high school students and four adults were honored for their brotherhood work in Dade County.

Carl Weinkle, Miami Beach businessman, received a national award for his "qualities of devotion and humanity which mark him as a friend of all mankind."

Financier Baron de Hirsch Meyer, Circuit Judge Ray Pearson and TV newscaster Ralph Renick all received silver medallions from the Florida Conference for their work in brotherhood.

a Year

Josephine Hirsch, Miami Edson High, Betty J. Kelly, Booker T. Washington High, and Russell Jack Weber, Miami Edison, all received bronze medallions.

James Aquiline, Miami Edison, Harold Culmer, Booker T. Washington, and Doris Arlene Gold, Miami Jackson, received certificates for brotherhood work.

Gov. Orval Faubus seeks third term

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., March 5 —(AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus, who vaulted into national prominence during the bitter Little Rock integration controversy, announced today he will seek a third term.

He said he intends to defend states rights as part of his platform.

The only third term governor in Arkansas history was Jeff Davis, who served from 1901-06.

FAUBUS'S SOLE challenger so far is Little Rock meat packing executive Chris Finkbeiner who has not outlined his platform yet.

Faubus, 48, called out Arkansas National Guardsmen last Sept. 2 to surround Central High School. When classes opened next morning the soldiers turned away nine Negro students who tried to enter under a federal court order — and the lengthy racial crisis began.

Faubus Says He'll Seek Third Term

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., March 5 (AP)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus announced today he would seek a third term.

He said he intended to make states' rights a part of his platform.

The only three-term Governor in Arkansas' history was Jeff Davis, who served from 1900-06.

The only other announced candidate is a Little Rock meat packing executive, Chris Finkbeiner.

Filings for the Democratic primary close April 30 and the primary is to be held July 29. The Democratic nomination is tantamount to election.

The 48-year-old Governor called out Arkansas National Guardsmen last Sept. 2 to surround Central High School. The next morning the soldiers turned away nine Negro pupils who tried to enter under a Federal court order.

The nine were admitted later under the protection of Federal troops.

Mechem Seeks a 4th Term

SANTA FE, N. M., March 5 (AP)—Gov. Edwin L. Mechem, a Republican, is seeking a fourth term.

He filed just before the deadline yesterday and is unopposed in the primaries, to be held May 13.

No New Mexico Governor has served more than three terms.

HIGH COURT TO MAKE PRIMARY LAW RULING

Both Parties Have Asked Early Clarification

KILLER SEEKS NEW TRIAL

From Arkansas Commercial Appeal Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, March 24—The Arkansas Supreme Court indicated Monday it will hand down an early ruling on validity of a 1957 law requiring the Republican Party to conduct party primaries in choosing its candidates.

The court "advanced" a case in which constitutionality of the act is raised. The case is styled Newton County Republican Central Committee vs. Quinton Clark, from Newton Circuit Court.

Held Constitutional

The lower court recently held the act is constitutional and that the Newton County committee must conduct a primary under its provisions. The issue was raised when Mr. Clark, who is seeking a post as state representative from Newton County, tried to register with the committee under the 1957 act. The county committee refused to call a primary.

Republicans traditionally have selected their statewide candidates by party convention, with their campaigning devoted largely to trying to defeat Democratic opponents in the November general elections.

An early ruling had been requested by both Democratic and Republican officials since this is an election year in Arkansas and campaigning will get underway within the next two months.

Basing Appeal

The court also took under submission Emmett Earl Leggett's latest bid to avoid execution.

The youthful Pulaski County offender, facing death for the slaying of 14-year-old Joe King of Jacksonville, is basing his latest appeal on a 1957 law which provides persons convicted of major crimes can reopen their convictions by claiming errors in their trials.

The court has never ruled on

Engelhardt Urges Anti-Integration Legal Specialists

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (Special) —Alabama State Sen. Sam Engelhardt Friday night called for the appointment of "a special attorney general" in each southern state "for the express purpose of fighting integration."

Engelhardt, a candidate for lieutenant governor in Alabama, made the proposal in a speech before the Little Rock Capital Citizens Council.

He said the special attorney "must be a constitutional lawyer and devote his entire time to fighting integration."

"Whenever any southern state goes into court on an integration issue," Engelhardt said, "the Negro lawyers have briefs prepared completely in New York by the legal division of the NAACP.

"The southern states must cooperate and coordinate. They must have a liaison man and in so doing, they can put up a solid front all down the line so the South may remain free, independent and segregated," he said.

Segregationist New Arkansas Justice

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Virtually complete returns Wednesday night apparently confirmed that segregationist leader Jim Johnson won a place on the Arkansas Supreme Court in Tuesday's Democratic primary.

However, his opponent, incumbent Minor W. Millwee, declined to concede victory to the 33-year-old Crossett attorney.

"It's so close I think I'll just wait a while before saying anything, Millwee said.

Johnson held an edge of less than 3,000 votes with more than 370,000 votes counted.

His unofficial total was 137,344; Millwee's 134,423 in the two-man race. At the time 2,202 of the state's 2,325 boxes had reported. The comparative handful of missing boxes were in sparsely settled rural sections.

The 57-year-old Millwee, a member of the court since 1945, was asked if he planned to withhold a statement until an official canvass of the vote.

"I expect I might," he said.

Making his third try for a statewide office—he previously had failed for attorney general and governor — Johnson stressed his extreme segregation views.

Another incumbent, Justice Ed F. McFaddin, won with ease over Griffin Smith Jr. of Little Rock, whose late father was chief justice of the Arkansas court.

And Rep. W. F. Norrell was renominated to an 11th term by a margin of about 2½ to 1 over former State Sen. W. E. Fletcher of Lonoke.

Gov. Orval Faubus, who was renominated to a third term without necessity of a runoff two weeks ago, declined to comment on Tuesday's primary.

Faubus beat Johnson for governor two years ago.

Voting Tuesday was in races in which no candidate received a majority at the earlier preferential primary or in which there were only two candidates originally.

All three major races were two-man affairs and went before the voters for the first time.

JIM JOHNSON
Arkansas Winner

Democratic nomination is the equivalent of election in Arkansas.

The Republicans, however, also held a primary Tuesday — their first in state history. Heretofore, they have nominated by convention, but a new law requires all party nominations to be by primary.

Only statewide race on the Republican ballot was for governor. Only a few precincts were used and voting was extremely light. George W. Johnson, a Greenwood attorney, was nominated over Donald D. Layne, a Little Rock engineer, and will oppose Faubus at the November general election.

Moderate retains seat in Congress

LITTLE ROCK—Amis Guthridge, Little Rock White Citizens Council official described as second only to Governor Faubus in responsibility for integration disorders at Central High School, went down to defeat by more than 2-to-2 margin in his efforts to unseat Rep. Brooks Hays as Democratic Congressman from Arkansas' Fifth Congressional District.

Analysis of the Congressional primary described the result as a victory for the cause of Hays, over that of extremism, represented by Guthridge, who served as legal counsel for the Capital Citizens Council and the Central High Mothers' Council in much of the litigation resulting from the Central High School crisis.

GUTHRIDGE BASED his entire campaign upon the segregation issue; making television and public appearances throughout the district in which he pledged a last-ditch battle to maintain racial separation in the state.

Slight attention was paid to the third man in the race, E. M. Harrington, a Sologhachia (Conway County) farmer.

Instead, Guthridge leveled his television, radio and political rally broadsides at Rep. Hays, now serving his eighth term in Congress, as having "opened the doors to the White House that resulted in bayonets being put in the backs of parents and school children at Central High."

* * *

REPRESENTATIVE HAYS who served as mediator between Governor Faubus and President Eisenhower during the September crisis brought on by Faubus' use of National Guard troops to bar colored pupils from entering Central High School, denied Guthridge's claims declaring:

"Everyone who is at all acquainted with the facts knows that I did everything that I could to prevent it (the use of federal troops at Central High).

When the votes were counted the tally showed 30,054 for Hays, 19,246 for Guthridge and 1,021 for Harrington.

In the race for nomination for governor the incumbent, Orval E. Faubus, easily won by a 2-to-1 margin over Judge Lee Ward of Paragould and Chris E. Finkbeiner, a Little Rock meat packer, both of whom had declared themselves segregationists, but had said that they would not defy the orders of a Federal court.

Negro Candidate Loses In Arkansas

TEXARKANA, Ark.—G. C. Mackey, the first Negro to run in an Arkansas primary, was defeated for Democratic committeeman.

Governor Orval E. Faubus appointed Mackey to the post in 1956. Arkansas Legislature made the position elective in 1957.

First Negro In Ark. Primary Race

TEXARKANA, Ark., Aug. 12.—The first Negro ever to run in an Arkansas Democratic primary sought the post of committeeman for Congressional District Four in today's election.

He is G. C. Mackey, who is opposed by two white candidates for the post.

Mackey was appointed to the committeeman post in 1956 by Gov. Orval E. Faubus and served through 1957 when the Arkansas Legislature made committeemen an elective position. If elected, Mackey would be a member of the State Democratic Central Committee and a delegate to the Democratic National Convention.

Negro Candidate Is Swamped In Arkansas Voting

TEXARKANA, Ark. (AP)—G. C. Mackey, first Negro to run in an Arkansas primary, was soundly defeated Tuesday in an election for Democratic committeeman.

Mackey was appointed to the post by Gov. Orval E. Faubus in 1956. Arkansas' Legislature made the position elective in 1957.

Mackey, a Texarkana liquor dealer, was swamped by two other opponents for committeeman from congressional District 4.

The apparent winner was William Judge Rogers of Camden. Joe T. Templeton of El Dorado was listed unofficially as second. Both men recorded about 2,000 votes. Mackey had approximately 350.

Coleman Argues Support For Hays

Would Have Been 'Ingrate' To Refuse, He Says

HELPED HIM IN CHICAGO

By KENNETH TOLER
From the Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 5.—Gov. J. P. Coleman said Wednesday he would have been an "ingrate" not to endorse the re-election candidacy of Representative Brooks Hays (D., Ark.) after the latter had requested it in return for his co-operation at the 1956 Democratic National Convention.

Governor Coleman in a taped telephone conversation from Chicago Monday endorsed the efforts of the Arkansas representative in seeking to "water down" the Democratic Party's platform on civil rights.

State political leaders, and others, were admittedly "astonished" that Governor Coleman would inject himself in the Arkansas election in view of his long followed policy to remain hands-offb on affairs in other states. He has consistently refused to comment on Gov. Orval Faubus' school troubles in Arkansas, as well as those in other Southern States.

No Compromise

Meanwhile Ross R. Barnett attorney of Jackson and candidates for governor in next summer's election, wired congratulations to Dr. Dale Alford of Little Rock, who defeated Representative Hays.

"The good people of Arkansas have again spoken in a manner that should convince everyone that there will be no compromise on segregation in the schools of the South and that the people of the South are determined to maintain our constitution and our Southern way of life," Mr. Barnett wired. "Congratulations on your success and upon your great victory for Southern traditions."

Mr. Barnett is to oppose Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin, who is being backed by Governor Coleman.

Governor Coleman's statement as to why he issued the statement in Representative Hays' behalf was telephoned to his office here from New York where he is on an industry seeking tour with other members of the State Agricultural and Industrial Board.

The statement said in part—

"I understand that some of those in Jackson who make it a habit to criticize me are complaining about a statement I gave Congressman Hays of Arkansas. In 1956 I had the job put on me as acting chairman of Southern delegates on the platform committee in Chicago. Congressman Hays was on that committee from Arkansas. He gave me every possible assistance and I appreciate his efforts.

Refers to Ellington

"On Monday, he asked me to issue a statement concerning those services. I made no statement until it was requested of me. I would have been an ingrate to have accepted Brooks Hays' assistance in 1956 and refused to acknowledge it in 1958 when he called on me.

"Regardless of these critics who are working day and night to stir up trouble, I have no apology to make for telling the truth about Broks Hays.

"I made it clear in the statement I gave Mr. Hays that I would not meddle in the local affairs of any state.

"I understand that these habitual critics complain that I did nothing to help Buford Ellington in Tennessee. The election returns show that Buford did not need any help, but he was advised many weeks ago that if there should be anything I could do, he would have only to call on me. The fact that he never had any occasion to call for my help should not make these individuals so unhappy.

LITTLE ROCK GAINS BY NEW CITY RULE

First Year of Manager Form of Government Marked by Municipal Progress

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Nov. 29—In the shadow of the grim struggle over school integration, this Arkansas capital city of 107,315 is fashioning a record of municipal progress.

The driving force in the program of civic improvement is Dean I. Dauley, a 33-year-old Texan who came to Little Rock almost a year ago to be its first city manager.

If ever a city had reason to be despondent, it was the Little Rock that Mr. Dauley found when he arrived in January from Grand Prairie, Tex.

First there was the emotion-tinged racial dispute—stemming from the admittance of nine Negroes to Central High School. This of course was not a direct concern of Mr. Dauley, but the consequences of it threatened the city government that would be his job to run.

The municipal situation itself was unstable. The old Mayor-council government had been wracked by a grand jury investigation and by bickering among the Mayor and the council members. Dissatisfaction with it led to a vote for the adoption of the city-manager form of government in November, 1956.

The change-over was made a year later and the city's Board of Directors tapped Mr. Dauley—who already had introduced the new form of government at two other cities—for the city manager job. Mr. Dauley first turned down the $17,500 post, then decided to accept.

Once on the scene he lost little time making changes.

In the first month he changed the method of buying gasoline for city vehicles and saved $12,000 for the year. He centralized bookkeeping and arranged for the city to buy accounting machines to do the job mechanically.

Dividing his time between his City Hall office and speeches before civic clubs, he told Little Rock residents in those early months that they were too pessimistic about their city's future.

He declared that Little Rock was on the brink of a great era of growth and development. It could make the most of it, he said in effect, if its residents shed their depressed outlook and tackled the future with civic enthusiasm.

There is evidence that he has achieved the public confidence he was seeking.

This is manifest in the results of the Nov. 4 general election, when Little Rock voters approved by a 6-1 margin a $4,950,000 bond issue for capital improvements. It was the first comprehensive bond issue voted in the history of the city.

Among the accomplishments of Mr. Dauley's government are:

¶A $300,000 street program, which included the surfacing of more than 200 blocks and hard surfacing more than fifty blocks.

¶Better street cleaning, through the use of new equipment, and the paint-striping of streets to speed traffic flow.

¶The approval of a contract with the Arkansas Power and Light Company under which Little Rock, now ill-lighted, will get hundreds of modern new street lights.

All municipal employes have received salary increases since Mr. Dauley came to town, and more are planned under a personnel reorganization to be put into effect next year.

The Police Department will be reorganized on the recommendations of an expert consultant.

Faubus Winner

Arkansans Appear To Have Retained Sales Tax At Three Per Cent

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Nov. 4 — United States Representative Brooks Hays of Little Rock was leading write-in challenger Dr. Dale Alford as first returns came in Tuesday night in the state's general election voting.

The Fifth District congressional race, which during the past week took the spotlight over statewide issues, shaped up only about 10 days ago when Dr. Alford, Little Rock eye specialist and School Board member, announced as a candidate against Mr. Hays. The integration question was the key issue.

In statewide balloting, Gov. Orval Faubus was a routine winner over the Republican gubernatorial nominee, George W. Johnson of Greenwood.

In addition, voters appeared to have retained the sales tax increase voted by the 1957 legislature but placed on this year's general election ballot in an attempt to return it to the previous two per cent rate.

Returns from 16 of the 258 boxes set up in the congressional race showed:

HAYS	637
ALFORD	311

Gov. J. P. Coleman of Mississippi inserted a new note into the Hays-Alford race Monday night when, in a recorded telephone conversation with Mr. Hays, he endorsed him as one "absolutely loyal to the traditions of the South."

Dr. Alford, an avowed segregationist, had branded Representative Hays' moderate views as a form of "fence straddling" on the racial issue.

With 129 precincts of 2,367 reported, the sales tax vote stood at 5,641 for the increase, 1,783 against.

The vote in the gubernatorial race, in which Governor Faubus hadn't bothered to campaign, stood as follows on the basis of 129 precincts reported:

FAUBUS	6,154
JOHNSON	873

Returns on other proposals on the ballot, based on a total of 129 precints reported, showed:

Proposed amendment 47, which would bar the state from levying a state property tax.

FOR	3,675
AGAINST	2,718

Proposed amendment 48, calling for a pay raise for state legislators:

FOR	3,522
AGAINST	3,086

Prosopsed amendment 49, which would enable cities and towns to vote additional millage to float bonds for industrial development.

FOR	4,244
AGAINST	2,251

Proposed initiated Act No. 1, a proposal backed by railroads which would repeal the state's "full crew" law.

FOR	3,721
AGAINST	3,954

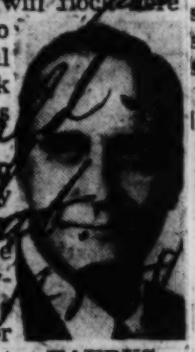
Faubus for President Move Readied at Crestview

CRESTVIEW — (UPI) — A group of rockbound segregationists from a half dozen southern states will flock here Saturday to hear Gov. Orval Faubus speak on states rights.



FAUBUS

One group from nearby Milton will try to persuade the Arkansas governor to become a candidate for president. But nobody here Friday seemed to be taking this kind of talk seriously.

Most of the expected 15,000 turnout apparently are coming just to see Faubus and in the hopes of hearing a "fire eating" speech on segregation.

But organizers of the affair, held annually to honor the old folks of Florida, Georgia and Alabama, say the governor will deliver a "dignified" discourse on states rights as it affects the entire nation rather than just the South.

Otis Barnes, Milton grocer, said the Santa Rosa County Citizens Council will seek a meeting with Faubus to offer their support for the presidential nomination, either on the Democratic or a third party ticket.

One local restaurant, perhaps hoping to attract some business, has already blossomed forth with a "Faubus for President" sign.

But Congressman Bob Sikes of Crestview and State Sen. Newman C. Brackin, who helped organize the day-long affair, said every effort will be made to avert even talk of a third party.

However, Brackin added, "the people of northwest Florida are almost mad enough to back almost any move."

He said the people are "mad, disgusted and bitter" at Gov. LeRoy Collins following his plea Thursday night that Florida accept some integration rather than abolish the public schools.

Brackin said the people want segregation at any cost and are "infuriated" at Collins for suggesting anything else.

Brackin and his House colleagues invited the whole Florida legislature to turn out to hear Faubus, but only about a dozen have accepted.

One of the senators who said he will come is former Acting Gov. Charley Johns of Starke, bitter foe of Collins and chairman of the legislative committee investigating the racial situation in Florida.

Another Collins foe, retired Gen. Sumter Lowry of Tampa who was runner-up for governor on a strong segregation platform two years ago, will be on hand and have a chance to speak.

Former Gov. Millard Caldwell of Florida, outspoken states righter, is on the program but is expected to confine his remarks to dedicating a plaque to the late W. D. Douglas, Crestview newsman who started the old folks celebration 10 years ago.

Congressmen Frank Boykin of Alabama and Edward Robeson Jr., are expected, and a number of citizens from as far away as Mississippi have written they plan to come.

Boykin will introduce Faubus whose address is set for noon.

CANDIDATE — Mrs. Helen K. Valley, mother of four, has formally announced her candidacy for the Assembly from the 62nd district, opposing Assemblyman Augustus F. Hawkins, Democrat, who has held the post for 26 years.

Mrs. Valley has opened headquarters on her own property at 4218 S. Woodlawn; she lives at 4210½ S. Woodlawn and will kick off the campaign with an informal reception and tea Mar. 9 under auspices of the Citizens' Valley-for-Assembly Committee. She has been endorsed by the Woman's Political Study club, the Cosmopilitan Republican Voters club, the 62nd district Republican Assembly, and says she has lived in the 62nd district 21 years.

San Francisco Has Negro Judge

SAN FRANCISCO — (ANP) — Gov. Godwin Knight of California recently appointed Atty. John W Bussey a judge of the San Francisco Municipal Court, making him the first Negro ever to win such an appointment in the city's history.

Bussey succeeds Municipal Judge Gerald S. Levin who was elevated to the Superior Court bench. Judge Levin replaced Judge Alvert C. Wollenberg, who was nominated for a federal judgeship.

LAWYER AND TEACHER

At 54, the athletically built Bussey is a veteran lawyer who leaves behind him a splendid record both as a practicing attorney and tutor. He has guided "hundreds" of budding lawyers towards their goal.

Bussey, who is Georgia-born but has lived and practiced law in the bay area for more than 26 years, received the news of his appointment modestly. "It was somewhat of a surprise to me," he said, adding: "It will be quite a challenge. It's something, I suppose, every lawyer and law student thinks of. One sort of floats in mid-air for a while before he settles down."

EAGER TO FACE CHALLENGE

Asked if he anticipated any trouble along racial lines during his tenure on the bench, he said he didn't. "I don't anticipate any trouble. I have no feelings along these lines. Generally, I've gotten along with all groups."

Bussey is not considered an all-out campaigner for Negro rights, although he did serve for a time as a member of the local chapter of the NAACP. That was from 1935 to 1936 "when I had plenty of time because of the depression," he explained. He said the duties involved primarily organizational problems since there weren't too many Negro people living here at the time.

As a lawyer, Bussey is well prepared for his new duties. A graduate of the University of California and Harvard University Law School, his career includes four years as deputy district attorney of Alameda County, and two years as a law teacher at Howard University in Washington, D. C. He was also a leader in several local civic organizations.

Knight to name 4th Negro Judge

In anticiption of the elevation of Judge Albert C. Wollenberg, of San Francisco, to the Federal judiciary, Governor Goodwin J. Knight has announced his intention of appointing John Wesley Bussey, San Francisco attorney, to the Municipal Court.

Bussey, 54, will make the fourth Negro to sit on the judicial bench in California, the second to be appointed by Governor Knight, who previously named Municipal Court Judge David W. Williams, of Los Angeles to the Bench.

Bussey, whose appointment will wait on the elevation by Knight of Municipal Judge Gerald S. Levin, to the San Francisco Superior Court, has been practising law in California since 1931 and in San Francisco since 1948.

He took his legal training at the University of California and Harvard law school and is a former associate professor of law at Howard university.

The two other Negro judges are in Southern California, Superior Court Judge Edwin L. Jefferson, who was named to the Superior Court by former Governor Culbert L. Olson and Municipal Judge Thomas L. Griffith, an appointee of former Governor Earl Warren.

Rufus Carter files for 63rd Assembly seat

The California Direct Primary election will not go to the post June 3 without a Negro candidate in the 63rd district, after all.

Continuing a precedent set in 1954 by former Tribune- publisher Lucius W. Lomax, Jr., and carried on by George Thomas, of the County Conference on Community Relations, and Louis Jones, Westside businessman, Atty. Rafus J. Carter filed this week for the State Assembly from the populous Westside district.

Carter is a Republican but he has crossfiled.

He is a member of the firm of Carter, Wilson, and Flournoy, with offices at 252 W. Manchester, and he lives with ris wife and three children at 2027 Wellington Road. He is 34 years old.

He will oppose incumbent Don Allen who represented the 63rd some 12 years ago before being elected to the City Council. Allen is a Democrat.

Carter has been practising law since 1953. He is a graduate of JCCA and took his legal training at Southwestern law school. He is a member of Brown Memorial Methodist church, the NAACP, an association of attorneys specializing in personal injury cases, and of Republican Associates.

He said this week that Allen has been absent from legislative sessions too many times and that he feels he can give the district better representation than it is now getting.

Lomax lost in 1954 by 2000 votes to four-term incumbent Delbert Morris, who was later sent to prison on for perjury.

Allen won out over both Thomas, who is Democrat, and Jones, a Republican in 1956.

SCOTT FILES, TOO

Harold Scott, a City Health Dept. inspector also filed as a candidate for Congress from the 15th district.

A Democrat, Scott will oppose Republican incumbent Gordon L. McDonough and Emery S. Pettv, another Democrat, who was defeated by McDonough two years ago.

Scott, 51, is a member of the executive board of the Democratic County Central committee and the president of the Democratic Council.

Born in Cherokee, Kans., Scott is a political science graduate of the University of Southern California and has taught in Los Angeles schools for 32 years. He has been married for 31 years and has four grown children.

Candidates Rush To File In L.A.

LOS ANGELES. — (AP) — Enthusiasm was high and amusing as the filing deadline draws near for Los Angeles politicos, candidates for the forthcoming June primary elections reminded one of the World's Series fans as they lined up in front of the voters registration office. One candidate went as far as sleeping all night in his car so as to be first on the long list of candidates.

Most of the eager politicians brought along the necessary backers to sign the petitions as each one needs 30 signatures in order to be a legal candidate.

Also filing was the present Governor Poodwin G. Knight who is running for United States senator and his opponent Senator Robert McCarthy.

Los Angeles's two top Negro candidates, Chrispus Wright and Helen Weekly, were also among the early birds. Agustus Hawkins is also a candidate.

Brown Is Pride Of Democrats After Victory Over Knowland

By MORRIS LANDSBERG

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — National political attention, long lavished on California's high-ranking Republicans, shifted Wednesday to Gov.-elect Edmund G. Brown and the Democrats he led to victory Tuesday.

The hustling, mild-mannered attorney general climbed into the giant-killer class by his resounding defeat of Republican Sen. William F. Knowland.

The Democratic surge carried Rep. Clair Engle of Red Bluff to the U. S. Senate over GOP Gov. Goodwin J. Knight. Democrats gained one congressman for sure, and were leading in three other Republican-held districts. They could control the House delegation by the same majority the Republicans had—17-13.

SINGLED OUT

With his margin rolling impressively toward better than a million votes, Brown was quickly singled out by Democratic National Chairman Paul Butler for a place in the national political sun.

"I do not mean Pat Brown will be nominated (for president) in 1960 or that he will seek the nomination," Butler said in Washington. "I have no idea what he has in mind, although I assume people automatically will start talking about him for the presidency."

Butler said he meant only that Brown would play an important role at the party's next convention. It's taken for granted here that the new governor will control the second largest state delegation.

DEFEAT COSTLY

Brown has disavowed any national ambitions. Early in his campaign for governor, he made a categorical statement that he wouldn't seek the vice presidential bid nor would he serve if elected.

Knowland's defeat removed him from serious consideration in the GOP presidential race. It also left Vice President Nixon in an uneasy position with the loss of his home state to the Democrats.

The count from 19,932 of 26,896 precincts for governor gave: Brown 1,722,500, Knowland 1,075,580.

The count from 19,902 precincts for senator gave: Engle 1,574,172, Knight 1,096,683.

Knight finally conceded the election shortly before 1 p.m. PST with Engle out in front by more than 500,000.

The Democrats won control of the state Legislature for the first time since 1889.

The sweep didn't carry through the entire ticket. Some Republican state officials appeared to have salvaged narrow victories, but results were not conclusive as yet.

To succeed Brown as attorney general, the voters named Superior Judge Stanley Mosk of Los Angeles, 47-year-old Democratic candidate. First of the Jewish faith ever elected to statewide office in California, Mosk trounced Republican Rep. Patrick J. Hillings of Arcadia by a huge majority.

Rejection of Knowland's attempt to land the governorship was accomplished by decisive defeat of Proposition 18, the "right-to-work" initiative which the blunt, independent-minded senator embraced as his key issue.

Tossed out, too, was a highly-controversial ballot measure to impose property taxes on private and parochial schools. Aimed at predominant Catholic enrollments, the religious issue helped attract a state vote close to the record of 73 per cent of registration for an offf-year election.

In Windsor, a Canadian city of ...,000, across the Detroit River from Detroit, the candidacy of a Negro for city office is not unusual. Dr. H. D. Taylor, a Negro, has been a member of the Board of Education for twenty-six years. James Watson, the city solicitor, is also a Negro.

Gains Much Publicity

But Dr. Perry's challenge of Mayor Patrick has brought him considerable publicity, more from outside publications than within Windsor itself where the campaign appears to be going along quietly without focus on racial implications.

Actually, Windsor is described by some of those who live there as a polyglot city composed of many nationality groups, with British, French-Canadians and Ukranians predominating. The Negro population is relatively small and is not confined to a segregated geographical area, as in many northern cities.

"The feeling between Negroes and whites here in Windsor is one of the best there is anywhere on the American continent," Dr. Perry said in an interview today.

Dr. Perry, now 42 years old, was a star athlete when he attended Windsor schools. He is a graduate of the dental school at Toronto University and has practiced here for eighteen years. He and his wife live in a big brick house which looks out on the Detroit River with Detroit's skyscrapers in the background.

As a boy he used to deliver newspapers in Windsor and still remembers the many kindnesses done him. That is why, he said, he gives his annual children's skating party, complete with hot dog, hot chocolate and prizes for the winners of skating contests.

"By doing this," he said, "I feel I'm giving back a little of what folks gave to me."

Dr. Perry is campaigning on a platform in which he promises to work for slum redevelopment, for more and diversified industry, full employment and a better Windsor generally.

Mayor Patrick, 40-year-old cement company president, is completing his second term as Windsor's chief executive.

The other two mayoralty candidates are Edgar B. Charron, a plumber, and John Reardon, a painting contractor.

Negro Runs for Mayor in Canada

WINDSOR, Ontario, Canada (ANP)—Dr. Roy Perry, socially prominent physician and city controller, last week announced his candidacy for mayor of the city of Windsor, in the 1958 municipal elections.

Dr. Perry, who has served nine years on the City Council, has the honor of being the first Negro member.

MAYOR OF WINDSOR BEATS NEGRO IN VOTE

WINDSOR, Ont., Dec. 2 (Canadian Press). — Michael Patrick was returned as Mayor of Windsor last night with the highest plurality he has received in his three successful bids for the office.

Mr. Patrick polled 20,531 votes, far ahead of the 5,311 cast for Dr. Roy Perry, who was seeking to become Windsor's first Negro mayor. Two other candidates, John Reardon and Edgar Charron, received 1,748 and 848 votes respectively.

Votes of approval were recorded in two plebiscites, one extending the franchise to all residents 21 years old and over and the other abolishing the present ward system of electing the city council.

Dr. Perry, a 42-year-old dentist, had been on the Board of Control since 1956. Prior to that he was an alderman for seven years.

He said he would work with the city "from the outside" in redevelopment, which he said was badly needed.

Atty Isaac Moore Seeks Re-Election To House

DENVER. — Isaac E. Moore 2555 Glenarm, is seeking reelection to the House of Representatives for his second term on the Democratic ticket.

Representative Moore was admitted to practice law in the Federal and State Courts of Colo. since 1949. A graduate of the University of Colorado Law School; a member of the Colorado and Denver Bar associations; a member of the Young Democrats of

In the opinion of Representative Moore the most vital issues now facing the people of Colorado at the polls this November will be to defeat the so called right to work bill and for the unanimous support of Governor Stephen L. E. McNichols for reelection and the support of his program.

First Negroes Named In Connecticut Race For Assembly Seats

HARTFORD, Conn. — Three Negroes were nominated for the Connecticut legislature during a 24-hour, history-making period this week.

The Rev. J. Blanton Shields, pastor of the Bethel AME Church in Hartford, became the first Negro ever nominated for a state legislative post when he received the Republican endorsement Monday night.

The second Negro given the G.O.P. nod for the legislature was Mrs. Margaret Ardrey of Plainville, a town about 15 miles southwest of Hartford.

The third nominee in the 24-hour period was Major X. Johnson, a major on the military staff of Gov. Abraham A. Ribicoff, who received the Democratic nomination. Johnson is a bank teller.

THREE NEGROES IN CONNECTICUT ASSEMBLY RACE

Hartford, Aug. 29 [Special] —The first election of a Negro to the Connecticut general assembly seems certain in the November election. No Negro had ever before been nominated for the state House of Representatives or the state Senate, but the Republicans have nominated two for the House and the Democrats have named one.

The Democratic nominee, Wilfred X. Johnson of Hartford, appears assured of election. Hartford normally goes Democratic by about 25,000 votes in state elections.

One of the Republican nominees is the Rev. J. Blanton Shields. He was nominated by the Hartford Republican town committee, of which he is a member. The house nomination puts him in a city-wide race. His chances are slim. The other Republican nominee is Mrs. Margaret Ardrey, a housewife, of Plainville, about 15 miles southwest of Hartford.

HARTFORD, Aug. 16—The first election of a Negro to the Connecticut General Assembly seems certain in the November election.

No Negro had ever before been nominated for the State House of Representatives of the State Senate, but this week the Republicans nominated two for the House and the Democrats one.

The Democratic nominee, Wilfred X. Johnson of Hartford, apears assured of election. Hartford normally goes Democratic by about 25,000 votes in state elections.

Mr. Johnson, a bank clerk, is a major on the staff of Gov. Abraham A. Ribicoff, Democrat.

One of the Republican nominees is the Rev. J. Blanton Shields. He was nominated by the Hartford Republican Town Committee, of which he is a member. He sought the State Senate nomination in the Second District, which comprises Hartford's North End, and area having a heavy Negro population. The House nomination puts him in a city-wide race. His chances are slim.

The other Republican nominee is Mrs. Margaret Ardrey, a housewife, of Plainville, about fifteen miles southwest of Hartford. She has been active in the National Association for the advancement of Colored People. She won on the second ballot in a contest with three other candidates for the nomination.

Plainville is regarded as a "swing" town that could go Republican or Democratic. The seat has been held for the last thre terms by a Republican, Mrs. Gertrude Koskoff.

Floridians Hand Win To Holland

Demo Vote Soundly Rejects Pepper Bid

For Seat In Senate

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Sen. Spessard Holland turned back the challenge of Claude Pepper in his race for a third-term Democratic senatorial nomination Tuesday in the Florida primary.

The more conservative Holland, who championed states' rights and took a tough stand against integration, had a lead of 65,000 votes over the former New Dealer, in 1,641 of 1,880 precincts.

Pepper, a practicing attorney since his defeat in 1950, was seeking a comeback by attacking what he called Holland's conservative voting record.

Democratic nomination is equivalent to election in strongly Democratic Florida. He will face Republican Leland Hyzer, Miami attorney, in November.

The Florida primary was one of 10 in as many states to practically wind up the picking of candidates for the November elections.

Briefly, here's what other states were doing:

VERMONT—Rep. Winston L. Prouty, a veteran of four terms in the House, won the Republican nomination in his bid for the seat of U. S. Sen. Ralph E. Flanders.

Prouty won the nomination over former Vermont Gov. Lee E. Emerson.

MINNESOTA—Rep. Coya Knutson (D) trailed Marvin A. Evensor in the first precinct to report on her bid for a third-term nomination.

MASSACHUSETTS—Former House Speaker Charles Gibbons won the Republican nomination for governor. He was the choice of the state committee to replace Atty. Gen. George Fingold, party endorsee who died nine days ago.

WISCONSIN — Sen. William Proxmire (D) virtually assured renomination over two less known opponents. But his vote in early returns, plus that of his opponents, was less than that of Roland E. Steinle, the GOP candidate who had no primary opponent.

Five States To Hold Primaries This Week: Sen. Gore's Race In Spotlight

WASHINGTON (AP) — Five more U.S. senators come up for renomination in primaries next week.

Only one, Democrat Albert Gore of Tennessee, is facing tough opposition. Segregation is one of the chief issues in the contest.

Tennessee's primary doesn't come up until Thursday. Candidates for governor and nine U.S. House seats also will be named in that state.

On Tuesday, Michigan, Missouri, West Virginia and Kansas will choose candidates for four more Senate seats, 41 U.S. House memberships and two governorships.

Of the four senators seeking renomination Tuesday, only Sen. Stuart Symington of Missouri, a potential candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1960, has primary opposition. But the two challengers of his second-term bid are political unknowns and he is rated an almost sure winner.

WILLIAMS FAVORED

Three Republican senators, Charles E. Potter of Michigan, and Chapman Revercomb and John D. Hoblitzell Jr., both of West Virginia, are unchallenged for renomination. Hoblitzell is now serving by appointment.

Another Democratic presidential prospect in 1960, Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan, has opposition to nomination for a sixth term, but he is expected by his supporters to win rather handily.

Leap-frogging the Tuesday primaries for the moment, here's the way the Tennessee primary shapes up:

Fifty-year-old Sen. Gore is facing the most crucial fight of his political career in the bid of Prentice Cooper, 62-year-old former governor and onetime ambassador to Peru.

Cooper claims Gore deserted the South on the segregation question and challenges Gore's vote on reciprocal trade. He has traveled about the state in an air-conditioned bus pointing to the absence of Gore's name on the Southern Manifesto deploring the U.S. Supreme Court's school integration decision, and to Gore's vote on the compromise civil rights bill.

"Every thinking colored man is against it (racial integration), and every thinking white man is against it," Cooper argues. "My opponent's record says he's for it. My first official act will be to sign the Southern Manifesto."

Gore has replied that he joined with senators from Deep South states to remove the most objectionable features from the rights bill.

In answering Cooper's charges that he is promoting global giveaway and trying to buy friends for the United States abroad, Gore says: "My opponent says I'm a turncoat because I voted for the reciprocal trade bill. The Senate must be full of turncoats, because the vote was 72-16."

ELLINGTON LIKED

Two of the four candidates actively fighting to succeed Gov. Frank G. Clement, Democrat ineligible for another term, say they are strict segregationists. One is Buford Ellington, backed by Clement, and looks like the man to beat.

Here's the picture in brief in the four states voting Tuesday.

MISSOURI

Nominates for one Senate and 11 House seats. Sen. Symington, former Air Force secretary, has only nominal opposition from Lamar W. Dye of Kansas City, who switched from Republican to Democrat to file, and Lawrence L. Hastings of Aurora, a retired Veterans Administration employe.

Four are running for the Republican senatorial nomination. The two leaders are Miss Hazel Palmer, Sedalia lawyer and retiring president of the National Assn. of Business and Professional Women, and Homer S. Cotton, St. Louis businessman.

In the congressional district contests, former President Truman is backing Rep. Richard Bolling, Kansas City Democrat who is favored to win over James Daleo. In Truman's own 4th District the former chief executive has endorsed former Mayor Robert P. Weatherford of Independence, who is offering a stiff challenge to Democratic Rep. George H. Christopher of Butler.

Another Democratic incumbent, Rep. Morgan M. Moulder, is in a close race with Robert C. Smith, a lawyer, in the 11th Dist.

MICHIGAN

Nominees for Senate, governor and 18 house seats.

POTTER UNOPPOSED

It is strictly a Democratic show for top offices. Republican Sen. Potter is unopposed for renomination, and Prof. Paul D. Bagwell, 44, on leave from Michigan State University's faculty, has a clear field for the GOP gubernatorial nomination.

On the Democratic side, a rebel element is challenging the organization slate of Gov. Williams for renomination aand Lt. Gov. Philip A. Hart, bidding for the right to oppose Sen. Potter Nov. 4.

Williams and Hart are odds-on favorites to win. Williams' opponent is William L. Johnson, Ironwood broadcaster. Hart is challenged by Homer Martin, a former president of the United Auto Workers.

In the House races, sharpest fights are expected in Wayne County (Detroit) districts where all six congressional seats are held by Democrats.

ELECTION ROUNDUP IN BRIEF

34a(2) General

BIRMINGHAM (UPI) — Elect John Patterson today had one of the greatest landslide victories in state history today as an apparent expression of Alabama's stand on the civil rights issue.

The Democratic attorney general who defeated two other candidates by a margin of almost 10 to 1, will succeed Gov. James E. Folsom in January as the 49th chief executive of Alabama.

Patterson, 41, in winning the election Tuesday against Republican William L. Longshore of Birmingham and independent Marvin Jackson of Montgomery, became the youngest governor of the state to emerge victorious in a contested race.

The outcome was never in doubt with early returns giving Patterson as much as a 12 to 1 edge before Longshore began to pick up some ground.

United Press International returns with 1,880 of 2,926 boxes reporting gave Patterson 161,418 votes, Longshore 20,485 and Jackson 1240.

Nixon Concedes GOP Outworked

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Vice President Richard M. Nixon believes the moral of the election is that politics is a year-round job.

"Republicans worked for two months," he said in a statement early today. "Our opponents worked for two years. The result was inevitable.

"We shall not make this mistake again. We shall begin working tomorrow for the victory which will be ours in Nov. 1960."

Nixon privately felt in advance that the GOP was in for defeat.

But he was known to be cheered by the party's successes in New York, Pennsylvania, Arizona and Rhode Island, despite the fact that the New York victory brought Nelson A. Rockfeller into the spotlight as a possible rival for the 1960 presidential nomination.

Nixon also returned from his chilly weekend of campaigning in Alaska feeling that the Republicans have a good chance of capturing one of the two new Alaskan Senate seats to be filled in the Nov. 25 election.

New York Makes Bingo Respectable

NEW YORK (UPI)—New York City voters approved legalized bingo for charity Tuesday by a vote of more than two to one.

The game has been played here for years with little legal interference.

After Jan. 1 it will be played under the supervision of the City Department of Licenses under rules of the State Lottery Control Commission. The rules specify how many games may be played, the maximum prizes allowable and restrict the game to charity.

Harriman Was Right

ALBANY, N.Y. (UPI) — Gov. Averell Harriman was right.

Speaking at the annual dinner of the legislative correspondents last winter, Harriman suggested: "Nelson (Rockefeller) would make a good candidate for the Republicans to nominate."

Dawson, Powell, Diggs And Nix Returned To Conaressional Posts

Dr. T. R. M. Howard Loses To Veteran Illinois Solon

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (ANP) — The Democratic sweep across the nation in Tuesday's elections returned four colored Representatives to Washington, but colored Republicans were unable to unseat any of the incumbents in Conaressional races.

Early returns showed that Representatives William L. Dawson, Ill.; Adam Clayton Powell, New York; Charles C. Diggs, Mich., and Robert N. G. Nix were reelected to their seats.

Dawson defeated Dr. Theodore R. M. Howard, former Mound Bayou physician who moved to Chicago after an outbreak of violence in Mississippi a few years ago.

Powell ran way from his opponent, Councilman Earl Brown, in Harlem's 16th District. Powell's vote was 55,335 to 5,619 for Brown.

Brown, a Democrat, was nominated on the Liberal party ticket. Originally Brown was the organization candidate against Powell for the Democratic party nomination. Powell won both the Democratic and Republican nominations, and Brown won the Liberal party designation.

PROTEST VOTE EXPECTED

Since the primary on Aug. 12 Brown has not campaigned. Nevertheless, it was thought that he would receive a large protest vote from Republicans in his district who resented his joining with the forces of Carmine G. De Sapio, the Tammany Hall leader, who tried to rid the Democratic party of Powell, and endorsing the New York State Democratic ticket.

Nix defeated Cecil Moore, Republican, in the Fourth Pennsylvania District for the full term beginning next January. Earlier in the year Nix defeated Moore for the unexpired term of Earl Chudoff, who was appointed to a Philadelphia judgeship and resigned his seat in Congress.

SOLON LEAVES CAMPAIGN

Diggs defeated Charles P. White in the 13th Michigan District. So sure was he of reelection that he left Michigan in the midst of the campaign and went to California to campaign for Representative James Roosevelt, who defeated Crispus Wright, Republican, in the 26th California District.

In other Congressional races, Josiah C. Thomas, Republican, failed to unseat Representative Leonor K. Sullivan, Democratic incumbent, in the Third Missouri District; Austin W. Curtis, Jr., Republican, failed to unseat Representative John J. Dingle, Democratic incumbent, in the 15th Michigan District, and Ermer L. Watson, Republican, failed to unseat Representative Charles A. Vanik, Democratic incumbent in the 21st Ohio District.

TWO HOT RACES

Tennessee Vote Today Hinges On Segregation

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Tennessee Democrats hold a pri mary Thursday featuring both contested races that may indicat how the border state feels abou the segregation question.

Meanwhile, returns from pri maries Tuesday in Michigan, Mis souri, Kansas and West Virginia revealed no big surprises. Princi pal races came out as expected a few House contests were close and official canvasses may be re quired to decide a couple.

In Tennessee, the 29th state to hold a primary this year, Demo cratic Sen. Albert Gore is in the fight of his life seeking a second term nomination.

His opponent, former Gov. Pren tice Cooper, has accused Gore of favoring "creeping integration." He also says Gore deserted the South by voting for the compro mise civil rights bill, and by re fusing to sign the Southern Mani festo denouncing the Supreme Court's school desegregation rul ings.

Gore has replied he favors segregation and helped senators from the Deep South states remove the most objectionable features of the 1957 civil rights bill.

Two of the four candidates for governor, State Agriculture Com missioner Buford Ellington and Circuit Judge Andrew T. Taylor, are avowed segregationists. They promise to close public schools, if necessary, to prevent integration.

Mayor Edmund Orgill of Mem phis, another candidate, has stat ed he prefers segregated schools, but that court orders must be obeyed.

State Sen. Clifford Allen, fourth man in the race, says Ellington and Taylor are not facing reality when they talk of closing schools.

Here in brief are the results of the Tuesday primaries:

MICHIGAN — Gov. G. Mennen Williams easily won Democratic renomination to a sixth term. His Republican opponent in November will be Paul D. Bagwell, a Michigan State University professor on leave, who had no primary opponent.

Lt. Gov. Philip A. Hart won the Democratic senatorial nomination and will try to unseat Republican Sen. Charles E. Potter, who was unopposed for renomination.

In closely watched U.S. House races, Democratic Reps. John Lesinki Jr. and Thaddeus M. Machrowicz won renominations.

MISSOURI — Sen. Stuart Symington easily won Democratic renomination to a second term. His November opponent will be Miss Hazel Palmer, a Sedalia attorney who is the retiring president of the National Assn. of Business and Professional Women.

All incumbent congressmen appeared to have won renomination, but Democratic Rep. George H. Christopher had such a slim margin that a Friday count of absentee ballots could upset him.

WEST VIRGINIA—Former Rep. Jennings Randolph and Rep. Robert C. Byrd were nominated by the Democrats for two and six-year senatorial terms, respectively. Incumbent Sens. John D. Hoblitzell Jr. and Chapman Revercomb had no opposition in the Republican primary.

KANSAS—Clyde Reed Jr., newspaper publisher, won Republican nomination for governor over former Gov. Fred Hall. Reed will run against Democratic Gov. George Docking, unopposed for renomination, in November.

Republican Rep. Wint Smith won a close race, on the basis of unofficial returns, with Keith Sebelius, Norton attorney, for renomination to a seventh term.

Four Negro Congressmen Returned To House Seats

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — The Democratic sweep across the nation in Tuesday's elections returned four colored representatives to Washington, while Republicans were unable to unseat any of the incumbents in Congressional races.

Representatives William L. Dawson, Illinois; Adam Clayton Powell, New York; Charles C. Diggs, Michigan, and Robert N. C. Nix all were reelected to their seats.

Dawson defeated Dr. Theodore R. M. Howard, former Mound Bayou physician who moved to Chicago after an outbreak of violence in Mississippi a few years ago.

Powell ran away from his opponent, Councilman Earl Brown, in Harlem's 16th District. Powell's vote was 55,335 to 5,619 for Brown.

Brown, a Democrat, was nominated on the Liberal party ticket. Originally Brown was the organization candidate against Powell for the Democratic party nomination. Powell won both the Democratic and Republican nominations, and Brown won the Liberal party designation.

Expected Larger Vote

Since the primary on August 12, Brown has not campaigned. Nevertheless, it was thought that he would receive a large protest vote from Republicans in his district who resented his joining with the forces of Carmine G. De Sapio, the Tammany Hall leader, who tried to rid the Democratic party of Powell, and endorsing the New York State Democratic ticket.

Nix defeated Cecil Moore, Republican, in the fourth Pennsylvania district for the full term beginning next January. Earlier in the year, Nix defeated Moore for the unexpired term of Earl Chudoff, who was appointed to a Philadelphia judgeship and resigned his seat in Congress.

Curtis Jr., Republican, failed to unseat Representative John J. Dingle, Democratic incumbent, in the 15th Michigan district, and Ermer L. Watson, Republican, failed to unseat Representative Charles A. Vanik, Democratic incumbent, in the 21st Ohio district.

Brooks Hays Loses

Dr. Dale Alford, a rank segregationist, scored an upset in defeating Representative Brooks Hays, a moderate on race relations, in the Fifth Arkansas district. With 241 out of 250 precincts counted, Alford had 30,651 votes to 29,327 for Hays.

Hays, who sought to mediate differences between Governor Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas and President Eisenhower in September, 1957, before federal troops were sent to Little Rock to enforce federal court orders for desegregation of Central high school there, conceded the election to Alford.

Hays won the Democratic primary, which ordinarily is equivalent to election in Arkansas, but Alford became a write-in candidate on a rigid segregation platform. He is the one member of the Little Rock Board of Education who was opposed to any desegregation.

Hays was the sponsor of a civil rights bill which he thought would be acceptable to the South.

U.S. agents keep vigil over election

WASHINGTON

Attorney General William P. Rogers announced Tuesday that all U.S. Attorneys were instructed to act promptly on all reports of violations of Federal elecion laws on election day, Nov. 4.

U.S. Attorneys were instructed to keep their offices open while the polls were open.

The Civil Rights Division in Washington, having jurisdiction of enforcement of Federal election laws, was staffed election day and during the night until the last polls in the country closed.

MR. ROGERS pointed out that the primary responsibility for the conduct of elections rested with the states and that the Federal Government had no authority to supervise generally the conduct of elections.

"Where violations of Federal statutes occur," he said, however, "the Department of Justice was to promptly and vigorously take prosecutive action," adding:

"Any fraud or corruption destroying the free nature of the ballot will be cheered by the leaders of the enslaved peoples as a failure of our free system. This must not happen.

"EVERY U.S. Attorney has been directed to be particularly watchful and prepared to act upon reports concerning the intimidation or prevention of voters from casting ballots as their free will dictates.

"In addition, reports dealing with false or fictitious ballots or other means used to prevent a ballot from being counted as cast, will receive full attention.

"No responsible complaint of discrimination, ballot-box tampering or other possible federal violations will be disregarded," he concluded.

Unit Reports On Southern Negro Voters

Says Number Is Constant Since 1956

ATLANTA (AP)—The number of Southern Negro voters has remained constant since 1956 but the trend is upward and the long-range prospect is for Negro registration comparable with whites, the Southern Regional Council reports.

There are an estimated 1,266,488 Negroes on voting rolls—25 per cent of the eligibles—in 11 Southern states, compared with 1,238,000 two years ago, the council said in a survey.

COUNCIL'S OPINION

The new total, which indicates that Negro voters held their own and even showed a slight increase, is an achievement in view of racial controversy and disinterest in an off-year election, the council said.

It noted a drop in the number of eligible voters in the country as a whole.

"The intervening two years since the earlier SRC survey was made have brought increased racial tensions in the South, passage of the first federal civil rights legislation since Reconstruction, a long list of federal court decisions to speed the Negro toward full legal equality and new state laws to delay change in racial patterns," it said.

Figures from Florida, Georgia and South Carolina show a decline in both Negro and white registration. Both registered gains in North Carolina and Virginia.

In Louisiana, the white registration increased while Negro registration fell from 161,410 to 130,000 "due in large measure to widespread purges in several parishes."

POLITICAL CONSCIOUNESS

In certain areas, the report continues, it undoubtedly has become more difficult for Negroes to register, but in many parts of the South, lack of political consciousness remains the greatest barrier.

The Negro registration by states and the Negro percentage of the total registration:

Alabama, 60,000, 6.9 per cent; Arkansas, 64,023, 11.4; Florida, 144,810, 9.1; Georgia 158,051, 12.4; Louisiana 130,000, 13.7; Mississippi, 35,000, 6.8; North Carolina, 150,000, 7.5; South Carolina, 57,-978, 10.8; Tennessee, 185,000, 13.2; Texas 150,000, 6.8; and Virginia, 131.626. 14.1.

4 Congressmen, 26 Legislators Elected

BY BAKER E. MORTEN

Surging Democratic victors throughout the nation at the polls last Tuesday returned four colored congressmen to office and sent no less than 26 colored candidates into various state legislatures.

Four colored Republican candidates for the 86th Congress went down in defeat before the national Democratic onslaught. They were Cris Wright of California, Ermer Watson of Ohio, Josiah C. Thomas of Missouri and Dr. Austin Curtis of Michigan.

Returning to the new Congress next January as a result of overwhelming vote margins will be Reps. Adam C. Powell (D., N.Y.), William L. Dawson (D., Ill.), Charles C. Diggs (D., Mich.) and Robert N. C. Nix Sr. (D., Pa.).

Two colored state legislative candidates from New York, 10 from Illinois, one from California, three from Pennsylvania, four from Missouri, one from Kansas and two from Indiana, will go to legislatures of their respective states.

Philadelphia and Detroit elected additional colored candidates to legislative posts, but election return counts were not available at presstime.

In Baltimore, Maryland State Senator Harry A. Cole was defeated by J. Alvin Jones in what has been described as a political upset.

RUNNING UNDER the nomination of both the Republicans and Democrats, Harlem's Rep. Adam Powell racked up 30,917 Democratic votes and 1,418 Republican ballots to swamp his opponent, City Councilman Earl Brown, who ran on a liberal ticket.

The victory introduces Powell to his eighth term in the Congress and keeps him in line via seniority for the chairmanship of the House Labor and Education Committee.

Councilman Brown garnered only 5,619 votes unofficially in his bid for New York City's 16th Congressional District. Democratic Assemblywoman Bessie Buchanan recaptured her seat in the state legislature along with William Watson, also a Democrat.

Rep. William L. Dawson, Chicago's strong man, defeated his Republican opponent, Dr. T. R. M. Howard, by an unofficial count of 23,816 votes with 291 of 300 precincts reported.

Dawson, dean of colored congressmen, obtained 37,057 votes against 13,241 for Howard.

As the Chicago political giant went into his ninth term in office, [illegible] colored solons, inne of whom were running for reelection to the Illinois State Legislature.

Mrs. Floy Clement, a Democrat, became the newest legislator to the Illinois Assembly as she swept into office by a comfortable vote margin. Other legislators reelected were:

Republicans William Robinson, J. Horace Gardner and Edward Graham and Democrats Cornell Davis, James Y. Carter, Cecil A. Partee, Kenneth E. Wilson and Charles F. Armstrong.

ILLINOIS State Senator Fred Smith, a Democrat, was returned to his post also.

One of the most significant events in the Illinois political scene was the election of Richard A. Harewood as a trustee of the University of Illinois.

His election to the post marked the first time in the state's history that a colored candidate has successfully run for a state wide office.

His opponent, Charles T. White, a Republican, mustered 21,107 votes. Diggs returns to Congress for his third term.

Dr. Austin Curtis, a Republican, was unsuccessful in his fight for a 5th District legislative seat against John R. Dingell. He obtained 21,277 votes. Dingell pulled 78,761.

For the Detroit Municipal Court, L. Davenport beat out his white opponent, Stephen Resh, by a resounding margin.

Mr. Davenport registered 230,850 against 59,147 by Resh.

Congressman Nix, elected last May to the seat due to a vacancy, came up with 62,574 votes in defeating Cecil B. Moore, an attorney. Mr. Moore garnered 23,491 tallys unofficially, with all precincts reported.

Mrs. Susie Moore, Herb Arlene and Granville Jones, all Democrats, won legislative seats in Pennsylvania.

ON THE West Coast with 300 of 900 precincts reported, incumbent Democratic Congressman James Roosevelt defeated his Republican opponent, Cris Wright.

Mr. Wright was bidding for the 26th Congressional District seat. He received 12,419 votes against the son of the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt who captured 27,712.

There are no blemishes on the civil rights voting record of Congressman Roosevelt. Mr. Wright would have been California's first colored congressman.

Herman Smith, a lawyer and a Republican candidate for Los Angeles' 55th Assembly District was defeated by his white opponent, Vernon Kilpatrick.

Mr. Smith netted only 501 votes in losing to Kilpatrick who recruited 1,530 ballots.

Democrat Augustus Hawkins won the nomination to the California State Legislature.

A FOCAL POINT in the California elections is that 80 per cent of the colored vote went to Attorney General Edmund G. (Pat) Brown in his successful gubernatorial bid.

Approximately sixty - three per cent of the colored vote, too, helped knock Republican Senator Knowland out of office.

In St. Louis, 74-year-old Josiah C. Thomas lost by about 16,000 votes in his attempt to capture the Third District Congressional seat of that city.

His opponent, Mrs. Leonor K. Sullivan, the Democratic incumbent, retained her seat in a landslide victory — 126,000 to 10,000.

* * *

MRS. SULLIVAN thus goes to Congress for her fourth term. She has been a vigorous fighter for civil rights. Mr. Thomas, a former state representative, sponsored a bill to kill segregation in Missouri schools in 1947, but the measure died in a committee.

Three colored Democrats, however, were re - elected to Missouri Home of Representatives. They are James T. Troupe, Leroy Tyus and Henry W. Wheeler.

Missouri has never had a colored state senator.

ERMER WATSON, Republican candidate for Cleveland's 21st Congressional District, with 250 precincts reported Wednesday, had 8,182 votes.

The Democratic invumbent, Charles Vanik had 40,261 votes. Vanik's civil rights voting record is highly commendable.

All of the colored candidates in Cleveland were unsuccessful in their bids for seats in the Ohio State House of Representatives.

Mrs. A. Bruce McClure, of Cincinnati, William Vaughn of Youngstoun, Republicans; Chaney Alekander, Leonard Sharp, Chester K. Gillespie, Mrs. Martha Dixon, Cleveland Jackson and Armond Robinson, Democrats, all were defeated.

A SIGNIFICANT aspect of the New York colored vote came as Harlemites gave Rep. Kenneth Keating a slight voting edge over his running mate Governor - elect Rockefeller. State Senator Harry Cole was defeated in the Fourth Legislative District by Democrat J. Alvin Jones. Jones received 14,539 votes, and Senator Cole 12,529.

A COALITION ticket, headed by Senator Cole, collapsed. Only two of its six candidates won. Mrs. Verda F. Welcome and Mrs. Irma G. Dixon, both Democrats, captured seats in the House of Delegates.

In Kansas City, Kansas, Parnell Meeks, a Democrat, won a third term as a Wyandot County commissioner, beating Republican William Towers by 3,705 votes.

Mr. Meeks collected 6,833 ballots. Mr. Towers received 3,128 votes. Wyandot County is governed by three commissioners, one of whom is colored.

Democratic candidate for the Kansa State Legisltaure, James P. Davis, won over Republican John Royston by a 5,934 to 3,141 vote count.

In Kansas City, Mo., Democratic incumbent James M. Neal was reelected to the Missouri State Legislature beating out Mortimer Gearin, his Republican foe.

Democratic State Rep. James Hunter, dean of the Indiana House of Representatives with 20 years service, was reelected to the seat for the 10th time in his state.

Rep. Hunter is now a candidate for Speaker of the Indiana House of Representatives.

Also from Indiana, Democrat Jessie Dickenson became the first of his race elected to the State Senate. Senator - elect Dickenson served in the House for 10 years.

Mercer Mance, attorney, and son of the late Rev. R.W. Mance Sr. of Columbia, S.C., was elected judge of the Superior Court in Indiana Tuesday.

Judge Mance ran on a Democratic ticket. The Superior Court is comprised of six jurists.

Republican State Sen. Robert L. Brokenburr failed in his bid for reelection.

Rep. ADAM C. POWELL

Rep. CHARLES C. DIGGS

FIRST IN HISTORY—Mrs. Verda Welcome, first colored woman in history to win a seat in the Maryland Legislature on her own, is congratulated by her 67-year-old father, James N. Freeman. Mr. Freeman came from his home in Rutherfordton, N.C., and surprised his daughter while she was visiting a polling place on election day, marking the first time they had met in eight years. An independent Democrat, Mrs. Welcome defeated the Pollack machine candidates in the primary and led them in the general election on Tuesday when she ran on the Coalition ticket in Baltimore's 4th District.

Bodenhamer Called 'Ineffective' In States Rights Council Post

A former president of the Georgia States Rights Council has termed gubernatorial candidate William T. Bodenhamer "frightfully ineffective" during the period that Bodenhamer served as executive secretary of that organization.

William M. Bates

This has been disclosed in an exchange of letters between the former president, R. Carter Pittman, and the council's new executive director, W. A. Lufburrow.

By WILLIAM M. BATES
Constitution Political Editor

Pittman is a well-known Dalton attorney with a segregation record so strong that not even Bill Bodenhamer would dare challenge it. He was president of the pro-segregation States Rights Council during much of the period that Bodenhamer was its $10,000-a-year executive director.

The Pittman - Lufburrow letters were written in early May after Bodenhamer quit to run for governor. Copies of the correspondence were sent to members of the council's board of directors and were made available to this reporter by one of the directors after Bodenhamer brought his connection with the council into the governor's race as part of his cmapaign to picture Lt. Gov. Ernest Vandiver as "weak" on segregation.

In his campaign speeches, Bodenhamer charges that Vandiver declined to join the council's speakers' bureau; he also says that he (Bodenhamer) worked "day and night" in the cause of maintaining segregation as the council's director.

Bodenhamer's supporters also cite his council job as proof of his strength on segregation when they are asked to explain Bodenhamer's vote, as a member of the General Assembly, against the private school amendment in 1953.

The Pittman-Lufburrow letters put a far different light on Bodenhamer's activities as executive director of the council, a private organization dedicated to maintaining segregation through legal means.

On May 9, Lufburrow, upon assuming his job as Bodenhamer's successor, wrote Pittman that the council at no time has had as many as 10,000 paid up members.

"The records in this office," Lufburrow wrote, "make it obvious that we have neglected our basic need from the inception of the council: that of organizing a strong home-defense in the one and only way, by a large and active membership throughout the state."

On the following day, May 10, Pittman replied to Lufburrow, agreeing that the council had been a "dismal failure" and putting much of the blame on Bodenhamer. Bodenhamer was named director on Nov. 5, 1955.

"A few weeks after Bill Bodenhamer, about whom I knew nothing, was selected as executive director of the States' Rights Council, I came to the conclusion that the council would never get off the ground," Pittman said. "Bill was too busy running off in all directions. When I learned that he installed a dictaphone in his car at the expense of the council, I nearly had a heart attack. He promised to repay the council for that, but that was a straw.

"Month after month our committee met and made plans and directed the executive director to pursue those plans," Pittman said. "He indicated that everything would be done as planned. Nothing was ever done, but I was a nonpolitical man in a sensitive situation and did not feel authorized to take over myself, if I had time.

"Our director was a member of the Legislature, a minister and a member of the State School Board. In my opinion he did not average more than 12 hours a week in our Atlanta office and when he spent that time in our office, he was doing nothing toward serving our membership."

Pittman said that for months before he stepped down as president last fall he had "been telling members of our committee that we could never accomplish anything so long as Bill was our director." He said he "talked good to Bill and I talked rough to him" but "nothing did any good." At the last meeting attended by Bodenhamer, Pittman said he told the committee that the council needed "somebody that could be fired for not doing what the board directed."

"That seemed to 'take,'" Pittman wrote. "This is said against a background of the highest personal regard for Bill. He was frightfully ineffective and intended no harm."

The letter continues:

"Now that you are in charge of the office, it is my opinion that the balance of the publicity money which is on deposit at the Peachtree Federal Savings and Loan Assn. there in Atlanta should be made available for use by the office. I felt that if it were not taken from out of the control by Bill, it would likely be used to pay salaries and nothing more."

Pittman concluded his letter by declaring: "We are exactly where we were in the spring of 1955 (when the council was organized) and must start from there."

Bodenhamer Forces Stepping Up Attacks

By WILLIAM M. BATES
Constitution Political Editor

With the gubernatorial election just one week away, the Bodenhamer forces have stepped up their efforts to defame Lt. Gov. Ernest Vandiver.

Bodenhamer's campaign, in fact, has set some new lows in political morality, even for a state that is well known for its rough-and-tumble politics.

William Bates

And with the aid and advice of his chief campaign strategist, State Revenue Commissioner T. V. Williams Sr., Mr. Bodenhamer probably will be inspired to go even further in the closing week of the campaign.

During the next seven days the Bodenhamer forces can be expected to resort to almost any tactic of desperation to try to stem the overwhelming Vandiver tide. Most observers believe nothing short of a political miracle will prevent the election of Vandiver as Georgia's next governor.

At least two new Bodenhamer smear tactics have been reported in the past few days. Both are typical of the moral level of his campaign.

In widely scattered parts of the state, carefully prepared stickers bearing the words "NAACP-ENDORSED" in big red letters have been attached to Vandiver's campaign posters along the highways. This activity has been too widespread and too professional to be the work of a few local Bodenhamer partisans; it is a concerted plan directed by someone at the top.

The other last-minute smear tactic reported is the appearance in some rural towns of cars driven by Negroes with Vandiver stickers plastered all about them.

There likely will be other such gimmicks before the voters go to the polls next Wednesday.

IN HIS BEHALF

It is possible, and it is certainly to be hoped, that Bodenhamer, a Baptist minister, has had nothing to do with these latest smear activities. But they have been done in his behalf. And they are in keeping with the type of campaign he has waged from the beginning.

This is not surprising for a campaign that has been directed by a man such as Williams. It is surprising that a minister of the Gospel would let himself become the front-man for such acts as halftruths, lies, untruths, distortions, character assassination, concocted "evidence" and similar tactics that have been the hallmarks of his campaign.

The financial aspects of Bodenhamer's campaign have also been surprising. He began his campaign on a "poor mouth" theme, asking for small contributions and the "widow's mite." No one knows just how much money he has collected in small donations; but anyone with an elemental knowledge of campaign finance knows it could not have been anywhere near the many thousands of dollars that Bodenhamer has spent on television and radio time alone.

NEVER DENIED

Vandiver supporters have charged from the beginning that Bodenhamer's financing has been handled largely through and by Williams. This has never been denied by Bodenhamer. He has, in fact, not once mentioned Williams in his public statements and speeches even though the revenue commissioner has backed him openly from the start.

That brings up one of the few real mysteries of the entire campaign: Just what is Williams' burning interest in Bodenhamer's candidacy against Vandiver?

In his campaign speeches, Bodenhamer invariably repeats this passage from the New Testament: "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

One cannot help but wonder if Bodenhamer ever thinks of another Biblical doctrine that governs all men . . . politicians included:

"Thou shall not bear false witness against thy neighbor."

Let Left Wing Go, Vandiver Urges

By WILLIAM M. BATES

Gov.-nominate Vandiver, the new titular head of the Democratic party of Georgia, declared Monday that there is a possibility of a North-South split in national Democratic party ranks.

But he said if division comes it will be a matter of "left wingers"—not Southerners—pulling out of the party. In fact, Vandiver urged the "left-wingers" to do so.

Vandiver and other state Democratic leaders spoke out following Democratic National Chairman Paul Butler's latest attack on the Dixie wing of the party.

Butler said in a television program Sunday that there "certainly will be a compromise" on the civil rights issue in the Democratic platform of 1960. He pointedly told Southerners not willing to accept such a plank to get out of the party.

Butler also hinted that he favors changing the seniority method of selecting congressional committee chairmen. This is the system that has put a number of Southerners, including Sen. Richard B. Russell, into positions of power in the federal government.

Vandiver, in a prepared statement, said it "ill behooves" such "left wingers" as Butler to "attempt to read anybody out of any party, particularly the Democratic party which was founded on the principles of states' rights, local self-government, constitutional integrity and the right of the individual to choose his own associates and the course of his own destiny."

He said that Butler and others who think like him should themselves get out of the Democratic party. He suggested that they transform the Americans for Democratic Action into an "ADA party."

"In any event, the Democratic party is the 'House of our Fathers,'" Vandiver said. "Southerners organized it. Southern support built it. Only Southern support can sustain and revive it.

"Southerners intend to remain in the House of their fathers until, and unless, those like Mr. Butler become so obnoxious that true Democrats are forced to band together in a new Democratic party, dedicated to the imperishable principles of its founders and the ideals of those who made it great," Vandiver declared.

Under questioning, Vandiver said he was not calling for a Southern bolt. But he said it is possible that the party is headed for a split.

"But it will be they who are leaving us," Vandiver said.

Democratic State Chairman John Sammons Bell said Butler's statement further "demonstrates his unfitness for the high party post he holds."

"Mr. Butler's talents seem to lie in the field of professional buffoonery," Bell said. "The questionable advantage he gains from such statements, which please the NAACP and radical, left-wing elements of the party, is more than offset by the disgust his low tactics and reckless words engender throughout the nation."

Rep. James C. Davis of Stone Mountain termed Butler's pronouncement "the brassiest statement I ever heard."

"It's sort of like a snake crawling in a hen house and then saying: 'Let's put these chickens out of our house,'" Davis declared.

Sen. Spessard Holland (D-Fla) said that he believed 'Southerners will stay in the Democratic Party and will not organize a third party." At the same time he criticized Butler for bringing up the issue.

Sen. John Sparkman (D-Ala) told a luncheon club audience that "I violently disagree with Butler." But he said he felt certain that the platform committee "will not in any way try to write the South out of the party."

4 Negroes Fighting For Seats In Fulton County, Alabama

Atlanta (NNPA) — Four colored candidates are fighting for two seats on the Fulton County Democratic Executive Committee which are held by white incumbents.

They are seeking representation on the present all-white committee as committeemen and committeewomen from Atlanta's colored Third Ward.

There are 18,575 voters in the ward, including 10,504 colored and 8,071 white voters. The county has 28,414 colored voters and 104,877 whites.

Should Be Represented

One of the candidates, Dr. C. A. Bacote, professor of history at Atlanta University, said colored people should have representation on the Democratic party policymaking committee. After all, most colored persons are Democrats and it wouldn't hurt to have two out of the 62 members."

Bacote and Mrs. Ruby Blackburn, president of the colored League of Women Voters, are seeking to unseat a white incumbent, George T. Johnson. Bacote is on the same ticket with J. C. Daugherty, an attorney, who, with Miss Hattie Holmes, is seeking to unseat white incumbent, John F. Cloud.

Bacote said he and Daugherty qualified without any idea that any other colored candidates would be in the race

Vote Contests For Atlantans Found Only In State Amendments

There will be no contests involving in Fulton County Tuesday, but a lively little party controversy is in the making in DeKalb County with two county commission seats being contested.

However, the Atlanta voter will help decide the fate of 10 proposed state amendments to the constitution, four of which would effect their pocketbooks.

This is the off year election which brings into contests senators and governors around the nation, as well as many lesser officers. The traditional one party Democratic control in the South is contested every once in a while, and many believe an independent or Republican may one day win a post here.

Certainly interest is building up in Decatur, a where independents Louis T. Wells and Robert "Bob" Lane are opposing Democrats Brince Manning and J. O. Bowen for posts as DeKalk County Commissioners.

Both men have been endorsed by the Dekalb Republican Committee as possible openings into a two party system in Decatur.

THE AMENDMENTS

Of the 72 amendments offered for the voters consideration, 16 will effect the entire state, while the remaining 56 pertain to certain localities. Of special interest are two amendments of statewide scope. They are designed to empower the General Assembly proposal to provide money for lunch programs in state schools.

The first one gives the assembly power to authorize any county to levy a tax for school lunch purposes.

The second would extend the legislature's power of taxation over the entire state to include a state tax for the lunch program.

Two other proposed amendments would empower the General Assembly to tax for purposes of paying pensions and other benefits under a retirement program for county ordinaries and to pay retirement and other benefits to the state's peace officers.

OTHER AMENDMENTS

Other general amendments that must be voted on by all counties would provide for:

1. Homestead exemption for certain disabled veterans.

2. Authorization for the Board of Regents of the University System of Georgia to grant scholarships to qualified students who haven't the money for college.

3 Authorization for state departments and agencies to match federal funds with state funds for post-graduate educational scholarships for employees and for use in other federal education programs.

4. Authorization for the General Assembly to create the Brunswick Port Authority.

5. Authorization for the state Board of Education to grant scholarships to Georgia students who are to become teachers.

6. Authorization for granting scholarships to physicians and others for specialized training in psychiatry.

7. Authorization for the chief justices emeritus and justices emeritus of the State Supreme Court and State Court of Appeals and for judges emeritus of the superior courts to preside over those respective courts.

8 Authorization for any county municipal corporation or political subdivision to issue revenue certificates for purchase, sale and lease of buses, trolleys and other transit equipment.

9. Authorization for the payment of $100,000 to the first person or company to develop a practical method for eradicating the boll weevil at reasonable cost.

10 Authorization for certain political subdivisions to establish colleges.

11. Addition of judicial service by judges emeritus of the superior courts of the Atlanta Judicial Circuit

12. Ad valorem tax exemption for certain fraternity and sorority property.

Amendments pertaining only to Fulton County voters include:

Fulton. To authorize the city of East Point to establish and operate off-street parking facilities

Fulton. To authorize the city of East Point to appropriate and spend public funds to promote commerce and industry in the city.

Griffin Urged To Probe Charges State Agency Aided Bodenhamer

Gov. Griffin was urged Monday to call the State Commission on Education into session to look into charges that its facilities have been used to aid gubernatorial candidate William T. Bodenhamer.

State Democratic Chairman John Sammons Bell and State Rep. Frank S. Twitty of Mitchell County called for the meeting after a former commission employe accused T. V. Williams Jr. of using the state agency to advance Bodenhamer's candidacy.

Williams, executive secretary of the commission, denied the charges. He and his father, Revenue Commission T. V. Williams Sr., are backing Bodenhamer for governor.

The charge against Williams was made by Harvey H. Chandler of Winder in a sworn statement and letter of resignation as Williams' $350-a-month assistant.

Chandler said Williams and others charges were "most grave and serious" and, if true, would "do great harm to the whole cause of segregation."

"The public interest demands that the truthfulness of the charges made be immediately determined and any corrective action indicated should be ordered forthrightly by the commission," Bell said.

Chairman Robert O. Arnold of the Board of Regents, a commission member, said Griffin "has made it plain that he will not countenance the employment of anyone who gets mixed up in politics while on the state payroll."

"If the charges against Williams are substantiated I'm sure the governor will take the proper steps to ready the situation," he said.

At Augusta, commission member Roy V. Harris said "I am wiring Gov. Griffin asking him to call an immediate meeting of the commission to investigate the charges."

Another commission member, Atlanta Attorney B. D. (Buck) Murphy, said he had not heard of any partisan use of commission facilities.

"If that's going on, it is highly improper and ought not to be allowed," Murphy said.

Griffin is out of the state for the week and could not be reached immediately. Vandiver, vice chairman of the commission and a candidate for governor, declined comment on the charges.

Chandler said he did not believe Griffin or other commission members were "parties to the illegal expenditure of tax monies."

Specifically, Chandler charged that one of the pictures used in the Bodenhamer paper was removed from the files of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation; that six commission secretaries were used for a week and a half addressing mailing labels for the paper; and that state materials and equipment were used to get the labels addressed.

Williams flatly denied that any commission personnel, equipment, materials or funds were used on the publication. But he admitted that he "had a hand" in its preparation on his own time.

He said Chandler's charges were "grossly false and ridiculous" and added that his former commission personnel used state equipment and material in preparing a newspaper-type campaign document attacking Bodenhamer's opponent, Lt. Gov. Ernest Vandiver.

By WILLIAM M. BATES

"This campaign literature contains faked, fraudulent and deceitful pictures, concocted newspaper headlines and other false and misleading matter purporting to have been accurately reproduced from the press of the state," Chandler charged in his statement.

Bodenhamer, in a statement Monday night, denied that his publication was prepared, printed or mailed by the Commission on Education. He said he paid $12,500 from campaign contributions to a private printing firm for the work.

Bodenhamer replied the publication "is factual, it is truthful, it carries proof within its columns."

Bodenhamer said the attack came from the Vandiver camp. He challenged his opponent to a one-hour debate on television at no expense to Vandiver.

Twitty and Bell, both commission members, said the governor should call a meeting of the group to look into the charges. Griffin is chairman of the 22-member commission, the state's official agency for maintaining school segregation.

Twitty said if the accusations are true, the commission should take "appropriate action."

"If he (Williams) has been using the state's money and state employes for political purposes, I think he ought to resign," Twitty declared.

Bell said he was "shocked that the original purposes for which the commission was formed is under attack as having been abandoned." He said Chandler's assistant's "Winder connections made him stab the commission in the back."

Williams said he had supplied a picture from commission files for the Bodenhamer paper. But he said it had been introduced previously in a public hearing and was in the "public domain" and available to any candidate.

Williams said he had a heated discussion with Chandler last week when he discovered his assistant talking to a reporter for Time magazine.

Vandiver Is Gaining In Griffin's County

By WILLIAM M. BATES
Constitution Political Editor

One of the interesting counties to watch in the governor's race is Decatur—home base and stronghold of Gov. Griffin and his brother Cheney.

Until recently, Lt. Gov. Ernest Vandiver's forces privately were conceding the county to William T. Bodenhamer. And various polls and signs pointed in that direction.

Within the past few days, however, the Vandiver camp has reappraised the outlook in Decatur County. The lieutenant governor's supporters now think they have a fighting chance of taking the county.

Significantly, the growing Vandiver strength is confirmed by some local observers who are not in the Vandiver camp. One long-time observer of Decatur County politics—and one closely associated politically with the Griffin family—said it now looks like a "toss-up" between Vandiver and Bodenhamer.

A few weeks ago, the same observer gave Bodenhamer a 60-40 edge in the county. The same odds were quoted by local Vandiver partisans.

A number of reasons have been advanced from various quarters to explain the apparent shift in Decatur. One is that Decatur County is simply reflecting a general statewide view that Vandiver is a certain winner. It is the old bandwagon psychology. Not many voters and fewer professional politicians want to support a candidate they think is a loser.

Another explanation for the apparent swing to Vandiver is the neutrality that Gov. Griffin has observed so far in the governor's race.

And the other Griffin political power in Decatur, R. A. (Cheney) Griffin, has his hands full with his own race for the state House of Representatives.

BEATING BUSHES

Cheney Griffin, who is mayor of Bainbridge and now an unpaid aide to his brother, is opposed by C. Wiley White, a farmer and livestock man. Cheney apparently thought at first that he would have little difficulty in winning his House seat. But his presence at the State Capitol has been noticeably missing during the past few weeks; he's been beating the political bushes like crazy for the past several days.

Cheney has been so busy, in fact, that he hasn't had much time to devote to the governor's race—even if he were disposed to help Bodenhamer carry the county. Except for a statement to a reporter that he might be the next speaker of the House if Bodenhamer is elected, the younger Griffin has had nothing to say publicly about the governor's race.

Local sources in Decatur County say he is avoiding involving his own candidacy with that of Bodenhamer's—at least up until the present time.

The same local sources say they have seen no sign that the governor is giving any personal aid to Bodenhamer in the county. He is reported to have told some of his home town friends that he doesn't care how they vote in the governor's race.

This coincides with his oft-repeated statement from the governor's office that he is staying out of the contest.

The Bodenhamer partisans, of course, are counting Decatur County in their column. They believe the bitter feud between Griffin and Vandiver will help them take the governor's home county.

Bodenhamer's own strength in the county is not to be underestimated. This is his own home grounds, too, and he has preached sermons and married and buried people all over the county.

How Decatur goes, in the final analysis, may depend on what the governor does between now and the Sept. 10 primary.

If the contest is as close in the county as is now reported, it probably would take only a few words here and there from Griffin to tip the scales to Bodenhamer.

But if the election goes down to the wire with Griffin maintaining his neutrality, then the Vandiver forces believe they'll take the county by a hair.

Tax Needs Are Easing, Griffin Says

By WILLIAM M. BATES

Gov. Griffin declared Tuesday that a sudden spurt in state revenue should rule out the need for tax increases during the administration of Gov.-Nominate Vandiver.

In a statement that appeared to have political overtones for the future, Griffin spoke out specifically against any attempt to boost the present 3 per cent sales tax.

Griffin again defended his spending policies that have reduced the treasury surplus from about $29 million on July 1 to about $5 million.

He asserted that during his tenure in office some $21 million has been spent for "non-recurring" projects that he said "my successors in office for years to come will not have to build because they are already built."

He cited $7.8 million for the Science Center at the University of Georgia; $2.5 million for the atomic reactor at Georgia Tech; $1.6 million remodeling and repairing the Capitol as examples.

Griffin took his stand against any increase in taxes after reading his press conference a report from Revenue Commissioner T. V. Williams Sr. that predicted an increase of at least $8 million in collections during the current fiscal year.

Williams based his report on tax collections for September and for the first three months of the current fiscal year.

The commissioner reported that collections for the month just ended showed an increase of $1,153,242 over last year. The increase for the first three months over the same period last year was $2,649,759.

Williams said if collections for the next nine months match those of the first three, the state will show an increase of $10.6 million. Williams previously has predicted income this fiscal year would match last year's $318.5 million.

Even if collections don't run as well for the rest of the year, Williams said he would "anticipate" a very minimum increase of $8 million and "I could predict slightly above $9 million."

CITES FIGURES

Griffin said these figures mean that Vandiver should not have to ask for more taxes.

Griffin said there had been "some mention" about a 1 per cent hike in the 3 per cent sales levy. He said such a move would hurt the flow of new industry to Georgia and would amount to a 33 per cent increase in most of the taxes paid by "working people."

"No new taxes should be added to the people's burden," the governor said.

COMMITTEE AT WORK

Even as Griffin spoke, the Senate "watchdog" committee began work to draft Vandiver's plan to reorganize the state government for more efficiency and economy.

Vandiver hopes to meet the impending fiscal crisis by cutting spending to fit income. At the present, spending is running several million dollars a year above income. The outgo, however, includes "non-recurring" items mentioned by Griffin.

Sen. William P. Trotter of LaGrange, chairman of the long-idle "watchdog" committee, said Vandiver feels the state faces a "financial crisis" and that "he has a mandate to cut and scrape."

ECONOMIZE OR ELSE

Sen. Carl Sanders of Augusta put it in more blunt terms. "We must economize or go bankrupt," he said.

"There's only one thing to do—forget about the feather duster and get out the meat cleaver," Sanders added.

Trotter said the committee hopes to meet at least three times a week in order to have "concrete plans" for revamping the state government by Dec. 1. Its proposals will be submitted to the Legislature next January.

Crisis Is Gravest Griffin Has Faced

By WILLIAM M. BATES
Constitution Political Editor

Marvin Griffin has come face-to-face with the gravest crisis of his long career. Developments within the coming weeks and months very likely will determine not only his record and reputation as a public official, but his future as well.

William M. Bates

He is beset by many difficulties personal, political and official.

His administration has come under heavy fire from many directions.

He has been deserted by many of his one-time friends and supporters.

He has suffered a crushing defeat in the General Assembly—a body over which he had held undisputed sway for three years.

And now his own brother and aide has been indicted on the criminal charge of accepting money to influence the governor in his official duties.

How did a man of such warm personal charm and with a solid record of achievement for his state in some fields come to his present plight?

The governor's defenders contend he is a victim of political persecution inspired primarily by the Atlanta newspapers. They contend he has never received a fair shake from the press—that his accomplishments have been minimized, his faults magnified.

SOME BLAME GRIFFIN

The governor's enemies say Griffin is to blame for his own troubles; they say he was never of gubernatorial caliber and that his present difficulties were inevitable from the beginning. They say many of his appointments were bad and that Griffin must shoulder full responsibility for anything wrong in his administration.

There's still another and kinder explanation offered by some for the governor's present troubles. This is that Griffin is too easy going and too trusting of his friends. According to this view, Griffin has spent too little time seeing to the day-to-day details of running the government and has delegated too much authority to subordinates, some of whom undoubtedly have let him down.

Whatever the reasons for the crisis now facing Marvin Griffin, he seems to have brought it to a head himself by a decision he made just prior to this year's session of the Legislature.

RURAL ROADS FIGHT

That was his decision to seek an expansion of the Rural Roads Authority which has been the pride and joy of the Griffin administration.

Griffin's move was interpreted in some quarters—with considerable justification—as political. He was accused of getting ready to back a candidate for governor in this year's primary against Lt. Gov. Ernest Vandiver.

Vandiver's forces declared all-out political warfare on the governor. As a result, this year's session of the General Assembly—which had been billed in advance as one of sweetness and light—became a political tug of war.

The Vandiver forces were victorious in the assembly fight. And Griffin has been on the defensive ever since. The wounds left by the legislative fight were deep and permanent.

Charges and insinuations against the Griffin administration that had been whispered about the state for the three years that Griffin ruled the political roost began to be made openly. Frontal assaults upon the governor and the record of his administration became bolder and bolder. Political figures of substance who had bided their time for three years took the field against Griffin. Newspapers and antiadministration legislators were flooded with rumors and "tips" of alleged wrong-doing.

One such tip, made anonymously, led to the expose of the highway irregularities at Baxley. This, in turn, led to the Fulton County Grand Jury's indictment of the governor's brother, R. A. (Cheney) Griffin.

Marvin Griffin may weather the political adversity that seems to be closing in around him.

But there's no doubt about it: he's in trouble.

Negro Minister Qualifies For Election In Savannah

SAVANNAH — The first Negro to run for a public office in Savannah since Reconstruction Days qualified Thursday as Rev. George D. Walker, pastor of the Asbury Methodist Church, was put on the ticket for next month's aldermanic election.

The former Clark College graduate commented afterwards "We feel confident we are going to win. The good citizens and fair citizens of Savannah welcome this opportunity for a representative of the 40 per cent Negro population to help make Savannah more beautiful."

Meanwhile, the Civic Betterment Ass'n, which is backing the pastor's candidacy, announced it would hold weekly rallies between now and the election.

Fiscal Trouble Looms Despite Griffin's Views

Revenue Commissioner T. V. Williams, with a deep gaze into the mysteries of his personal crystal ball, comes up with the prediction that state income will exceed expectations by eight to 10 million dollars.

Gov. Griffin, whose free spending and wasteful administration has resulted in outsized spending income, derives a certain amount of balm from his revenue commissioner's optimism.

It would mean that the next administration, about which the governor shows only the most fleeting moments of concern, will not be in such dire financial straits after all and therefore would not have to raise taxes.

For obvious reasons, however, it would be much more realistic to take the Williams-Griffin rosy outlook with a large pinch of salt.

The state cannot pluck the money it will need from thin air. Commitments already made by the present administration plus the maintenance of services at even their present level add up to a sum greater than that which logically can be expected at current tax rates regardless of whose crystal ball is used.

Gov.-Nominate Vandiver will have to carry out his pledges of economy to the nth degree. Wasteful practices must be halted, the multiplicity of boards and commissions that serve little or no practical purpose eliminated and government streamlined.

The Senate Watchdog Committee, which resumed its sessions yesterday, can accomplish much in laying the groundwork for the necessary reforms.

Scrimping and scraping up and down the line must be the order of the day during the next administration regardless of what eleventh hour predictions to the contrary are made by the current regime.

Ga Gubernatorial Race Swings To Segregation

By EDDIE WILLIAMS

Segregation is quickly becoming the center hinge on which the forthcoming off-spirited gubernatorial election will swing as the three rivals for the state's leadership continue to heap coals on slowly dying embers.

Lt. Gov. Ernest Vandiver, state Rep. William T. Bodenhamer, and gospel singer Rev. Roy Abernathy, aspirants for governor in the September 10 Democratic Primary, have expressed here to continue segregation— "the Georgia way of life"—if elected to the number one spot.

Refusal to make such a promise would be committing political suicide in the eyes of the majority electorate," according to observers. This is particularly true since there is no candidate representing the Bodenhamer last Saturday leveled a vicious attack at Vandiver whom he infers is playing cautious to grab the delicious morsel of Negro votes. The Ty Ty preacher-politician slung harsh criticisms focusing the lieutenant governor of not stopping segregation and of being a prime mover behind the infamous Koinonia farm operations at Americus.

EMPHASIS ON SEGREGATION

In his 16-plank platform, Bodenhamer, former executive director of the Georgia States Rights Council, placed cardinal emphasis on segregation and said "I will not hesitate to use all the power and the strength of Georgia to maintain segregation on all fronts."

With about two months remaining before Primary day, the three candidates are confronted with what is looming as a cold, dull, off-spirited election. However, hopes are high in the campaigning circles that the controversial segregation issue will rally the cries, chants and ballyhoo of old.

Some feuding points in the campaign are reminiscent of the Vandiver-Griffin tift at the beginning of the year in the last legislative session. They have assumed a different guise in the Vandiver-Bodenhamer duel.

Bodenhamer, a Griffin man, has announced some of the aspirations held by Griffin when he was defeated by Vandiver and the legislature. Georgia should have a rural road system second to none in the nation" when he is elected, Bodenhamer said.

The Ty Ty preacher voted for Griffin's proposed $50 million Rural Roads increase measure which was soundly thrashed by the Vandiver camp. Bodenhamer is also a champion of the county unit system which he calls "Georgia's greatest political asset."

VANDIVER LEADS

As the campaigning swings into full sway, the candidates are rated in reverse alphabetical order with Vandiver holding a substantial lead over his closest rival, Bodenhamer. The preacher is not, however, without chance and hope.

His segregation platform this week provoked Revenue Commissioner T. V. Williams to say "before the summer is over, all of us who are sincerely for maintaining segregation will be supporting Bill Bodenhamer."

Williams immediately denied this was an endorsement of the minister. He also denied that he had ordered his employees to attend Bodenhamer's coming out in Moultrie Saturday. Williams and his son as well as several other revenue department employes attendend the Bodenhamer rally.

Taking no chances on the suspected Griffin-Bodenhamer coalition and the hinted T. V. Williams-Bodenhamer tie, Vandiver will play the ends against the middle in the primary some observers report.

'STRONG DETERMINANT'

These politicos see gospel singer Abernathy, whose entry into the race showed this is still a free country, as a strong determinant of the race.

They see him as a diversionary force for the Vandiver camp. While Bodenhamer, whose chances are rated good, is preaching votes into his till, Abernathy will be competing directly with him in song. Meanwhile, Vandiver will walk between the preaching and singing ranks to the coveted governorship with little said or done.

Some even hail Abernathy as a deliberate Vandiver man whose sole function in the race is to detour stray votes from Bodenhamer.

A popular song title has been converted to a political slur in some circles, particularly among Negroes. An obvious attack on all of the candidates, their abilities, backgrounds and what they have to sell the public, the question they raise is: "What am I voting for?" Unlike the pop tune, however, there is no impending answer.

Regardless of how the struggle is figured, the question will be a difficult one for the electorate to solve. There is obviously much to consider in the querry: "What am I voting for?"

Williams Is Becoming A Key Figure in Race

By WILLIAM M. BATES
Constitution Political Editor

Although he's not a candidate, Revenue Commissioner T. V. Williams Sr. is rapidly becoming a key figure in this summer's gubernatorial contest.

As the campaign is now developing the controversial revenue commissioner may become the central attraction if not the dominant issue in the race by the time the votes are cast and counted on Sept. 10.

Bates

It was probably inevitable that Williams would be drawn into the thick of the fights.

Williams, it will be recalled, wanted very much to run for governor this year himself. It was just over a year ago that he engaged in a brief but not very friendly tug-of-war within the Griffin administration with former Highway Chairman Roger H. Lawson over which member of Griffin's official family would seek the governorship. Lawson jumped in first and Williams, with all the grace of a losing prize fighter, bowed out.

As far as could be determined, Williams did not lift a finger in Lawson's behalf while the latter struggled for months to get his campaign off the ground. When Lawson withdrew last spring, it was too late for Williams to enter because of a state law that would have required him to resign a year before seeking political office.

But Williams did not intend to sit out the governor's race. He is doing the next thing to running by actively participating in Rep. William T. Bodenhamer's candidacy against Lt. Gov. Ernest Vandiver, whom Williams despises.

For a time, Williams played it cagey about his support of Bodenhamer. He repeatedly denied to reporters that he had encouraged Bodenhamer to get into the race or that he was having anything to do with his candidacy.

But when Bodenhamer opened his campaign at Moultrie on July 5, Williams, his son, top officials of the Revenue department and a number of rank-and-file revenue employes were in the cheering section. The Williams' coterie has been present at all of Bodenhamer's subsequent Saturday rallies.

When it was suggested that Williams might as well drop the pretext that he wasn't participating in Bodenhamer's campaign, the revenue commissioner denied he had endorsed the Ty Ty preacher.

"However," he added, "I feel that before the summer is over all of us who are sincerely for maintaining segregation, which is the overwhelming majority of the people of Georgia, will be supporting Bill Bodenhamer either openly or quietly."

Now Williams has been drawn deeper into the election contest through the activities of his son, T. V. Williams Jr., the $6,000-a-year, part-time executive secretary of the State Commission on Education.

A former commission employe has accused young Williams of using the personnel and facilities of the state agency in the preparation of a Bodenhamer campaign newspaper containing bitter attacks on Vandiver, the commission's vice chairman.

Young Williams denied the charge. But he admits that he, personally and in a private capacity, "had a hand" in preparing the paper. He also admits that he supplied a picture from commission files for use in the paper.

The paper, incidentally, is primarily a recital of the material Bodenhamer has used in his speeches trying to picture Vandiver as "weak" on segregation.

It is, of course, possible that T.V. Jr. was operating on his own without his father's knowledge or approval. But it is not likely. In matters political, their hearts beat as one.

The Vandiver camp lost little time in linking the son with the father. In a prepared statement, Vandiver said young Williams' "sole and only qualification" for his commission job "is that he is the son of a high state official."

The Vandiver-Williams feud has sparked and smouldered for more than a year. Williams was one of the first to label Vandiver "weak" on segregation; Vandiver was one of the first to criticize Williams' illegal liquor fund.

The feud is almost certain to flame hotter and brighter as the gubernatorial race progresses.

Georgians Asked To Defeat Race Baiting In Election

Atlanta World
Atlanta Bo.

The reported attempted use of force by "an ordained minister" to gain the office of governor of Georgia, has been flayed here by a Baptist pastor.

Dr. Roy O. McClain, pastor of First Baptist Church blasted playing with segregation; playing up differences in skin colors "to get elected."

The minister, obviously lashed out at the Rev. William T. Bodenhamer, pastor of the Ty Ty Baptist Church, who is seeking the governorship. Dr. McClain "spoke from his pulpit on Kindness, Tenderheartedness and Forgiveness."

"All this rot about segregation," he declared, "all this business of trying to be elected by playing up the differences in skin color—aren't we tired of that? Well say so then!"

The minister first referred without naming Bodenhamer, to state employees who had complained to him they were told to contribute $100 to his campaign "if we want to keep our jobs."

"It happened that this man they are being odered to support is an ordained minister. So I say let the righteous, religious people of Georgia rise up in a kind of holiness and strike that sort of thing down in and out. We don't have to take that in Georgia, and never do we have to take it from a minister."

The furor continued over into Monday with Revenue Commissioner T. V. Williams defending Bodenhamer, and a member of his revenue department resigning because he had been told to contribute to Bodenhamer's campaign.

Harold M. Dixon, 30, regional manager of the sales tax unit, said he was also told to urge his subordinates to support the minister.

Revenue Commissioner T. V. Williams charged Monday the Atlanta minister was duped into "a vicious and underhanded" political plot conceived in the heat of the race for the Georgia governorship.

"It is apparent to me that you have been duped into one of the foulest and most vicious and underhanded plots in Georgia political history," Williams wrote Rev. [illegible] for the school board, said the great problems of any Southern district school board trying to integrate were the mores customs, [illegible] of the community, and the federal government's lack of power to enforce integration.

"About 15 or 20 agitators were arrested when disorders occurred", House said, "but when all were set free, it encouraged others. No federal law can be utilized in suppressing agitators."

House requested and received permission from the court to offer a collection of newspaper clippings, radio transcripts and other written material to show the "climate of feeling."

GOOD FAITH NOT CHALLENGED

Richard C. Butler, the school board's other attorney, said the good faith of the board had never been challenged. He cited numerous talks given by Superintendent Virgil Blossom in an effort to "sell" the board's integration plan.

Butler said the board was caught between the "upper and nether millstones" — they had only two choices.

"Either they could be a party to the destruction of what they had built up or take legal action,' he said "This, after prayerful consideration, was what they did.

Butler said there were acts or the books in Arkansas which hold the state is not compelled to desegregate.

"Some hold these to be unconstitutional," he said, "but who is to know until they reach the courts? The board had to take them into consideration as well."

A Step In The Direction Of Reason And Equity

Atlanta World

In Columbus, Georgia, the Muscogee Grand Jury is considering along with 13 others nominated by petition, the naming of a retired Negro educator of that city to its Board of Education.

Atlanta, Ga. 34a(2)

This is a step forward and should commend itself to all city and county boards. This is one of the excellent means of inquiring directly as no other agency could do, into the affairs affecting the education of all children alike.

Politics and those expediences tangent to empty tokens in educational relations should not mar this good step or allow any petty handicaps to enter into an equation demanding the best in the arena of education and good race relations.

The new Georgia law makes it possible to nominate citizens by petitions for the school board.

Here is hoping that the nominee, B. W. Lawton, will be finally named as a member of the board of education.

His experiences in the field of education across the many lean years of educational restrictions, and his application to the task as a teacher himself during these years, should be invaluable material for that resourcefulness and native intelligence so much in demand these days of educational change.

May other cities and counties imitate Muscogee County and the City of Columbus.

Muscogee Jury To Consider Negro For Education Board

Atlanta World
Atlanta Ga.

COLUMBUS, Ga. (UPI)—A retired Columbus Negro schoolteacher has been nominated for consideration for appointment to the Muscogee County School Board.

Members of the Negro Young Men's Progressive Club submitted a petition to the clerk of court here nominating B. W. Lawton.

The Muscogee grand jury will consider Lawton, along with 13 others nominated by petition, when it decides on three appointments to the school board for terms that begin next January.

However, the grand jury can reappoint the present incumbents or they can select any of those nominated by petition.

Lawton is the first Negro here to ever be considered for a post on the board because of a new Georgia law which makes it possible to nominate citizens by petition for a school board position.

Daugherty And Bacote Win Committee Posts

J. C. Daugherty, 34, an Atlanta attorney and one of the two Negroes ever to be elected to a seat on the Fulton County Democratic Committee, issued a "thank you" to the people who elected him Wednesday.

The full statement is as follows:

"I would like to express my heartfelt appreciation to the people that worked so faithfully in my campaign for Membership on the Democratic Executive Committee from the Third Ward and to the people who voted for and supported me in every way making this success possible.

"As an individual, I plan to take my seat on the Committee in a spirit of cooperation and collaboration with the other members of the Executive Committee. I hope to be able to make a constructive contribution to the operation of this Committee in its all important function of holding elections and related matters.

"Mine and Dr. Bacote's election to the Executive Committee was not necessarily a Third Ward matter in that many people who live in other wards of the city aided in getting out the vote for both of us."

Daugherty's power in the Third Ward struggle is indicated when it is noted that he polled more popular votes than his two opponents combined. Daugherty attributed this landslide margin to the hard-working ward workers who managed his get-out-and-vote drive throughout the ward.

Dr. C. A. Bacote also won by a comfortable margin over his closest opponent but the race in his bracket was more of a fight than the Daugherty-Cloud-Holmes bracket.

The unofficial totals for both brackets in the Executive Committee race, taken from the precinct figures are as follows:

victorius in the Third Ward race. Dr. Bacote said "Without this voluntary support, our campaign would not have had the successful ending.

"We appreciate the confidence which our supporters imposed in us and we fervently promise to work not only in their behalf but in behalf of all the people in Fulton County. We shall be available to talk to those persons in our districts who wish to express themselves about matters which come under the jurisdiction of the Fulton County Democratic Executive Committee.

Cleric Seeks Alderman Post In Ga.

ATLANTA, Ga. — The Rev Charles D. Walker, pastor of the Asbury Methodist church here hopes to become the first Negro elected to public office in Chatham County since Reconstruction Days.

He will enter the city Democratic primary as a candidate for the aldermanic board.

Mallie Exley, jr., chairman of the City Democratic Executive committee, said Supreme Court rulings forbid disqualification of any candidate because of race.

Walker will have the backing of the Civic Betterment Association of which Dr. Henry M. Collier, jr. is president.

The 38-year-old minister and Clark college graduate said a closer link is needed between government and Negroes who constitute 40 percent of this city's population.

The only election of a Negro in Chatham County on record is that of George M. White, who won post of clerk of the Superior court in 1868.

Walker said he and other Negroes were turned down by the city administration when they asked for representation on the Board of Education, the Metropolitan Planning Commission and the Urban Renewal Advisory board.

He said that Negroes do not expect something for nothing. The Negro will be able to "render service to the growth of the well-being of Savannah, not just to his own race by participation through representation."

Vandiver's Victory Made State History

By WILLIAM M. BATES
Constitution Political Editor

A political whirlwind named Ernie Vandiver swept through Georgia Wednesday.

His victory in the gubernatorial primary is assuming monumental proportions as the counting nears the end, making an analysis of the over-all picture possible.

William M. Bates

It adds up to one of the greatest triumphs ever racked up in this state by a candidate for a contested major office. Only that tired word "landslide" does it full justice.

The young lieutenant governor has surpassed the late Eugene Talmadge's 1934 election victory that went into the record books as one of the most sweeping of modern times. In some respects, Vandiver's victory rivals Herman Talmadge's election to the Senate two years ago.

On the basis of latest returns, Vandiver has obtained about 80 per cent of the total popular vote in a field of three candidates. He lost only three counties and will obtain 400 of the 410 county unit votes.

Sen. Talmadge in 1956 received about 80 per cent of the total vote—the same as Vandiver's figure. Talmadge, however, carried every county and took all the unit votes; but he had only one opponent to split his vote.

In the 1934 gubernatorial contest, the elder Talmadge also lost only three counties. But these counties had a total county unit vote of 16. In popular votes, Talmadge polled 66 per cent of the total in a three-cornered battle.

Vandiver's principal opponent, State Rep. William T. Bodenhamer, ran a very poor second in Wednesday's voting. On the basis of latest returns, Bodenhamer appeared to have received only about 15 per cent of the popular vote.

As was expected, Bodenhamer strength was greatest in deep south Georgia. His support became progressively thinner northward through the state. He ran poorly in all urban areas.

Bodenhamer's three counties were Tift, his home; Worth, which lies just to the west of Tift and immediately adjacent to his home town of Ty Ty, and Decatur, home county of Gov. Griffin.

All the Bodenhamer-carried counties were close. He edged Vandiver by 215 votes in Decatur. The vote in Bodenhamer's home precinct of Ty Ty was 177 for Bodenhamer, 52 for Vandiver and 1 for Lee Roy Abernathy.

STUNNING VOTE

Vandiver's stunning popular vote margin surprised even his own strategists. They had figured to win big—but not quite that big. Some of the Vandiver lead

...ers had held out strong hope of making a clean sweep of the counties. The loss of Worth was the biggest Vandiver disappointment. In the last few days before the election, the Vandiver camp thought it had on even chance to take Decatur despite the implied support of Bodenhamer by the Griffin forces.

The Vandiver camp also made a concentrated drive in the last week of the campaign to take Tift away from Bodenhamer. But most of the Vandiver strategists thought the prospects were dim.

Many reasons can be found to explain Vandiver's smashing victory.

It is obvious that the young man from Lavonia is a strong vote-getter in his own right. His clean-cut appearance was pleasing to the voters. And his reputation for honesty, integrity and sincerity remained unmarred throughout the campaign.

STRONG BACKING

He was backed by one of the strongest political organizations that ever took the field in Georgia. He was known to have the support of Sens. Talmadge and Russell and their political apparatus. Most of the leaders of the old anti-Talmadge faction were openly in his fold.

Most political observers believe reported irregularities in the Griffin administration reacted in Vandiver's favor. Though Vandiver never frontly attacked Griffin, he did get in some powerful indirect slaps at certain practices and personalities identified with the Griffin administration.

Bodenhamer, on the other hand, never had an organization that could compare with that of Vandiver. His leading backer, State Revenue Commissioner T. V. Williams Sr., is probably the most unpopular political figure in the state.

Finally, the Bodenhamer campaign of smear, villification and falsehood obviously missed its mark.

The people of Georgia, in resounding terms, rejected his bucket of mud.

Daugherty Runs For Executive Committee Post

J. C. DAUGHERTY

J. C. Daugherty, Atlanta attorney, candidate for the Fulton County Democratic Executive Committee for the Third Ward, position No. 1, is a native of Atlanta, Georgia. Attorney Daugherty was educated in the public school system of Atlanta and holds the Bachelor of Arts Degree from Clark College of Atlanta, and the Bachelor of Laws Degree from Howard University School of Law, Washington, D. C. He is a practicing Attorney in Atlanta, having practiced here since 1952.

Mr. Daugherty has been active in in the public school system of Atlanta since 1948 and served as Executive Secretary for the Atlanta Negro Voters League in the 1952-53 registration campaign. He offered for membership on the Fulton County Democratic Executive Committee in 1954, but lost by a narrow margin of 31 votes.

Mr. Daugherty states that "I believe the time is long overdue for full and complete participation by Negroes on all policy-making governmental bodies, committees, boards and councils. Negroes constitute approximately one third of the population of Fulton County and are entitled to representation. It is not necessary that Negroes be planned for, they should be planned with on all levels of community, of protest in an attempt to get the board to spell out its reason for not assigning Mr. Holland to the principalship of the new Yates which is slated to open Sept. 8.

Mr. Holland has been at Yates for a long period of years, during which he endeared himself to the community, first by boaching the "Lions" on their glory trail, and later becoming assistant principal of the school in 1939 and principal in 1940, succeeding the late James (Jimmy) Ryan.

For nearly 20 years Mr. Holland has been principal of Yates, which burst at its seams and was surrounded with "chicken coops" for the past generation to take care of the overflow pupil load.

Nevertheless, while colored people were asleep in the night, the conservative controled school board toppled him from the principalship of the Jack Yates High School, transferring him early Tuesday morning to a junior high school.

2 Negro Candidates Win Atlanta Races

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP)—Two Negroes unseated white incumbents for seats on the Fulton County Democratic Executive Committee in Wednesday's primary.

They scored their victories in the 3rd Ward, in which registered Negro voters outnumber white voters 10,504 to 6,071.

Dr. C. A. Bacote, professor of history at Atlanta University unseated George T. Johnson 4,832 to 3,478. Attorney J. C. Daugherty ousted John F. Cloud 5,361 to 3,308.

Party Elects 2 Negroes to Fulton Seats

Official consolidated returns on Wednesday's primary election showed Thursday that two Negroes defeated white incumbents for seats on the Fulton County Democratic Executive Committee.

Elected to seats from the predominantly Negro Third Ward were Dr. C. A. Bacote, an Atlanta University professor, and J. C. Daugherty, an attorney. They are the first Negroes ever elected to the committee.

Final tabulations released by the committee Thursday showed Bacote received 4,832 votes to 3,478 for the white incumbent, George T. Johnson, and Mrs. Ruby Blackburn, a Negro woman in the same bracket, received 1,401 votes.

Daugherty defeated John F. Cloud, the incumbent, by a vote of 5,361 to 3,308. Another Negro woman running in that bracket, Miss Hattie Holmes, received 899 votes.

Daugherty said Thursday that as far as their intentions were concerned in serving on the committee, he and Bacote "hope to go to the committee in a spirit of cooperation and collaboration with the other members and with the hope we can bring some constructive contribution to the committee."

Other incumbent committee members who were unseated were in East Point and Palmetto. A. O. (Andy) Cochran beat incumbent Albert Mcduffie, 2,199 to 1,856 in East Point, and Frank Smith beat incumbent Ballard Hudson, 132 to 103 in Palmetto.

7th District Candidate Asks Race Protection Legislation

ROME, Ga., Jan. 6 (AP)—An independent Republican candidate for Congress today proposed legislation to "protect both races from persecution from Washington" on the segregation issue.

Harbin King, Calhoun attorney seeking the Georgia Seventh District Congress seat in a special election Wednesday, also assailed what he referred to as Civil Rights Commission "snoopers spying upon our personal activities."

King addressed a telegram to Dr. John A. Hannah, president of Michigan State University, and Robert E. Storey, dean of the Southern Methodist University Law School, as chairman and vice chairman of the commission.

He said he presumed both are in favor of immediate integration of the races. He asserted that the South will tolerate neither "commission snoopers" nor "federal judges being transferred to our area for the purpose of hog-tying the South and enforcing integration against our wills."

"When I am elected to Congress from the Seventh District of Georgia on Jan. 8," he said, "I will immediately introduce legislation to prohibit federal judges from being transferred from one section of the country to another to preside over federal district courts. Furthermore, I shall support legislation to protect both races from persecution by Washington."

King, although long active in regular Republican circles, lost the party nomination for the Congress seat to Howard I. Purdy of Bremen, Ga., but he already had qualified as an independent. His Democratic opponent in Superior Court Judge Erwin Mitchell of Dalton, top-heavy winner in a December primary.

The election is to name a successor to Rep. Henderson Lanham of Rome, killed in an auto-train collision in November.

Qualifying Date Set In Georgia

ATLANTA (AP) — The rules-making body of the Georgia Democratic Executive Committee Wednesday fixed June 21 as the deadline for candidates to qualify for the Sept. 10 primary. A governor and other state officers will be nominated.

The deadline date and other recommendations of the rules body will be submitted to the full committee May 23. The executive committee normally adopts the rules subcommittee report.

Other recommended changes:

Hike the qualifying fee for candidates for governor from $500 to $1,000, and boosting all other qualifying fees sharply.

Repeal of a rule requiring candidates for county Democratic executive committees to pledge themselves to support the national party's presidential ticket.

Strengthen the language in primary rules pledging voters to support the Democratic primary winners in the general election.

Negro Minister Qualifies For Election In Savannah

SAVANNAH — The first Negro to run for a public office in Savannah since Reconstruction Days qualified Thursday as Rev. George D. Walker, pastor of the Asbury Methodist Church, was put on the ticket for next month's aldermanic election.

The former Clark College graduate commented afterwards "We feel confident we are going to win. The good citizens and fair citizens of Savannah welcome this opportunity for a representative of the 40 per cent Negro population to help make Savannah more beautiful."

Meanwhile, the Civic Betterment Ass'n, which is backing the pastor's candidacy, announced it would hold weekly rallies between now and the election.

Savannah Alderman Candidate Polls 4,370 Votes, Loses Race

SAVANNAH, Ga. (UPI)— Mayor Lee Mingledorff and his entire slate of six aldermanic candidates were swept back into office by an overwhelming vote Tuesday in the Democratic primary.

An independent Negro candidate for an aldermanic post, the Rev. George D. Walker, was defeated. He received 4,370 votes. Walker was the first Negro candidate for city office since Reconstruction days.

Two splinter factions of the Democratic Party had candidates for mayor and the aldermanic seats but they were left out of the running.

Mingledorff received 11,476 votes. His nearest contender was Julius J. Holt who got 7,220 votes. The other candidate, Alex A. Thomas received 2,195 ballots.

Mingledorff and his slate of aldermen will serve for four years instead of two. An amendment to the city charter changed the term of office for mayor and aldermen from two years to four. Nomination in the Democratic primary here is tantamount to election.

Cleric Loses Race, Wins Friends

SAVANNAH, Ga. — A Negro minister who made an impressive showing but lost in the recent aldermanic race here is credited with causing a Savannah daily to devote an editorial to "Our Negroes Deserve Recognition."

The Rev. George Walker who ran as an independent candidate received 4930 votes and carried all but three boxes (precincts) in his district. Of even greater import is the fact that Rev. Walker received support in all but two of the city's 41 boxes.

CIVIC RESPONSIBILITY

The Savannah Morning News noted in its editorial: "Even more imposing than his actual vote count, however, was the campaign waged in his behalf. On television Mr. Walker and his cohorts addressed the general public with intelligence, with dignity and with an almost irrefutable sense of civic responsibility.

"Savanah's Negroes, let it be said, faced up to the issues of the election with courage, yet maintained their tempers from beginning to end. If it should be said that the Negroes have had practice in keeping their tempers, who is to dispute it?"

APPOINT NEGRO

The editoaial noted that the administration of Mayor W. Lee Mingledorff should face up to one of its responsibilities in the future — that of appointing a Negro to a responsible position in the city administration.

It declared: "One of these days there will be a vacancy on an important board or commission whose jurisdiction directly affects the Negro population. The Morning News feels, frankly, that a competent Negro should be appointed to such a board or committee.

KNOW OWN AREAS

"The Negroes form approximately 40 per cent of this city's population. Beyond the mere statistics of this situation, however, there is an added fact to consider: the Negroes know their own areas far better than the whites, and they should be charged with assisting in decisions paramount to their own welfare."

The editorial concluded: "Simple justice and the best principles of segregation will both be served if Negroes of Savannah are given deserved recognition now. The campaign conducted by the Rev. George D. Walker and his friends proved beyond doubt that the Negroes are willing and able to share in the responsibilities of conducting the affairs of the city.

Merit Panel Meeting on Politicking

BY BRUCE GALPHIN

Fireworks are expected at a state Merit Board meeting Wednesday over charges of political activities by state employes.

A Highway department truck weigher who was fired last week for allegedly appearing on the platform with Lt. Gov. Vandiver submitted a written request Tuesday that he be allowed to appear before the board.

And it was learned that charges of alleged widespread politicking on behalf of gubernatorial candidate W. T. Bodenhamer by Revenue department employes also will be brought up at the meeting.

SOME CHARGES

Some of the charges about Revenue department politicking that may be brought up include allegations that:

1. Department employes in large numbers are being "requested" to attend Bodenhamer rallies.

2. Key personnel of the sales tax unit have been "requested" to donate from $50 to $100 each to Bodenhamer's campaign fund.

3. At least one department employe is using working hours to distribute Bodenhamer posters.

The Merit Board also is expected to receive the latest report on the number of Revenue department employes who are not being hired in conformity with Merit System regulations.

384 PERSONS

Merit System Director E. L. Swain reported Tuesday that his latest letter to Revenue Commissioner T. V. Williams lists 384 persons hired irregularly.

Of that number, 232 have no Merit System appointments whatever. Another 100 are being paid in variance with the system's scale.

The former Highway department employe who asked to be heard is Oscar L. Perdue of Stapleton. A $2,567.50-a-year truck checker, he was charged with appearing on the platform with Vandiver at the Dublin kickoff July 12.

Perdue's request was not in the form of an appeal of his firing. Swain said such an appeal would have to be given at least 10 days in advance of a board meeting.

Swain said it would be up to the board to decide whether to hear Perdue.

Columbus Negro Seeking School Board Post

COLUMBUS (UPI)—A retired Columbus [illegible] has been nominated for consideration for appointment to the Muscogee County School Board.

Members of the Negro Young Men's Progressive Club submitted a petition to the grand jury court here nominating B. P. Lawton.

The Muscogee Grand Jury will consider Lawton, along with 13 others nominated by petition, when it decides on three appointments to the school board for terms that begin next January.

However, the grand jury can reappoint the present incumbents or they can select any of those nominated by petition.

Lawton is the first Negro here to ever be considered for a post on the board because of a new Georgia law which makes it possible to nominate citizens by petition for a school board position.

Dr. McClain Hits Political Indecency

In his sermon last Sunday, Dr. Roy O. McClain, pastor of Atlanta's First Baptist Church, said in easily understood indignation:

"Several women who are employes of the state came to me with the sordid story that they had been told they had to contribute $100 to the campaign of one gubernatorial candidate 'if we want to keep our jobs.'"

"It happens that this man they are being ordered to support is an ordained minister," said Dr. McClain. (The Rev. W. T. Bodenhamer, pastor of a Baptist Church at Ty Ty, Ga., is the ordained minister in the race. He is supported by T. V. (Red) Williams, state revenue commissioner, and by his political machine).

"So I say let the righteous, religious people of Georgia rise up in a kind of holiness to strike that sort of thing down and out. We don't have to take that in Georgia and never do we have to take it from a minister," Dr. McClain declared.

It was a sermon every citizen of Georgia who is concerned about the present and future of his state will welcome.

Apparently, the state administration believes that every corrupt act, each politically immoral deed, every illegal pressure on employes, is to be excused if its spokesmen holler "Nigger."

As for candidate Bodenhamer, we sincerely welcomed him to the race when he announced his candidacy. One of the reasons for this welcome was we wanted the people of Georgia to become more familiar with this ordained minister and his methods of campaigning.

We also welcomed him because we were sure his campaign would also bring into the open the methods of the T. V. (Red) Williams' group, which is supporting him. We had an idea that this political sideshow would sicken the people, even though they be conditioned to a low level of political campaigning. Yet another reason for our honest welcome to the Rev. Bodenhamer will be announced after the ballots are counted.

We join with Dr. McClain, and an increasing multitude of others, in objecting.

It probably will not end the pressure for contributions from state employes. But if it stirs other ministers to flay the money-changers of politics it will be a healthy and helpful thing.

Just before 5 o'clock Monday afternoon Harold D. Dixon, head of the Atlanta Regional State Sales Tax office, resigned his position and made public a sworn affidavit.

Mr. Dixon swears that his superiors brought pressure upon him to call in each of his 60 employes to suggest that they contribute to the Bodenhamer campaign and the amounts each would pay. In obedience to this suggestion, Mr. Dixon swears he did inform the employes, with the stipulation the money was to be delivered in a white envelope to T. V. Williams' office. He also reveals the details of pressure on employes to attend Bodenhamer rallies.

This came about an hour after Williams had issued a coarse and insulting reply to Dr. McClain who had said that some state employes had come to him with their moral problem imposed by the demands for contributions to the Rev. Bodenhamer.

So, we ask, "What about it, governor?"

Will Mr. Williams resign? Or will you dismiss him?

Three In Governor's Race

4 Qualify To Run For Executive Committee

Four Negroes officially qualified to run for Third Ward posts on the Fulton County Executive Committee Saturday morning as final qualifications were held prior to the September 10 Democratic Primary.

One other person qualified to run for governor, and three qualified to run for lieutenant governor.

Dr. C. A. Bacote, Atlanta University professor, and Mrs. Ruby Blackburn, president of the Atlanta Negro Women Voters League, qualified to run against incumbent George [illegible] in the Third Ward race for a post on the Fulton County Executive Committee.

Incumbent John Cloud will be challenged by J. C Daugherty, Atlanta attorney, and Miss Hattie Holmes, a practical nurse, for the second Third Ward Fulton Executive Committee seat. F. E. Stonecipher, white, also qualified to run against Cloud.

The four Negroes were among 26 persons who qualified before noon Saturday to run against Executive Committee incumbent. Nineteen persons had previously qualified to enter the race.

THREE IN GOVERNOR'S RACE

Leroy Abernathy of Cartersville joined Lt. Gov. Ernest Vandiver and State Rep. Wm. Bodenhamer in the race for Georgia's governorship when he qualified in the final round. This leaves the governor's race with three qualified candidates.

C. J. Broome of Alma, Howell E. Smith of the Atlanta area, and Elliott Hagen of the Savannah area qualified to compete in the race for lieutenant governor. Three persons already had been qualified for the race. They were Garland Byrd, Colbert Hawkins and John Odom.

The final round of qualification paves the way for the State Democratic Primary which will be held on September 10.

Other last day qualifiers were Attorney Wesley Asinof for Judge of the Superior Court Circuit and Jimmy S. Elliott of Ellijay for Comptroller General.

Asinof will oppose incumbent Judge Virlyn B. Moore, and Elliott will compete with incumbent Comptroller General Zack D. Cravey. Bruce Edwards of Atlanta, and W. B. Buice of Hapeville.

The race for state treasurer boiled down to a two-way heat between incumbent George B. Hamilton and C. F. Swint of Atlanta. Incumbent Public Service Commissioner Ben T. Wiggins will be opposed by Charlie M. Redwine of Atlanta.

Several state officers are unopposed for renomination. They are Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook, Agriculture Commissioner Phil Campbell, Labor Commissioner Ben T. Huiet, Public Service Commissioners Walter R. McDonald and Allen Chappell, State School Superintendent Claude Purcell, and Secretary of State Ben W. Fortson, Jr.

8 Liberty County Negroes Qualify For City Posts

HINESVILLE, Ga. — Eight Negroes were qualified June 3 for membership on the Democratic Executive Committee for Liberty County. The action was the first such maneuver in memory of citizens here.

The Negro candidates are: Riceboro District: Lee Hargrove and Elton Roberts; Dorchester District: Oscar Bacon and Rose M. Marie Young; Walthourville District: John Barnard and Thomas A. McIver; MacIntosh District: Lewis Fraser and Elise Stevens.

These candidates oppose members of long-standing with the exception of John Porter Stevens, Dorchester District; W. N. Bruce, Riceboro District; Wrenn Ashmore, Gum Branch District, all of whom were nominated by the committee at their recent meeting to fill existing vacancies on the committee, and whose names they authorized added to the ballot, with incumbents, for the September Primary.

He's Sensible On Segregation, Abernathy Says

Gospel singer Lee Roy Abernathy declared Saturday one of his gubernatorial opponents, Lt. Gov. Ernest Vandiver, is "too supinely soft" on segregation and the other, W. T. Bodenhamer, is "too belligerently strict."

"Between these two impossible extremes is Lee Roy Abernathy with the sensible policy which appeals to all right-thinking people," Mr. Abernathy said. "I want to treat the Negroes fairly."

Mr. Abernathy made the remarks in a statement issued from his Atlanta campaign headquarters. The candidate did not schedule any speaking engagements on the last weekend before the Democratic primary Wednesday.

* * *

"IT IS VERY amazing to me but Bodenhamer continues growing in South Georgia," Mr. Abernathy said. "So once again I ask Vandiver, who is weaker than me in North Georgia, to pull out of the race and then I am left free to trounce Bodenhamer in South Georgia."

The candidate reiterated each of the previously announced planks in his platform, which includes a uniform $3 auto tag, extension of unemployment pay and a referendum on all major issues before meetings of the General Assembly.

HE ALSO reemphasized his stand on segregation. He said: "I have said from the beginning there will be no fixin' and no mixin'. It will be easier to move Stone Mountain to Savanna Beach than to force me to integrate our schools."

Mr. Abernathy repeated his support of the county unit system and again pledged to do away with "63 of 65" present state taxes and regulatory fees, replacing them with a "citizen's tax" of $5 a month on all persons between 18 and 65.

BYRD VICTOR

Vandiver Nominated In Georgia

ATLANTA (AP) — Lt. Gov. Ernest Vandiver, despite a challenge of his segregation stand, smashed to victory in his race for governor in the Georgia Democratic primary Wednesday.

The 40-year-old Lavonia lawyer-farmer had more than enough unit votes in sight to win in returns from 87 of the state's 159 counties. His popular vote from 468 of 1,803 precincts was 154,969 to 17,102 for his nearest rival, State Rep. W. T. Bodenhamer, a Baptist minister.

Bodenhamer, who had called Vandiver a weakling on segregation despite his avowal that he would never allow the races to mix, had only 6 unit votes in sight. Vandiver had 230, well over the necessary majority of the state's 410.

Gospel singer-piano salesman Lee Roy Abernathy of Canton had 11,484 votes with none of the all-important units in sight.

Also winning by a landslide was lawyer-businessman Garland Byrd in a five-man race to succeed Vandiver in the state's No. 2 office.

Byrd, like Vandiver, is a close political ally of Sen. Herman Talmadge, a power in Georgia politics.

Democratic nomination is equivalent to election in one-party Georgia.

The unit votes are the determining element in Georgia Democratic primaries. A total of 206 is needed to win in the governor's race and a simple plurality in the lieutenant governor's contest. Under the unit system, a candidate winning a county gets that county's unit vote, ranging from two for the smaller to six for the larger counties.

Segregation played its usual important part in the governor's race but only in the matter of degree. Each candidate pledged to maintain traditional separation of the races.

Vandiver Is Voted Great Opportunity

When Lt. Gov. Ernest Vandiver takes over as governor in January he obviously will have an electorate as united behind him as perhaps any chief executive in the state's history. His decisive victory was personal as well as political.

This tremendous show of confidence would be an intimidating experience for any man. In Mr. Vandiver's case it places upon him the heavy burden of living up to his promise and of being governor of all the people. He, of no governor in recent years, can be if he wishes as free as the likes of special interest pressure groups and selfish politicians. The people have told him so.

Someone said recently that in almost all Georgia elections in our memory it was possible to classify the state's political leaders in definite camps. The Talmadges, father and son, had a following which always could be depended upon. So it was with their opposition—the Rivers group, the Arnall following and the Thompson people.

Mr. Vandiver seems to have inherited them all—including the political leaders. It will be difficult to keep all the latter happy and still do the job the people have asked for. But the governor-elect has only to point to his vote. There is some evidence, too, that the politicians are somewhat chastened and realize that a tremendous job lies ahead in getting Georgia government back on the right track.

Looking ahead at the great problems facing the state in the next four years, few could envy Mr. Vandiver his task. Governmental reorganization, finances, economy and efficiency, the integration question—these and many others must be met. They will require our best talent and cooperation from all. This, too, seemed to be what the voters were asking for Wednesday.

As for the Rev. Bodenhamer, perhaps the less said the better. Georgians in a sense are accustomed to a low grade of politics. But the Bodenhamer tactics, his use of the Hitler technique of repeating a lie over and over, was one of the most shocking in our history.

That a Christian minister allowed himself to be used by such a discredited faction in the state was more than the voters could stomach. Fulton County took delight in giving the gospel singer, Lee Roy Abernathy, more votes than it did the Rev. Bodenhamer. There was a certain pathos in this spectacle of a Christian minister thus involved. And so we leave him to his own conscience.

Mr. Vandiver has a challenging but great opportunity. We wish him well.

NAACP Stickers Laid To Bodenhamer Backer

A Ringgold taxi driver has signed an affidavit saying he was paid by a Bill Bodenhamer backer to attach "NAACP Endorsed" signs on Ernest Vandiver campaign posters.

James Harvey Teems, 33, said Bill Cornelsion, a candidate for the state Senate, paid him to pick up 10 packages of the NAACP signs at a Chattanooga, Tenn., printing firm.

Teems said that after he returned with the packages Cornelsion told him an another man that he (Cornelsion) and T. V. Williams Jr. "would pay our expenses if we would go about over the state putting up posters for candidate William T. Bodenhamer and attaching 'NAACP Endorsed' stickers to 'Vandiver-For-Governor' posters."

Teems said the proposition was accepted.

The cab driver also said in his affidavit that he had been with T. V. Williams Jr. and Cornelsion when they were planning finances for Bodenhamer's campaign in Whitfield and Catoosa counties.

Vandiver has accused Bodenhamer forces of trying to deceive the voters by putting up the NAACP stickers. Bodenhamer has denied any knowledge of the stickers, but has claimed Vandiver deserves them because of a "weak" position on segregation.

Is Williams Breaking Griffin's Own Rules?

By WILLIAM M. BATES
Constitution Political Editor

When does a department of the state government become a "beehive" of political activity?

This is a question that Gov. Griffin must be pondering these days as a result of the open and active backing that his revenue commissioner, T. V. Williams Sr., is giving to William T. Bodenhamer's gubernatorial candidacy.

William M. Bates

Just about one year ago, Gov. Griffin summarily fired three of his appointees in the State Military Department on grounds that they were engaging in political activity. The three, including Adj. Gen. George Hearn, were and are supporters of Lt. Gov. Vandiver's gubernatorial candidacy.

That the three were partisans of Vandiver was known to all, including the governor. He said he fired them, not because they were friends of Vandiver, but because "their political activities in the state government become a interfered with their jobs."

In a statement at that time, Griffin laid down this ground rule regarding politicking by state officials:

"The state is entitled to a sound military department, and not a political one. And any other department which becomes a political beehive will receive the same treatment."

ANOTHER RULE

Recently he added another ground rule regarding the political conduct of persons on the state payrolls. He said he did not object to their attending political rallies; but he said anyone sitting on a speaking platform at a political rally or attending a political fund-raising dinner would be fired.

No one can really object to the governor's ground rules so long as he enforces them fairly and equally against all members of his official family.

But the question is whether the governor is enforcing his directives in Williams' case.

Williams has not violated the letter of the second Griffin directive. The revenue commissioner admits openly that he is in the Bodenhamer camp. He and most of the top men in his department, along with a large contingent of rank-and-file employes, are regular attendants at Bodenhamer's Saturday rallies. But the commissioner and his lieutenants do not sit on the platform and have not attended fund-raising dinners since the governor issued his directive.

Whether Williams' activities in Bodenhamer's behalf amounts to making the Revenue Department a "political beehive" is another matter.

TAX COLLECTIONS

Williams insists it does not. He points out that tax collections continue to increase even in the face of the business decline, and he says no one has been fired from his department because of ties with Vandiver. And some of his employes, he contends, do have family or other connections with the Vandiver camp.

However, a sworn charge has been made by Harold M. Dixon, who resigned Monday as Atlanta regional manager of the sales tax unit, that his "superiors" required him to suggest to his personnel that they contribute to the Bodenhamer campaign and attend his rallies.

IN THE MIDDLE

Obviously, someone is not telling the truth. And Gov. Griffin, the man in the middle, seems to be taking the word of his tax commissioner that the charges are not so. At least no words of criticism of Williams have been forthcoming from the governor's office.

But the governor cannot fail to know that Williams is up to his ears in the Bodenhamer campaign. There are many who believe that Williams actually is calling the signals for Bodenhamer.

Griffin insists that he is maintaining a strict neutrality in the governor's race; he says that some of his department heads favor Vandiver, and some favor Bodenhamer.

This is true. But aside from Williams and his son, T. V. Jr., who quit under fire two weeks ago as executive secretary of the Commission on Education, no other leaders in the Griffin administration so far are making a lot of noise or engaging actively in the race on either side.

Mrs. Floy Clements has chalked up a "first" in Illinois politics. Barring an almost impossible upset, she will be the first Negro woman ever to sit as a state representative.

Floy Clements Wins For Legislature; Howard, Ben Lewis Easy Victors

Chicago got its sixth Negro alderman, a strong contender for William L. Dawson's congressional seat and its first Negro woman legislator as a result of Tuesday's primary election.

Chicago's newest alderman is 47-year-old Benjamin F. Lewis, of 3547 W. 13th place, a city building inspector, who will represent the 24th ward.

He merged winner in a bitter struggle with Atty. Arthur N. Hamilton, 1332 S. Central Park, an independent Democrat who bucked the powerful 24th Regular Democratic organization.

Though he lost by a 3-1 margin, Hamilton polled more votes than any candidate ever to oppose the Democratic machine in the ward.

Militant physician Dr. T. R. M. Howard was a run-away winner in the contest to oppose powerful William L. Dawson as U. S. representative in the First Congressional district.

Howard almost tripled the combined votes garnered by two other candidates seeking the GOP nomination, John Earl Lewis, mayor of Bronzeville and James Burr, a newspaperman.

The former Mississippi civil rights leader is expected to be the strongest Republican candidate to challenge Dawson for his congressional seat in a decade.

In the races for seats in the Illinois House of Representatives, Mrs. Floy Clements, 4910 S. Washington Park ct., a widowed deputy municipal court clerk virtually became the state's first Negro woman legislator.

Mrs Clements, a Democrat, will be representing the 22nd district along with Atty. Charles F. Armstrong, a Democrat, who was reelected and Elwood Graham, GOP also reelected.

Others successful in state representative races were William H. Robinson, GOP; veteran Corneal A. Davis and Atty. James Y. Carter, Democrats, all reelected in the 20th district.

The 21st district returned 20th Ward Republican Committeeman J. Horace Gardner and Attys. Cecil A. Partee and Kenneth E. Wilson, Democrats.

In other election results Jesse Owens was named on the GOP slate for county commissioner and Edward M. Sneed was renominated by the Democrats.

For sanitary district trustee J. B. Martin, incumbent was renominated by the GOP and Atty. Christopher C. Wimbish was slated by the Democrats.

Atty. Ernest A. Greene beat out Dudley Martin to win Republican nomination for state senator from the 11th district. Fred J. Smith, Democratic incumbent, had no opposition.

Howard Wins GOP Nomination, Opposes Dawson for Congress

CHICAGO (ANP)—Chicago is the bell ringer for early election primaries in the nation though it is doubtful if the results last Tuesday, while decisive, give any accurate indication of how the Negro vote is leaning.

Dr. Howard Cong. Dawson

Illinois is always the first state to name its contenders for Congress. The prime contest is always that of U. S. Representative from the First District, which for three decades has been held by a legislator of color.

Representative William L. Dawson, the almost undisputed political boss of much of the area, was of course unopposed on the Democratic side. Dr. T. R. M. Howard, late of Mound Bayou, Miss., won the Republican nomination. While it is probable Dr. Howard does not even dream of defeating Dawson, it was a worthwhile effort for him.

A NEWCOMER TO Chicago, scarcely here long enough to vote himself, Dr. Howard won the acquaintance and approval of the wealthiest businessmen in the city. He had ample campaign funds, which they provided. While it is difficult to explain the cause, other than that most of the big businessmen in Chicago are Republican, they are always willing to pour money liberally into an effort to unseat Dawson.

Meanwhile, Dawson continues to expand his political influence. It has grown even more extensive as Negro voters have poured into Chicago. Most of the half-dozen Negro members of the Illinois Legislature are part of the Dawson machine.

A new alderman was elected in the city's West Side, in the 24th Ward. He is Benjamin F. Lewis, a city employe. This marked the first time a Negro has been named in that section of the city, formerly populated by Jewish and Italian people.

MRS. FLOY CLEMENTS. a clerk in the Municipal Court, and for 31 years a precinct captain, became the first Negro woman to win the Democratic nomination as candidate for the State Legislature from the 22nd District.

She is almost virtually assured of winning the general election in November, since her district is almost solid Democratic, and she has always, in the past, been able to deliver for the party.

A graduate of Wilberforce University in Ohio, Mrs. Clements came to Chicago from Memphis when quite young. She is a widow.

Other Negro winners in the primary balloting for the State House of Representatives were William H. Robinson, Republican; Corneal A. Davis and James Y. Carter, Democrats, 20th District; J. 4 Negroes Are Nominated For School Boards

CHICAGO. — (ANP) — Four prominent Negroes are among 10 civic leaders proposed by the school board nominating commission for to fill two board of education seats.

Actually, there are four seats open, but two of them will go to two incumbents whose five-year terms are up. Of the remaining vacancies, one was caused by the resignation of Atty. Sydney Brown.

The four Negro possibles were Dr. Robert C. Stepto, assistant professor at Loyola University School of Medicine and president, Chicago Physicians associates; Atty. Julian B. Wilkins, board member, Citizens Schools committee; Atty. George N. Leighten, former assistant state's attorney-general and Illinois Supreme court commissioner; and Mrs. Lorraine Green, wife of Circuit Judge Wendell Green, and member Commission on Human Relations.

Two women among hopefuls for Illinois General Assembly

CHICAGO (ANP) — For the first time in the history of the State of Illinois, two colored women, both Chicagoans, were among the many hopefuls seeking a seat in the lower house of the general assembly when voters went to the polls Tuesday.

The two women were Mrs. Yolande M. Johnson and Mrs. Floy Clements.

Mrs. Johnson, a chiropodist and president of a physical therapy equipment firm, made her first bid for elective office by seeking the 20th district nomination against incumbent William H. Robinson, 48.

A staunch Republican, she is the daughter of the late Walter Cohen, ranking political figure in Louisiana during the Reconstruction period who served as collector of the port of New Orleans in the internal revenue division of the U.S. treasury.

Mrs. Clements, a deputy municipal court clerk for six years, has been a Democratic precinct captain and worker since 1926. A graduate of Wendell Phillips High School and Wilberforce University, in Ohio, she seeks the nod from the 22nd district against incumbent Charles F. Armstrong.

Dr. Howard, Dawson Opponent, Injured

CHICAGO, Ill. — Dr. T. R. M. Howard, former kingpin of all-colored Mound Bayou, Miss. and leader of rights - gaining efforts for Mississippi colored citizens, was slightly injured in an automobile accident here last week.

The noted physician, now in the midst of a spirited campaign to unseat Cong. William Dawson in Chicago's First Congressional district in upcoming elections, was treated for neck and shoulder injuries after the accident.

DR. HOWARD, who was, literally and actuay "run out" of Mississippi because of his out-spoken attacks on racism in that state, is Republican candidate for the seat now held by Democratic Cong. Dawson, dean of colored lawmakers in the U. S. Congress.

He was enroute to a meeting of the County Republican committee last Tuesday when a taxicab rammed into the back of the car he was driving.

Tax Raising Amendments Lose To Georgia Voters

The unusually few Georgia voters who went to the polls Tuesday appeared to be defeating all proposed constitutional amendments having anything to do with new taxes.

Unofficial election returns from 503 of the state's 1,826 precincts showed 10 of 16 general statewide amendments headed toward defeat.

Gov.-Nominee Ernest Vandiver, Lt. Gov.-Nominee Garland T. Byrd and all other unopposed candidates for state and congressional offices under the South's "one party-system" were formally elected in Tuesday's general election.

FOUR FAIL

Four of the amendments negatively received by Georgia voters would have authorized the state and county governments to raise taxes.

Four of the six amendments receiving favorable reception would offer various forms of scholarships to Georgia students, permit a $10,000 homestead exemption for totally disabled veterans, and permit justices of the Supreme Court of Appeals and Superior Court to broaden their active court service.

In Fulton County, however, the voters apparently just didn't bother to cast their ballots on general constitutional amendments and uncontested candidates.

ONE OUT OF FIVE

With returns still spotty, it appeared that about one out of every five who voted in the primary returned to vote in the Tuesday election. Balloting was approximately 17,500 Tuesday as compared to the 83,048 Fulton County voters who jammed the polls for the September primary.

Unofficial tabulations indicated that Fulton voters favored only three of the 16 general state constitutional amendments while the voting on two others appeared close.

The Fulton County voters apparently paralleled statewide sentiment as they cast favorable ballots for the Homestead amendment for disabled veterans, state scholarships for deserving students who cannot afford their own tuitions and scholarships for prospective teachers who agree to teach in Georgia.

Throughout the Metropolitan Atlanta area, the voters apparently followed the "stay-at-home" statewide trend. Neverthless, the East Point voters did rally up enough ballots to push across the only two constitutional amendments affecting local government in Fulton County.

The two East Point changes will allow that city to go into the off-street parking business and to spend city money to encourage industry to come to East Point.

And in Marietta, local Amendment No. 32, allowing the City of Marietta to combine and operate its water, sewerage and electric system as one revenue-producing unit, has won the voter's approval.

Meanwhile, Gov. Marvin Griffin stated Wednesday that he had "mixed emotions about results of elections throughout the country Tuesday because of "the defeat of the right to work laws throughout the land" and because "people so far on the left side" came out as winners in some races. He wa sapparently referring to some of the conservative elements that won their respective elections throughout the country.

Gov.-elect Ernest Vandiver said he had no immediate comment on either the national or local election results.

Candidacy Of Howard Endorsed

The Better Government association and Legislative Voters League this week announced endorsement of Dr. T. R. M. Howard in his campaign to win the Republican nomination for Congress in the First Congressional District of Chicago.

E. Mahim, the organization's executive director, said:

"Pursuant to investigation by our candidates committee, our organization has voted to recommend Dr. Howard to the voters as 'well qualified,' the highest classification awarded any candidate for federal office."

The Better Government association is a non-partisan organization which provides factual information on issues and candidates to civic and business organizations, with a view to facilitating intelligent approaches to securing better government on all levels.

This endorsement of Howard's candidacy by the B. G. A. follows closely the endorsement of the Independent Voters of Illinois, whose executive director, William Burns, last week announced:

"In the opinion of our interviewing committee, Dr. Howard evidenced an unusual grasp of the intricate mechanism of the Congressional apparatus and an intimate knowledge of the facts involved in the basic issues which are of prime importance to the people of his district. His position on important national issues are in essential conformity with the program of the I. V. I."

Dr. T. R. M. Howard who seeks the First District Republican nomination in the April 8 primaries, gained a national reputation for his miltant fight on civil rights issues in Mississippi. His campaign for Congress places emphasis on a program designed to gain full economic, social and political freedom for the Negro people.

Rep. Robinson Takes Fine Record Into '58 Campaign

Rep. William H. Robinson, who is seeking re-election to the state legislature, compiled an enviable record of real accomplishments during the 69th General Assembly.

Among some of his deeds are the following:

1. He introduced and got passed a bill which made unlawful the possession of hypodermic needle.

2. He supported the bill which established the Narcotics Investigation commission.

3. He was appointed a member of that committee by Gov. Stratton.

At the end of the session, he received a recognition of which he was richly deserving: Selection by correspondents as the outstanding freshman legislator of the session.

Rep. Robinson was born in White Stone, Va., in 1909. He came to Chicago in 1931. Married, he lives with his wife at 3625 S. Vincennes ave.

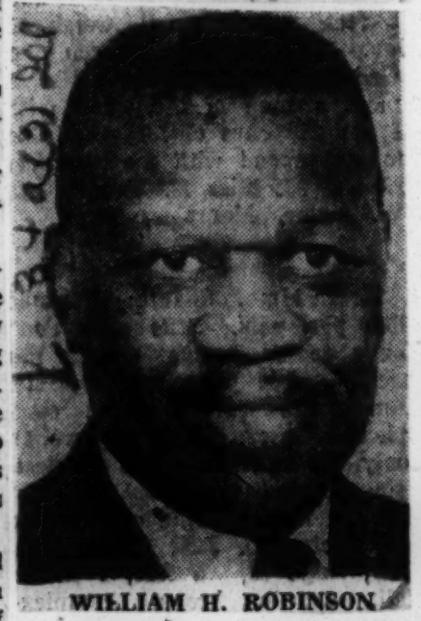
His educational career included studies and degrees at Virginia Union university, University of Chicago and the Institute of Psychoanalysis.

Robinson has served as bond clerk, welfare worker, parole officer, caseworker, Director of the Youth Service bureau, and executive secretary of the Church Federation's department of social welfare.

He was a field work instructor in social administration for the University of Chicago.

His parent professional activities include, lecturing in social work at the Baptist Missionary Training school, community counseling and consultation service, consultant on social welfare and governmental problems and member of the National Association of Social Workers.

Robinson has been superintendent of the Sunday School at Monumental Baptist church for the past 20 years. He is also a member of the deacon and trustee boards of the church, president of the credit union and editor of the church organ.



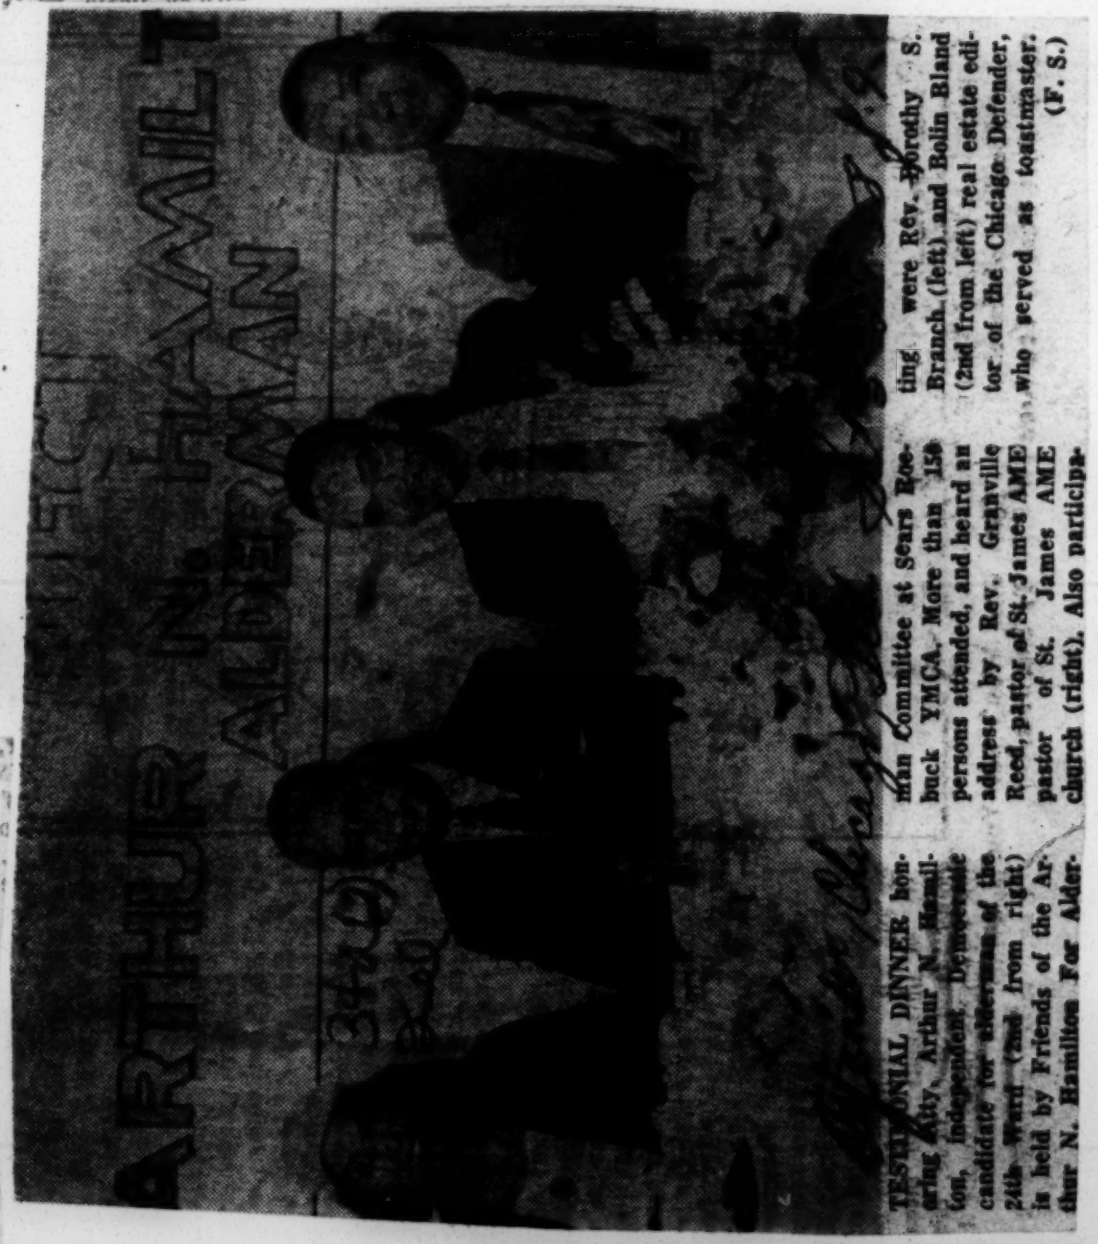
WILLIAM H. ROBINSON

He is a member of numerous boards, committees and advisory groups of community organizations, including the Ada S. McKinley house, Illinois Children's hospital and the NAACP.

His legislative record includes appointment to the commission of public aid and assistance, sponsorship or co-sponsorship of several vital bills in the legislature.

His record may be summed up in the tribute paid to him by a Chicago publication which stated: "Robinson was honored for his industry, honesty of purpose and effectiveness."

It is on such a record that Rep. Robinson bases his hopes of re-election in 1958.



TESTIMONIAL DINNER honoring Atty. Arthur N. Hamilton, Independent Democratic candidate for alderman of the 24th Ward (2nd from right) is held by Friends of the Arthur N. Hamilton For Alderman Committee at Sears Roebuck YMCA. More than 150 persons attended, and heard an address by Rev. Grayville Reed, pastor of St. James AME church (right). Also participating were Rev. Dorothy S. Brancch (left) and Bolin Bland (2nd from left) real estate editor of the Chicago Defender, who served as toastmaster. (F. S.)

BENJAMIN F. WILSON

How A Southern-Born Attorney Helped Bring Democracy To A Northern City

By ERNESTINE COFIELD

Women aren't the only ones that don't want to tell their ages. I found out recently while interviewing Benjamin F. Wilson, one of the few Negroes in the United States to head a city council.

Laughing, the mingled grey-haired Gary, Ind., attorney dismissed the query with a joke about women's methods of hedging the question.

But about this one-year stint as president of the Council, Wilson talked freely. Theodore Berry of Cincinnati was appointed to head the City Council and not elected.

Unanimously elected by members of the Council to serve as their head in 1956, Wilson could look back and see that Gary had come a long way since the 1945 strife torn days of integrating Froebel High school.

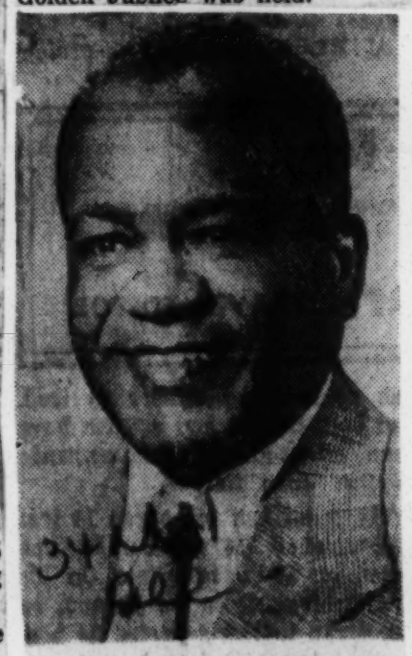
Members of the Council were also recognizing its senior member since the attorney was beginning his third four year term working with the group.

Perhaps most significant was that Gary would be celebrating its Golden Jubilee during September of 1956 and whoever headed the Council would represent the city at the function.

Gary had become of age and it was willing to place one of its major events in the hands of this mild mannered, soft spoken Negro.

Wilson was not new at the task of heading the nine man Council. He had served as vice president prior to his election as head.

While he headed the Council for one year, many public works were accomplished. Among them were the million dollar construction of the car ports and the dedication of Gilroy stadium, where the Golden Jubilee was held.



ATTY. BENJAMIN WILSON

The most far-reaching bill and the one that proved Gary was ready to start its second century on the right foot was the passing of the non-discrimination law. The law which covers practically every phase of life makes it unlawful to discriminate at hotels, beaches, cemeteries, housing, etc.

The city official, who had to sign all ordinances passed, represented Gary once when all of the top administrators were out of the city part of a day. Nothing exciting happened, though, he related.

One of the most important bills passed during Wilson's three terms in office was the Fair Employment Practice Act which he introduced in 1949. The bill opened up many avenues of employment including city jobs.

Major appointment under the act were Alfonzo Holliday as assistant fire chief and Bishop J. Claude Allen as the first Negro on the school board.

Now chairman of the powerful ordinance committee, Wilson lead the fight for the taxi-cab self-insurance amendment which would allow cabs to drop their policies with insurance companies and set up "pools" of $15,000 each for payment of claims.

The amendment is aimed at helping the Negro owned Yellow cab company that has been unable to secure insurance. It was introduced to the council by Terry C. Gray, a Negro.

On the local level the dynamic attorney has also chaired the police and fire investigation committee. In 1944, Wilson was appointed chief of the Minority Groups Service, War Manpower commission in Washington, D. C., by the late Paul V. McNutt.

The seventh son and the eleventh child of the Benjamin F. Wilson, seniors, the Councilman was born and received his early education in Brinkley, Ark. He did his undergraduate work at Howard university and received his law degree from the Boston University School of Law in 1929.

While at Boston university, the young student was an honorary member of the Woolsack club, a law society, and assistant editor of the law school year book.

Well known in civic and social circles in Lake county, the genial attorney has served on the board of directors of the Gary Urban League, president of the Gary Anselm Forum, officer in the integrated Gary Bar association, former vice-president of the Gary Council of Churches, and city-wide co-chairman of the March Of Dimes.

He is also a member of Omega Psi Phi fraternity, Chamber of Commerce NAACP and the Frontiers. Last year Wilson was elected attorney for the National Baptist Conference, U. S. A., Inc., which represents about 4,500,000 members.

Wilson is also a member of the American Bar association, Indiana Bar association and National Bar association.

Prior to setting up practice in the steel city, 22 years ago, the attorney practiced in St. Louis. Among his clients was the fabulous Annie M. Malone, who founded Poro College, Inc. Not only was he her attorney but also her general manager for six years.

In religious life, the senior councilman is a member of the trustee board of First Baptist church.

Wilson still manages to be a spectator at sport events and to find time in his busy schedule to travel, his greatest pastime.

"I just love to motor," he exclaimed. "I just love to take long motor trips."

To prove it, he said he has traveled all over the United States. In fact, when Wilson and the former Fannie Buchanan Shobe decided to marry, they flew to Mexico for the important step.

Unusual as it may seem, the grey-haired attorney said he has never had one unpleasant incident in all of his travels. The only place he has ever had an indication of discrimination was Helena, Montana, where Wilson and his wife stopped to make reservations for South Glacier Park.

Wilson's one son, John B. Wilson, who is now in army intelligence in California, plans to follow in his father's footsteps and will enter law school when he finishes his stint with Uncle Sam.

When Gary writes the history for its second hundred years, it can truthfully say that the founding doctrine of the Constitution is more than empty words.

Two Negro Women Seek Seat In Illinois House

CHICAGO — (ANP) — For the first time in the history of the State of Illinois, two Negro women, both Chicagoans were among the many hopefuls seeking a seat in the lower house of the general assembly when voters went to the polls Tuesday.

The two women were Mrs Yolando M. Johnson, and Mrs Floy Clements. If either or both are elected they will be the first Negro women to sit in the general assembly.

B. F. Lewis elected alderman

CHICAGO (NNPA) — Complete unofficial returns Wednesday showed that voters in the West Side 24th Ward elected Benjamin F. Lewis, 47, a city building inspector, by a vote of 3 to 1 as the first colored alderman from that ward.

Lewis, supported by the Democratic machine, defeated Arthur N. Hamilton, 47, a Democrat, who had broken with the organization. The vote was 11,359 for Lewis and 3,867 for Hamilton.

The election filled the vacancy created when Sidney D. Deutsch quit to become city treasurer.

ONLY TWO candidates were in the race, Lewis' winning margin was far less than the 10 to 1 victories usually achieved by the ward machine Democrats.

Hamilton, a former city corporation counsel and former assistant state's attorney, campaigned on charges that ward control is in the hands of nonresident politicans, including Deutsch and Arthur X. Elrod, county commissioner and ward committeeman, who now live in the North Side.

Hamilton also charged that 8 of the 63 precinct captains in the ward are nonresidents.

Howard, Lewis Vie To Oppose Dawson

Democratic Representatives William L. Dawson and Barratt O'Hara, both running without opposition, top the list of candidates who have filed for places on the April 8 primary election ballot.

One of the most interesting contests in the election will pit John Earl Lewis, "Mayor of Bronzeville," against Dr. Theodore R. M. Howard, famed civil rights, leader formerly of Mound Bayou, Miss.

They are seeking the Republican nomination for the First Congressional district, with the winner facing the prospect of doing battle with Dawson in the general election.

No Republican has filed for the Second district, now being represented by Rep. O'Hara.

In other races, Malcolm H. Hemphill will face Dudley S. Martin on the Republican ballot for state central committeeman in the First district. On the Democratic slate, Corneal A. Davis is running without opposition.

Following is a line-up of candidates in major state races:

20th District — Republican: William H. Robinson; Democrat: Corneal A. Davis and James Y. Carter.

21st District — Republican: J. Horace Gardner and James A. Strickling; Democrat: Cecil A. Partee, Kenneth E. Wilson.

22nd District — Republican: Elwood Graham, James L. Tukes; Democrat: Charles F. Armstrong, Floy Clements, Lemuel E. Bentley.

In the running for state senator from the Fifth district are Charles W. McIntyre, Republican, and Marshall Korshak, Democrat.

In the 11th district there are three Republican candidates, Ernest A. Green, Dudley S. Martin and Clarence W. Harding and a lone Democrat, Fred J. Smith.

CECIL PARTEE WRITES THREE ILLINOIS LAWS

Draws on Experience as Prosecutor

BY ROI OTTLEY

Cecil A. Partee, who before his election as state representative from the south side's 22d district compiled a record for successful prosecutions as an assistant state's attorney, has utilized his experience in formulating bills he has introduced in the state legislature.

Partee

Partee, who in collaboration with Herbert Barsy, his former colleague in the state's attorney's office, won 18 consecutive jury trials, has introduced three bills which have been enacted into law.

One provides that indictments become null and void if not tried within four months, a second act more closely regulates casualty insurance companies, and a third provides for the merger of sentences in criminal cases.

A Prosecutor 8 Years

The Negro Democrat served eight years successively under State's Attorneys William H. Touhy and John S. Boyle in the fraud and complaint division, the police courts, and finally in the Cook county criminal courts.

Partee, who feels the variety of cases he has handled was in valuable experience for his legislative work, was elected a state representative in 1956. He regards himself as a watchdog of spending by the state.

The young legislator, who settled in Chicago in 1944, was born in Blytheville, Ark., April 10, 1921. His father, Charles, was a cotton classifier; his mother, Mrs. Bessie Ivy, is a retired school teacher.

Engaged in 3 Spots

He attended elementary school and the Richard B. Harrison High school in Blytheville, where he played football, basketball, and tennis. He graduated in 1938. He enrolled at Tennessee State university, Nashville, Tenn., became a member of the debating team and editor of the school's paper, and graduated in 1944 with a B. S. degree.

Meantime he worked summers in the Joliet steel mills and winters in the school's business office. A steel mill injury caused his rejection for service in the army in World War II. He entered Northwestern university law school, graduating in 1946 with a J. D. degree.

Enters Law Practice

He soon afterwards entered the law offices of the late Joseph Clayton and in 1948 was appointed as an assistant state's attorney. As a state representative, his district roughly embraces the area from 43d to 73d sts. and from Lake Michigan west to South Park way, excluding the Kenwood-Hyde Park district.

Partee, a member of the Congregational Church of Park Manor, is married to the former Paris Bradley, a former Michael Reese medical technician. They have a daughter, Paris, 8.

He is a member of the Chicago Urban league, N. A. A. C. P., and the Cook county, Chicago, national, and Illinois state bar associations.

Dr. Howard Attends Minority Meeting

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Dr. T. R. M. Howard, who migrated from Mound Bayou, Negro-colored town in Mississippi, to Chicago, after the kidnap-murder of 14-year-old Emmett Till, a Chicago lad who was visiting grandparents in that state, attended the minority meeting of the President's Government Contracts committee.

He was displaying a letter signed by William E. King, chairman of the First Congressional District Republican committee, saying the committee is backing Howard for the Republican nomination for Dawson's seat.

The Howard candidacy is not worrying Dawson. The congressman is looking forward to extending his political organization over another Chicago ward, giving the organization another seat in the City Council.

Incidentally, Mr. Dawson says he will make no demands or requests upon the Chicago branch NAACP which his followers recently captured.

Alford In Race For Alderman

J. CLIFFORD ALFORD

The latest candidate to enter the confused and highly fluid political race in the April 8 election for 24th Ward alderman is Jeff Clifford Alford, the 43-year-old Republican Ward committeeman of the Regular Republican organization.

Alford, a six-year resident of the Westside was nominated by the Regular Republican Ward organization to run at a meetng held Dec. 16.

This brings to a total of five candidates who have publicly committed themselves as aldermanic aspirants with the possibility of a sixth person in Mrs. Gloria Pughsley, head of the Greater Lawndale Association of Block Clubs.

Among the five are Ben Lewis, the only democratic endorsed candidate, who is considered by many to be the front runner because of the party's endorsement and fact of dissention which surrounds the Republican and inde- Hamilton, an independent and dependent candidates.

Another hopeful is Atty. Arthur erstwhile democrat whom democratic party stalwarts said is smarting over the fact that his candidacy was not endorsed by the Democratic Ward organization.

Others are Atty. Emory Tate and the Rev. Ivory Blackmon.

Alford who lives at 1654 S. Harding, is presently employed by the Illinois Commerce Commission as a field investigator.

He was formerly a case worker with the Cook County department of Welfare until he assumed his present position with the State.

He is married to the former Julia Walker, of Arkansas. He is a graduate of the Industrial high school of Birmingham and of Roosevelt university where he received an A. B. degree in sociology. He has taken additional post graduate studies at the University of Chicago in anthropology.

Alford is a member of the Shiloah Baptist church and is a teacher at the Chicago Baptist Institute and a member of the Classification Committee of the National Baptist Sunday School and BTU Congress.

He is a veteran of World War II where he served in the Coast Guard and won three battle stars and five ribbons.

Chicago May Get 6th Negro Alderman

Chicago, Jan. 27.—Benjamin F. Lewis is slated to become the first Negro alderman from the westside of Chicago and the sixth in the city council.

Lewis, a city building inspector, was selected last week by the regular Democratic organization dominating the ward. Republicans have named a candidate too; but Democratic nomination is tantamount to election. Last year, President Eisenhower did well to get 4,000 voters in the ward against 21,000 for Adlai Stevenson.

The ward is 80 per cent Negro. Six Negro aspirants coveted the spot when the incumbent alderman resigned to become city treasurer.

Lewis, 45, has lived on the west side of Chicago almost all of his life. He attended Crane Junior High college, was an Army 2nd lieutenant, and has a 20-year-old daughter in Chicago Teacher's college.

1st Negro Runs For City Clerk

Claiming to be the first Negro candidate for city Clerk, Atty. Lemuel E. Bentley is being supported by a non-partisan group called the Chicago League of Negro Voters. He will run in the Democratic primary.

Ex-Demo Aide In Key Role For GOP

A knock-down, dragout political battle, unprecedented in the history of the Chicago Negro community, was assured Tuesday with the runaway victory of Dr. T. R. M. Howard, Candidate for Congress, in the Republican primary.

The battle will be between Congressman William L. Dawson, veteran incumbent of the First Congressional District, and the Republican winner.

The contest will attract nationwide interest because of the stature of Congressman Dawson who is vice chairman of the Democratic National Committee and the kingpin of Negro Democrats throughout the nation.

TENSION GREAT

Cries of treason, disloyalty and double - crossing have already heightened the tension between the Republican and Democratic camps in the First Congressional District.

Frederick P. Wall, veteran Democratic political operator and former secretary and confidante to Congressman Dawson, was credited with a major role in the landslide victory of Dr. Howard in the Republican primary.

Wall will have a decisive role in the general election as he attempts to mobilize dissident Democrats as well as Republicans in support of Dr. Howard's candidacy.

Undercover raiding of precinct captains and key workers by the rival camps is certain to produce friction, if not violence.

On the record, both Congressman Dawson and Dr. Howard have indicated that they will personally refrain from mud-slinging and unethical political practices.

CURRENT REPORTS

It has been reported, however, that Democratic forces have already arranged to transport Mississippi Negroes to Chicago who will allege that Dr. Howard played a fraudulent role as president of the Mississippi Regional Council of Negro leadership.

It also has been reported that Rpeublican partisans will produce witnesses who will claim links between Congressman Dawson and underworld figures.

Keen interest in the political fight in the colored community has already been evinced by the state and county leadership of the Democratic and Republican parties.

Secret war chests, totaling thousands of dollars, are being organized to flood the First Congressional District with political broadsides and propaganda — including teams of speakers on sound trucks.

SPEECHES READIED

Major political figures of both parties from all parts of the country will invade the district to make speeches on behalf of the candidates.

If President Eisenhower comes to Illinois, as is being planned by the state and county organization, every effort will be made to have him speak in the First Congressional District.

7th TERM

President Truman has already been slated to talk in behalf of Congressman Dawson.

Both Dawson and Howard are experienced leaders, well-educated and well-regarded by their colleagues.

Dawson, unopposed in the Democratic primary, is seeking his seventh term in Congress. He was first elected in 1942. Born in Albany, Ga., Congressman Dawson will be 72 years old on April 26.

Dr. Howard, former Mound Bayou, Miss., civil rights fighter, is president of the National Medical Association. He reportedly received several death threats before moving to Chicago in 1953.

6th Ward Demos Dump Ald. Jones

Alderman Sidney Jones was officially dumped Wednesday night by the Sixth Ward Democratic Organization.

A resolution endorsing Committeeman Robert H. Miller as a candidate for Jones' aldermanic post was unanimously adopted at a closed meeting of officers and captains from the ward's 77 precincts.

The long-rumored action came on the heels of a meeting several days ago at which the Sixth Ward Citizens Committee passed a resolution calling for support of Jones in his bid for re-election.

JONES' PLANS

The action set the stage for a spirited contest in the aldermanic election set for Feb. 24. Jones plans to seek re-election as a Democrat.

The Citizens Committee has set up an office for Jones at 1133 E. 63rd st.

Miller and other members of the Sixth Ward Regular Democratic Organization pointed out that they were not engaged in a feud with Jones, but felt that he had not done an adequate job of serving the people of the ward.

Miller, in a statment to the officers and precinct workers, declared: "I am grateful to the captains for selecting me. We're going to build our campaign on service to the people in the ward. We're going to give the ward back to the people.

SIGNERS

The resolution supporting Miller was directed to the Democratic Central Committee of Cook County. It was signed by:

State Rep. Charles Armstrong, president of the Sixth Ward Democratic Organization; Mrs. Odell McSee, committeewoman of the Sixth Ward; Mrs .Ola Lee Muirhead, chairman of the Women's Auxiliary; William Bowman, president of the Young Democrats of the ward; Milton Reynolds III, vice president; Edward Presberry, secretary; Clifton Martin, Sgt.-At-Arms; James Clardy, assistant sergeant-at-arms; Samuel President, financial secretary; Charles Peter Hitt, treasurer, and captains of the ward's 77 precincts.

Jones, an attorney, was elected alderman of the sixth ward four years ago in a run-off election with incumbent Ald. David Muir—who had won the post as a write-in candidate. Jones had the support of the then Democratic committeeman, Elmer J. Whitty. Miller was his campaign manager.

Miller is a widely known businessman and civic leader. He succeeded Whitty as committeeman of the ward.

NO SURPRISE

Jones, said the move did not come as a surprise to him and would not stop him from seeking re-election as a Democrat.

Continuing the incumbent alderman said, "It is purely a desire for a job and Miller has a right to run like anybody else."

Jones said the Sixth Ward Citizens Committee, which was established after he was elected in 1955, has set up an office for him at 1133 E. 63rd st. He asserted that the organization which includes well-known civic, labor and church leaders, was set up to work with him on community problems.

Among those Jones mentioned as belonging to the organization are:

Atty. Odas Nicholson, Warren Seltzer, of Local 351 Dining Car Employees union and a trustee of Parkway Gardens; Harry Gray, president of Local 208 Musicians union; Major Clay, president of United Auto Workers union; Robert Mitchell, Packinghouse Workers union; Mrs. Thelma Clarke, former committeewoman of the Sixth Ward and Mrs. Johnnie Cotton, president of the Woodlawn Friendly Neighbors group.

In seeking reelection without support of the regular Democrat organization, Jones stated he will stress what he considered his accomplishments. Among those he listed:

1) New street lights; (2) repavement of Cottage Grove ave.; (3) widening and relighting Marquette rd.; (4) getting three parking lots; (5) several play lots; (6) the planting of hundreds of trees and (7) the placing of new sewers.

"I really served the people and I deserve to be reelected," Jones said.

The Sixth Ward stretches from 63rd to 73rd and from State to Stoney Island. It has a population of some 100,000 persons.

ROBERT MILLER

Civil Rights, Aim Of Woman Solon

MRS. FLOY CLEMENTS

SPRINGFIELD — (UPI) — The first Negro woman ever elected to the Illinois Legislature as a Democrat who says her chief interests during the General Assembly starting in January will be civil rights and the shortage of school classrooms.

Mrs. Floy Clements, who was elected from Chicago's 22nd District, was interviewed here at a lunch for new members of the House of Representatives.

Besides the election of Mrs. Clements, Illinois also scored another first in the Nov. 4 election when former State Rep. Richard A. Harewood, Chicago Democrat, became the first Negro ever elected to the University of Illinois board of trustees.

Mrs. Clements will join a male Negro delegation in the General Assembly that includes one senator and eight representatives.

She said she started working in Democratic campaigns "for Al Smith in 1928 when you found hardly any Negroes voting the Democratic ticket."

Mrs. Clements is a precinct captain in Chicago and proudly told the new members lunch that she "carried my precinct 7 to 1 for the Democrats."

CIVIL RIGHTS

She said she would be concerned during the legislative session with advancing civil rights for members of her race, particular with efforts for a state law on Fair Employment Practices, commonly called FEPC.

Also, she said, she was interested in school problems and would plug for construction of enough classrooms to eliminate the "half day" school sessions now in effect in some parts of the state.

Mrs. Clements said she "never thought for a minute I'd ever get to the state Legislature," therefore had not yet made up her mind on many of the issues expected to come up in the General Assembly.

"I'll have to feel my way along," she said.

STRAIGHT DEMOCRAT

One thing Mrs. Clements was sure of: She would be voting with the Democrats.

"I have always, all my life, voted the straight Democratic ticket," she said. "I feel it is the party that has done most for Negroes."

Mrs. Clements is a widow and childless. Her husband died in 1949.

She ducked one question, her age, in the manner of comedian Jack Benny. "Just say I'm 39," she said.

Dr. Martin Seen As Top Executive

Dear Reader and Friend: We, the employees of the Sanitary District are using this plan to appeal to you as a race man or woman to cast your vote for DR. J. B. Martin as Trustee of the Metropolitan Sanitary District of Greater Chicago. He polled more nominating votes than any other candidate for either party.

Doctor Martin has torn away the barrier that has kept our people out of many decent positions. Other races take care of their race when elected to office, and now that Dr. J. B. Martin, who was elected in 1949 has placed our people in various positions that have been a credit to our race, we are appealing to you to re-elect him on November 4th.

Doctor Martin is the President of the Negro American Baseball League, a position for which he receives no salary, in order to train young Negro players for the big leagues. You of course already know the progress that these players have made in the major leagues and all but them are from the Negro American League.

So if you are going to vote the Democratic ticket, please, when you come to the Metropolitan Sanitary District, vote for J. B. MARTIN, Roger Severns and Francis T. Delaney in order to keep the Republican party in control of the Sanitary District.

Very truly yours,
Employees of the Metropolitan Sanitary
District of Greater
Chicago

DR. J. B. MARTIN

Bluff and hearty Dr. J. B. Martin, the former Memphis druggist, who came to Chicago to launch his outstanding career as a politician, businessman and sports promoter, is unworried about the results of the election Nov. 4 when he expects to be returned to office on the regular Republican ticket as a Trustee of the Sanitary District of Metropolitan Chicago. Dr. Martin's record, his friends contend, "speaks for itself."

Woodford Porter Highlights Election

John M. Robsion Seeks Re-Election

With the Third Congressional District elections 5 days off, the Republican and Democratic candidates for the seat are wagering confident last minute drives for the right to represent Louisville and Jefferson County in Washington.

Also at stake are seats on the Louisville Board of Education and the election of a judge to the Kentucky Court of Appeals at Frankfort. Judicial candidates are prevented from wagering spirited campaigns by the dignity that surrounds the office they seek. The outcome of this election, therefore, will depend largely upon who is elected to the congressional seat.

For Negroes, in particular, this year could be by far the most important off-year election in recent history. The reasons for this is the non-partisan Board of Education election. The election of a Negro — Woodford Porter — to this post is deemed possible by many political observers.

12 Years In Seat

Republican John M. Robsion, is running for re-election to Congress against Democratic candidate Frank W. Burke. Republicans have held the Third District seat for the past 12 years. Robsion has been the district representative since his election in the Eisenhower landslide in 1952.

Democrats on the whole are optimistic about this year's election for a number of reasons. One is the national trend against the Democratic party, because of President Eisenhower on the ticket and the fact that they feel that Burke is the strongest candidate that they have produced in recent years.

Burke, a former state representative, will also have the support of the solid backing of the Jefferson County Democratic organization. Democrats also claim that Burke is wagering a "hard and vigorous" campaign. He, in the majority of his campaign speeches, has attacked the Eisenhower Administration record while ignoring Robsion's record.

Foreign Policy

Favorite targets of Burke's in these addresses over the Third District has been the Administration's Far Eastern policy, foreign policy and prestige and Communist moral victories. This, says Burke, has been the fault of the current Republican administration.

Robsion was elected to the Third District post when the now Senator Thruston B. Morton declined to run for re-election after serving 3 terms in the House. Robsion has made it clear that he is running on his record and the 600-odd roll-call votes he made.

In defense of American foreign policy that Burke has attacked, Robsion states that American prestige has suffered no damage abroad. He has often said that the Eisenhower Administration has kept us out of war. Robsion believes that the administration is also responsible for the highest prosperity that it has ever known.

Appellate Judges

Running as the Republican candidate for the Kentucky Court of Appeals bench is Frank Ropke, formerly judge of Criminal Court. Ropke, who also served as Jefferson County Commonwealth Attorney, will be a running mate to Robsion.

Opposing Ropke for the appellate judgeship is Democrat incumbent John Moremen. The Democrats have a 6-to-1 edge on the 7-man tribunal. Both candidates for this post are given equal chances of capturing this seat.

Woodford Porter, businessman and operator of the A. D. Porter Funeral Home, has waged a vigorous campaign for election to the Board of Education, and has the solid backing of Negroes and many whites.

Although the school board race is non-partisian, Porter has received the endorsement of the Louisville Federation of Labor, Interdenominational Ministers Alliance of Louisville, the Baptist Ministers and Deacons Committee, the Louisville Citizens League and the Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity.

Lone Negro

Originally selected by a committee of his fellow citizens to seek this all important post, Porter is the lone Negro in this race. Porter has stated that his interest lies in better education for all children of the city.

For 19 years Porter has been busily engaged in running the business his father, the late A. D. Porter, founded 51 years ago. Porter is convinced that his relative "newness" to the prospect of serving on the Board of Education and the election campaign would not hurt his chances.

Said Porter: "The campaign so far has been an interesting experience. The type of thing that I am doing should be able to be done by any civic-minded citizens." He also said that in reference to integration, that "problems that are peculiar to the times can best be solved by having representatives from all segments of the population."

Veteran

A Navy veteran of World War II, Porter is married to the former Harriett Bibb. The two are parents of five children ranging in ages from 14 to 8. The family lives at 4511 Greenwood and attends the Broadway Temple AMEZ Church.

Porter, for many years, has been active in religious, civic and fraternal circles. Currently he is treasurer of the Trustee Board of Broadway Temple and teacher of a Sunday School class.

Negro Wins Seat On Louisville's Education Board

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (ANPA)—Woodford Porter, running as an independent, Tuesday became the first colored person to gain a seat on the Louisville Board of Education.

His election culminated 30-odd years of effort by some 10 candidates to win representation on the school board.

Porter polled 11,036 votes, only 734 fewer than the second place candidate. The highest number of votes, 14,753, went to Scott C. Detrick, a Democrat. Ran 1,160 votes ahead of the fourth ranked candidate who polled 9,876.

Porter's victory indicated that colored voters spurred to bloc voting by the persistent refusal of Omer Carmichael, superintendent of Louisville schools, to integrate teachers and his derogatory remarks about colored people generally, can supply a winning margin of votes.

Frank M. Burke, Democrat, defeated Representative John M. Robinson, Republican incumbent for the Third Congressional seat by a 6,200 margin.

Incumbent Judge John R. Moreman, Democrat, was reelected to Woodford Porter prominent funeral director of 1305 W. Chestnut Street, was unanimously endorsed last week by a citizens committee meeting at the Tenth Street YMCA as a candidate for membership on the Louisville Board of Education in the coming November election.

Unanimous Selection

Porter was selected from a list of several possible candidates, most of whom were present at the citizens meeting. The unanimous selection carried with it a pledge by other aspirants htat they would support Porter's candidacy to prevent a division of the Negro vote among more than one Negro candidate.

The need for a Negro member on the Board of Education has been felt in Louisville for a number of years. That need, according to spokesmen for the committee, is considered now even more urgent than ever. Previous attempts to elect such a member have failed because of the entry of more than one Negro in the race. The citizens' committee, made up of Republicans, Democrats and Independents, will seek to get one hundred per cent cooperation of the Negro vote behind the one candidate, Mr. Porter.

Active In Community

Porter has been a resident of Louisville for 39 years. He has been engaged in business as a funeral director since 1940. His family consists of a wife and five children ranging in age from 8 to 14. He has been active in working for the betterment of the community as a member of the Community Chest drives, American Red Cross drives, the Red Cross Hospital Fund Raising Campaigns, the NAACP and various neighborhood improvement groups.

Attorney Harry S. McAlpin will serve as Mr. Porter's campaign chairman.

Because of the importance of having a Negro member on the Board of Education, the simple justice of such a large segment of the population having representation thereon, and the cost of conducting an effective campaign fund. Checks money orders or cash should be sent to the Woodford Porter Campaign Fund, c/o Atty. Harry S. McAlpin, 608 W. Walnut Street, Louisville, Ky.

Said Porter, "the campaign so far has been an interesting experience. The type of thing that I am doing should be able to be done by any civic minded citizen."

For all Children

In difference to having any special group to represent, Porter said that his interest lies in better education for all children of the city. If elected Porter will join other businessmen with himself who make up the majority of the Board of Education.

In referring to the integration process in Louisville education, Porter said, "problems that are peculiar to the times can best be solved by having representatives from all segments of the population."

When queried on what he thought of his possibilities in gaining the educational seat, Porter replied, "I am working hard toward that end and I am running to win." Porter is the choice of hundreds of civic leaders who have formed the "Citizens For Porter' committee to assist him in the campagn.

Southern School News Credits Defender In Porter's Election

Louisville Defender

Southern School News, publication of the Southern Education Reporting Service, credited the Louisville Defender with playing a large part in the election of [illegible] Porter to the Louisville Board of Education.

In the education newspaper sent the Louisville Defender "carried a lengthy pre-election series of articles criticizing the Louisville schools for delaying faculty integration."

Southern School News quotes Publisher Frank L. Stanley in his column, "People, Places and Problems" thusly:

"Porter ran not necessarily as a Negro representative, but on the overall issues...

"White people themselves were more receptive to a Negro's candidacy largely because of the sacrifice of previous aspirants and more because of our continually improving racial climate, which has made Louisville America's most desegregated southern city...

"The real margin of victory, however, was provided by Negro voters themselves. After many years of coaching they finally learned how to not nullify their votes. Obviously voting for others along with Porter would have had an offsetting effect. But to vote only for him was the only way to build up safe majorities in Negro-dominated precincts."

Pointed out by the sheet was the fact that the daily papers refused to endorse any candidates.

Young Attorney To Seek Seat In La. Legislature

Well over a year before the actual election, Attorney Lawrence A. Wheeler, last Friday, formally announced his candidacy for Louisiana State Representative from the Second Ward of the City of New Orleans in the democratic primary to be held in December, 1959, in order to give time "to properly educate my people as to the value of solidifying themselves behind this campaign physically, spiritually and financially..."

In a formal statement Wheeler said: "The question that arises at this time is why I consider myself the candidate of the people. I feel that I am qualified by my background and training as a lawyer and because I have worked civically, politically, religiously and socially with all the various factions in this ward and throughout the City of New Orleans. I have done this for the specific welfare of my fellow citizens in the second ward and for the general good of all the citizens of New Orleans."

An active member in committees that supported the candidacy of Attorney Earl J. Amedee and Attorney Alexander P. Tureaud, in their bids for Councilman-at-Large and Congress, respectively; Wheeler's statement continued: "My participation in these two campaigns have revealed to me that the best chance that the Negro people have for electing one of their own group as a member of the Louisiana State Legislature is to support a candidate from the second ward of the City of New Orleans.

"I base this on the premise that if an intensive registration drive is carried on in this ward and all of the various religious, political, civic, business and social organizations would rally themselves behind a qualified candidate, one would be assured of a victory."

LAWRENCE A. WHEELER

Wheeler is a native New Orleanian, with his training coming from Dillard and Southern Universities. He has been practicing law for two years.

The New Orleans Voters League has announced through its president, Reverend Dave A. Dennis, that it is supporting Wheeler's candidacy.

"My platform and the structure of my campaign committee will be announced at a future date," Wheeler added.

4 NEGRO CANDIDATE CHALLENGES HEBERT

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 23 (AP)—Three candidates, one a Negro attorney, today challenged Representative F. Edward Hébert of Louisiana's First Congressional District in a Democratic primary.

In the four-way contest with Mr. Hébert were A. P. Tureaud, an attorney; Lionel A. Hernandez and A. Roswell Thompson.

Some 141,041 voters were registered in the district, which includes part of New Orleans and two adjoining parishes (counties).

The last time Mr. Hébert had opposition was in the 1952 primary, when 30,000 votes were cast. That was 21 per cent of a registration of 146,504. Mr. Hébert first was elected in 1940.

Mr. Tureaud, Louisiana counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, was Mr. Hébert's busiest opponent. He hoped for the support of 18,000 Negro voters registered in the district.

Seven other members of Congress in the state and several state and local officials also were to be nominated as Louisiana tested Saturday as an opening day.

'Scared' Candidate Talks After Victory Over Negro

NEW ORLEANS (UPI)—Rep. F. Edward Hebert (D., La.) Sunday credited Louisiana Democrats with "a magnificent victory" in re-electing him over his main opponent, Negro attorney Alexander Tureaud.

Hebert had accused Tureaud of being a "sneak" candidate of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and of being backed by New Orleans 17,000 registered Negro voters.

A record of 73,089 votes were cast in Saturday's Democratic primary in the First Congressional District (Greater New Orleans), giving Hebert almost a six-to-one lead over Tureaud.

"The fact that I have been returned to office for the 10th consecutive time by the greatest majority I have ever received is only incidental to the victory the people themselves have won," Hebert said. "There can be no doubt that the nation knows where we stand," he added.

While campaigning, Hebert admitted that he was "running scared," and said he feared the combination of the Negro block voting for Tureaud and voter apathy would result in Tureaud's nomination in the Democratic primary.

However, an astonishing 52 per cent of the total registration went to the polls, compared to a bare 20 per cent six years ago, the last time Hebert was opposed.

Hebert 'Runs Scared' Against Mixer Leader

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — New Orleans voters today decide whether they will send a Negro integration leader to Congress.

Alexander Tureaud, an attorney who has led the legal fight to integrate Louisiana schools, is pitted against veteran Rep. F. Edward Hebert in the highlight of Louisiana's Democratic primary election.

Registered Democrats take to the pools to select eight Democratic nominees for congress and a host of city and state officials.

But the focal point of an otherwise listless summer campaign was New Orleans, where Tureaud has made the strongest challenge by a Louisiana Negro for a national office since reconstruction days.

Tureaud, a 59-year-old newcomer as a political candidate, but an "old pro" in precinct organization, has the solid support of 17,000 Negro Democrats in the 1st Congressional District.

Hebert, a popular ex-newspaperman seeking his tenth term in Congress where he is chairman of a House Armed Services subcommittee, admits he is "running scared."

A switch in the voting day from Tuesday to Saturday, when many Orleanians leave the city heat for Gulf Coast resorts, and lack of labor's support figure to cost the congressman votes.

Tureaud dismisses the current Little Rock integration troubles as a factor in his campaign for election, but political observers note that it might have shaken pro-segregationist voters from any apathetic tendencies..

But even if he is nominated, Tureaud would probably face another harsh test against a Republican opponent in the November elections.

Normally, however, Democratic nomination in Louisiana is tantamount to election.

Amedee Raps Backers Of Judge Hamlin

Speaking during the third straight Sunday broadcast of "The Forum of Public Opinion" over radio station WTIX last Sunday morning, Attorney Earl J. Amedee flayed Mayor delesseps S. Morrison's "alliance" with Leander Perez of Plaquemines Parish, "who is the arch-enemy of the Negro."

Amedee asked, "Has 'Chep' decided that to be elected Governor he has to join forces with the Negro-haters of this state?"

Amedee continued:

"A concrete example of his disregard for the feelings of the Negro voter of this area is his support of civil district court Walter Hamlin for Supreme Court Justice in the election of November 15."

Then Amedee asked two more questions - "Doesn't Morrison remember that just a month or so ago Judge Hamlin was the featured speaker at a White Citizens Council rally at the Municipal Auditorium? Or was he (Morrison) in South America or Europe?"

Amedee went on to state that the Negro and the liberal thinking people of this area aren't going to be stampeded behind a candidate that is the darling of the White Citizens Council.

"It appears that Judge Rene Viosca of the seventh ward... is the choice of labor...I heartily endorse the candidacy of Judge Rene Viosca for Supreme Court Justice and ask all my friends to vote for him on November 15..." Amedee declared.

The program is sponsored by the New Orleans Voters Association, Attorney Amedee, President; Miss Bertha Ray Parr, radio secretary.

Others on the program included Earl J. Amedee, Jr., Assistant Moderator, and Miss Leontine Mundy. The program is heard at 10:30 a.m., Sundays.

LOUISIANA

Amedee Outlines 5 Point Platform

Earl J. Amedee, candidate for City Councilman-at-large, in his final week of vigorous campaigning announced a nine point platform headed by a strong stand for "an ordinance calling for Fair-Employment practices in our City Agencies."

Amedee's introduction of an FEPC act in his campaign platform was something new and different to politcal campaigns in New Orleans and the deep south where Negroes have been systematically excluded from employment generally in various occupations under the direction of political heads.

Attorney C. Alexander, campaign manager for Amedee, said, "The New Orleans Item has endorsed Morrison for re-election because he is a good friend in government. No Negro has ever had in the City Hall of Louisiana. He is courageous, friendly, and he will serve the Mayor of all the people of the City of New Orleans."

Amedee's platform as announced by NOVA is: (1) I shall maintain my independence as a legislative representative of the people in conformity with the provisions of the new city charter, which was adopted in 1954. (2) I shall serve in this high office with dignity and use my office to promote good will and better relations in New Orleans, the State of Louisiana, the South throughout the United States. I shall work to improve the slum side of the public housing program in our city. (4) Shall work for the extension of sanitation service, such as trash and garbage collections, to all areas of the City. (5) Shall introduce an ordinance calling for Fair-Employment Practices in our City Agencies in order that the City may be able to utilize and benefit by its total man-power; (6) Shall support a strong, independent and impartial Civil Service for our City Government; (7) Shall resist with all my power any attempt to increase taxes; (8) As an at-large member of the City Council, I shall serve and represent all the people of the City of New Orleans; and, (9) Shall do everything within my power to promote the progress of the City of New Orleans as one of the leading seaports, to continue the expansion of the city trade with Latin countries and promote programs to encourage and invite new industries into our Fair City.

NOVA's final mass rally before wrapping up pre-election day activities will be a gigantic Mass Rally meeting set for Friday night, Jan. 31, at Hayes Chicken Shack, 2101 Louisiana Ave. The Crescent City Independent Voters League is assisting in the promotion of the rally. Reservations are $2.50 per plate and may be made by calling TUlane 3528. More than 500 people are expected to attend the banquet.

Among platform guests scheduled are: Mayor deLesseps S. Morrison, Glenn P. Clasen, Atty. Richard A. Dowling, Ernest J. Hessler and James Comiskey.

Organizations listed as supporting Amedee are: NOVA; Crescent City Independent Voters League, Clarence "Chink" Henry, president; The New Orleans Civic Voters League, Rev. Dave A. Dennis, president, along with numerous civic organizations, church groups and social clubs.

AMEDEE SEEKS WORK MEASURE

Council Candidate Asks Fair Practices Law

An ordinance calling for "fair employment practices in city agencies" was proposed Wednesday by Earl J. Amedee, Negro attorney running for councilman-at-large in the Democratic primary election Saturday.

Other points in Amedee's platform as announced Wednesday are:

To maintain "my independence," to serve with dignity and to promote better race relations in New Orleans, to improve the "human side" of the public housing program, to work for the extension of trash collections to all areas of the city, to support civil service and to promote port progress with Latin America.

Amedee also announced that the New Orleans Voters Association will hold a final rally at 8 p. m. Friday at 2103 Louisiana.

He said platform guests will be Mayor deLesseps S. Morrison, city councilman Glenn P. Clasen, attorney Richard Dowling, Ernest J. Hessler and James Comiskey.

Amedee said NOVA has endorsed Morrison for re-election.

Atty. A.P. Tureaud Files For Congress

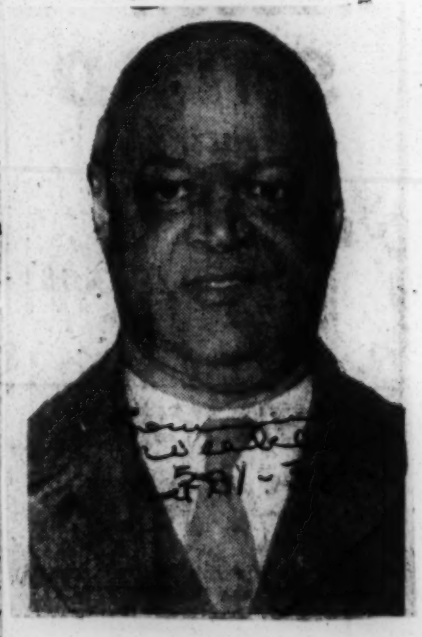
Alexander P. Tureaud, dean of Negro lawyers and veteran civil rights lawyer in the Pelican State, filed this week for election for the office of U. S. Congressman from Louisiana in opposition to the present incumbent, F. Edward Hebert, who has held office for the past twenty years.

Mr. Tureaud is a native of New Orleans and since his return from Howard University, where he graduated from the law school, has been active in civil rights, civic improvements, and in the welfare of the Negro public in general. He has acted as attorney for practically all of the important civil rights cases in the State. His first great victory was the securing of equal salaries for Negro teachers. Following this was the case relative to discriminatory practices involved in the registration of Negroes in Louisiana, equal school facilities for Negroes, admission of Negroes to public schools, admission of Negroes to Louisiana State University law school, graduate schools and to the medical school for students in nursing education, and to the undergraduate schools of Louisiana State University and other state supported institutions of higher learning.

Mr. Tureaud is married to the former Lucille Dejoie and the father of six children and one grand child. He is a member of the Knights of Peter Claver, national Catholic organization, and is presently the national attorney for that organization. He has held positions of national secretary and national editor in the same organization.

He is a member of the Orleans Parish Progressive Voters League, former president of both the local New Orleans Branch of the NAACP and of the State Branches of the same body. He belongs to the Alpha Phi Alpha national fraternity and was recently honored for meritorious achievement by that body, by the chapters in Baton Rouge. He is secretary of the Pyramid Life Insurance Company and general counsel for the New Orleans Insurance Executives Council. He is running as an independent Democrat.

Among the many honors heaped upon Attorney Tureaud have been a public testimonial and a plaque given him by the fifteen Negro owned and operated insurance companies of the New Orleans Insurance Executive Council, an award for distinguished service given by the board of trustees of Howard University. He served as chairman for New Orleans in the War Bond sales conducted by the United States Treasury Department during World War II.



NEGRO LAWYER FILES FOR LOUISIANA SEAT IN CONGRESS

New Orleans, La., June 1.—Alexander P. Tureaud, dean of Negro lawyers and veteran civil rights lawyer in the Pelican State, filed this week for election for the office of U. S. Congressman from Louisiana in opposition to the present incumbent F. Edward Hebert, who has held office for the past 20 years.

He has acted as attorney for practically all of the important civil rights cases in the state. His first great victory was the securing of equal salaries for Negro teachers. Following this was the case relative to discriminatory practices involved in the registraton of Negroes in Louisiana, equal school facilities for Negroes, admission of Negroes to public schools, admission of Negroes to Louisiana State University law school, graduate schools and to the medical school for students in nursing education, and to the under-graduate schools of Louisiana State University and other state supported institutions of higher learning.

Mr. Tureaud is married to the former Lucille Dejoie and the father of six children and one grandchild. He is a member of the Knights of Peter Claver, national Catholic organization, and is presently the national attorney for that organization. He has held positions of national secretary and national editor in the same organization.

He served as chairman for New Orleans in the War Bond sales conducted by the United States Treasury Department during World War II.

In Race—Atty. Alexander P. Tureaud, a native of New Orleans, and dean of civil rights lawyers in Louisiana, has entered the race for the office of U. S. Congressman in opposition to the incumbent F. Edward Hebert.

N'Orleans Attorney Supported For Seat In U. S. Congress

By O. C. W. Taylor

NEW ORLEANS (ANP) —Experienced politicains of both races stated this week that A. P. Tureaud stands a good chance to be elected to the U. S. Congress from Louisiana's First Congressional district and will be one of the first Negroes to achieve that distinction.

The district in which Atty. Tureaud is seeking election consists of about half of New Orleans, the lower half in which the majority of Negroes live, and the parishes of St. Bernard and Plaquomines. These two parishes are sparsely inhabited but there are a few Negroes registered in St. Bernard. In Plaquemines no Negroes are registered. This parish is at the mouth of the Mississippi River.

DEADLINE RELEASE

The fact that the present incumbent may feel himself embarrassed here he forced to campaign against a Negro candidate, may give added advantage to Atty. Tureaud. Added to this is the fact that this is an off-year election and most white voters consider the election "in the bag" seems to give Tureaud another edge.

There are about ten Negro political organizations in New Orleans. These have never been able to agree upon anything before now but this election they seem to be of one mind—the support of Tureaud. The Tureaud committee states that many from throughout the United States are sending donations to the fund at the Tureaud headquarters, 1108 N. Claiborne.

Lone Negro Seeks Office At Kenner

New Orleans, La.

Forty-five years old James Louis is the lone man of his race to qualify as the first Negro candidate for the office of city alderman in the City of Kenner election on April 8.

He is one of 26 who is trying for one of the five contested seats.

The husband of Mrs. Della Louis, he is the father of five foster children, a member of the board of deacons of the Oakland Baptist Church and also a member of the Scottish Rite Masonic Order, Lodge No. 72.

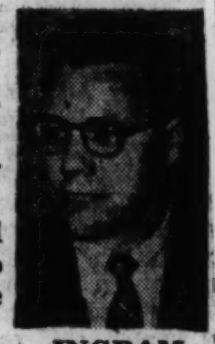
His campaign manager is the Rev. Mr. A. P. Clay, minister of Oakland Church.

Two Candidates Change Their Style

By Bob Ingram

IT IS REMARKABLE what a campaign for governor can do to a man.

Take Faulkner for instance. In 1954 it was James H. Faulkner, successful businessman, outstanding legislator, dignity personified, with every public phrase a guarded one lest it offend somebody.



INGRAM

He was a grown-up boy wonder far removed from the vulgar professional politicians, immaculately dressed, almost untouchable.

That particular Faulkner model ran well, but second. He hopes to do better a week from Tuesday with the new model.

It is now Jimmy rather than James H., he has donned a sombrero, his teeth frequently clamp a cigar, and he talks far and wide of having the "best political organization" of any candidate in the race.

Faulkner has also sought to dispel the idea that once elected he might be well nigh unreachable.

"You won't have to have an appointment to see me," Faulkner claims on the stump. "You just walk right in. In fact, I'm gonna knock the hinges off that door to the governor's office.

"Why you can come right in, take a seat and put your feet on my desk if you want to," Faulkner continues. "That is unless you are a lady."

Four years ago James H. Faulkner would have preferred death to making such a statement; today Jimmy Faulkner does it without the slightest wince.

Patterson's Change Of Pace

Then there's the case of Atty. Gen. John Patterson. Unlike Faulkner's transformation, Patterson's metamorphosis has taken only a few months.

No more than 90 days ago he was at best a rather dull, listless campaigner, showing little or no relish for the potitical role he had chosen to play. He wasn't particularly excited, nor were his followers.

But in recent weeks he has improved tremendously as a campaigner. He has developed an efective speaking ability, displaying much more force and enthusiasm, an ingredient lacking earlier in the campaign.

He is also using the Phenix City story to the hilt, yet without overdoing it. Patterson opens every stump speech with a note of thanks to the crowd "for the fine vote you gave my daddy in his two races four years ago."

"My daddy was mighty proud of the fine vote he got in ——— County," Patterson will state, filling the blank in his speech with the proper county.

And he reminds the crowd that "everytime I take a law book down from the shelf in my office I get smut from where the gangsters tried to burn me and my daddy out." The crowd eats this up.

Running Mad

BUT the Patterson who barged belligerently through the heart of the Black Belt Thursday was still a different one than the Patterson who has set the woods afire in the last two weeks.

Thursday he was mad at everybody except those who support him, in fact he was almost carried away by his anger.

The way he stated his case Thursday, those who do not vote for him May 6 are either gangsters, racketeers, NAACP members or professional politicians. It was a rather broad indictment, perhaps drawn in anger.

Patterson was particularly incensed at The Advertiser, a feeling he displayed personally as well as politically. A leper would have received a friendlier reception than was accorded this reporter on the stump tour.

Unpictured And Uncounted

THE attorney general was apparently enraged at The Advertiser for its coverage of his rally on the Capitol steps a week ago. Patterson partisans protested that no picture was used, no mention was made of the size of the crowd.

Actually a picture was used in the earlier editions, but a major jailbreak with accompanying photographs rooted Patterson out of his picture, and from a news standpoint, properly so.

As to the crowd, no estimate was made because so many people were seated in parked automobiles that an accurate total would have been impossible. For the record, another newspaper used the figure of 2,000 while Patterson supporters are claiming 6,000 and upwards. A fair guess from all reports would be somewhere in between these two figures, but either way he had an encouraging turnout.

At that one rally he spoke to more people than Faulkner attracted in seven day-time stops in Montgomery earlier in the week. And on the crowd angle, Patterson's rally in Selma Thursday night attracted more than twice the number who heard Faulkner in the same auditorium a week earlier.

The Klan Vote

IN THE Selma crowd were several men recognized as active in the Montgomery Klavern of the Ku Klux Klan. This group is supporting Patterson almost to the man, as is the Selma Klavern. The Bessemer KKK is claimed by the Wallace group.

Ironically, Patterson's attack on the press sounded very much like the tactics used by the man the attorney general has been most critical of in the campaign—Gov. Folsom. Folsom prospered and grew strong with his frequent attacks on "them lying newspapers."

A couple of glaring inconsistencies have shown up frequently in Patterson's stumping.

On one hand he has taken credit in his stump talks (and also in the Patterson comic book) for running all the gangsters and racketeers out of Alabama. But on the other hand he warns that these same gangsters and racketeers "are riding the highway of Alabama trying to defeat John Patterson." Either they are here or not here.

For Want Of Prosecution

ANOTHER claim made by Patterson is that he has proof of many cases of mis-spending in state government by the present administration.

"If I had time I could list you hundreds of cases where there have been kickbacks and commissions paid by the present administration," Patterson has contended the length and breadth of the state.

Yet the record will show that in more than three years as the state's highest legal officer he has not obtained a single indictment, much less a conviction, against any individual or state official accused of such wrong-doing.

Despite the political mistakes Patterson has made, and there have been enough of them to kill most any other candidate, he has made strong gains in the last few weeks.

Neither Wallace nor Faulkner is particularly eager to be in a run-off with Patterson.

Negroes Are Ignored By School Board

There are no Negroes on the recently appointed board of 22 members named by Emile Wagner, arch segregationist and president of the Orleans Parish school board, to study the financial situation of the Orleans Parish school system.

This fact was asertained by the Louisiana Weekly upon contacting the school board office. A spokesman for the board told the Weekly that as far as she knew there wasn't any particular reason why Negroes were not on the board.

Wagner, seemingly a full time segregationist and part time board president, except when integration issues are discussed, was according to the spokesman, "out of town." She related that Wagner would not return until the next board meeting, scheduled for April 28.

Wagner was content to name only white members to the board, despite the fact that some 10,000 Negro children in this city attend school on the deplorable "platoon" system.

Tureaud Fails In Bid For Congress

Alexander P. Tureaud was defeated here Saturday in his bid for election in the Democratic primary by the incumbent F. Edward Hebert by a better than six to one lead. Returns gave Hebert 60,936 votes to 9,924 for Tureaud.

The presence of Attorney Tureaud as a candidate for Congressman from the First Congressional District is part of a national trend where courageous Negroes are offering themselves as candidates for public offices on all levels.

Attorney Tureaud had this comment to make - "I am indeed gratified at the turnout of voters on Saturday, August 23rd, although this was an off-year election and on a Saturday, too. Of course, there were many who failed to turn out for various reasons, but our purpose was accomplished. It was not so much a campaign for an office as it was one for principles."

"I want to thank all of the voters, commissioners and poll workers, and many civic-minded citizens for their help and great assistance. All shall have my everlasting gratitude."

Jackson Acox, Tureaud's campaign manager said: "The results of Saturday's primary were quite gratifying to Tureaud's camp although he was defeated for the position of congressman. A sample of six predominantly Negro precincts with a total of 3978 registered Negro voters and 236 registered white voters, Tureaud received a total of 2384 votes. This means that slightly better than 59 per cent of the Negro voters turned out and voted for Tureaud.

Tureaud's campaign was for a cause and not so much to be elected to an office. Tureaud's opponent had the backing of all of the organized political factions of this City, three daily papers, all of the present and past tax assessors of New Orleans, the White Citizens Councils and the bosses of St. Bernard and Plaquemine parishes. In addition to this, there were many Negroes who did not turn out to vote because of fear. This was plainly demonstrated by the fact that out of one hundred eight nine Negro commissioners appointed to serve at the polls, most of them refused to serve, leaving about 25 that accepted the appointment, notwithstanding each commissioner would have received $25 for the day's work, paid by the City of New Orleans."

A study of the voting, the first time in our state's history an election was held on Saturday and not the traditional Tuesday, indicated that Attorney Tureaud's candidacy served as a stimulus to voters of all racial groups and an unprecedented record voting of more than 52 per cent was set for an "off-year" election. A total of 127,000 voters were qualified to vote in Saturday's election.

Tureaud throughout his campaign kept his many talks, campaign speeches purged of "mud-slinging" and the racial issue, which was injected by Hebert's camp through the White Citizens Council. They attacked Mr. Tureaud because of his relationships as legal counsel for the NAACP. This explosive weapon was used to arouse the many "here-to-fore none too anxious" white voters to make their way to the polls" not to vote for Hebert, who could have easily been Mickey Mouse, but against the man who has in many Civil Rights cases fought to make Democracy work the same way for all American citizens.

Although Tureaud failed in his attempt to unseat Rep. Hebert it was conceded he made the best showing achieved by a Negro in a southern congressional election since the turn of the century.

A further study of Saturday's voting indicated that "it can happen even here in New Orleans" ---Negro voters will as a Bloc vote.

In predominately Negro precincts the vote was for Attorney Tureaud, but there just was not enough ammunition --- VOTES. Percentage-wise Tureaud garnered better than 59% per cent of the 17,000 votes within the Negro community.

The "political brick" tossed by the White Citizen's Council that Tureaud was the NAACP's candidates, was of course the "Big Lie" technique "Patented" by Hitler.

According to A. J. Chapital, Sr., president of the local N. A. A. C. P. Branch, and Attorney Tureaud himself, "the NAACP is a non-partisan organization and it does not propose support or endorse candidates for public office."

Negro Attorney Asks State Post

Lawrence A. Wheeler, Negro, attorney, 4325 Clio, Friday announced his candidacy for the state House of Representatives from the Second Ward in the 1959 Democratic primary.

At the same time, Dave A. Dennis, president of the New Orleans Voters League, a group which has Negro members, announced that the organization had endorsed Wheeler's candidacy.

Wheeler said he had been active in politics, having served on the Tureaud for Congress committee and having been a member of one of the committees supporting the candidacy of Revius J. Ardoin for councilman at large in the last city election.

"I am announcing my candidacy this early because I think that in order to properly educate my people as to the value of solidifying themselves behind this campaign physically, spiritually and financially will take a year," Wheeler said.

Tureaud Opposes 20 Year Veteran

By O. C. W. TAYLOR

NEW ORLEANS — Alexander P. Tureaud, dean of Negro lawyers here and veteran civil rights lawyer in the Pelican state, filed this week as a candidate for U. S. Representative from Louisiana. He opposes the present incumbent, F. Edward Herbert, who has held office for the past 20 years.

Tureaud is a native of New Orleans and has been active in civil rights, civic improvements, and in the welfare of the Negro public in general.

He has acted as attorney for practically all of the important civil rights cases in the state. His first great victory was the securing of equal salaries for Negro teachers.

Following this was the case relative to discriminatory practices involved in the registration of Negores in Louisiana, equal school facilities for Negroes, admission of Negroes to public schools, admission of Negroes to Louisiana State university law school, graduate schools and to the medical school for students in nursing education, and to the undergraduate schools of Louisiana State university and other state supported institutions of higher learning.

Tureaud is married to the former Lucille Dejoie and is the father of six children and one grand child.

He is a member of the Knights of Peter Claver, national Catholic organization, and is presently the national attorney for the organization.

He has held positions of national secretary and national editor in the same organization.

He is a member of the Orleans Parish Progressive Voters League, former president of both the local New Orleans branch of the N. A. A. C. P. and the State branch of the same body.

He belongs to the Alpha Phi Alpha national fraternity and was recently honored for meritorious achievement by that body by the chapters in Baton Rouge.

He is secretary of the Pyramid Life Insurance company and general counsel for the New Orleans Insurance Executives council. He is running as an independent Democrat.

Among the many honors heaped upon Atty. Tureaud have been a public testimonial and a plaque given him by the 15 Negro owned and operated insurance companies of New Orleans under the name of the New Orleans Insurance and Executives Council and an award for distinguished service given by the board of trustees of Howard university.

He served as chairman for New Orleans in the War Bond sales conducted by the United States Treasury Department during World War II.

Amedee Campaigning Hard For City Council Seat

Attorney Earl J. Amedee, a candidate for City Councilman-at-large, announced his speaking engagements for the remaining days of January. The announcement was made through his campaign manager, Rev. Avery C. Alexander, executive president of the New Orleans Voters Association of which Amedee is president.

Mr. Amedee has been relieved of his duties as president of NOVA to pursue a hard hitting campaign, which has been described as "strenuous but well-received by all voters of Greater New Orleans."

Mr. Amedee, now a veteran campaigner having run for public office on several other occasion, has appeared before groups of various sizes and interests. "No organization or group is too large or small for me to meet with, providing time will permit. I only wish that I had more time so that I could meet with all groups inviting me," said Amedee.

A preview of his busy speaking schedule leaves no doubt that this courageous young man is conducting a vigorous campaign. Listed among his recent engagements were: Jan. 10, A Labor Meeting, 544 Camp Street; Jan. 11, The Studs Club; Jan. 13, Florida Garden Civic Association; Jan. 14, The Frontiers of America; Jan. 14, A Mass Rally at The Caffin Theatre; Jan. 15, PTA-Council at Xavier Prep; Jan. 16, Educational TV-Program WYES.

Rev. Alexander stated that NOVA was staging an UPtown Rally Banquet at Hayes Restaurant, 2101 Louisiana Avenue, at 8:00 p. m. Reservations are $2.50 per plate and may be made through NOVA or members of the Banquet Committee.

In a private interview with a Louisiana Weekly reporter, Mr. Amedee expressed the belief that he could win this election. "I am not in this campaign for publicity and fun. I believe that with the proper support of Negro voters and other liberals of this City, I can be elected. I have neither the time nor money to waste, and nothing can stop my feeling of confidence."

Typical of all comments about Attorney Amedee's campaign was in that of a construction worker. He said, "I am happy to see Mr. Amedee again run for office. I believe that just his presence is a sign that Negroes must put their own in these offices if they expect to get ahead here in New Orleans and elsewhere. I am voting for him, win or lose! This I know, he won't use my money against me like that jewelry store owner."

Leonard W. Gunzburg, owner of Manners Jewelers, 139 Baronne Street, in announcing his candidacy for office of mayor did so on a platform of segregation and race-hate. (See story in this edition.) Many Negro customers have vowed to boycott Manners which would certainly stop Gunzburg's boast of "my sales are the highest."

Hebert Swamps Negro Foe In Louisiana Vote

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Negro attorney P. P. Tureaud failed dismally in his attempt to unseat Rep. F. Edward Hebert in Louisiana's 1st Congressional District, but Tureaud made the best showing achieved by a Negro in a Southern election since the turn of the century.

Hebert, archfoe of waste in government, scored a landslide victory and a 10th term in Saturday's unique Democratic primary, rolling up 60,936 votes in complete returns from 223 precints. The primary was the first ever held in Louisiana on a Saturday. The 1958 Legislature changed the voting date from the traditional Tuesday at the urging of Gov. Earl Long.

DISTANT SECOND

Tureaud finished a distant second in the four-man race with 1,924 votes. Although he claimed he was not backed by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, Tureaud anticipated substantial support from approximately 18,000 Negro voters among the more than 141,000 registered in the 1st District.

Rep. Overton Brooks easily won renomination in the 4th District and Rep. James Morrison was returned to Congress from the 6th District.

Amedee To Back 'Chep' Morrison

Attorney Earl J. Amedee, a candidate for City Councilman-at-Large, announced Tuesday the endorsement of Mayor de Lesseps S. Morrison as candidate for Mayor in the coming election on Tuesday, Feb. 4.

Mr. Amedee, in making his announcement at a luncheon meeting of the New Orleans Chapter of the Frontiers of America, pointed out that the Amedee ticket had endorsed as my running mate for Councilman-at-Large Glenn P. Clasen and that Mayor Morrison had been added to the ticket."

According to NOVA the Amedee campaign is "snowballing." "Wherever Mr. Amedee appears his supporters increase and he is being labeled the candidate to beat by the opposition," stated Rev. Alexander. He further pointed out that "it is necessary that voters must vote for two candidates for Councilman-at-Large. There can be no single shots, all voters must vote for two in order that their votes will register. The winning combination is easy to remember, just vote 7 and 10," (Amedee and Clasen).

Amedee has informed his thousands of listeners that "I will be a living petition for you on the city council when elected." He has admitted frankly that "In this race I am considered a long-shot, the dark horse, but often the long-shot wins, and it is my feeling that this is my time to win." Following his address to a business organization, one of the members stated that "Amedee is going to continue to run for office until he wins, and this may easily be the time. I have no doubt whether or not he can hold the job. He is qualified and has my vote."

Rev. Clay Candidate For Jefferson School Board

Reverend Arthur Paul Clay, prominent clergyman of Kenner, has announced his candidacy for a position as a member of the Jefferson Parish School Board from the Ninth Ward, in the upcoming election scheduled July 29.

An eight point program outlined by Rev. Clay, pledges the following:

(1) Respect the rights of the people (2) work in the better interest of the children (3) seek to protect the interest of the taxpayer (4) strive for an equation in financial distribution without regard to race or locality (5) work for the betterment of both races (6) fight earnestly for improvement of building facilities (7) to fight with every legal weapon to remove the control of politics from the system and to restore to the administration the freedom that is rightfully theirs, and (8) to bring the findings to the people for their endorsements or rejection.

Rev. Clay, speaking of the forthcoming election, said recently:

"One of the grave concerns of our country today is being able to cope with the educational needs of the child. Such is important and requires competence, devotion and intelligent planning. The tremendous influx in post-war population increase in the elementary and secondary schools leave no alternative other than competitive planning and wise use of the taxable dollar. Sound principles and wise planning are conducive to National security.

"If elected, I pledge to fight for the child, and safeguard the interest of the taxpayer. I am not a politician; I am an independent candidate, who has the interst of the child at heart. Check my interest in the past and you will see I am sincere. Your children will learn and play with the fight of Clay."

Rev. Clay is a life long resident of Kenner. He is married to the former Dorothy Smith and the couple have five children. Rev. Clay attended Kenner Elementary School and graduated from Kenner High School.

The candidate holds a Bachelor of Science degree from Xavier University; the Master of Arts degree in the field of Guidance and Counseling from Xavier University; the Bachelor of Divinity from Union Seminary; the Master of Theology from Union Seminary, and the Master of Religious Education from New Orleans Baptist Seminary.

Rev. Clay was honorably discharged from the United States Navy after serving three years and two months.

Negro Candidate Fails in Louisiana

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 24 (AP). —Negro attorney A. P. Tureaud failed miserably in his attempt to unseat Rep. F. Edward Herbert in Louisiana's 1st Congressional District, but he made the best showing achieved by a Negro in a Southern election since the turn of the century.

Hebert, arch-foe of waste in government, scored a landslide victory for his 10th term in Saturday's unique Democratic primary, rolling up 20,936 votes in complete returns from 223 precincts.

Tureaud finished a distant second in the four-man race with 9924 votes. Although he claimed he was not backed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Tureaud had anticipated substantial support from approximately 18,000 Negro voters.

Tureaud In Final All Out Bid For Congress

Saturday, August 23rd, is the Democratic election primary day and Att'y Alexander P. Tureaud, candidate for Congressman from the 1st Congressional District comprising wards 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9 and 15 and the parishes of St. Bernard and Plaquemines, has left no stone unturned in his efforts to win a seat in the Congress of the U. S.

This campaign has attracted national interest and the closer it gets to election day, the more the interest on the part of local voters is shown. However, all has not been quiet on the local front. There is a definite restlessness on the part of the incumbent candidate and the members of the White Citizens Councils about the outcome of this election!

Jackson V. Acox, campaign manager for Mr. Tureaud, stated that everything is working in Tureaud's favor and that Tureaud is a sure bet to be the strongest opponent the incumbent has ever faced. He further stated that the type of positive campaign Tureaud is waging and the enthusiam demonstrated by the people, giving their time, their labor and their dollars, and the wide-spread endorsements given by practically all of our political organizations, are most gratifying and encouraging. Acox stressed that we cannot afford to let up; we must follow through on election day. Every voter in the 1st Congressional District should make it a "must" to go to the polls and vote. Tureaud can win if you vote. The polls will open at 6:00 a.m. and close at 8:00 p.m. For further information and assistance on election day, telephone TUlane 3225 or TUlane 5811 or WHitehall 3-2088.

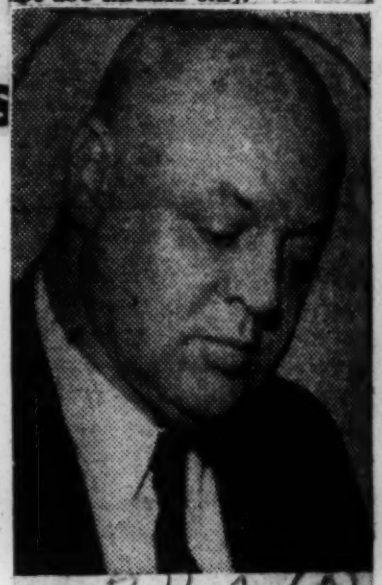
And not only are Negroes championing their own cause in Attorney Tureaud's campaign, but the Negro vote for Tureaud has been solidified by, of all people, a full time race hater, Leander Perez. Perez, didn't know it but because of his hatred for the Negro, anything he might say against a Negro would in effect be working for the man Perez speaks against.

Perez, speaking on the Citizens Council bi-weekly telecast over WJMR Television, the avowed segregationist of St. Bernard and Plaquamines Parishes attacked Attorney Tureaud, and thereby gained for him many supporters. Perez charged that Attorney Tureaud is seeking to deceive the white voters and that Tureaud is a "stooge of the NAACP."

Perez declared that Tureaud filed under the name of Alexander P. Tureaud whereas he has been known as A. P. Tureaud. Perez looked upon this as an apparent attempt to disguise his identity and get white voters to cast their ballots for him. He then pleaded with the television audience to go to the polls and give his candidate an overwhelming victory.

And how did the Tureaud camp take Perez's appearance on TV? Rubbing his hands with glee, Jackson V. Acox, campaign manager, said he hopes that he can find the time to thank Perez on behalf of the Tureaud Committee, for the publicity given Tureaud at the expense of the Citizens Council.

Acox, continuing his review of Perez's appearance, said that the race-hate merchant, again ran true to form and distorted facts for the purpose of exploiting poorly informed voters. Acox stated: "No one should know better than Mr. Perez that the election laws require that Tureaud, like the other three candidates, could not use initials only."



Defeated— Atty. Alexander Tureaud, New Orleans civil rights fighter, was defeated, almost six to one, in the Democratic primary for U. S. Congressman. Victorious was the incumbent, F. Edward Hebert. Many of the 17,000 Negro voters failed to vote for Attorney Tureaud.

Mrs. Dixon is delegate-elect with highest number of 4th Dist. votes

BALTIMORE

Mrs. Irma George Dixon, 1906 McCulloh St., polled the highest number of votes ever any woman of her race has ever received to win the post as delegate-elect to the Maryland House of Delegates.

Her victory came after she waged a successful campaign as a Democratic 4th District candidate.

Mrs. Dixon was also chosen to run on the citizens coalition ticket.

The owner of the Valentine Dress Shop located at 1906 McCulloh St., Mrs. Dixon was interviewed on Wednesday, the day following election.

* * *

AS SHE talked with the AFRO the newly elected Delegate remarked with her well-known wit and humor:

"I am glad it's over. Do you know I almost lost my voice yesterday?"

She continued with a broad smile: "I am known as a talker. I always talk a lot. But this time is the firrt time I have almost talked my voice out."

She added: "I am deeply grateful and humble to God, my husband and the people of the 4th District for their faith in me.

"I pledge myself to work untiringly for the best interests of every segment of the populace."

AS MRS. Dixon commented on the election her telephone was ringing with messages of congratulation.

She said: "It started late last night and has done nothing but ring since before day."

Mrs. Dixon stated that she has received many other messages of congratulation including flowers, cards, long distance calls and telegrams.

A FORMER school teacher, Mrs. Dixon is a native of Baltimore and a graduate of Morgan State College.

She is a lifelong member of the Grace Presbyterian Church and the wife of William H. [illegible], well-known real estate dealer and bondsman.

For many years, Mrs. Dixon has been an ardent civic worker.

In 1957, she was appointed member of the advisory board of the Department of Public Welfare.

In addition to working with the Red Cross, the Heart Fund Campaign and the Community Fund Drive, Mrs. Dixon is a sponsor of the Boumi Shrine Circus and the Children's Misson Home.

She is a member of the NAACP, the YWCA, the National Council of Negro Women and the Sponsors Club of Grace Church.

Mrs. Dixon is also a member of the Lambda Kappa Mu sorority and the School Marms Club.

Election night sees Mrs. Welcome doing good deed for worker

Afro-American P.1 Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE

Although Mrs. Verda Welcome, a victorious 4th District candidate for the House of Delegates, was in the midst of receiving congratulations Tuesday night, she paused long enough to rush a sick woman to the hospital.

At 10:15 p.m. the Delegate-elect left Coalition Headquarters in the 1300 block W. North Ave. to go to a downtown hotel where she later appeared on TV and radio.

As she stepped into her car an unidentified man called to her attention to a woman on the sidewalk who said she was ill and wanted to go to the hospital.

He said: "Mrs. Welcome, will you take her to the hospital?"

* * *

MRS. WELCOME immediately told the man to help the woman into her car and asked her driver, Raymond Haysbert, a local business man, to rush to Provident Hospital.

After the patient was seen inside the hospital door, Mrs. Welcome went on her way to the hotel where she was greeted with handshakes and congratulations.

The sick woman was Mrs. Bessie Chambers, 1500 block Clifton Ave. who had worked at the polls since 6 a.m. Tuesday morning.

Final colored registration figures for the city of Baltimore announced Thursday was 100,211.

According to the Supervisors of Elections office, this is after all adjustments are made and the new registration figures reconciled with those persons removed from the books because of death or removal from the city.

These are the final figures which will be used in the November election.

The final figures by districts are as follows:

D.	Tot.	White	Colored	Pct.
1	43,546	40,416	3,130	.071
2	34,261	21,097	13,164	.384
3	128,256	115,578	12,678	.098
4	51,579	23,444	28,135	.545
5	110,922	81,627	29,295	.264
6	52,084	38,275	13,809	.265
T	420,648	320,437	100,211	.238

THE 54.5 per cent colored registered vote in the Fourth District represents an increase. The 1956 figures for the Fourth District showed only 47.7 per cent colored of the registered vote in the Fourth District.

In 1956 the number of colored voters in the Fourth District was 19,961 and today, it is 28,135, which represents an increase of 8,174 voters and brought the percentage from 47.7 to 54.5.

White voters in the Fourth District also increased from 21,000 to 23,000.

In the Fifth District there are 29,295, which is an increase of 10,521 over 1956, but they are still only 26 per cent of the total registered vote in that District.

In 1956 colored registered vote represented 19.7 of the city's total registration. This week, the percentage is 23.8, an increase of 22,837.

Mrs. Welcome to seek seat in Assembly?

BALTIMORE

Mrs. Verda Welcome, civic leader and wife of Dr. Harry Welcome, was presented Tuesday as a "Fourth District representative to the House of Delegates next year."

Dr. Thomas A. Pitts included the remarks as he presented Mrs. Welcome at the Frontiers Club luncheon where she introducted the guest speaker.

Mrs. Welcome, a Republican, laughingly replied:

"I admit I'm interested in getting someone to run but I'm not that someone."

The AFRO has learned that Mrs. Welcome is being encouraged to make the race.

So far she has not accepted but has not made a final refusal, the AFRO was told.

Headline for filing for the May primary is March 10.

8 women running in May primary

BALTIMORE

The names of eight women will appear on the city ballots in the May 20th primary elections.

The candidates are seeking nominations to the House of Delegates, the Republican State Central Committee and the Democratic State Convention.

THE FEMALE primary candidates, the offices they seek and what they stand for follow:

Mrs. Verda Welcome, 2101 Liberty Heights Ave., Democratic candidate for the House of Delegates, 4th District.

Sen. and Mrs. Harry A. Cole happy over expected heir

BALTIMORE

State Senator and Mrs. Harry A. Cole expect their first heir in February.

Mrs. Cole, the former Miss Doris Freeland confirmed the report for the AFRO this week.

She said: "It is delightful. There's no use in hiding it. We're both very happy."

She added: "It doesn't make any difference if it's a boy or a girl so long as it is healthy."

Senator and Mrs. Cole were married Dec. 26, 1957. He is Republican state senator from Baltimore's 4th District and a candidate to succeed himself in the November elections.

MRS. COLE is a kindergarten teacher at Hayes Elementary School No. 102 but will not return to the classroom in September.

She says she will probably spend time making baby clothes and planning a nursery for the third floor of their 1534 Druid Hill Ave. residence.

She disclosed that the news of the coming heir was confirmed by her family physician after she returned ten days ago from a visit with her brother, Wendell Freeland, in Pittsburgh.

Mr. Freeland is an attorney and former district attorney. He and his wife, the former Miss Jane Young of Baltimore have a six - year - old son, Michael.

The Cole heir will be the second grandchild in the Freeland family and the fourth in the Cole family.

Maryland Negro Ticket Challenges Power of Jack Pollack Machine

By CHARLES L. HOFFMAN
Star Staff Writer

BALTIMORE, Oct. 11.—An all-Negro legislative ticket is challenging Baltimore's most successful Democratic boss in his home district, in one of the most spirited battles of the 1958 Maryland campaign.

The Negro slate, which has the backing of this city's aggressive Negro newspaper, the Afro-American — also is threatening continuance of the political career of Jerome Robinson, one of Maryland's leading liberals in the General Assembly for the last two decades.

Negro leaders here say this is the strongest all-Negro ticket fielded south of the Mason-Dixon line.

Target of the coalition ticket is the slate supported by veteran boss James H. (Jack) Pollack.

The Republican Party in the 4th district had nominated an all-Negro ticket for the House of delegates. Coalition leaders, however, persuaded two to withdraw so they could pick up two Negro Democratic candidates to prevent "Negro fighting Negro."

The two picked up were Mrs. Verda Welcome, a non-Pollack candidate, and Mrs. Irma Dixon.

Mrs. Dixon has repudiated the coalition, however, denouncing it as "segregation of the worst type." Mrs. Dixon is running with Pollack support. Mr. Pollack also has a Negro candidate, J. Alvin Jones, running for the State Senate.

Ironically, the Negro ticket is being tagged by Pollack forces as the "segregated ticket." The Pollack slate is being referred to as the "integrated" slate.

Cole Is Coalition Leader

Political kingpin of the coalition is State Senator Harry Cole, Republican, who defeated Mr. Pollack's candidate in 1954.

The colored ticket has four other Republicans and two Democrats running for the House of Delegates.

Mr. Cole, first Negro to be elected to the Maryland Senate, is being tagged by his opposition as Baltimore's Adam Clayton Powell.

Some say he wants to run against Representative George Fallon, Democrat of the 4th district, for Congress in 1960.

Mr. Pollack says Mr. Cole wants to be Mayor of Baltimore.

Mr. Cole himself is noncommittal. He simply declares he wants to be re-elected to the State Senate November 4.

Senator Cole claims it is "only by accident" that the coalition ticket is all colored.

Conditional Offer

He said he offered to support Mr. Robinson and other white candidates "if they would renounce Mr. Pollack."

Other Negro leaders and the Negro press do not see it this way.

They are using the race line and urging the Negro voters to vote the all-colored ticket.

Leaders of the Baltimore Chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People have been active in setting up the coalition ticket and are urging their members to support it.

Mrs. Lillie May Jackson, president of the chapter, said: "The colored people have made up their minds and decided they want to help in running the fourth district.

"We are solid. We are going for ourselves."

The NAACP, she said, provided the original impetus for the movement. During the last 18 months the Baltimore chapter put on a registration drive that increased the Negro registration in the city from 59,000 to almost 102,000.

In the fourth district alone the drive put on enough registrations to give the Negroes a 4,000 majority over the white voters.

According to a colored newspaper account of the original formation of the citizens committee for the coalition ticket, speakers emphasized "dedication to the unity which will erase all lines of party, class, and denomination." Race was omitted.

Mr. Robinson has charged that the Afro-American has refused to use his name or the name of any white candidate in its news columns.

Senator Cole denies this but says the newspaper will use white names only when they make news that is of interest to Negroes.

"If their names have not been in the newspaper it is evidence they have not done anything that matters," he said.

Friend of Colored Race

Mr. Robinson, even Senator Cole concedes, has been a friend of the colored race in Annapolis.

It was he who sponsored and fought for legislation to take Jim Crow laws off the books in 1951.

In 1953 he was praised by Mrs. Victorine Adams for his work in moving colored children from Crownsville State Hospital to the all-white Rosewood school where they could get proper treatment. Mrs. Adams now is chairman of the womanpower committee working for the all-colored ticket.

Mrs. Jackson said she felt it was time Mr. Robinson, who is 47, stepped aside and let younger people serve in the House. He has been a member of the House for 20 years. He recently became the first Marylander to be elected to the executive committee of the National Legislative Conference.

Mr. Robinson himself deplores the present situation as "power politics based on race as is played in Adam Clayton Powell's district in New York City.

"This sort of tactic in the long run will hinder them," Mr. Robinson said.

Tremendous Impact

Senator Cole, however, says that a victory over Mr. Pollack would have a "tremendous impact" on the colored voters of the State.

In the past, he said, Mr. Pollack had maintained his power by "spending a lot of money in the colored sections."

"We are going to break his back this time," he declared "We are going to crush him.'

"We are going to put to an end once and for all the old bugaboo that the colored people can't get together."

Behind the coalition are a great many of the Negro ministers in the city. Chairman of the citizens committee, for example, is the Rev. Frank Williams.

Murphy One of Leaders

Carl Murphy, 70 - year - old publisher of the Afro-American, has been one of the leaders in the movement.

Another was Samuel T. Daniels, executive secretary of the Maryland Interracial Commission. He has given up political activity, however, because of objection from some members of the commission.

Just what the outcome will be is pretty much anybody's guess.

Mrs. Welcome 1st Member Of House Of Delegates

By MOSES J. NEWSON

BALTIMORE

A dazzling new personality burst into the Maryland political picture Tuesday as Mrs. Verda Welcome becomes the first colored woman elected to the Maryland Legislature on her own.

Also elected was Mrs. Irma Dixon, but the convincing manner in which Mrs. Welcome independently earned her victory, makes it by far the more remarkable and significant.

Both women are Democrats. Both ran for the House of Delegates from the 4th District of Baltimore. Both led the vote parade in the District, Mrs. Dixon leading by 514 votes, 16,544 to 16,040.

From this point on the similarity between the two ends abruptly.

MRS. WELCOME was a member of the Coalition Ticket, while Mrs. Dixon was backed by the Pollack machine, regular Democrats, which went all out in this election.

Because Mrs. Welcome refused to link herself with the candidates put in the field by the Pollack machine, the Democratic Party in the 4th District denied her its support, even left her name off its official ballot.

At the same time, the Coalition Ticket, headed by Senator Harry A. Cole, included Mrs. Dixon on its slate and supported her all the way. Still Mrs. Welcome outran all the Pollack candidates except for Mrs. Dixon who had the advantage of full support from both sides.

In the wake of her sweet triumph this week, Mrs. Welcome refuses to read into the impressive victory the political potential which others in and outside the district are already discussing.

As telephone calls continued to bring new congratulations on Thursday, she said:

"I am deeply grateful to all the people who worked for my nomination in the primary and who worked even harder for my election.

"What I want to do now is make a good delegate. That is my one desire."

* * *

TODAY, AND in the days to come, the voters who cast their ballots for Mrs. Welcome are going to see something pretty strange for a candidate who has just been elected.

Mrs. Welcome, who rang doorbells and shook hands from up in the all-white areas all through the lower end of the district, including such short streets as St. Mary explained what she will do this way:

"It is really so hard to say thanks to everyone.

"One way I'm going to try to lo is put a big sign on my car and go out and trace my tracks in all the district." It may take me so metime but I'm going to do it."

long, hard campaign and who themselves a bargain at the polls this time.

This came from a woman who had little rest during the long, hard campaign and who has had even less since well wishers have been congratulating her on her victory.

This is something new and refreshing in politics.

The voters have indeed won themselves a bargin at the polls this time.

BUT IT appears there was a mutual winning on the part of voter and candidate.

Vibrant, easy to meet Mrs. Welcome won thousands of new friends in this, her first campaign, and she is the type of woman to make more friends as she goes along.

Born in North Carolina, second oldest among 6 children, Mrs. Welcome is today the learned wife (she holds the master's degree in education from New York University) of Dr. Henry C. Welcome. They reside at 2101 Liberty Heights Ave.

This summer she traveled in Europe. She is a member of scores of civic organizations.

All this gives her that added attraction every successful politician needs — the ability to walk among people at every social level and understand ambitions.

She talks of it this way:

"I have always loved people. It is an easy thing for me to recognize people, no matter who they are.

"(For) the little person who so often is ignored, I somehow feel the need to defend him, to help him. Some people in certain societies feel they have to set themselves apart. I can't do that."

MRS. WELCOME used that love and understanding of people to sell herself to the electorate.

"In my campaign I tried to make it my business to contact everybody, in those little streets, every where," she said.

Explaining how she worked it, Mrs. Welcome said:

"I rang door bells and I would say, 'This is Verda Welcome. You may have heard of me. I want you to know me.

"I'm not as bad as you may have heard.'

"I got some heartwarming reactions. One woman told me, 'seeing you has changed my opinion from what I had after reading about you. I'm going to vote for you."

OF COURSE campaigning, for a woman or man, is not all good reactions and it is not an easy task. Mrs. Welcome pictures it this way:

"It is a very tiresome thing, but strange to say, the next morning I was fresh and ready to go again.

"It's almost unbelievable the number of things people will ask you to do. You can't say no and somehow you end up enjoying it.

"Many a day I looked at that long, long schedule and braced myself and then started out to give it the best I had.

"When I saw a day that required only a few engagements, I would say, 'Oh my,' and it was a relaxing thing."

ONE THING that the novice and veteran candidate for office suffer did not burden Mrs. Welcome so much this time. That is the painful wait between the time the polls close and the time the count is in.

Four Negroes Win In Boston Primary

BOSTON, Mass. (ANP) — Four Negroes won in the primaries here this week. The state offices which they seek total three seats in the Massachusetts House of Representatives.

In Ward 9 the incumbent State Representative Lincoln G. Pope will be opposed by former State Representative Laurence H. Banks. Pope is a Democrat; Banks, a Republican.

In the 11th district, Suffolk County, a predominantly Negro area, Alfred S. Brothers, a war veteran, won the Republican nomination easily. However, barring a recount which could change the results, Attorney Oswald L. Jordan field representative with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination, edged political newcomer Royal Bolling by 44 votes for one of the two Democratic nominations for state representative.

The white incumbent for the 11th district, State Representative George Greene, won a Democratic nomination by a margin of 554 votes over his nearest opponent, Jordan, or, if a recount proves otherwise, Bolling.

3 candidates win in Mass. primary

BOSTON — Three tan candidates were victorious in the primary election last week, all three seeking seats in the Massachusetts House of Representatives. Rep. Lincoln G. Pope, the incumbent from Ward 9, won on the Democratic ticket. He will oppose Laurence H. Banks, who ran as a GOP candidate. Alfred S. Brothers, a veteran, won the Republican nomination in the 11th District, Suffolk County, which is predominantly populated by colored residents.

Candidates pledged to mix staffs

BOSTON, Mass. (ANP) — By word and by deed, both the Republican and Democratic candidates for the office of state attorney - general have indicated they will have integrated staffs which will include qualified colored lawyers.

Christian A. Herter Jr., the Republican candidate for attorney - general readily told a group of reporters this week that he would definietely have qualified colored lawyers on his staff, if elected, because he believed in it as a matter of principle.

Presently a member of the Governor's Council, Herter told of his experience in the Far East with the Foreign Operations Administration, now the International Cooperation Administration, which confirmed his beliefs about equality in opportunities for all people.

ASKED ABOUT his policy relative to the extradition of colored persons from Massachussetts back to states of origin for a measure of southern "justice," Mr. Herter categorically went on record as being opposed to returning readily any person or persons sought by Southern states.

However he pointed out that the final say in the matter would rest with the Governor of Massachusetts and in such instances as might possibly arise, he would oppose extradition on principle, but would consider carefully each case.

Although admittedly not too familiar with Massachusetts policies in housing under Federal Housing Administration contracts, Herter told the reporters he would work with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination on matters alleging racial discrimination in the purchase of homes in normally all - white districts. (The MCAD received jurisdiction in such matters last year.)

By deed, the interim attorney - general of Massachusetts, Edward J. McCormack, Jr., has reappointed Atty. Keesler H. Montgomery of Boston, at an annual salary of $6,000, to the post he held under the late Attorney-General George Fingold.

As yet McCormack has not stated publicly his views on extradition, just compensation for colored whose homes will be taken by eminent domain for highway construction, or cooperation with MCAD on matters pertinent to housing for colored persons in predominantly white neighborhoods.

Mississippi Primary Backs Segregation

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 27 (AP).—Representative William Colmer, dean of Mississippi's Congressional delegation, and Representative Arthur Winstead headed for new terms today, sweeping to easy victories in the Democratic primary.

A constitutional amendment designed to bulwark State segregation laws chalked up big margin on the ballot yesterday and was adopted by almost a 5-1 margin.

Mr. Colmer, who has represented the Sixth District since 1932, piled up a 14,000-vote margin before his nearest rival, District Attorney Boyce Holleman, conceded defeat.

Returns from 328 of the district's 365 precincts gave the 58-year-old Colmer, ranking member of the House Rules Committee, 31,544 votes and Mr. Holleman 17,998.

Mr. Colmer's two other rivals, William P. Davis and Wayne T. McClure, were crushed in the yotoing avalanche. Mr. Davis received 362 and Mr. McClure had 182.

Mr. Winstead, who has represented the Fifth District for the last 16 years, gave Charles Mosby, jr. of Meridian and Ance Blakeney of Taylorsville a sound beating. Returns from 328 of the district's 383 precincts showed Mr. Winstead with 20,425 votes, Mr. Mosby with 4,667 and Mr. Blakeney with 671.

Incumbents Nominated

The constitutional amendment, indorsed by Gov. J. P Coleman as well as his legislative opponents, would simplify means of amending the 68-year-old state constitution.

With segregation laws under constant pressure, advocates contended the amendment would strengthen legislation to prevent integration.

Returns from 868 of 1,847 precincts showed the amendment with 72,356 favorable votes and 15,098 against.

Senator John Stennis and four other representatives — John Bell Williams, Jamie Whitten, Tom Abernethy and Frank Smith—failed to draw opponents and move into November's general election.

Nomination in the primary is equivalent to election in heavily Democratic Mississippi.

Williams Sounds Racism Trumpet

Vows Federal Defiance If He Is Governor

SPEAKS AT NESHOBA FAIR

By United Press International

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 16. — Speakers at the Neshoba County Fair this week left no doubt about what will be the main theme of the 1959 governor's race —maintaining segregation.

This will be no surprise to voters who have been hammered with the subject constantly since the 1954 Supreme Court decision.

Signs Of Campaigning

But Representative John Bell Williams' apparent entry into the race made it more so. He said he had not decided whether to run but some observers got the impression they were listening to a campaign opener.

Mr. Williams said in so many words that if he does run and is elected governor he will be ready to out-Faubus Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus in defying the Federal Government.

He hinted the next governor apparently will catch the first attempt to integrate Mississippi's schools and the chief executive should be willing to "rot in a Federal jail if necessary" to prevent it.

The 39-year-old Raymond representative has long been close to the hearts of segregationists. Along with Senator James O. Eastland (D., Miss.) he is a favored speaker to whip up anti-integration feelings at Citizens Council meetings. He is credited with coining the term "Black Monday" as used with the school integration decision.

He served on the congressional committee that investigated integration of Washington schools and was one of the most outspoken members of Congress against it. He likes to tell how he was forced to move his family to Virginia to keep his children from attending integrated schools.

Others May Need Strength

If he does run, other candidates may feel it is necessary to bolster their segregation planks to keep up with Mr. Williams on that score.

Opponents of Gov. J. P. Coleman's administration have been urging Mr. Williams to run and are flocking to his support. But the question is will there be enough of them.

Governor Coleman is not expected to sit quietly in his office and let Mr. Williams be elected without a fight. Governor Coleman has told friends as much and Mr. Williams has hinted he will be an anti-Administration candidate down the line, if he runs.

Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin, the only announced candidate, is clearly a segregation candidate, too. He proposed a compact of Southern States to propagandize the South's position with tax money, similar to a proposal made three years ago by Senator Eastland.

Mr. Gartin has Governor Coleman's support and it will be interesting to see whether he adopts the Governor's legalistic approach to maintaining segregation as opposed to Mr. Williams' open defiance.

Mr. Williams was first elected to the House from the Fourth District in 1946 when he ran as a young war veteran who lost an arm as a pilot in the Air Corps. He served as district attorney prior to that.

He told the Neshoba County fairgoers he had a lifelong ambition "to sit in the governor's chair."

May Name Negro As U.S. Attorney In Missouri

ST. LOUIS.— (NNPA) — It is speculated that the Justice Department may soon name Attorney William C. Martin as the first Negro to ever serve as an assistant United States Attorney for the eastern district of Missouri, which includes St. Louis.

Attorney Martin, who has offices in the Peoples Finance Building, 11 N. Jefferson, has been recommended for the post by United States Attorney Harry Richards.

The position, which pays $7,500 a year, was left vacant when Robert C. Tucker resigned recently to accept a position as clerk of the United States Court of Appeals.

The two Republican leaders in the state of Missouri, Roscoe C. Hobbs, Republican national committeeman for Missouri, and H. Kenneth Wangelin, chairman of the State Republican Committee, have said they will endorse Attorney Martin for the position if he gets clearance from the Justice Department, in this case a mere formality.

Attorney Martin, a native of Muskogee, Oklahoma, received his bachelors and law degree from the University of Illinois. After practicing law in Chicago from 1935 until 1944, he came to St. Louis to become professor of law at Lincoln Law school. He remained on the faculty until 1955, when the law school closed.

Since that time, Attorney Martin has been in private practice. He is 46 years old and lives at 4822a Ashland avenue, with his wife, Sarah, and their two children.

ST. LOUIS NEGRO GOP LEADER SEEKS POST

By R. C. FISHER

ST. LOUIS. — (ANP) — Republican leaders succeeded for the first time in a number of years in inducing a candidate to run for Congress in each of Missouri's 11 congressional districts. In many previous elections Republicans ran no candidates against Democratic incumbents in several heavily Democratic districts.

Josiah C. Thomas, a former state legislator and past grand chancellor of the Knights of Pythias of Missouri, on Thursday filed for the Republican nomination for United States representative from the Third District.

Thomas is the second Republican to file for nomination for the office, which is now held by Mrs. Lenor K. Sullivan. Morton L. Schwartz, a lawyer, filed earlier on the Republican ticket.

SEEKS REELECTION

Mrs. Sullivan, a Democrat is seeking reelection. Her only opponent in the primaries is Norman S. Fox, an accountant.

Ellis S. Outlaw, veteran lawyer, and Silas E. Garner, lawyer, Republican committeeman of the Eighteenth Ward will be on the Republican ballot for nomination from the Third and Tenth Magisterial districts in the August primary election.

Speaking to an all-white gathering, which was an integral part of the Third Congressional District, Josiah C. Thomas, Monday night, told his listerners that "people have lost their enthusiasm and their spirits need to be stirred up."

Text of Address by Governor Meyner at His Second Inauguration in Jersey

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, Jan. 21—Following is the text of Gov. Robert B. Meyner's second inaugural address to the New Jersey Legislature today:

It is a solemn but very happy moment of my life to take the oath of office from my warm friend, the distinguished Chief Justice of New Jersey.

Four years ago I stood here to deliver my first inaugural address, and I did so with a prayer that I be given the strength, the intelligence and the understanding to perform my tasks as Governor. Today I renew that prayer as I enter my second term.

A week ago today I delivered my annual message in which I outlined a detailed program of legislative action. By mid-February, I will present to you my budget for the next fiscal year. On this ceremonial occasion I would rather speak in general terms concerning the State of New Jersey and the office of Governor.

Challenges Ahead

We have made progress in the past four years, but the days ahead are full of challenge. Many of the problems I talked about in 1954 are still with us, in altered form. As I pointed out then, "We must never be conscious that government, as in life, contains within itself the possibility of settled nothing ever disposed of beyond the need for continuous study and action."

The years that lie just before us will be a period of urgency, a period of test, both for the state and the nation. Man is penetrating the mysteries of outer space, even as he explores the secret heart of the atom. The possibilities of this modern pioneering stagger the imagination. That our own country lags in this field is a grave challenge to all of us.

On the national domestic scene we face mounting unemployment, deficits in education, problems involving civil rights, the common defense and the public welfare, declining revenues and increasing costs of government.

Brighten Our Corner

We in New Jersey must face up to these challenges. We must do our full part in all these fields. Our area is a limited one, but to paraphrase the old hymn, we can brighten the corner where we are. We can do our best to make state government a meaningful and efficient instrument for ministering to the progress and well-being of our people. I pledge myself anew to work untiringly to that end.

Three Centuries of Experience

As colony and state, New Jersey has had 300 years of experience in self-government. That rich and varied experience has made for maturity, balance and stability. As a people dedicated to the common weal and united in purpose, we are not easily given to extremes of optimism or pessimism. We are a fusion of many races and nationalities and backgrounds. We have learned to live together, not with mere tolerance but with active friendship.

We hold high the guarantees of civil right embodied in our state and Federal Constitutions. When our schools were integrated by the terms of our 1947 Constitution, the process was carried out with hardly an incident because it had the approval of our people. That is only one of many examples of our veneration for the ideals of the Founding Fathers and of our faith in democracy.

Pressure of Population

Many of New Jersey's problems stem from a steadily rising population in a limited land area. Ours is the fourth smallest state in the Union. We have a high strategic importance, however, not only because we lie between two great metropolitan areas and front 125 miles along the central Eastern Seaboard, but because of our vast industrial output and because we are a vital center of industrial and scientific research.

New Jersey is the most urban of all states, with no fewer than 567 communities. Our urban character has been intensified since Woodrow Wilson, speaking as Governor, said that New Jersey had "the problems of the country in such a form that they are raised to the highest degree of difficulty and complexity." This was, remember, almost half a century ago. Even then, said the Governor, we were faced with "all the great urban problems," among them that of water supply, created by congestion of population.

Growing Pains

We had an example of the growing pains that come with increasing urbanization in our recent necessary acquisition of Round Valley in Hunterdon County. It was the last feasible large reservoir site in the northern part of the state.

Whenever a new highway is projected, we face the problems of dislocating settled neighborhoods. Growing population and the spread of urban developments require that we place a high premium on land for parks and recreation areas and wildlife preserves. This growth, of course, lies at the heart of our agricultural problems. It makes our farm land high-priced, and farm income must therefore be correspondingly high.

Emphasis on Planning

All this compellingly points to the need of our giving strong emphasis to planning. New Jersey is now first among the states in the program that permits Federal and state assistance for planning to municipalities under 25,000 population. It is also first on a per capita basis in terms of cooperation with the Federal Government on advance public works planning.

These problems of population and expanding economy were stressed in my second annual message. We of New Jersey are fortunate and happy in our growth and our strength. Were we not enjoying this progress, we would not need—as we do—more schools, more highways, more recreational facilities and many other things, nor would we be obliged to increase our present services. Growth explains why the costs of state government are rising. New Jersey is forging ahead and will, I am confident, continue to do so. It is up to us to see that our state government meets the demands that come from the impact of growth and change.

Informing the People

It has been my constant aim to keep the people of New Jersey fully informed of the operation of their government. I subscribe to the belief of Thomas Jefferson that whenever the people are well-informed, they may be trusted to rule themselves, and when things go wrong, they may be trusted to set them to rights.

We in state government have used every possible means to tell what is going on at the State Capitol and in all of the fourteen departments of government. I meet the able daily press corps twice a week, and at times even oftener, to give out news and to answer questions. Once a month there is a similar session for the editors of the weekly newspapers. On Sunday evening New Jersey citizens can tune in on a half-hour television and radio report by their Governor on various aspects of state government, and they may also hear a half-hour program conducted by the Legislature.

Practice of Democracy

Every letter sent to me is answered as promptly as possible. In the past four years I have made it my business to visit all parts of the state to learn of conditions at first-hand and to exchange views with my fellow citizens. Last year I devoted months to intensive campaigning, in which I gave a full account of my stewardship. All of this is in accord with my belief that democracy should be constantly practiced as well as preached.

Citizen Participation

This program has been effective. It has enabled us in state government to know more intimately the great capacity of our citizens to accept and endorse needed change. Most of all, it has made for effective democracy because of greater citizen participation.

Our citizens have shown a genuine capacity to share the burdens of self-government. They make their views known individually or through their effective organizations. They form the public opinion so essential to ligislative and administrative action.

Literally hundreds of able people have assumed great burdens on voluntary boards and agencies in state government, where matters of policy are carefully considered and determined. Administrative action based on these policies is then carried out by our state officers and employes. At the local level, in all phases of county and municipal government and in our school districts, we have literally thousands of citizens who serve their fellow citizens at real personal sacrifice.

Rewards of Public Service

In reflecting on my four years as Governor, I find I have been richly rewarded in the moral, spiritual and intellectual satisfactions that come from public service. I have been given the chance to serve my fellow man.

In the true sense of Lord Tennyson's line, "I am a part of all that I have met." If I have been privileged to help shape the destiny of New Jersey for a few brief years, I, in turn, have been shaped by my friends and colleagues, and by the thousands of New Jerseyans who have consulted me and been consulted by me.

A Mandate

When the election returns came in last Nov. 5, my deeply felt reaction was that the finest thing in life for a public official is to have his own friends, his own neighbors, and the tens up on tens of thousands of citizens of a great state give him so unmistakable an expression of confidence. It was a mandate to carry on with a program already clearly stated and explained.

I set out on my second term with the feeling that there is nothing esoteric about the job of being Governor. The techniques of democracy are the same—in the village, the township, the city and the state. In the larger units, the pressures may be greater and more zeroes must be added to the budget figures, but fundamentally men govern with the consent of the governed and with whatever ability, understanding and cooperation they can muster. Within proper limits they are expected to furnish leadership rather than merely follow.

Fresh, Hard Look

Re-election gave me a renewed determination to justify the confidence of the people. At the first Cabinet meeting after Nov. 5, I asked each department head to take a fresh, hard look at the policies and aims of his department, to lay out forward-looking programs for the next four years, to re-examine methods and, in every possible way, improve the efficiency of our work and our service to the public.

Assembly Majority

And I found another thing had happened on Nov. 5. Not only had I been rehired by my 5,500,000 boses, but they had given me a new setting to work in—they had given my party a majority in the House of Assembly and increased its membership in the State Senate. This means that my party will bear heavier responsibility for good legislative practices and the enactment of a forward-looking program.

My own aim for the next four years is to do the best possible job as Governor of New Jersey, to the limit of the powers and talents with which the Lord saw fit to endow me.

Let me tell you some of the things it means to be a good Governor.

It means he must strive to keep in proper balance the hundreds of conflicting pressures that operate to influence government in our ever complex and competitive society.

Lobbyist of the People

It means that forever in his mind must be the fact that while it is proper for all special groups to be represented and heard, the Governor is the chief lobbyist in all the state—and that his clients are all the people.

It means that his judgment is tested by the character of his appointees who sit in the courts and who direct the activities of the executive departments.

The success of a Governor's administration is dependent on making his views known and his direction felt throughout all the echelons of state service.

Role of State Government

In my third annual message I pointed out the many ways in which state government touches the lives of the people. It plays a vital role in the education of our children, in the care of the poor, the sick, the retarded, the handicapped and the aged; in the administration of justice; in the preservation of order; in the construction and maintenance of our highways; in safeguarding the rights of labor; in the protection of health.

Indeed, state government intimately touches upon many of the smallest details of our daily lives. It affects everyone every day, from the person who is assured an honest weight in the food markets, to the person who turns on an electric light, travels in a motor car, buys an insurance policy or deposits money in a bank.

Highways

It means, to be a good Governor, that he should be deeply concerned about our highways in a day when everyone is on wheels.

It means that every time a death occurs on these highways, he must ask: "Could this tragedy have been prevented?"

Labor and Management

It means he is responsible for fair play to the workers, and he must sponsor legislation to improve their lot. And, since the welfare of the workers is dependent upon the prosperity of industry, the Governor must see the labor-management problem as a whole. He must do his best to preserve an atmosphere of peaceful relations and to do whatever lies in his power to foster the progress of business and industry and labor.

He must, through himself, his economic ambassadors, and every agency of state government, encourage industries to locate here and to prosper, taking advantage of our highly skilled labor force, availability to great markets, excellent transportation facilities and the state's many other attractions.

The Governor must win and retain the trust and confidence of the people and must guard against those who would betray that trust and confidence.

Wards of the State

It is the Governor's responsibility to look after and watch over the many thousands who, for one reason or another, have become wards of the state.

I could give you the numbers—and they are great—but I would rather think of them as human beings rather than as units in a table of statistics.

These are the people in our mental hospitals, in our colonies for the retarded, on the relief rolls and in our prisons and correctional institutions.

Take the people in our mental hospitals. Should we be content with locking them up, in putting them into the misery and idleness of back wards?

No, we should not and we need not. We have entered a new day for treating mental illness, and while I am Governor, these people will be treated—not merely kept in custody—and they will not be forgotten.

Civil Rights

[redacted] executive must strive constantly to be certain that our citizens enjoy the inalienable civil rights guaranteed them by the law of our land and state. Only by constant vigilance at all levels can we be sure that there shall be no tolerance of second- or third-class citizenship.

In my list of things for which a Governor should be held responsible, I leave to the last what is probably, in the long view, the most vital, the most important, the most challenging problem in a democratic society—namely, education.

Aims of Education

For here is the crucible in which the moral strength of our children is formed; here is the place where that amazing gift of God Almighty—the human intellect—is planted with the seeds of knowledge, of noble and useful thoughts, of high ideals and aspirations, of freedom to think, to speak, to worship and to dare.

It is here where equality of opportunity is furnished our citizens. More and more, all phases of our economic life are relying on our schools to do the screening by which the talented are chosen for leadership in our professions, business and industries.

And perhaps most important of all in these blazing times, when democracy is being challenged all over the world, here in the schools is nourished the education without which democracy cannot endure.

So that, my friends, is my ambition—to be a good Governor. To me it is an inspiring ambition which I welcome the chance of sharing with you and all of the pepple of New Jersey on this inauguration day.

Four-Year Voyage

Inauguration is in a very real sense a special day for all of us. Those of you here, those within range of radio and television, those who read this message in our press, are real participants in a four-year voyage on the sea of democracy. The efforts of all of us are essential for effective performance by all three branches of government represented at this ceremony. With your active participation we can continue to move forward.

In the variety of its problems and opportunities, New Jersey is a laboratory where all phases of democracy can be tested, applied and made to work. In an era when our system is under attack all over the world, we in New Jersey must bring new devotion and new vision to the practice of our democratic ideals.

Our Heritage

We ought to count our blessings. We live in a land singularly favored by nature and by the opportunities offered by liberty. It is a country where rich rewards are paid for character, brains and hard work—where a man, however obscure his origin, may aspire to all the good things of life.

It is easy to grow lyrical over such a country and over our magnificent heritage of democracy. Let us in New Jersey guard and cherish our birthright. With God's help and blessing, let us together and with unflagging confidence, move forward into the years that lie ahead.

Negro Judge for Newark

NEWARK — Harry J. Hazelwood Jr., [illegible] is slated to become the first Negro municipal judge in the history of Newark, N. J. Nov. 3. Mr. Hazelwood, an assistant Essex County prosecutor, was nominated for the judgeship last week. Confirmation of the nomination is expected to come in November.

Pittsburgh Courier

U.S. judge for N.Y.?

By LOUIS E. LOMAX

NEW YORK — Justice Francis E. Rivers is being considered for the $22,500 a year post as Federal Judge of the Southern District of New York, the AFRO learned this week.

The vacancy was created by the appointment of former Justice Lawrence Welsh as Assistant U.S. Attorney General.

Although several white lawyers are seeking the post, a top Republican official told the AFRO that the White House is being urged to appoint Rivers as an effort to boost Republican strength among Harlemites by the 1958 elections.

Mr. Eisenhower has not, to date, named a New Yorker to an important Federal post.

FORMER GOVERNOR and Republican presidential hopeful, Thomas E. Dewey, and Republican Senator Irving M. Ives are the principal backers of Rivers for the post and it is also believed that former Attorney General Herbert Brownell will throw his support to Rivers.

Justice Rivers now holds the $22,000 a year post as City Court Judge. His current term has six years to run. If appointed, Rivers would become the first person of his race to be appointed to a Federal District court judgeship in the continental United States.

The only Federal district judge, Judge Herman Moore of the Virgin Islands, retired recently, leaving 3rd Appellate Judge William Hastie and the two jurists of the U.S. Customs Court as the only colored Federal jurists in the nation.

Informed Republican sources here say that Rivers has the best chance of being appointed of all those who have been rumored on the verge of such an appointment for some time.

Justict Rivers himself refused to comment on the report.

New York Liberals Push UN Official

Boom Bunche for Senate

NEW YORK — If he can be persuaded to accept a draft, Ralph Bunche, undersecretary-general of the United Nations may get the chance to become the first Negro to serve in the United States Senate since the Reconstruction era.

The possibility of Dr. Bunche being boomed for nomination on a Democratic-Liberal slate is being put forward in an effort to heal the rapidly developing breach between the Liberal party and the Democrats.

The Liberal party would like to forestall the nomination of a conservative U. S. Senator from New York by the Democrats.

THE LIBERAL PARTY leaders see a stalemate developing between those already mentioned as possible Democratic party nominees, which already include Thomas K. Finletter, Frank Hogan and Thomas Murray. However, there has been no sign of any crystalizing of sentiment and the "grapevine" has it that conservative Democrats would prefer to press for a selection from among their own number.

In this event, several Liberal party leaders have asserted that they might be willing to endorse Republican Senator Irving Ives who now holds the seat.

• Alex Rose, the Liberal party's chief strategist, is said to be the major supporter of the move to draft Dr. Bunche. Carmine G. DeSapio, interviewed on the proposed "draft Bunche" drive, praised Bunche as a dedicated public servant but refused to comment further than that.

Chairman Prendergrast of the Liberal party also refused to discuss the plan to draft Bunche. Gov. Averill Harriman was also approached on the issue of drafting Bunche by Liberal party leaders, it is understood.

DR. BUNCHE, when questioned, said firmly: "No comment."

• In the past Dr. Bunche has been reluctant to abandon his work at the United Nations and enter politics.

The "draft Bunche" movement, it is said, will get under full formal steam at the Liberal party's policy committee meeting in March.

Brown urges school parley

NEW YORK — Councilman Earl Brown last week asked President Eisenhower to call a conference of colored and white leaders to discuss the "school integration crisis."

Brown is a candidate for the Democratic nomination to the U.S. House of Representatives from Harlem's 16th District, the seat now held by Rev. A. Clayton Powell.

The New York candidate urged the President to hold the conference at the White House before Sept. 1. He asked that representatives of all sections of the country (who would work honestly on the issue") be invited.

Senator Bunche? It sounds good to us

NEW YORK—A proposal that Democratic-Liberal forces nominate Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, UN Under Secretary General, to run for the seat now occupied by Sen. Irving M. Ives (R.-N.Y.) appeared to be gaining backers.

Although no formal statement has yet been made, key Liberal spokesmen said Friday that the movement will be initiated at a meeting of the Liberal Party's policy committee meeting later this month.

• • •

THE SUGGESTION for the draft of Dr. Bunch came as a warning to state Democratic party leaders that the Liberals have no intentions of backing a conservative Democratic candidate if one is selected.

Dr. Bunche, who has not yet been approached by the party representatives, declined to comment upon the matter.

In the past, however, he has refused to run for political office, preferring to continue his work with the United Nations.

Consequently, it was pointed out, any draft movement would have to first obtain very widespread backing to have any chance of winning Dr. Bunche's consent.

• • •

IF HE WERE to agree to run and is elected, he would be the first colored candidate to be elected to the Senate since the Reconstruction era.

He is listed as a political "Independent."

Harlem Battle Nearing Climax

BY GEORGE W. CORNELL
Associated Press Staff Writer

NEW YORK, Aug. 10 — A rough, bare - knuckle political fight is rocking the crowded arena of Harlem.

It comes to a decisive test Manhattan's powerful Democratic organization, Tammany Hall, which dumped fiery-tongued William Clayton Powell Jr., the district's congressman for 14 years.

Powell is waging a maverick's battle for the party nomination. His opponent is City Councilman Earl Brown, supported by Tammany, which backed Powell in seven previous elections.

"This showdown with Tammany Hall has been brewing a long time," said Powell.

Both Powell and Brown are Negroes.

"Harlem means the American Negro," says Brown. "What we decide to do in Harlem . . . will be felt far beyond the boundaries of our district."

The choice, he said, is not between two candidates, but between "two entirely different approaches to the fight for civil rights— between hard action and empty talk, between deeds and words."

He accuses Powell of rabble rousing, racism and long-time "treason to the Democratic Party."

Tammany Leader Carmine G. DeSapio says Powell was dropped because he deserted the party to support President Eisenhower in 1956.

Powell has been having trouble elsewhere, including a pending indictment for income tax evasion charges.

Powell says the party abandoned him because he is not a "hat-in-hand Negro who could be bought."

He calls Brown a "hand-picked Uncle Tom selected by the Tammany plantation bosses to work against his own people."

If Powell wins, he aims to take over full control in the district.

Powell Suggests Jackie, Thurgood, Bunche for Posts

Coupled with his comments that he might run for Mayor, Controller or City Council President in 1961 in New York City, U. S. Representative Adam C. Powell Jr. also suggested the names of Dr. Ralph Bunche, Atty. Thurgood Marshall and Jackie Robinson as other possible top office candidates.

Powell's speculations concerning himself and the other three Negroes as prospective candidates for city offices is not mere speculation because many political observers have pointed out the importance of the colored vote because the urban white population is decreasing while the number of Negroes, Puerto Ricans and other darker races is increasing.

BROWN IS FAVORED TO OPPOSE POWELL

Tammany Reported Close to Choice for Harlem—Harriman Rebuffed

By RICHARD AMPER

Tammany Hall leaders appeared ready last night to choose City Councilman Earl Brown to run against Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr. of Harlem. Earlier Governor Harriman tried and failed to get two others to make the race.

The Governor threw his prestige into Tammany's feud with Mr. Powell. Mr. Harriman unsuccessfully sought either Thurgood Marshall, special counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, or the Rev. James H. Robinson, a Harlem clergyman, as the Democratic candidate in the Sixteenth Congressional District.

Both declined to run on grounds of previous professional commitments.

Tammany leaders in Harlem conferred yesterday on a choice and were close to designating Mr. Brown last night, it was reported. A councilman since 1950, Mr. Brown, who is 52 years old, was a sponsor of the Sharkey-Brown-Isaacs bill outlawing racial discrimination in private housing here.

Tammany leaders were described as "optimistic" about his prospects against Mr. Powell. His effort for the anti-bias legislation was seen as an important campaign asset.

The final choice was understood to have been between Mr. Brown and former Assemblyman Elijah L. Crump, a Tammany leader in the Twelfth Assembly District.

Mr. Robinson, 38, Presbyterian pastor of the Church of the Master, 360 West 122d Street, called a press conference at which he explained his refusal to run. He denounced both Mr. Powell and Tammany Hall, which is headed by Carmine G. De Sapio.

He charged that "unwise and "inept" leadership was responsible for the Democratic political crisis in Harlem.

Mr. Robinson said that he met with Mr. Harriman and Mr. De Sapio Saturday at the Governor's home, 16 East Eighty-first Street. Mr. Harriman, he said, "pointed out the importance of the issues involved" and expressed the hope that he would run.

Asked why he had intervened, Mr. Harriman said that he did not "interfere with local situations" and had no right to offer a nomination but sought to learn if Mr. Robinson or Mr. Marshall were available.

"I was not interested in getting a capable and outstanding individual able to represent not only the Congressional district but also the people of the state," Mr. Harriman said.

The New York Times

REFUSES BID: The Rev. James H. Robinson, who, although critical of Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr., refused to oppose him in race for Congressional seat in Harlem.

State's Lead Cited

He declared that New York had led in championing civil rights. He noted that obtaining a "respected" representative was important because civil rights was an issue of both national and international significance. He would "have been happy" with either Mr. Robinson or Mr. Marshall, who, he said, would have been a "splendid candidate if he were available."

Mr. Marshall, however, pleaded commitments in his work "of nation-wide character."

The Governor's entry in the developing Congressional conflict involved a possible risk that it might provoke election-day reprisals against him by Powell supporters.

Some Harlem Democratic leaders previously had predicted that Tammany's feud with Mr. Powell would not affect the top of the party's state ticket.

Mr. Powell himself has warned that his support might be a decisive factor in Mr. Harriman's bid for re-election. He hinted at retaliation at a rally last night, saying that he was "disturbed" by the Governor's support of Mr. Robinson and thatit "calls for a lot of thinking by all of us up here."

Mr. Robinson said that officials of the Liberal party also had offered to nominate him and that both Liberal and Democratic officials had offered to finance his campaign. But he said that adding Congressional duties to his ministerial duties would mean a "major reorientation of my life which I am not prepared at this time to make."

He said, however, that he might be willing to run for Congress in two years provided that Tammany by then overhauled its leadership in Harlem.

He said that Mr. Powell was "neither invincible nor unbeatable" but indicated that he believed that Negros had little choice but to support him.

"He is not the best to represent us, but who else is there to represent us?" he asked.

Leadership Attacked

"The Democratic leadership, both of Harlem and this city, seems neither to have fully understood nor accurately gauged the basic political attitudes, unspoken but deep resentments and desires of the people of Harlem," he said in a prepared statement.

"It seems also to have missed the very essential point that there is at least as much, if not more anti-Hulan Jack feeling as pro-Powell sentiment." Mr. Jack is the Manhattan Borough President, Mr. Powell's chief political antagonist.

Mr. Robinson declared that the "booing" of Mr. Jack at a recent N. A. A. C. P. rally in Harlem reflected the anti-Tammany sentiment in Harlem and did not stem alone from the issue over Mr. Powell. Tammany leaders had voted to read Mr. Powell out of the party for his support of President Eisenhower in 1956.

Mr. Jack was booed previously when Mr. Powell was out of the country, Mr. Robinson said.

Democratic leadership, he said, has helped to create a picture of Mr. Powell as a "martyr" and has given him an opportunity to win sympathy on a claim of persecution. He said that Mr. Powell exploited this.

Lack of Aid Noted

Negroes in Harlem feel that "they have been denied rights, privileges and a share of patronage and that leaders have not stood up and worked and fought for them," Mr. Robinson declared.

Mr. Robinson said that there was a "possibility" of violence in the Negro community because of aroused passions and that "Mr. Powell has it in his power to control this situation."

No sizeable part of the community wants violence, he said. But he added that "there are people always in any situation who can be swept up by emotion and commit acts of violence."

Never Supported Powell

He declared that he had never supported Mr. Powell. Mr. Robinson had been regarded as a candidate able to withstand a charge that he was a "tool" of Mr. Jack and Tammany because he ran as the Liberal party candidate against Mr. Jack for Borough President in 1953.

The Governor's effort to get Mr. Robinson to run was expected to lead to a demand by Mr. Powell for Tammany to reconcile its action in ousting him for backing Mr. Eisenhower with the Governor's endorsement of a Democrat who opposed a party candidate locally.

Mr. Brown was elected to the Council as the nominee of the Democratic, Republican and Liberal parties. A graduate of Harvard, he was a reporter on The Herald Tribune and later managing editor of The Amsterdam News. He was on the staff of Time Magazine and had served on the editorial staff of Life Magazine. He was born in Charlottesville, Va. His father was a Baptist minister and his mother a nurse.

He worked his way through Harvard, where he won a letter in baseball. He majored in economics.

Begins Sunday Rallies

Mr. Powell began a series of Sunday evening church rallies last night in his campaign for the Democratic nomination.

Addressing 500 persons in the Second Canaan Baptist Church, 111th Street and Lenox Avenue, he denied that he was a "racist" or favored violence.

This was a reversal from a speech he had made last Saturday at an N. A. A. C. P. rally in Harlem. The N. A. A. C. P. accused him of making "racist" statements in the speech and disassociated the organization from them.

The following day Mr. Powell warned Mr. De Sapio, and Borough President Hulan Jack of Manhattan that it might be dangerous for them to walk on the streets of Harlem.

Notes His Citations

Mr. Powell said last night that his whole career had been based on preaching Christian brotherhood. He called attention to citations he had received from leading Jewish organizations.

Denying that he had threatened Mr. Jack or Mr. De Sapio, he said, "My life is based on nonviolence."

Mr. Powell said he was fighting "bossism" in his effort to win the Democratic nomination.

POWELL PREDICTS A 2-TO-1 VICTORY

Congressman Plans Street Drive to Defeat Brown in Democratic Primary

Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr. predicted yesterday that he would defeat City Councilman Earl Brown by a 2-to-1 margin for the Democratic nomination for Representative from Harlem's Sixteenth Congressional District.

Mr. Powell also announced that he would start ten days of intensive street campaigning Wednesday in preparation for the primary election Aug. 12. He met newsmen at his campaign headquarters in the Abyssinian Baptist Church, 132 West 138th Street. He is pastor of the church.

Mr. Powell criticized his rival for what he called Mr. Brown's refusal to debate the issues of the campaign with him. In his own campaign, Congressman Powell said, he will stress his "twenty-eight years of achievement for the people of Harlem" as a minister, City Councilman and Representative.

He contended that Mr. Brown and the Councilman's supporters had resorted to the "big lie" in their efforts to show that Mr. Powell had been an ineffective leader. Mr. Powell said his defeat of a Tammany candidate would make Tammany Hall more responsive in the future to the needs of Harlem's people.

Aid for Eisenhower Cited

Tammany Hall selected Mr. Brown to try to unseat Mr. Powell this year after its leaders had denied the Congressman support for re-election. Carmine G. De Sapio, Tammany chief, said the support had been withheld because Mr. Powell had campaigned for President Eisenhower in 1956.

Also at the news conference, Mr. Powell:

¶Demanded an investigation of what he called the illegal hiring by Manhattan Borough President Hulan E. Jack of two newsmen to work for the Brown campaign. "These men are on the public payroll as laborers," Mr. Powell said. "They are not doing any work for the city, and I demand that they be removed."

¶Accused Tammany Hall of giving the people of Harlem "nothing but crumbs" as political jobs.

¶Declined to comment on the status of his income tax case. He is awaiting trial on charges of evading income taxes.

U.S. Bars Black Visitors Abroad!

U. S. Embassy Bias Stirs Controversy

NEWARK, N. J.—The statement of Harrison A. Williams Jr., Democratic candidate for the United States Senate, calling upon the national administration to end its "outrageous practice" of barring native Africans from the American Embassy in South Africa drew a strong reply from Herbert H. Tate, assistant campaign manager for Robert W. Kean, this week.

• Tate said, "The concern of Mr. Williams over the situation in South Africa comes with poor grace in the light of what the members of his party are doing in Little Rock, Norfolk and Clinton, Tenn." Tate pointed out that Williams should fight racism in the United States before he begins his crusade abroad.

"Shouldn't our native ideals demand the same condemnation of racism in Southern states against American citizens as it does abroad? It is the failure of the elected officials in these states to protect the constitutional rights of Negro citizens that has weakened our international prestige," Tate continued.

"Would Mr. Williams have the Negroes of New Jersey believe that the present school integration crisis in America is not contributing to the 'surging national movements' which are creating new states in Africa.

"The South African is well aware of the biased treatment Negroes are receiving in certain states in this country. If it is the policy of men like Faubus, Eastland and Almond to bar Negroes from the public schools of their states because of race, then we need to change our racial policy at home before we can talk about fair racial attitudes abroad."

"The Negroes of New Jersey feel it is equally as important that no State in the Union bar Negro children from their public schools as it is that South Africans not be barred from the American embassy in that country. Let Mr. Williams come out and call upon Democratic Governors Faubus of Arkansas, Almond of Virginia and others to admit Negro children to the public schools of their states before he seeks to influence the policy of the state department. We cannot have one kind of racism in Little Rock and another kind in South Africa," Tate concluded.

Powell to Back Harriman; Ends Feud With De Sapio

Harlem Leader Wins Concession Over Patronage and Help in Retaining His Seniority in Congress

BY FARNSWORTH FOWLE

Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr. announced the end of his feud with Carmine G. De Sapio yesterday and pledged to work for the election of Governor Harriman and the Democratic state ticket.

The independent Harlem Representative, who is seeking his eighth term in the House said that Mr. Harriman and Mr. De Sapio, leader of Tammany Hall, have accepted "the decision of the electorate."

He was referring to his 3 to 1 victory in the Aug. 12 Democratic primary in the Sixteenth Congressional District over City Councilman Earl Brown, who had the support of the Democratic organization.

"I am no longer purged," Mr. Powell remarked.

Mr. Powell also appears on the Republican slate for his district. His strong personal following among Negro voters there and elsewhere in the state is recognized by both parties.

He disclosed the following terms or his new understanding with the Governor and Mr. De Sapio:

¶Mr. Harriman and Mr. De Sapio "will continue and accelerate their program of job opportunities and of upgrading for Negroes and all minorities." He said that this meant "specific pledges" of patronage appointments. He disclaimed, however, setting himself up as a political boss.

¶Mr. De Sapio, as Democratic national committeeman, will fight in Washington for Mr. Powell's seniority rights in Congress.

Mr. Powell explained that he ranked first among Democrats after the chairman, Representative Graham A. Barden of North Carolina, on the House Committee on Education and Labor, and fourth on the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee. He said that Mr. De Sapio "will see that I am protected" against rules that might keep him out of subcommittee or committee chairmanships to which he was entitled on a strict seniority basis.

Governor Harriman and Mr. De Sapio, in separate statements, later confirmed Mr. Powell's explanation of their understanding.

Mr. Harriman said he was glad to get Mr. Powell's support. They have long seen eye to eye on the most vital domestic issue of civil rights, he explained.

"I welcome also Congressman Powell's support of my program of appointing and advancing qualified Negroes and members of other minority groups in the state government," he went on. "I intend to continue and advance this expression of real democracy in New York State."

Mr. De Sapio said that, as a national committeeman for New York, "I insist and will urge that Mr. Powell be given complete and full seniority on all committees in all matters as the senior member of the House of Representatives of all parties from New York County."

Mr. Powell said he would work "with all my power and the powers of my group" for the Democratic slate. He announced acceptance of the position of associate campaign manager for the Harriman ticket.

Mr. Powell's prepared statement, issued at a press conference in a metting room of the Abyssinian Baptist Church, 132 West 138th Street, of which he is pastor, was delayed to include a reference to the imminent announcement by Mr. De Sapio of their renewed alliance.

Powell in Good Humor

The Representative was in high good humor as he read the statement and replied to questions. He said the voters of his district had decided the issue of "bossism"—meaning the effort to defeat him in the Democratic primary—and the issue of seniority in Congress.

He risked his seniority in 1956 byu supporting President Eisenhower, the Republican candidate, for re-election. He said he was "still glad" he had done this, pointing to the fact that he had obtained a pledge that led to the signing of the civil rights bill last year. He called his Aug. 12 victory an "indirect result" of this.

Replying to a question, he said there was nothing inconsistent in his accepting Republican as well as Democratic support. He cited the precedent of former Representatives Eugene J. Keogh of Brooklyn and James G. Donovan of Manhattan, who won with the backing of both parties in 1950.

The status of the Harlem Democrat leaders who opposed him in the primary will be decided after the election, he said. Mr. Powell said that if Borough President Hulan E. Jack, a Democrat, asked to join him on the sound trucks, "I would be happy to make the arrangements."

Earl Brown's Tammany's choice to oppose Powell

NEW YORK (NNPA) — Harlem Democratic leaders, under the guidance of Carmine De Sapio, New York County Democratic chairman, Monday picked Earl Brown, City Councilman to run for the congressional seat now held by Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, Democrat.

The selection of Councilman Brown was ratified at a meeting of assembly district leaders at Tammany Hall.

Previously Gov. Averell Harriman attempted to persuade Thurgood Marshall, director-counsel of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund or the Rev. James H. Robinson, a Harlem clergyman, to accept designation as the Democratic candidate for Powell's seat.

• • •

MR. POWELL was read out of the Democratic party by assembly district leaders at a meeting with Mr. De Sapio on the ground that he was not a Democrat. Mr. Powell supported President Eisenhower for reelection in the 1956 Presidential campaign.

Mr. Brown, Councilman from the West Harlem-Upper Westside 21st Senate District and a writer for Time and Life magazines, has been one of several candidates the district leaders have had under consideration since they voted to dump Mr. Powell.

Among the other candidates considered were Assemblywoman Bessie A. Buchanan, State Senator James L. Watson, and Elijah L. Crump, a former Assemblyman.

MR. POWELL intends to enter the Democratic primary on Aug. 12. To do so he must obtain by the week of July 8, 750 valid signatures on his designating petitions.

This means, in effect, that he must get some 3,000 names, to allow for the invalidations that inevitably eliminate hundreds of names that come under challenge.

For this purpose, Mr. Powell has begun organizing special classes, meeting at his church, to instruct workers on the techniques of getting proper signatures.

Gov. Harriman is reported to have tried and failed to get either Mr. Marshall or the Rev. Mr. Robinson to run in the Aug. 12 primary.

Both declined to become candidates on grounds of previous professional commitments.

• • •

THE FINAL choice is understood to have been between Mr. Brown and Mr. Crump. Mr. Brown is 52 and has been in the City Council since 1950.

Gov. Harriman said Sunday that he had been "keeping in touch" with the efforts to pick a candidate.

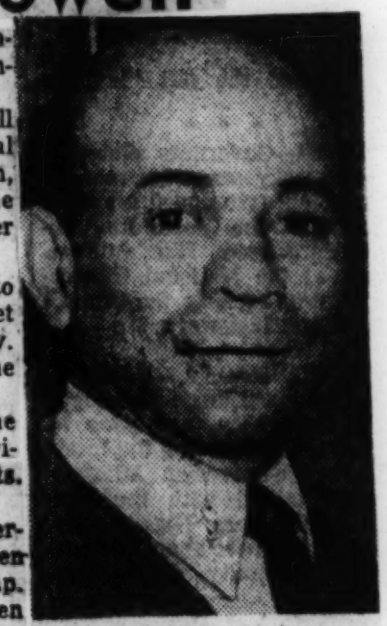
Asked why he had intervened, Gov. Harriman said he did not "interfere with local situations" and had no right to offer a nomination but sought to learn if the Rev. Mr. Robinson or Mr. Marshall were available.

• • •

HE WOULD have been "happy" with either the Rev. Mr. Robinson or Mr. Marshall, who, he said, would have been a "splendid candidate if he were available."

The Governor's entry into the fight against Mr. Powell involved a possible risk that it might provoke reprisals against him in his candidacy for reelection.

Mr. Powell himself has warned that his support might be a decisive factor in Gov. Harriman's bid for reelection. He hinted at retaliation at a rally Saturday night, saying that he was "disturbed" by the Governor's support of the Rev. Mr. Robinson.



EARL BROWN

Shy Governor Harriman

Wishes Earl Brown well, but refuses to indorse candidate

NEW YORK — Governor Harriman feels that Tammany - selected Democratic nomination candidate Earl Brown is a fine man - but declines to speak for him in his race to unseat Rep. Adam Clayton Powell as the Congressman from Harlem.

"I do not intend to speak in support of Brown," the Governor declared, "I am familiar with his record in the City Council where his record was one of vigorous determination."

The majority of Harlem's Democratic leaders turned down the highly controversial Abyssinian Baptist Church pastor last week, allegedly for his support of President Eisenhower during the last Presidential campaign.

THEIR EFFORTS to find a candidate to oppose him met with little success until their announcement of Mr. Brown as their standard bearer.

This drew bitter criticism of Brown from Mr. Powell and numerous other Harlem leaders.

Governor Harriman, asked whether he intended to aid Mr. Brown, declined to back the Tammany candidate, although he had been quoted as expressing the hope that either Thurgood Marshall, NAACP legal defense counsel, or the Rev. James H. Robinson, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of the Master, could be persuaded to run against Powell.

Governorship Platforms

As the state campaign neared the end, Governor Harriman, Democratic-Liberal candidate for re-election, and Nelson A. Rockefeller, his Republican opponent, issued statements yesterday summarizing their positions on election issues. Following are excerpts from each:

Averell Harriman

The overriding issues confronting the people of New York State in this election is the basic difference between the philosophies and beliefs of the Democratic and Republican parties. The choice is between moving ahead in the forward-looking tradition of the Democratic party in the interests of all the people or turning back state government to the reactionaries of the Republican party * * *

This afternoon the chairman of the Republican National Committee said that my opponent and Vice President Nixon have the same "basic political philosophies * * * basic beliefs. This confirms the charge I have made that Mr. Rockefeller is trying to deceive the people of New York City by attempting to disassociate himself from the philosophy and policies of the Republican party.

Take the vital question of rent control. The choice is between my record of achievement in preserving rent control against the Republican legislative leaders who for four years have been trying to scuttle it, and the vague promise of my opponent which are not supported by his running mate for Lieutenant-Governor.

I stand on my record of solid achievement on all fronts for the benefit of all the people as against the irresponsible, reckless promises of my opponent.

During the past four years, we have undertaken new programs to meet new needs. Our Charter for the Aging is a practical, effective program. We have pioneered in legislative safeguards protecting against fraud and overcharges for those who buy on time. We developed a new program to help much-needed privately financed middle-income housing at no cost to the taxpayer.

There has been the biggest increase in state aid for schools in history—an increase of 77 per cent. Toll-free highway construction has been tripled. In our mental hospitals, we have reversed the emphasis from principally custodial care to research and intensified treatment. During the past three years, for the first time, the number of patients in our mental hospitals has been declining, we have revitalized the State Commission Against Discrimination. Labor standards have been advanced in the face of Republican attempts to undermine them. Our Commerce Department has a new vigorous program to help communities attract industry and tourist trade, as well as to provide technical assistance and finance for small business.

Nelson A. Rockefeller

If I am elected, I will act—and with all of my strength—to serve the best interests of all the people.

I am firmly for continuation of rent control. In addition, the Republican leaders of the Legislature and the Republican candidate for Lieutenant Governor, Malcolm Wilson, have publicly and strongly backed up my position.

I am just as firmly opposed to any increase in the 15-cent subway fare.

I will end Tammany Hall's domination of our government at Albany.

My program as Governor will be designed to:

¶Provide more jobs and job opportunities by encouraging a higher rate of economic growth in our state.

¶Coordinate law enforcement agencies to drive out organized crime. I will mobilize all the forces at my command to meet the growing problem of juvenile delinquency.

¶Strengthen our educational system to meet the vast increase in school population that will occur in the next dozen years and to prepare our children for the challenge of the complex world in which they will live.

¶Safeguard the rights and the dignity of working men and women because I believe in the principle of collective bargaining and responsible union leadership.

¶Overcome the crisis in housing so that our families may find decent homes in good neighborhoods at a reasonable price.

These are some of the immediate problems. But now I want to go further—to speak to you of even more important convictions. Factories and roads and even schools are * * * but the symbols of our steps toward the good and high purpose to which we dedicate ourselves.

America, since its inception, has been a promise that men, given freedom and the will to enrich that freedom, could build and grow and prosper beyond the grandest dreams of the past.

We must never neglect this promise of America—this promise of freedom. We must never risk a passive attitude toward the moral values that carried us to greatness.

We can speak of justice among nations only as we practice justice in our own land.

We can speak of law and rights among men of all nations and races only as we bring about equality for all in America itself.

HARRIMAN KEEPS HIS POWDER DRY

Fires Political Salvos at Home After Rain Washes Out Visit to Coney

By MILTON BRACKER

Sweeping rains kept Governor Harriman out of Coney Island yesterday, but they could not keep him from filling in the enforced gap in his homestretch drive with an attack on his Republican opponent.

Mr. Harriman begun his day with a television appearance, then made a luncheon speech at the Waldorf-Astoria and was prepared to go strolling on the Boardwalk and eat the inevitable frankfurter on Surf Avenue.

The weather intervened. It also prevented a stop at a Puerto Rican meeting in Brooklyn, which was to have followed the visit to Coney Island. But that did not mean that there was a respite from campaigning when the Governor returned to his home at 16 East Eighty-first Street.

Mr. Harriman went into action when he was informed by aides of a comment made during the morning by Meade Alcorn, Republican national chairman. Answering a question on "College News Conference" on television, Mr. Alcorn has said:

"If you set these two men [Vice president Richard M. Nixon and Nelson A. Rockefeller, Mr. Harriman's gubernatorial opponent] down * * * and examined them on their basic political philosophies, their basic beliefs, you would find that they were in agreement, that a common denominator of belief runs through all their thinking."

Adds Own Comment

The Governor read the quotation to newsmen in his living room, then had copies run off, with his own comment appended. It read:

"This statement by Mr. Alcorn that Mr. Rockefeller and Vice President Nixon have the same 'basic political philosophies * * * basic beliefs' confirms the charge I have made that Mr. Rockefeller is trying to deceive the people of New York City by attempting to disassociate himself from the philosophy and policies of the Republican party.

"His literature in New York City omits reference to his party and includes the false inference that former President Truman supports him. Mr. Rockefeller clearly is a Republican, surrounded on his ticket by reactionary Republicans, and must assume full responsibility for his party."

The Governor strode across the room and sat in an armchair near the fireplace.

"He knows perfectly well that Truman's opposed to him," he remarked.

From his pocket he drew a leaflet bearing the imprint of Citizens for Rockefeller-Keating. Kenneth B. Keating is the G. O. P. candidate for Senator. Under a picture of Mr. Truman facing Mr. Rockefeller appeared this remark made by the former President after Mr. Rockefeller's nomination.

"I like him very much. He worked for me when I was President and did a fine job."

The leaflet noted that Mr. Rockefeller had served under Mr. Truman as chairman of the International Development Advisory Board and on the founding conference for the United Nations.

Mr. Harriman said the flaw in the quotation was that it had been abridged. The left-out portion, he said, smiling, was Mr. Truman's comment that Mr. Rockefeller's trouble was his party.

Charles Van Devander, the Governor's press secretary, showed copies of a letter from Mr. Truman to Mr. Harriman. It said in part:

"I said that what is wrong with Nelson Rockefeller is that he is a Republican—the candidate of a party which works for special interests, as opposed to the Democratic party, which works for the good of all the people."

Governor Harriman sat back and relaxed, but not for long. His luncheon address had been to the Manhattan Council of the National Council of Negro Women. His schedule last night called for a dinner at the Waldorf and a dinner dance at the St. George Hotel in Brooklyn.

And today is not just another day, it is the last one of the campaign.

POWELL CHARGES VOTE STEAL PLAN

Says to Tammany a Plot to Send Hoodlums Into Harlem—2,000 Hear Him

By MILTON ESTEROW

Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr. charged yesterday that "hired hoodlums" had been retained by Tammany Hall "to come in and cause trouble" in Harlem during the primary election there Tuesday.

Mr. Powell said that "the bosses of Tammany plan to use every bit of chicanery, trickery, bribery and thuggery to try to steal this election."

He spoke at a rally in front of the Theresa Hotel, Seventh Avenue and 125th Street. Two thousand persons attended.

Mr. Powell said he had asked for a meeting with Mayor Wagner, Police Commissioner Stephen P. Kennedy and State Attorney General Louis J. Lefkowitz to discuss the matter and to request the assignment of extra policemen.

Fighting Move to Unseat Him

He is campaigning for the Democratic nomination for Representative from Harlem's Sixteenth Congressional District.

Tammany selected City Councilman Earl Brown to try to unseat Mr. Powell this year after its leaders had denied the Representative support for reelection.

Carmine G. De Sapio, the leader of Tammany Hall, said the support had been withheld because Mr. Powell had campaigned for President Eisenhower in 1956.

Speaking in his shirt sleeves and with his collar open, Mr. Powell said:

"I learned last night that leaders have been sent out to tell the Democratic workers working inside the polls to wear a ring on their fingers with a sharp cutting edge so that in the counting of ballots they will be able—when not observed—to tear them and thus destroy the vote.

"This I am referring to the Attorney General and to the Honest Ballot Association."

"If officials do not stop this influx of hired hoodlums, black and white, I hereby announce publicly that I will not be responsible in any way for what happens on primary day in this community.

"I would like to say that we are not going to allow any hired hoodlums to push us around in any way," he said. "The responsibility, therefore, is clearly that of the Mayor and the Police Commissioner."

Police Protection Pledged

Later, Deputy Police Commissioner Walter Arm, in charge of community relations, said:

"The citizens in all sections of the city will get the fullest police protection. This department will guarantee an orderly primary."

Thirty policemen were assigned to yesterday's rally, which was billed as "a closing victory rally."

Mr. Powell reiterated that he would defeat Mr. Brown by a margin of 2 to 1.

"We intend to take the victory and use it as a mandate in all humility to lead the people of this community into green pastures of complete political equality and recognition within the Democratic party," he said.

In addition to speeches, the rally included jazz by Dizzy Gillespie, folk singing and tap-dancing.

Other speakers included A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters and chairman of the Independent People's Committee for Powell, and Jackie Robinson, former baseball star.

PRIMARY VOTING HEAVY IN HARLEM, LIGHT ELSEWHERE

Sharp Powell-Brown Battle Reflected in Lines at Polls —Both Claim Victory

BALLOTING IS ORDERLY

Interest Runs High in Race to Pick Coudert Successor —Contests Few in City

By LEO EGAN

Voting was heavy but orderly in Harlem yesterday, where the key battle in New York City's primary election was being decided.

Elsewhere in the city, including the Park Avenue area where a major Republican struggle was in progress, the voting was light and orderly.

Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr. and City Councilman Earl Brown, the two contenders in the Harlem battle, were each claiming "2-to-1" victories before the polls closed at 10 P. M.

Paper ballots were used to record the vote in Harlem as well as in other sections of the city. Disputes over the validity of the various ballots tended to delay a final result until the early hours of the meeting.

Other Contests in City

Twenty-six other party nominations for various offices in different sections of the city were at stake in the primary. Nine Democratic district leaderships in Brooklyn and eight in Queens also were under contest.

Besides picking their candidates for local offices to be filled this year, the enrolled voters of the three recognized parties chose delegates and alternates to state and judicial conventions. In only a few places were the choices of district leaders for convention delegates challenged.

The struggle between Representative Powell and Mr. Brown was for the Democratic nomination for Congress in the Sixteenth District. Both contestants are Negroes, and racial and religious issues were the dominant themes in the campaign.

Mr. Powell has represented the Harlem area in Congress for seven terms — fourteen years. Given to flamboyant oratory, he has acquired a national reputation and has aspired to be a major spokesman for American Negroes.

This year the Tammany leaders of the district, in consultation with Carmine G. De Sapio, leader of Tammany and unofficial leader of the New York City Democratic organizations, decided to oppose his renomination. The stated reason for their decision was Mr. Powell's support of President Eisenhower in 1956.

Mr. Brown, who was picked by the Tammany district leaders to replace Mr. Powell in Congress, is a magazine writer. He is credited with a more moderate approach to racial questions than Mr. Powell. He got into politics when he was picked by all three parties—Democrats, Republicans and Liberals—to put an end to the City Council career of Benjamin J. Davis, a Communist.

At 8 P. M., two hours before the polls closed, there were indications that more than half the 50,000 enrolled Democrats entitled to vote in the Harlem primary would do so. At many polling places lines of voters were waiting to enter the voting booths throughout the afternoon and early evening.

Police Commissioner Stephen P. Kennedy had doubled the police detail for the Harlem area on representations by Mr. Powell that violence and attempts at intimidation were likely. Up to 8 P. M. the police had not received any reports of violence or other incidents.

In the Park Avenue area, embraced within the Seventeenth Congressional District, Republicans were locked in a struggle over the choice of a candidate to succeed Representative Frederic R. Coudert Jr., who is retiring.

Elliot H. Goodwin had the backing of a majority of the Republican leaders in the area. He was opposed by John V. Lindsay. Both Mr. Goodwin and Mr. Lindsay are former presidents of the New York Young Republican Club and advocates of greater Republican activity in the area.

In the Bronx, the Democratic primary was enlivened by an attempt of Representative Paul H. Fino, a Republican, to capture the Democratic nomination as well through a write-in vote. Mr. Fino was unopposed for the Republican nomination.

The choice of Democratic leaders to oppose Mr. Fino in the general election was Magistrate Neal P. Bottiglier, who also had liberal endorsement.

Governor Votes Upstate

CENTRAL VALLEY, N. Y., Aug. 12 (AP)—Governor Harriman voted in te state primary today in the Central Valley elementary school of this Orange County village.

The Governor, who will head the Democratic ticket this fall in his bid for re-election, had a chance to vote for himself as a delegate to the party's state convention Aug. 25 and 26 at Buffalo.

Mr. Harriman was greeted at the polling place by John S. Stillman, Orange County Democratic chairman, and Stephen W. Hayes, Town Supervisor.

The Governor siad afterward that the four candidates for the Republican nomination for Governor were trying to trump up criticism of his administration, but that the people would not be fooled by their remarks.

Mr. Harriman referred specifically to attacks on his administration over various issues by the four Republican candidates at a rally in Bear Mountain Inn last Saturday night.

One-Policy Powell

REP. Adam Clayton Powell demonstrated the brute force of his demagoguery when he licked Tammany Hall this past summer.

Tammany had opposed his renomination, naming another Negro, Earl Brown, instead. Powell calling all those who oppesed him "Uncle Toms," won an overwhelming endorsement from his Harlem constituents.

Now Powell has grandly offered to support the Democratic ticket in the general election. In exchange for this gesture, Gov. Averell Harriman, running scared against Nelson Rockefeller, has made Powell "specific pledges" of political jobs for the racist minister-politician to hand out.

Thus Powell will have gained a great hold on the Democratic Party in New York if Harriman wins. But even if Harriman loses, Powell is assured a strong voice in party affairs by virtue of his awesome popularity among Negro voters.

In addition to the patronage promises, Tammany leader De Sapio has promised to "insist and urge" that Powell's seniority be respected by House Democrats in Congress. Thus Powell seems to have established himself firmly in the saddle in New York. His position is doubly secure because Republicans are almost as frightened of his proven control over Negro voters as are Harriman and De Sapio. The meaning of all this is well expressed by Columnist William S. White, formerly of The New York Times.

White, who can hardly be accused of Dixiecratic tendencies, writes:

> [Powell] has now openly come forth as the first truly powerful and frankly racist politician in the North in generations. It might be said, indeed, that he is the first in any section to make racism a total policy [italics ours].

For while the South has suffered from many politicians who have been basically racist—the late Senator Bilbo of Mississippi, for example—none has made racism his sole effective plan. Even Senator Bilbo often took political actions not connected with race on matters like farm legislation . . .

Mr. Powell, however, has worked the racist line so unashamedly and so successfully as to terrify both the Democratic and Republican parties in New York . . .

Thus the dominant symbol of racism in American public life today is a Negro, the Harlem hellmouth whose vile tirades even made the NAACP choke. But, except for an occasional, isolated tut-tut, Northern "liberal" politicians have had eyes only for Dixie while black demagoguery emerges under their noses.

Here is a man more obsessed than Bilbo, more dangerous to domestic tranquility probably than McCarthy ever could have been. And they tremble in silence.

'I Am Opposed to Deception'

Will Randolph Split Hurt Powell?

NEW YORK—Political observers wondered just how much, if any, A. Philip Randolph's split with Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr. would hurt the New York legislator"s chances of re-election.

Powell, fiery, outspoken pastor of Abyssinian Baptist Church, recently snowed under New York City Councilman Earl Brown in a primary election to run for Congress on the Democratic ticket. Mr. Brown is the Liberal party candidate for Congress.

Mr. Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters had served as chairman of the Independent People's Committee for the Re-election of Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr. He resigned the post Sept. 24.

MR. RANDOLPH based his resignation on a letter circulated in Harlem that purportedly was signed by him. He said he had neither seen nor authorized the use of the letter.

"Even though I would have liked to see you named on the Liberal party ticket, as you were on the Republican party ticket, I am unalterably opposed to the employment of any form of deception to attain this end," Mr. Randolph wrote to Mr. Powell.

Mr. Randolph's letter of resignation continued:

"In the light of this letter, I think it proper to resign as chairman of the Independent People's Committee for the Re-election of Adam C. Powell. In fact, it was my intention to suggest my resignation to you anyway, since I do not want my affiliation with any organization to be interpreted as a commitment to support any particular candidate for governor or the Senate on Democratic or Republican party tickets, since I am neither a Democrat nor a Republican."

There was no immediate comment from Mr. Powell regarding Randolph's resignation.

POWELL DEMANDS PURGE IN HARLEM

Asks Ouster of Tammany's 'Uncle Toms' in Districts —Jack Is Named

By RAYMOND ROBINSON

Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr. demanded yesterday that Hulan E. Jack and other Tammany Hall "Uncle Toms" resign immediately or be ousted as political leaders in their districts.

At a press conference following his primary triumph over Earl Brown, his Tammany-backed adversary, Mr. Powell warned that Tammany leaders must "clear away this political wreckage." If they do not, he said, he would do so with a new independent Democratic organization.

Neither Mr. Jack, Manhattan's Borough President, nor Carmine G. De Sapio, Tammany sachem, would comment on Mr. Powell ultimatum. But a Tammany spokesman noted that "district leaders are elected not like Mr. Powell is and no one can throw them out except the voters." The next leadership elections are in 1959.

3-to-1 Victory Margin

Mr. Jack is the leader of the Fourteenth Assembly District in Mr. Powell's Sixteenth Congressional District. Mr. Powell carried the Fourteenth by a 3-to-1 margin in winning the Democratic nomination for Representative from City Councilman Brown. He carried the Congressional district by 14,837 to 4,935 for Mr. Brown, a victory margin of 3 to 1.

At the meeting with newsmen Mr. Powell refused to say whether he would support Governor Harriman and other Democratic candidates in the November general election. Mr. Powell backs both the Democratic and Republican nominations.

Asked whether he was considering backing Nelson A. Rockefeller, the leading aspirant for the Republican gubernatorial nomination, he said: "Mr. Rockefeller hasn't spoken to me about it."

Political observers believe a decision on Mr. Powell to throw his weight behind one of the candidates would influence a large number of Negro voters.

Mr. Powell said that although he was running on both the Democratic and Republican lines in the Nov. 4 election, he considered himself a Democrat.

Asked whether he would accept Tammany Hall support in the forthcoming election, he said: "I don't need it."

Earlier yesterday, both Mr. De Sapio and Mr. Jack said that the regular organization would support Mr. Powell in the Nov. 4 election, since he was now the official Democratic candidate for Representative.

Mr. Powell did say that he would cooperate with Tammany in helping to bring about reforms that would make Tammany "more responsive to the wishes of the people of Harlem."

No Name Chosen

He said he still had no name for his new independent organization. He said it would be directed by J. Raymond Jones, his campaign manager in the primary race, and that it would consist of 1,000 volunteers who had worked for him in his campaign.

Mr. Powell said he would enter a slate in the leadership races next year if Tammany took no action to oust Mr. Jack and others.

The others are: Elijah Crump, Twelfth Assembly District South; Cecil Carter, Twelfth A. D. North; Antonio Rasmus, Thirteenth A. D., and Frank Rossetti, Sixteenth A. D. He said he was still undecided whether to include the name of Lloyd E. Dickens, leader of the Eleventh A. D. He noted that Mr. Dickens had originally opposed the action by other leaders to deny him organization endorsement in the primary.

At the news conference in the Abyssinian Baptist Church, of which he is pastor, Mr. Powell also denied that he sought controll of Tammany Hall. He said that any move to oust Mr. De Sapion would be up to the organiastion leaders.

He said he did not believe any attempt would be made to strip him of seniority on House committees when he returned to Congress. He said however, that he was circulating a letter to Congressmen in districts where there were significant numbers of Negroes to learn their "sentiments" on such a move.

Mr. Powell is awaiting trial on an indictment charging him with income tax evasion. A date is expected to be set soon in Federal District Court here.

POWELL DEMANDS PURGE IN HARLEM OF TAMMANY MEN

Implies This Is Price for His Support of Harriman and Democratic State Slate

G.O.P. LEADERSHIP HURT

Lindsay's Upset of Goodwin Is Blow to Coudert Control in 9th Assembly District

By LEO EGAN

Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr. moved promptly yesterday, in the wake of his smashing Democratic primary victory, to force a reshuffling of Harlem's Democratic leadership.

At a press conference, he implied that such reorganization might be his price for supporting Governor Harriman and other Democratic state candidates in this fall's election.

The Representative, who turned back a Tammany attempt to retire him from Congress, listed as his immediate goals the resignations from political leadership of Manhattan Borough President Hulan E. Jack and what he termed other Tammany Hall "Uncle Toms."

This demand was coupled with a court "no comment" when Mr. Powell was asked if the intended to support Governor Harriman this year. The Governor and Carmine G. De Sapio, leader of Tammany, had participated in the decision to retire him.

G. O. P. Power Threatened

At the same time John V. Lindsay's defeat of Elliot H. Goodwin, the candidate of a majority of the Republican leaders of the Seventeenth Congressional district, threatened to have repercussions for the Republican leadership in Manhattan.

Mr. Powell's demand for Democratic leadership changes was based on his solid victory over City Councilman Earl Brown, Tammany candidate, for the Democratic nomination for Representative in the Sixteenth Congressional District. The district is almost entirely within Harlem.

The final tabulation of the primary vote gave Mr. Powell 14,837 and Mr. Brown 4,935.

Mr. Lindsay piled up a 3-to-2 margin in defeating Mr. Goodwin. The final vote was Mr. Lindsay 6,129 and Mr. Goodwin 4,052. The Seventeenth District covers most of midtown Manhattan. It is often referred to as the Park Avenue or Silk Stocking district. It usually elects Republican candidates.

Three other important defeats wer esustained by party organizations in the primary Tuesday.

In Westchester, Robert R. Barry, a 43-year-old business man, defeated Mayor Kristen Kristensen, 69, of Yonkers, for the Republican nomination for Representative in the Twenty-seventh District.

Mayor Samuel S. Stratton of Schenectady scored a smashing victory over Carroll Gardner, Schenectady County Clerk, for the Democratic nomination for Representative in the Thirty-second District.

And in New York County's Eighth Assembly District, Paul E. Bragdon, an insurgent, defeated Martin M. Trainor for the Democratic Assembly nomination.

In a number of other places throughout the state, organization candidates found themselves hard-pressed to turn back challenges from insurgents.

Viewed in their entirety, the results suggested to some observers that party organizations are beginning to lose control of nominations as well as of elections. A growing tendency to independent voting has turned many districts once thought safe for any nominee of the dominant party into doubtful areas.

Harriman Backs Powell

Governor Harriman and Mr. De Sapio, New York City's unofficial Democratic leader, were quick yesterday to promise their support to Mr. Powell, whose nomination they had opposed. They said that Democrats should unite behind Mr. Powell now that he had won the primary election.

Their attitude was attributed by some to a desire to obtain Harlem's support for this year's Democratic state ticket, which Governor Harriman is scheduled to head. Ordinarily Harlem votes Democratic by a 3 or 4-to-1 margin.

Mr. Powell received the Republican nomination for Congress without opposition. Thus he appeared almost certain of re-election, though Mr. Brown will oppose him again in November as the nominee of the Liberal party.

The Powell victory left a severe dent in Mr. De Sapio's political prestige. He had participated in the choice of Mr. Brown as the Tammany candidate and had served as an adviser to Harlem Democratic leaders in the primary campaign.

A similar blow to the prestige of Michael H. Prendergast as Democratic state chairman resulted from Mayor Stratton's victory in Schenectady. Accepting the results, Mr. Prendergast and Governor Harriman urged all Democrats to unite in support of Mr. Stratton.

Mr. Lindsay's Republican victory in the Seventeenth District is expected to strengthen a campaign now under way to reorganize the Republican leadership in New York County's Ninth Assembly District and to install a vigorous county leader in place of the late Thomas J. Curran.

Mr. Goodwin's defeat was a blow to thhe political stature of Representative Frederic R. Coudert Jr. as Republican leader of the Ninth. Mr. Coudert was an important sponsor of Mr. Goodwin for the Congressional seat he is vacating this year.

Mr. Barry's Republican victory in Westchester was ascribed yesterday to a revolt against dictatorial practices on the part of Westchester leaders. Mr. Barry's younger age was also a factor. He had argued that Mayor Kristensen's age would prevent him from achieving the Congressional seniority needed to achieve any large degree of influence as a Representative.

Mr. Bragdon's victory in the Eighth Assembly District was a threat to James J. Farley, Democratic leader in [illegible] northern half of the district. It gave encouragement to groups who have been fighting for several years to oust him from the party leadership.

Liberal party leaders reported yesterday that they had successfully repulsed more than a half dozen attempts by Democrats and Republicans to achieve nomination by write-in vote campaigns.

One such campaign was waged on behalf of Mr. Powell, but it failed to achieve its purpose. Mr. Brown emerged as the Leberal party choice. Murray Baron, New York County Liberal chairman, observed last night that Mr. Brown's Liberal candidacy afforded Harlem voters an opportunity to register a protest against Mr. Powell's tactics in the general election.

Most of the write-in attempts to get Liberal nominations occurred in New York City, but several also took place upstate.

One result of the primary gave Queens Democrats a Negro candidate for elective office for the first time. He is Joscelyn E. Smith, who defeated George E. Donovan, a former Councilman, for the Assembly nomination in the Eleventh District. The district takes in the Richmond Hill and South Jamaica sections.

GOVERNOR OFFERS HIS AID TO POWELL

Pledges Support in Election This Fall—Calls on Party to Back Insurgent

By WARREN WEAVER Jr.

Special to The New York Times.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Aug. 13—Governor Harriman today declared that he would support Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr. for re-election. He said that he expected all other Democrats to do likewise.

The Governor said that Mr. Powell's primary victory over City Councilman Earl Brown had been achieved "in accordance with our democratic procedures."

"I'm sure the party will now unite in his support," Mr. Harriman declared. He made the statement at a press conference at Elmira Airport as he arrived for a tour of counties in the southern Finger Lakes area.

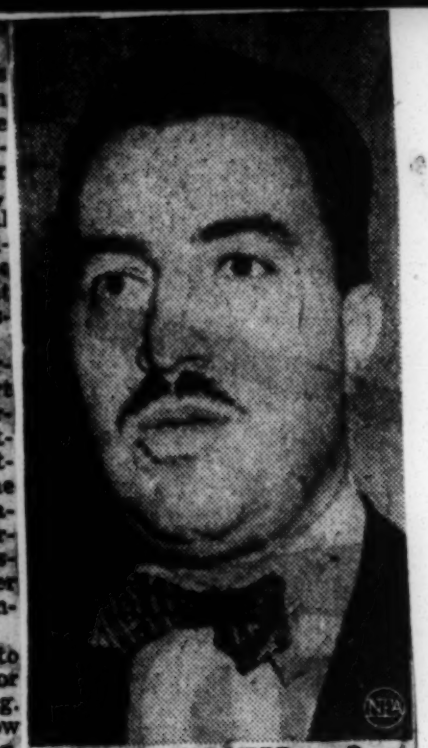
The Governor said the party's New York City organization had opposed Mr. Powell in the primary although Mr. Harriman had endeavored to appear impartial.

In this fall's Gubernatorial election, however, Mr. Harriman would not like to lose the voting strength in Harlem that Mr. Powell demonstrated yesterday.

At the same time the Governor offered the party's support to another Democratic insurgent, Mayor Samuel S. Stratton of Schenectady. Mr. Stratton won the nomination for the Congressional seat being vacated by Representative Bernard W. Kearney of Gloversville over Carroll A. Gardner the endorsed Democratic candidate.

"Primaries are necessary to settle disputes," the Governor said. "This is a healthy thing. Actually it's remarkable how few disputes there have been. It's the democratic way of doing things; we go to the people and decide it."



RENOMINATED — Rep Adam Clayton Powell.

Powell Demands Control Of Harlem

NEW YORK, Aug. 13 (AP) — Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, emboldened by a smashing Democratic primary victory over Tammany Hall, moved today for full political control of Harlem.

He indicated it was his price for support of the Democratic state ticket in the November election.

He told a news conference he plans to purge six of Harlem's Tammany Democratic district leaders, including Manhattan Borough President Hulan Jack, first Negro ever to hold that office.

Either they quit as district leaders, Powell said, or he'll run his own slate against them in 1959. And, he indicated, his support of the Democratic ticket next November will depend upon Tammy doing his bidding in the matter.

"What happens next will to a great extent determine what we will do in November," Powell said. "That's all we're going to say about the governorship or the Senate."

The only Tammany scalp Powell did not immediately demand in Harlem was that of District Leader Lloyd Dickens, who fought against Tammany's efforts to read Powell out of the party.

Tammany refused to support Powell in the primary because of his 1956 support of Republican President Eisenhower.

Rep. Powell's Victory Is Ill Omen for Democrats

Reelection of Rep. Adam Clayton Powell to the Congress of the United States should not be overlooked for its likely harmful effect on the problem of race.

His triumph was a substantial one and New York comment refers to it as being like that of Gov. Faubus of Arkansas in reverse. Rep. Powell is a reckless demagogue of racism. He is as bad and as harmful at one end as are extremists at the other.

His election has meaning, too, for the national aspirations of the Democratic Party. Powell was opposed by Tammany Hall, which [illegible] Brown, a highly respected man who [illegible] member of the City Council of New York.

Now Powell is threatening to disrupt the party and may go ahead with an attack on Gov. Harriman who has been favored for reelection. Powell might be able to defeat the party in New York by splitting it and allowing a Republican victory. The loss of New York's huge electoral vote, 45, could be a party disaster.

Rockefeller Blasts Back At Powell

NEW YORK — Outraged by charges Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr. made against his candidacy for the Governorship of New York, and particularly to charges that he has never supported the NAACP, Nelson A. Rockefeller has angrily answered Representative Powell with "evidence to the contrary."

The charges, made during the Empire State Baptist Missionary convention, in the Metropolitan Baptist Church, 151 West 128th St., were as considered highly uncomplimentary by the accused; asserting that Mr. Rockefeller had never supported the NAACP, that he was not a true friend of the Negro, and that he used philanthropy to buy votes.

Visiting Harlem on consecutive nights, Mr. Rockefeller produced Thurgood Marshall who disclosed that Mr. Rockefeller has given "a little more than $5,000 to the NAACP legal defense fund."

Although refraining from mentoning Representative Powell by name, Mr. Rockefeller said his faith had been "flagrantly misrepresented in the past 48 hours in this (Harlem) area."

There was no specific answer for Mr. Powell's assertion that Mr. Rockefeller, ". . . is campaigning on the basis of his philanthropy; doing nothing more than a mass production method of trying to buy the vote."

First Race Judge In N. Y. County

BROOKLYN, N.Y. — In a history-making assignment, Municipal Court Justice Oliver D. Williams became the first Negro to sit on the City Court bench in Kings County.

The assignment was given by the State's Supreme Court's Appellate Division, 2d Judicial Department. Justice Williams elected to a full Municipal Court term in November, 1956, first was appointed to that court in November, 1955, by the Mayor.

NEW YORK

New York Times

owell's Primary

Adam Clayton Powell Jr., 49, Harlem's flamboyant Democratic Congressman and Baptist Minister, views himself as a crusader for Negro rights. Last Sunday in his Harlem church he made this claim:

"The 1957 civil rights bill was the direct result of my support of Eisenhower in 1956—he promised me a civil rights bill."

Mr. Powell's critics hotly dispute this claim. They say Mr. Powell is a "demagogue" who has produced more talk than action on civil rights. Manhattan's Tammany Hall Democratic organization, with which Mr. Powell has seldom cooperated in his fourteen years in Washington, was angry at his 1956 switch. Last spring when Mr. Powell was indicted by a Federal Grand Jury on income tax evasion charges (the case is still pending) opposition to him increased. The Harlem Democratic leaders and Carmine G. De Sapio, head of Tammany, denied him the party's designation.

Mr. Powell, who said he was dropped because he was "not a hat-in-hand Negro," filed in the Democratic primary and fought a bitter campaign against Tammany's candidate, City Councilman Earl Brown. Mr. Powell called his opponent "a hand-picked Uncle Tom selected by the Tammany plantation bosses to work against his own people." Mr. Brown replied that Mr. Powell was "a loud-mouth do-nothing" and said Harlem stood to gain by cooperating with Tammany.

Wins by Landslide

Last Tuesday Mr. Powell swamped Mr. Brown in the primary by 14,837 votes to 4,935. Mr. De Sapio and Democratic Governor Harriman pledged their support to the winner—though Mr. Brown remains on the ballot as the Liberal party candidate. Mr. Powell replied: "Harriman has got to pay the price to us * * * and Carmine De Sapio has got to do the same." Mr. Powell's price is a Tammany purge of Harlem Democrats who opposed him. Unless the price is paid, Mr. Powell said, he will set up his own organization and may not support Mr. Harriman.

Though Mr. De Sapio's prestige was dented, the Powell victory appeared unlikely to have more than a limited effect. Mr. Powell has never acted on past threats to start his own party; his victory appeared mainly due to his personal magnetism in Harlem. However, if Mr. Powell comes out against Governor Harriman, the picture might be different. The Governor was elected in 1954 by 11,000 votes; Mr. Powell won in 1956 by 42,000. Thus in a close gubernatorial race Mr. Powell's support could be decisive and might materially affect Mr. Harriman's chances for a Presidential nomination in 1960.

Powell Calls For Ouster Of Leaders

New York Tribune

'Doesn't Need' Aid of De Sapio

By Tom Doty

Rep. Adam Clayton Powell Jr. rejected yesterday the aid of Carmine G. De Sapio and called instead for the "immediate" ouster of all but one of the Harlem Democratic district leaders and even those bordering on the upper Manhattan area.

It was clearly Mr. Powell's day, and he was full of enthusiasm despite his harsh words and recommendations as the result of his easy victory for the Democratic nomination over City Councilman Earl Brown in Tuesday's primary. Mr. Powell, in the Republican primary unopposed while Mr. Brown won the Liberal nomination despite an abortive attempt at a write-in by the Powell forces. So both men will go to the post in the November elections.

Harriman Backs Winner

The failure to put over Mr. Brown as the Democratic nominee was one of several defeats suffered by the Democratic state leadership. Despite the Powell victory, against which Gov. Harriman had worked early in the game, when he sought to find a strong national figure to oppose him, Mr. Harriman, at Penn Yan, N. Y., said of the Powell victory:

"The Democrats of the 16th C. D. have made their choice, in accordance with Democratic procedures. I'm sure the party will now unite in his support."

But when Mr. Powell was reminded of the call for "unity" by Mr. De Sapio, issued in the early hours of the morning yesterday after Mr. Brown lost the Democratic nomination, and whether he would now accept Mr. De Sapio's support. Mr. Powell answered laughing gleefully,

"Would I accept it? I don't need it."

Mum on Governor Choice

Mr. Powell fired back a fusillade of "no comments" when asked if he would work against Gov. Harriman's re-election—a sore point with the Democratic leadership—work for the Republican nominee, whether he preferred Nelson A. Rockefeller for the Republican nomination and whether he had a preference for the Democratic nomination for Senator.

The smiling winner, in his press conference at the Abyssinian Baptist Church, 132 W. 138th St., where he is also pastor, said that there should be an "immediate" ouster of all the Harlem Democratic leaders with the possible exception of Lloyd Everett Dickens, leader of the 11th A. D., who had originally supported Mr. Powell for the nomination.

Points to Jack's Failure

Of Manhattan Borough President Hulan E. Jack, who is also a co-leader in the 14th A. D., West, who was one of the prime leaders vainly seeking to wrest the nomination from Mr. Powell, the Congressman said, archly:

"He should devote all of his time to being Borough President. He lost his own district by eighty votes."

But Mr. Powell also included Frank Rossetti, a leader in the East Harlem 16th A. D., who has very little political jurisdiction in central Harlem, and Angelo Simonetti, of the 13th A. D. on Washington Heights, among those who should go.

Significantly, Mr. Powell praised the methodical campaign work of J. Raymond Jones, a former Tammany district leader, and considered one of the smartest political leaders in Manhattan. Mr. Jones was at Mr. Powell's elbow as he was throughout the primary campaign.

To Work for Big Vote

Mr. Powell said that the both planned to keep their hurriedly assembled committee together and would work hard for an unusually large registration among Negro citizens for the fall campaign. Mr. Powell said that the fight for control of Tammany Hall was not involved immediately as the district leaders are elected next year.

Rep. Paul A. Fino, R., of the 25th C. D. in the Bronx, failed in an attempt to win the Democratic nomination by a write-in against City Magistrate Neal P. Bottiglieri who called it a "sneak move to hoodwink the voters." The jurist won easily.

Organization Beaten

But the Democratic organization in the 32d C. D., centering in Schenectady, including Michael Prendergast, state chairman, were slapped down in supporting Carrol A. (Pink) Gardner, Schenectady County Clerk and former wrestler, when Samuel Stratton, reform Mayor of Schenectady, won the nomination for Congress.

Up in Niagara County, including part of Buffalo in neighboring Erie, the regular Democrats also lost a nomination when they named Helen J. DiPoto, who lost the nomination to Mariano A. Lucca, a businessman who is also an anti-organization pamphleteer.

Ben Davis to run for N.Y. Senate

NEW YORK — Former City Councilman Benjamin Davis, one of the 11 Communist Party leaders who served a prison term for violating the Smith Act, announced this week that he will seek the State Senate seat from New York 21st District.

Mr. Davis said he will seek to get the required 3,000 signatures on his petition in order to qualify as a candidate on the People's Rights Party ballot.

Davis, who is currently chairman of the New York State Communist Party, said he would support the candidacy of Rep. Adam C. Powell for renomination to Congress.

Powell immediately issued a statement saying that he had not sought the aid of the Communist leader and that no Communists would be among his campaign workers.

EARL BROWN

Earl Brown accused by Ky. bishop

By SAMUEL HAYNES

NEW YORK—A 64-year-old AME Zion bishop added fuel to the bitter Democratic congressional contest between incumbent Rep. Adam Powell and Councilman Earl Brown at a news conference at the Harlem YMCA on Friday afternoon.

Bishop C. Ewbank Tucker, a self-made doctor of civil law, and presiding bishop of the 10th District of the AME Zion Church, charged that

"Councilman Earl Brown was a resident in Louisville, Ky., in 1932, where he was an instructor at the Municipal College.

"Before the college was closed because of integration, Brown was dismissed from the faculty. His association with the charity clubs of Jefferson County, set up by the Republican Party, was a factor in his dismissal."

* * *

ASKED BY reporters to explain the functions of the charity clubs, Bishop Tucker replied:

"The charity clubs was an organization that was controlled in 1933 by Sheriff Hubbard (Hub) Petty and two of his deputies, Mike Cissel and Jim Mulligan.

"The clubs levied assessments upon people in business and shady occupations, such as owners of gambling houses and bawdy-house operators.

"If they didn't pay up on Friday or Saturday, they would be raided by the sheriff's deputies and their businesses would be closed or destroyed."

Asked what role did Brown play in this setup, Bishop Tucker replied:

"He was one of the directors of the charity clubs.

* * *

HE SAID the deputy sheriffs were indicted for common law conspiracy. They pleaded guilty before the trial was over and were convicted.

Brown was not named in the indictment of the deputy sheriffs, Bishop Tucker admitted.

Bishop Tucker said the indictment of the two deputy sheriffs was such a reflection on the Republican Party of Jefferson County, that it was defeated in the 1933 election after 16 years of county control.

He said he read law himself and passed the bar examination in West Virginia on his first try.

• • •

BISHOP TUCKER was asked if he was invited by Congressman Powell to come to New York and make Brown's past affiliation with the Kentucky Republicans known.

"At the time an attempt was made to read Congressman Powell out of the Democratic Party," the Bishop replied, "I made up my mind to offer him my support.

"When I later found out that Councilman Brown was selected to oppose Powell, I felt it my public duty to let the public know who Brown is and what he stands for, and what kind of record he left behind in Louisville.

"It is my considered opinion," the Bishop added," that the attempt to discredit Congressman Powell had its origin with the Southern hierarchy of the Democratic party, and Tammany Hall is being used to carry out its desire."

• • •

ASKED IF he would take an active part in the Powell-Brown campaign, Bishop Tucker replied:

"I would if asked to do so by Congressman Powell."

He emphasized that nobody associated with Powell's campaign had approached him.

He said the first time he ever met the congressman personally was at the recent summit conference of leaders in Washington, D.C.

He revealed that he had written to Powell and volunteered his help but, as yet, he has had only an expression of thanks from the embattled congressman.

Asked if his church supported his stand for Powell, Bishop Tucker said:

"Our church and our bishops' board look upon Congressman Powell as a militant champion of the rights of colored Americans and of minority groups in the world."

Princely Fun—Opposing candidates in the New York gubernatorial elections get together at St. Mark's Methodist Church in New York City at a religious service of the Prince Hall Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons. Left to right: GOP candidate Nelson Rockefeller; R. W. Richard H. Stitt, Deputy Grand Master; Thurgood Marshall, general counsel of the NAACP, and Gov. Averell Harriman, Democratic candidate for re-election.

Racial Issue Heats Up Harlem Voting

Rabid Powell Faces Moderate 'Uncle Tom' As Nation Watches

NEW YORK (AP) — A sizzling contest on racial issues with national overtones came to a climax in today's primary election in Harlem, where two Negroes sought a Democratic congressional nomination.

The contest in the 16th Dist. has drawn nationwide attention as a potential gauge of Negro feelings on civil rights issues.

The showdown was between Rep. Adam Clayton Powell Jr., an impassioned advocate of immediate racial integration, and City Councilman Earl Brown, who takes a calmer approach while working for civil rights.

Powell and Brown have waged their fight in the predominantly Negro and Democratic district almost entirely on racial issues.

Their contest has drawn the most interest in the statewide Democratic and Republican primaries to choose candidates for Congress and the State Legislature.

Powell, 49, has served seven two year terms in Congress. He also is pastor of the Abyssinian Baptist Church in Harlem.

'LIFE' EDITOR

Brown, 55, is an editor of Life magazine.

Tammany Hall, the Manhattan Democratic organization, refused to support Powell for another term this year. The reason given was that he backed President Eisenhower in the 1956 campaign. Powell said he did so because he liked the Eisenhower stand on civil rights better than the Democratic party's. The congressman is under indictment on charges of income tax evasion.

Tammany Hall leaders in the 16th Dist. picked Brown to run against Powell, who has a huge and vocal following in Harlem.

Powell has called Brown a "hand-picked Uncle Tom selected by the Tammany plantation bosses to work aganist his own people."

Brown has accused Powell of rabble-rousing racism and "treason to the Democratic party."

Even if Brown should be able to beat Powell for the Democratic nomination, both men will be on the ballot at the Nov. 4 election.

POWELL CHARGES FRAUD

Says Poll Officials Negated His Liberal Write-In Votes

Representative Adam Clayton Powell said yesterday he had filed a complaint with state and New York County officials charging that election inspectors refused to count Liberal write-in votes for him in last Tuesday's primary.

He charged that a "conspiracy" had taken place in the twenty-first election district of the Fourteenth Assembly District, which is part of the Sixteenth Congressional District.

Mr. Powell, who won the Democratic and Republican nominations for re-election in the Sixteenth District, said he had received information that inspectors "deliberately mutilated ballots and failed to complete the count of the Liberal party ballots."

City Councilman Earl Brown won the Liberal nomination.

Mr. Powell demanded that the State Attorney General's office investigate and direct the Board of Elections to recanvass all Liberal votes in the district. He also demanded that District Attorney Frank S. Hogan investigate and "prosecute those responsible."

ROCKEFELLER HITS POWELL CHARGES

Cites Gifts to Negro Groups —'Shocked' by Assertion That He 'Bought' Votes

By HOMER BIGART

Nelson A. Rockefeller replied angrily last night to charges by Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr. that he had never supported the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and that he was not a true friend of the Negro.

Visiting Harlem for the second consecutive night, the Republican candidate for Governor also said he found it "especially shocking to be charged with using philanthropy to buy votes."

In a speech at the Empire State Baptist Missionary Convention in the Metropolitan Baptist Church, 163 West 128th Street, Mr. Rockefeller said his family had helped Negroes since the pre-Civil War days of the underground railroad.

He said he was proud of his financial contributions to "such great Nego organizations" as the Urban League and the N. A. A. C. P.

Contributions Confirmed

Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel for the N. A. A. C. P., confirmed last night that Mr. Rockefeller had given "a little over $5,000 to the N. A. A. C. P. legal defense fund." He said the gifts had been made from 1951 to 1956. A Rockefeller aide said Mr. Rockefeller had contributed $2,500 in 1951 and $2,500 in 1956.

Mr. Mashall said that he had talked to Mr. Rockefeller several times and that "Nelson demonstrated an interest in what we were doing."

Described by his campaign aides as "hopping mad" over Mr. Powell's charges, Mr. Rockefeller revised his campaignpaign schedule to add a Harlem stop to a day of campaigning in the Bronx and the Lower East Side.

Without mentioning Mr. Powell, Mr. Rockefeller said that some of the specific tenets of his faith had been 'flagrantly misinterpreted in the past forty-eight hours in this area." Both are Baptists, and Mr. Powell is pastor of the Abyssinian Baptist Church of Harlem.

Speech Is Recalled

Mr. Powell, who is seeking re-election on both the Democratic and Republican tickets but is supporting the Democratic slate, had said in a speech Monday night that Republicans had tried to buy his support. Yesterday, Mr. Powell charged that Mr. Rockefeller was "campaigning on the basis of his philanthropy; doing nothing more than a mass production method of trying to buy the vote."

NEW YORK

Racial Issues Predominant In Harlem Congress Race

Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery Ala

NEW YORK (AP)—The top contest in New York State's primary elections Tuesday has been fought almost entirely on racial lines by two Negro candidates.

The candidates: Incumbent Congressman Adam Clayton Powell and City Councilman Earl Brown. The scene: Harlem's 16th Congressional District. The prize: The Democratic party nomination for Congress.

Powell, long a maverick, was dumped this year by the Tammany Hall Democratic organization that backed him in seven previous campaigns. The reason given was Powell's support of President Eisenhower in the 1956 election. Powell also is under indictment for income tax evasion.

BACKED BY TAMMANY

Tammany backed Brown, a Life magazine editor and a moderate on racial issues, for the Democratic nomination.

Most observers give Powell, who has an enormous following in Harlem, a hefty edge in the contest, but even if Powell lost the Democratic nomination, he would run against Brown in November as a Republican.

Throughout the campaign Powell has assailed Brown as a "hand-picked Uncle Tom selected by the Tammany plantation bosses to work against his own people." Powell is pastor of Harlem's big Abyssinian Baptist Church.

POWELL BLASTED

Brown, 55, in turn has accused Powell of rabble-rousing racism and "treason to the Democratic party."

The primary has national overtones since it may provide some gauge of Negro feelings on civil rights issues. If Powell consolidates control of the Harlem organization by winning by a large margin, the victory also could affect the gubernatorial race in November.

Candidates for the governorship and the Senate will be chosen at the party conventions Aug. 25-26. In all, there are 52 primary contests for congressional and state legislature nominations. The only other election of more than routine interest is in Manhattan's so-called Silk Stocking District, where Elliott Goodwin and John V. Lindsay are contending for the Republican congressional nomination. Goodwin has GOP organization backing. Lindsay is an insurgent. The seat was vacated by Republican Rep. Frederick Coudert Jr.

PEACEFUL VOTING SEEN FOR HARLEM

Police Expect No Trouble—Polls to Be Open to 10 P.M. for Primary in City

By DOUGLAS DALES

The Police Department expects no trouble in Harlem during tomorrow's primary election.

In the wake of a charge by Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr. that Tammany Hall would import "hired hoodlums" to harass his supporters in the election, a Police Department spokesman said yesterday:

"We have sufficient police personnel assgned to the Harlem area to assure that the rights of all persons are safeguarded. We do not anticipate any trouble."

The Harlem fight, in which Mr. Powell is testing Tammany's capacity to deny him renomination, will share top billing in the primary with a sharply contested Republican fight in the Seventeenth Congressional District, on Manhattan's East Side.

Enrolled voters of the Democratic, Republican and Liberal parties will nominate their candidates for public office and choose various party officials in the election. The polls will be open from 3 P.M. to 10 P.M. in New York City and from noon to 9 P.M. elsewhere in the state. Voting will be by paper ballot.

Opposed By Brown

Mr. Powell is being opposed by City Councilman Earl Brown, who has the support of the Democratic leaders in the Sixteenth Congressional District. The district includes most of Harlem.

The incumbent contends that he was rejected by Carmine G. De Sapio, Tammany leader, because of his civil rights fight. Mr. De Sapio's position is that Mr. Powell gave up his claim for support by his "treachery" in backing President Eisenhower in 1956. The contest involves a test of the Democratic organization's strength in the predominantly Negro community.

Both candidates are assured a place on the November ballot regardless of the Democratic fight. Mr. Powell is unopposed for the Republican nomination and Mr. Brown is unopposed for the Liberal designation.

In the Seventeenth Congressional District, an East Side area sometimes called the silk stocking district, Elliot H. Goodwin has the backing of the Republican organization in opposition to John V. Lindsay. The district is now represented by Frederic R. Coudert Jr., who is retiring from Congress.

Mr. Coudert is also the Republican leader of an area within the district. Dissatisfaction with his leadership has been the basis of Mr. Lindsay's appeal.

Mr. Lindsay's manager, John A. Macchia Jr., predicted yesterday that his candidate would win decisively. He said the insurgent candidacy provided a chance for Republicans "to protest against the faulty leadership that has led to the decline of the party in the district."

The primary in the city will decide twenty-nine contests for nominations for public office, twenty-two on the Democratic side and seven on the Republican. There are contests for nine Democratic district leaderships in Brooklyn and eight Democratic leaderships in Queens.

Representative Paul A. Fino, Republican of the Twenty-fifth Congressional District in the Bronx, announced yesterday that he had approved a write-in campaign on his behalf in the Democratic primary. He is unopposed for the Republican nomination. The campaign was a reaction to a deal between Democrats and Liberals for joint nominations for seven Democrats.

Those eligible to vote are persons who enrolled in one of the three legal parties at the general election last year. These include 548,556 Republicans, 1,677,,308 Democrats and 56,865 Liberals.

While the polls are open, bars and liquor stores will be closed.

It's Powell Over Brown By 45 To 3

Cash flows in Harlem like water

By AL WHITE

NEW YORK — Harlem has just gone through the most devastating political campaign it has ever known. The furious fights of yesteryear became mere preliminaries when compared with the all-out fight for power that Harlem witnessed up to and including Primary Day.

Some individual election district figures last week found Rep. Adam Clayton Powell winning his bid for re-election to Congress over Councilman Earl Brown by ratios as high as 10 to 1.

Other statistics favored Powell to win the 16th Congressional District election by 45 to 3 ratio.

A second survey indicated that the 50-year-old minister-politician would win by 85 per cent of the vote.

FOR THE first time in the political history of New York, Tammany Hall leader Carmine De Sapio, a national Democratic committeeman, took personal charge of maneuvers and actually visited Harlem.

The issue is the political upheaval that will stir Harlem regardless of the outcome.

It is an open secret in Harlem, despite Powell's denials, that the controversial minister-politician has already organized a machine geared to take over every Democratic club in the district should he be named to Congress, despite DeSapio's wrath.

And Harlem politicos are trembling in their boots for Powell's campaign manager, J. Raymond Brown, who brought them into power now threatens them with political oblivion should he save the day for Powell.

Tammany Hall dumped Powell earlier and endorsed Earl Brown. DeSapio stopped at each of the clubs in Harlem district where colored leaders met.

That has never happened before.

What's more, money was flowing freely from Tammany, unlike the tight-fisted campaigns of earlier days.

Brochures and pamphlets by the thousands appeared on the sidewalks of New York singing the praises of Tammany Hall and how good it has been to Harlem.

THE BROCHURES laud Manhatten Borough President Hulan Jack and are filled with names of job holders.

Right now, Jack is getting a big play from an employee of a local newspaper who is on the city payroll as public relations man for the Borough President.

The public relations man has pictured Jack as leaving his city-owned $7,000 chauffeured Cadillac to trod about the highways around the Theresa Hotel during this campaign.

According to sources behind the scenes, DeSapio is hinting to his Harlem followers that if Powell should win over Brown, checks from the City of New York will suddenly stop.

* * *

SOURCES SAY DeSapio has promised bigger and better jobs for Harlem should Powell lose to Brown.

Powell, meanwhile, is riding the highways and byways giving out speeches in which he calls DeSapio "Massa Carmine." He refers to other DeSapio followers as "Massa Carmine's plantation hands."

Very sensibly, Mr. Brown is avoiding direct contact with the Powell entourage as it winds its way through Harlem's streets. He knows that he would fare poorly in face to face contact with Powell, a master ad libber.

Brown stays inside and argues that his record commands his fitness for the congressional election.

A RUNDOWN of the list of persons benefitting from the benevolence of Tammany Hall reveals many members of the late President Roosevelt's famed "Black Cabinet."

In their enthusiasm, the Democrats have sneaked in a few Republicans on the list as well as repeated names and using the monickers of office holders, some of whom have been dropped or resigned.

Harlem doesn't know what to expect, but the undercurrent is still strongly Adam, regardless of DeSapio's pleas and other acts.

In effect the Congressional primary determines whether Tammany boss DeSapio is strong enough in New York to defeat Powell with his pick, Mr. Brown.

"I FIGHT Powell because he supported President Eisenhower in the presidential campaign four years ago," says Brown.

"I supported Eisenhower because he promised me a Civil Rights Bill and he lived up to his word," Powell answers.

"He's a traitor to his party," Brown retorts.

"President Roosevelt was not a traitor when he supported Republican LaGuardia three times for New York's mayor," Powell whips back.

* * *

"POWELL SHOULD fight within the party and not rebel," the councilman reports.

"I should have led a revolt years ago. The Democratic machine, according to New York papers, has the colored vote in its vest pocket and pays the people off by naming a few colored persons to office.

"Tammany's appointments have robbed the city blind. Nobody rocks the boat in Harlem. When the bosses say I'm not an organization Democrat, they mean I'm not a boss-controlled Democrat," Powell reiterates.

"Powell is a spoiled child, an absentee congressman, a driver of expensive sports cars, an anti-West Indian racist and a rabble-rouser," Brown asserted.

POWELL REFERRED to his opponent as "Figurehead Jack" and "Look Down Brown." (Mr. Brown is said to hold his head down when walking.)

"Most of the Tammany gang drive $7,000 Cadillacs at the tax payer's expense. Anybody can buy my eight-year old Mark V Jaguar for $750 and I'll sell my six-year-old Nash - Healy for $2,500. And if I were anti-West Indian, I'd be against my own son."

"As to racism, I feel about colored people and civil rights the way a Jewish person does about Israel and Judaism. I am pro-Protestant, not anti-Catholic. I am a Baptist minister.

"I resent the term 'rabble rouser.' That means my people are rabble." Powell injected.

Harvard Educated Earl Brown Onetime Life And Time Magazine Scribe Likely Candidate To Replace Adam Clayton Powell In New York

NEW YORK GOVERNOR ENTERS MOVE TO OUST HARLEM CONGRESSMAN

New York, May 26 — Tammany Hall leaders appeared ready last night to choose City Councilman Earl Brown to run against Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr. of Harlem. Earlier Governor Harriman tried and failed to get two others to make the race.

The Governor threw his prestige into Tammany's feud with Mr. Powell. Mr. Harriman unsuccessfully sought either Thurgood Marshall, special counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, or the Rev. James H. Robinson, a Harlem clergyman, as the Democratic candidate in the 16th Congressional District.

Both declined to run on grounds of previous professional commitments.

Tammany leaders in Harlem conferred yesterday on a choice and were close to designating Mr. Brown last night, it was reported. A councilman since 1950, Mr. Brown who is 52 years old, was a sponsor of the Sharkey-Brown-Isaacs bill outlawing racial discrimination in private housing here. Tammany leaders weer described as "optimistic" about his prospects against Mr. Powell. His effort for the anti-bias legislation was seen as an important campaign asset.

The final choice was understood to have been between Mr. Brown and former Assemblyman Elijah L. Crump, a Tammany leader in the Twelfth Assembly District.

Mr. Robinson, 50, Presbyterian pastor of the Church of the Master, 360 West 122rd Street, called a press conference at which he explained his refused to run. He denounced both Mr. Powell and Tammany Hall, which is headed by Carmine G. De Sapio.

He charged that "unwise" and "inept" leadership was responsible for the Democratic political crisis in Harlem.

Mr. Robinson said that he met with Mr. Harriman and Mr. De Sapio Saturday at the Governor's home, 16 East Eighty-first street. Mr. Harriman, he said, "pointed out the importance of the issues involved" and expressed the hope that he would run.

Asked why he had intervened, Mr. Harriman said that he did not "interfere with local situations" and had no right to offer a nomination but sought to learn if Mr. Robinson or Mr. Marshall were available.

"I was not interested in getting a capable and outstanding individual able to represent not only the Congressional district but also the people of the state," Mr. Harriman said.

State's Lead Cited

He declared that New York has led in championing civil rights. He noted that obtaining a "respected" representative was important because civil rights was an issue of both national and international significance. He would "have been happy" with either Mr. Robinson of Mr. Marshall, who, he said, would have been a "splendid candidate if he were available."

Mr. Marshall, however, pleaded commitments in his work "of nation-wide character."

The Governor's entry in the developing Congressional conflict involved a possible risk that it might provoke election - day reprisals against him by Powell supporters.

Some Harlem Democratic leaders previously had predicted that Tammany's feud with Mr. Powell would not affect the top of the party's state ticket.

Mr. Powell himself has warned that his support might be a decisive factor in Mr. Harriman's bid for re-election. He hinted at retaliation at a rally last night, saying that he was "disturbed" by the Governor's support of Mr. Robinson and that it "calls for a lot of thinking by all of us up here."

Mr. Robinson said that officials of the Liberal party also had offered to nominate him and that both Liberal and Democratic officials had offered to finance his campaign. But he said that adding Congressional duties to his ministerial duties would mean a "major reorientation of my life which I am not prepared at this time to make."

He said, however, that he might be willing to run for Congress in two years provided that Tammany by then over-hauled its leadership in Harlem .

He said that Mr. Powell was "neither invincible nor unbeatable" but indicated that he believed that Negroes had little choice but to support him.

"He is not the best to represent us, but who else is there to represent us?" he asked.

Leadership Attacked

"The Democratic leadership both of Harlem and this city, seems neither to have fully understood nor accurately gauged the basic political attitudes, unspoken but deep resentments and desires of the people of Harlem," he said in a prepared statement.

"It seems also to have missed the very essential point that there is at least as much, if not more anti-Hulan Jack feeling as pro-Powell sentiment." Mr. Jack is the Manhattan Borough President, Mr. Powell's chief political antagonist.

Mr. Robinson declared that the "booing" of Mr. Jack at a recent NAACP rally in Harlem reflected the anti-Tammany sentiment in Harlem and did not stem alone from the issue over Mr. Powell. Tammany leaders hal voted to read Mr. Powell out of the party for his support of President Eisenhower in 1956.

Mr. Jack was booed previously when Mr. Powell was out of the country, Mr. Robinson said.

Democratic leadership, he said, has helped to create a picture of Mr. Powell as a "martyr" and has given him an opportunity to win sympathy on a claim of persecution. He said that Mr. Powell exploited this.

Lack of Aid Noted

Negroes in Harlem feel that "they have been denied rights, privileges and a share of patronage and that leaders have not stood up and worked and fought for them," Mr. Robinson declared.

Mr. Robinson said that there was a "possibility" of violence in the Negro community because of aroused passions and that "Mr. Powell has it in his power to control this situation."

No sizeable part of the community wants violence, he said. But he added that "there are people always in any situation who can be swept up by emotion and commit acts of violence."

Never Supported Powell

He declared that he had never supported Mr. Powell. Mr. Robinson had been regarded as a candidate able to withstand a charge that he was a "tool" of Mr. Jack and Tammany because he ran as the Liberal party candidate against Mr. Jack for Borough President in 1953.

The Governor's effort to get Mr. Robinson to run was expected to lead to a demand by Mr. Powell for Tammany to reconcile its action in ousting him for backing Mr. Eisenhower with the Governor's endorsement of a Democrat who opposed a party candidate locally.

Mr. Brown was elected to the Council as the nominee of the Democratic, Republican and Liberal parties. A graduate of Harvard, he was a reporter on The Herald Tribune and later managing editor of The Amsterdam News. He was on the staff of Time Magazine and had served on the editorial staff of Life Magazine. He was born in Charlottesville, Va. His father was a Baptist minister and his mother a nurse.

He worked his way through Harvard, where he won a letter in baseball. He majored in economics.

Begins Sunday Rallies

Mr. Powell began a series of Sunday evening church rallies last night in his campaign for the Democratic nomination.

Addressing 500 persons in the Second Canaan Baptist Church, 111th Street and Lenox Avenue, he denied that he was a "racist" or favored violence.

This was a reversal from a speech he had made last Saturday at an NAACP rally in Harlem. The NAACP accused him of making "racist" statements in the speech and disassociated the organization from them.

The following day Mr. Powell warned Mr. De Sapio, and Borought President. Hulan Jack of Manhattan that it might be dangerous for them to walk on the streets of Harlem.

Notes His Citations

Mr. Powell said last night that his whole career had been based on preaching Christian brotherhood. He called attention to citations he had received from leading Jewish organizations.

Denying that he had threatened Mr. Jack or Mr. DeSapia, he said, "My life is based on nonviolence."

Mr. Powell said he was fighting "bossism" in his effort to win the Democratic nomination.

EARL LOUIS BROWN, who entered the ring yesterday against Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr., is a spunky challenger originally from Charlottesville, Va., wearing Tammany trunks and weighing 168 pounds. In ring argot, he is a "cute" fighter—one who, because he is the underdog or on the defensive, must be tricky. Mr. Brown had balked at a primary bout for the Democratic nomination against Mr. Powell in Harlem's Sixteenth Congressional district.

Man in the News

But now that Carmine G. De Sapio, Tammany leader, prevailed on him to fight, Mr. Brown is determined to prove that he, a good little political man, can take on a big one.

He acknowledges that just as Mr. Powell is more than six feet tall (Mr. Brown is five feet nine) Mr. Powell has the advantage of a harder oratorical punch and a longer reach on Harlem emotions over the civil rights issue. He also concedes Mr. Powell's five-year age advantage over the 55-year-old Mr. Brown and his longer experience and versatility in political infighting.

Speech Is Unadorned

Accordingly, Mr. Brown is planning to wage his own kind of fight. Mr. Powell's superior forensic gift is best displayed before large audiences indoors or at street rallies. Mr. Brown's diction is conversational, unadorned and direct, reflecting him experience as a professional news writer. He is an assistant editor of Life magazine, for which he has worked for eighteen years.

Mr. Brown intends to wage his campaign in relatively small intimate gatherings at people's homes and depend on his record as a City Councilman since 1949 and hard work by Tammany district leaders to see him successfully through the primary.

If Tammany had to find a candidate within its ranks, Mr. Brown was a top choice; he probably is one of the least "Tammanified" members of the New York County Democratic organization, a big consideration in view of anti-Tammany sentiment in Harlem.

Mr. Brown has a rugged independence on issues about which he feels deeply and civil rights has been his overriding passion. In his zeal for the cause, he has sometimes angered Tammany and Councilmanic colleagues.

For years, in a column he writes for The Amsterdam News, a Harlem weekly, he has fired critical barbs at Democratic leaders. Although the criticism more often than not was circumspect and cautiously couched to avoid a direct attack on personalities, it was nonetheless independent and courageous.

First Elected in 1949

His successful co-sponsorship of the Sharkey-Brown-Isaacs bill making New York City the first in the nation to outlaw racial discrimination in private rental housing is his most imposing legislative achievement. It is counted on as a strong campaign asset against Mr. Powell, whose career has been built on the civil rights issue.

Mr. Brown was first elected to the Council in 1949 as the Republican, Liberal and Democartic candidate against Ben Davis, a Communist. He won re-election in 1953 with Republican and Democratic support and in 1957 with Democratic and Liberal backing.

He was born in Charlottesville. His father was a Baptist minister, his mother a nurse. He worked his way through Harvard, waiting on tables and doing other odd jobs. Mr. Brown majored in economics. He won his letter as a pitcher on the Harvard baseball team.

He is a round-faced almost bald man who dresses with Ivy League conservatism. He is not known as a gregarious person or a political clubhouse "gladhander" but rather as an introspective and generally humorless person.

He confines his social activities to a small circle of friends. He reads biographies and history and likes a Martini before dinner.

Mr. Brown lives at 706 Riverside Drive with his wife Emma. They have been married for twenty-five years.

BROWN ENDORSED TO OPPOSE POWELL

Councilman Designated by Tammany—He Feels 'Sure' He Will Win Primary

By LEO EGAN

Councilman Earl L. Brown was designated officially yesterday by the Tammany district leaders in Harlem to oppose Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr. for the Democratic Congressional nomination in the Sixteenth District.

Mr. Brown, the 55-year-old son of a Baptist Minister, is an assistant editor of Life magazine in addition to being a member of the City Council. Like Mr. Powell, he is a Negro. As a Councilman, he is best known for his co-sponsorship of the Brown-Isaacs-Sharkey Law barring discrimination because of race in the selection of tenants for private rental housing in the city.

In an interview following his designation, Mr. Brown said he was "sure" he could defeat Mr. Powell in the Aug. 12 primary. He added that it was unfortunate that Mr. Powell was "attempting to pit race against race."

Carmine G. De Sapio, who presided at the meeting that designated Mr. Brown, echoed the Councilman's view that he would win the primary. He added that it was about time the people in Mr. Powell's district realized "they have a faker as a Congressman."

Deny Link to Tax Case

Mr. De Sapio, the leader of Tammany, and the district leaders who picked Mr. Brown insisted they were denying Mr. Powell the regular Democratic organization's support because he had backed President Eisenhower, a Republican, in 1956. Their action, they declared, had nothing to do with Mr. Powell's recent indictment as an income tax evader.

The leaders met at Tammany headquarters, 331 Madison Avenue. All fourteen leaders and co-leaders participated.

Mayor Wagner said at City Hall that he did not intend to get involved in the primary fight between Mr. Brown and Mr. Powell. But he added that "Mr. Brown is a very fine Councilman and would make a good Congressman." Asked whether Mr. Powell was a good Representative, his answer was:

"After some of the statements Adam made lately there is a question."

In his view, Mr. Wagner went on, Mr. Powell has every right to seek the nomination in the primary. This places the ultimate choice in the hands of the Democratic voters of Harlem.

G. O. P. Opposition Voiced

As yet neither the Republicans nor the Liberals have picked a candidate for Mr. Powell's seat. Indications yesterday were that Mr. Brown would eventually get the Liberal endorsement. He had Liberal support when he was elected to the Council.

In a vote taken yesterday afternoon the advisory committee of the New York County Republican Committee counseled Thomas J. Curran, the Republican county leader, against endorsing Mr. Powell. Several Harlem Republican leaders have favored such an endorsement as one way of cutting down the top-heavy Democratic majorities in Harlem. George J. Mintzer presided at the meeting at which the vote was taken.

Today is the first day for circulating primary designating petitions not only in the Sixteenth Congressional District but in all the other Congressional and legislative districts of the state. A spirited race is expected to develop between the Powell and Brown supporters to obtain signatures. Those who sign one designating petition are barred by law from signing another for the same office.

Besides endorsing Mr. Brown's selection, the full Democratic Executive Committee, meeting at Tammany headquarters, announced yesterday the regular organization candidates for all primary nominations except for City Court justice. That choice is to be made next week.

Those designated for office in the various districts, with asterisk denoting incumbent, were:

Congress—17. Anthony B. Akers Jr.; 18. *Alfred E. Santangelo; 19. *Leonard Farbstein; 20. *Ludwig Teller; and 21. *Herbert Zelenko.

State Senate—20. S. Arthur Glixon; 21. *James L. Watson; 22. *John P. Morrissey; 23. *Joseph Zaretzki; 24. *Joseph R. Marro; and 25. *John H. Farrell.

Assembly—1. *William F. Passannante; 2. *Louis DeSalvio; 3. *Francis W. Doheny; 4. *Samuel A. Spiegel; 5. *Bentley Kassal; 6. *Joseph J. Weiser; 7. Daniel M. Kelly; 8. Martin M. Trainor; 9. Alice Sachs; 10. Martin J. Kelly; 11. Lloyd E. Dickens; 12. *Bessie Buchanan; 13. *Oreste V. Maresca; 14. José-Ramos Lopez; 15. John J. Walsh and 16. *Frank G. Rossetti.

For Municipal Court justice, Second District, Justice Max M. Meltzer and Assistant District Attorney Frank J. Blangiardo were designated for the two vacancies. Louis Otten was picked for the single vacancy in the Ninth District.

Churchmen Rally To Powell, His Opponent Named

Special to Journal and Guide

NEW YORK — Democratic Party leaders in Harlem selected City Councilman Earl Brown to run against Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, Jr. for the Party's Congressional nomination in the 16th District Monday just a few hours after the city's thousands of Baptists, through their leaders, stated pledges of full support to the Congressman.

Councilman Brown was chosen following a series of meetings of Assembly District leaders. Democratic leaders had previously rejected Rep. Powell as the candidate to succeed himself.

REP. POWELL supported President Eisenhower in the 1956 election and Democratic leaders gave this as the reason for withholding their support of his bid for re-election.

Rep. Powell is also under indictment of charges of income tax evasion.

Mr. Brown, by profession, is a journalist and has worked with several of New York's weeklies. He is now an assistant editor of an internationally-circulated magazine.

• • •

SPECULATION that Rep. Powell's next woes would be loss of support of the New York City Baptists ended abruptly when the powerful Baptist Ministers' Conference of Greater New York and Vicinity pledged full support to the Congressman.

The special resolution issued by the group of 350 pastors and ministers said that Rep. Powell was the victim of a well-devised plan of persecution by political bosses and certain elements of the press.

IT CONTINUED:

"Adam Clayton Powell is an outspoken foe of segregation and discrimination. He has defended the rights of the common man, even at the expense of jeopardizing his future as a politician. When the rights of men are at stake, he loses sight of partisan politics and fights on. His passion for civil rights and civil liberties, and for the full participation of all citizens in our democratic government, has led him to every nook and corner of our nation, and to foreign soil — and in the process, Congressman Powell has firmly established himself as a symbol of freedom for all people everywhere."

"There has emerged a conspiracy between the reactionary Dixiecrats of the South and those equally reactionary political dictators of the North. We, in all fairness to our democracy, cannot and will not permit this vicious conspiracy to go unchallenged. Therefore, we pledge our full support and our concerted efforts to re-elect The Reverend Dr. Adam Clayton Powell, Jr., as Representative from the 16th Congressional District and we urge our constituency to lend 100 percent support to the nomination and re-election of Congressman Powell."

BUT THE FIERY Congressman has not had it so good elsewhere. Earlier this month he was indicted by federal grand jury on charges of income tax invasion. A hearing will be held on June 16.

ANOTHER BLAST AT Powell was issued recently by the lawmaker for what they termed "extreme racialism." The NAACP said it did not want to be identified with Powell's fight with Tammany Hall.

RIVALS IN HARLEM TRADE HOT WORDS

Brown Asserts Powell Has 'Racist Tendencies,' Is in Turn Called 'Uncle Tom'

Councilman Earl Brown yesterday accused Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr. of "racist tendencies" and "treason to the Democratic party."

Mr. Powell called the charges "ridiculous" and accused his opponent of "playing Uncle Tom's game."

The acrimonious exchange was between the two candidates for the Democratic nomination in Harlem's Sixteenth Congressional District.

Mr. Brown, the party's regular candidate for Representative, made his comments on a radio program, "Campus Press Conference," over WYNC.

Mr. Powell, his opponent said, "certainly could be accused of having been guilty of racist tendencies in his recent utterances on the streets of Harlem."

Mr. Brown accused Mr. Powell of a "series of acts of party disloyalty—as a matter of fact, of party treason—[which] made Mr. Powell's position in the Democratic party completely untenable."

Powell Record Cited

Among these acts Mr. Brown cited Mr. Powell's campaigning for President Eisenhower, his support of Senator Jacob K. Javits and his refusal to endorse Mayor Wagner for re-election last year.

"Mr. Powell was denied the nomination," Mr. Brown said, "because he has supported the Republican party for a long number of years."

Mr. Powell, asked to reply to Mr. Brown's charge of "racist tendencies," told a reported: "It is so ridiculous I'm not going to comment on it."

The Representative reiterated his claim that he was denied Democratic endorsement because unleash bitter emotionalism and violence and further delay the orderly process of integration and racial progress," he wrote.

He criticized the President for having failed "to lend the moral courage so desperately needed in this crisis."

Mr. Brown is running against Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr. for the Democratic nomination.

EARL BROWN ASKS INTEGRATION TALK

Harlem Candidate Appeals to President to Convoke White House Parley

Councilman Earl Brown, who is seeking the Democratic nomination for the House of Representatives in Harlem's Sixteenth District, asked President Eisenhower yesterday to call a conference of Negro and white leaders on "the school integration crisis."

Mr Brown wrote to the President that victory of Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas on Tuesday's primary election had given "renewed courage to those who continue to defy the Supreme Court decision in integration in the schools."

Mr. Brown urged that the proposed conference be held at the White House before Sept. 1.

He also urged that the conference should be representative of all sections of the country and include leaders of both races who "would work honestly on the issue."

"The actions of racists in this country for personal, selfish gain, whether by a Faubus in Arkansas, or by a Negro in Harlem, can only continue because of pressure from Southern party leaders.

He said that Mr. Brown "falls into the same pattern as the Dixiecrats" and "is playing Uncl eTom's game because he, himself, never protested the Dixiecrat revolt against civil rights."

Powell said that Mr. De Sapio "paid no attention to the rights" of Negroes in Harlem. He called for a huge turnout at the Aug. 12 primary "to defeat Tammany."

Mr. Brown observed earlier that "Mr. Powell accepted enthusiastically the Tammany Hall nomination for seven successive times to Congress," and added:

"If Tammany gives the people of Harlem nothing but 'crumbs,' Mr. Powell must be an exception, because he has received an awful hunk of cake up until now."

Mr. Powell said the Dixiecrats, after each bolt, were "always welcomed back" by the National Democratic Committee. He charged that Carmine G. De Sapio, leader of Tammany Hall and a member of the committee, "never opened his mouth in protest."

HOUSE CAMPAIGN AROUSES HARLEM

Powell-Brown Struggle in Democratic Primary Is Both Bitter and Personal

By RAYMOND ROBINSON

Along Harlem's hot and crowded streets an odd and tempestuous political war is sweeping to a climax.

The key figures are Democratic Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr., 49-year-old minister, and Democratic City Councilman Earl Brown, 55-year-old magazine editor.

The immediate objective of their fight, which has split the Harlem community, is the Democratic nomination for Representative from the Sixteenth Congressional District. The winner in the Aug. 12 primary will have the right to run as the Democratic candidate in the Nov. 4 general election.

But considerably more is at stake in the primary race than the ability of either candidate —they are both Negroes—to achieve a personal victory in the heavily Democratic and heavily Negro district.

For one thing, the attitude of Negro voters toward Tammany Hall—which selected Mr. Brown to dethrone Mr. Powell—is sure to be tested when those voters go to the polls a week from tomorrow.

For another, the primary vote may provide an important index to the direction of the Negro vote in the Governorship race in the Nov. 4 election. That vote could be a vital factor in a close election.

Leaders Watch Outcome

Harlem Republican leaders, who are backing Mr. Powell in the Republican primary, will interpret a Powell victory in the Democratic primary as a sign that Negro voters will no longer give overwhelming support to a Tammany candidate.

By the same token, a Brown victory in the Democratic primary would be regarded by Democratic regulars as a vote of confidence not only in Mr. Brown but also in Tammany's leadership. For more than twenty years Tammany candidates in Harlem—including Mr. Powell—have traditionally racked up winning margins of from 2 to 1 to 10 to 1 over their opponents.

The political careers of both men are rooted firmly in the Democratic party. Mr. Powell has represented the Sixteenth in Congress for fourteen years as a Democrat. Mr. Brown has represented the Twenty-first Councilmanic District, which embraces a large part of the Sixteenth Congressional District, for nine years as a Democrat. Similarly, both men are the sons of Baptist ministers.

One of the bizarre aspects of the hard-fought primary race is that it will eliminate neither man from the race for the House seat. If Mr. Powell loses the Democratic primary, he will still be on the Republican ballot on Nov. 4, since he is unopposed in that party's primary. If Mr. Brown loses, his name will appear on the Liberal line for the same reason.

Their battleground, the Sixteenth District, is largely a low-income area that is about 85 per cent Negro. Puerto Ricans and other whites make up the remainder of the population.

The district runs from the north end of Central Park to 165th Street and from Amsterdam Avenue on the west to the Harlem River on the east. A little corner of it also juts down on the west side of Central Park to 100th Street.

Both candidates are stressing their civil rights records in the primary battle, which has produced some of the most pungent political oratory heard in the area for some time.

From sound truck and at meeting hall, Mr. Brown, who speaks in a calm, deliberate voice, has denounced Mr. Powell as a "phantom Congressman" who is never around when his constituents need him for help or advice.

Liberals Want Bunche for Senate

NEW YORK—Although it has been reported that Democratic party conservatives are cool to the idea, the possibility of nominating Dr. Ralph J. Bunche for U. S. Senator will be formally considered by leaders of the Liberal party.

Not a candidate, Bunche tells Afro

NEW YORK — Dr. Ralph Bunche told the AFRO Saturday that he would be a candidate for no office for any party, thus cutting short Liberal Party plans to back him up as a candidate for the Senate.

Dr. Bunche said:

"I wish to make this unqualified statement that there is no basis for plans of any party to run me for any office. I am not interested in running for any office and I have no intention of running for office.

"I am and always have been independent politically and I will always remain so."

* * *

BUNCHE'S NAME has come to the fore in Liberal circles only during the past few weeks. The Liberals have indicated a wish to see Bunche, UN Under Secretary, also nominated by the Democratic Party.

As far as the matter got, it was reported, Democratic Party conservatives were cool to the idea of a Bunche candidacy.

Friday night, the Liberal Party, in view of Bunche's unwillingness to run, named District Attorney Hogan, a Democrat who got his start 20 years ago as Thomas E. Dewey's assistant; and Air Force Secretary Finletter as "prominant possibilities" for the nomination.

NEW MEXICO

Minister Seeks Seat In Assembly Of New Mexico

HOBBS, New Mexico — (Special to ANP) — For the first time in this far-western state often designated as the "Land of Enchantment," a Negro is making an active bid for the democratic nomination for state representative from Lea County.

In its 40-year-history no Negro has ever filed for a state office or made an active campaign and Rev. Robert C. D. Tieuel, Jr., an ordained Methodist preacher and pastor of the CME church, is doing both.

The "Land of Enchantment" will hold primary elections for both major parties, May 13, and as to how well this history-making event will take with the voters of Lea County will be told. The area is close to the West Texas border and the county contains a majority of Texans and Oklahomans with only a scant native population and also Spanish residents.

Opposing Tieuel are three white attorneys from various sections of the county and political depesters point out that this could very well rebound to the minister's favor as the vote will be widely split among the three popular lawyers.

Lea County, New Mexico, is said to be one of the most prejudiced regions in the state and all eyes will be on the outcome of the election as most of the wire services of the daily newspapers have carried running stories of the campaign throughout the Southwest.

Negro Minister Files For Lumberton Board

LUMBERTON—The Rev. E. B. Turner, pastor of the Negro First Baptist Church here, Wednesday became the first Negro ever to file for public office in Lumberton. He paid his fee as a candidate for Lumberton City School Board. He is the only candidate for the office except for the four incumbents whose terms expire.

Turner is not the first Negro to run in Robeson County. Four years ago, Robert Davis ran for the County Board of Commissioners from Maxton District, but was defeated. This year, Ocia Howell is a candidate for constable of Fairmont Township.

Shaw Professor Files For Seat In N. C. House

RALEIGH, N. C. — (ANP) — Prof. Nelson H. Harris of Shaw university became the first Negro since the Fusionists period following Reconstruction to contest for a seat in the state house of representatives last week when he paid his filing fee of $18 as a Democratic candidate.

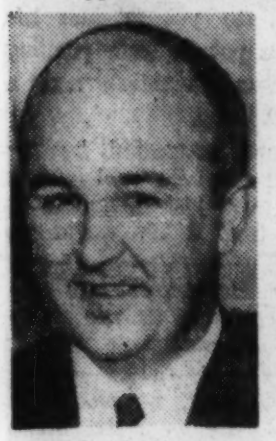
Harris is seeking one of three Wake county seats. He said he entered the race because "my many friends" asked him to be a candidate.

North Carolina Voters Stick With Incumbents

By JAY JENKINS

Raleigh Bureau, The Charlotte Observer
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

RALEIGH, N.C., June 7 — Incumbent North Carolina congressmen moved under their opposition in the state's Democratic primary.



Jay Jenkins

Reps. Alton Lennon of Wilmington, Ralph J. Scott of Danbury and George A. Shuford of Asheville rolled to easy victories and young David Clark of Lincolnton won the right to take on the state's only Republican congressman in November.

Lennon defeated Caswell P. Britt, Lumberton lawyer, by a 4-1 margin. Scott had a clear majority of more than 10,000 votes over Winfield Blackwell of Winston-Salem and the mayor of that city, Marshall Kurfees.

Shuford had the smallest margin over four challengers, led by wealthy shoemaker Heinz Rollman of Waynesville, but his majority topped 3,000. An eye operation in February handicapped Shuford in his campaign.

Clark, 35-year-old member of the General Assembly, exhibited good strength in every one of the counties in the 10th Congressional District as he defeated Marvin L. Ritch, Charlotte attorney, by 3-1. Clark carried Ritch's home county of Mecklenbury by a 2-1 margin.

NORTH CAROLINA

One veteran Superior Court judge, Zeb V. Nettles of Asheville, was defeated in the primary. W. K. McLean, also of Asheville, ousted Nettles from the 28th Judicial District position.

Other incumbent judges kept their seats with relative ease.

Contests for seats in the General Assembly produced a fairly heavy vote, but local issues and personalities made it impossible to analyze the results in terms of Gov. Hodges' popularity, or lack of it.

Jake Simmons Announces For Muskogee Post

Black Dispatch
Fri 3-14-58
34a(2)

MUSKOGEE, Okla.—J. J. Simmons III, geological engineer and owner of Simmons Insurance Agency, announced his candidacy for city councilman, Ward Four, Muskogee, this week.

Simmons, a native Muskogean, and an honor graduate of Manual Training high school in 1942, attended the University of Detroit in civil engineering and received a Bachelor of Science in geological engineering from St. Louis university in 1949. He is a disabled veteran of World War II.

Fri 3-14-58

Mr. Simmons and Mrs. Simmons, the former Bernice Miller of Detroit, Mich., have four children and are members of the Sacred Heart church.

P.1

Mr. Simmons feels that he is qualified to serve the City of Muskogee because of his engineering background, especially with regard to the many engineering projects conducted by the city. Also, it is quite alarming to the well-thinking citizens in Muskogee the number of homes that are without the very necessities of life such as running water, sewage ,the absence of paved streets in areas that have been promised improvement year after year, and the complete absence of any Negro citizen on any city boards or employed in municiual clerical positions.

Oklahoma City, Okla

If elected, Simmons as one councilman out of 16, can't accomplish all of these previously stated inadequacies overnight, but his presence will serve as a constant reminder to the administration that all the city services and employment are intended for all citizens, regardless of race, creed or color.

"OKLAHOMA NEEDS ME"

McDonald, 76 On Jail Leave For Gov. Race

34a(2) Okla.

"Oklahoma needs me worse than I need her to straighten out the crookedness in government" is what governor-hopeful A. B. McDonald, 76-year-old Negro, told this reporter, as he entered his first stages of campaigning after being granted a 60-day leave from the county jail.

Campaigning on the slogan, "Two cars for every garage and fried chicken and hot biscuits in every home," the aged candidate for governor expressed no doubt that he would win the race.

In fact his immediate answer to the question, "Do you think you can win?" was an unfaltering "Yes."

Oklahoma City, Okla

McDonald, a minister and real estate agent, with some experience in the practice of law, was granted a 60-day leave from the Oklahoma county jail Monday afternoon by Gov. Raymond Gary. He was sentenced in 1956 to 15 days and fined $250 and costs for operating as a real estate broker without a license.

Fri 4-25-58

According to the governor's order, McDonald had served his 15-day sentence but prior to the granted leave was serving out the fine and costs at $1 a day.

With the granting of the leave by Gary to give the nominee some lee-way in his campaign, Gary was accused of putting his influence behind McDonald in the governor's race though he had already announced a policy of neutrality.

Gary's answer was, "I'm still neutral but it just doesn't seem fair to have a candidate locked up in jail where he can't even file or make a campaign."

Having already received application to file, McDonald says he will be the first candidate to officially file on the opening date.

Advocating what he termed "Thomas Jefferson's democracy and Abraham Lincoln's Republicanism," McDonald is campaigning on a platform of reformed penal institutions and reform school system, no mob violence and no strikes.

As to the controversial liquor issue he said, "If the folk want it let them have it."

He added, however, "Liquor is primary, first get justice for the poor man regardless of who he is."

He also advocated a state conducted rest home for men and a home for wayward girls. The aged candidate said that if the residents would not vote for the establishment of these homes he would personally finance them if elected.

The first Negro to file for the governor's race here, McDonald's last and only try at seeking a public office was in 1954 when he filed for the U. S. senate. Defeated in this race he said "I got a bunch of votes though."

The aged candidate, incidental in getting the race tag "Negro" stricken from the ballot in Oklahoma, served as his own counsel in unsuccessfully appealing his last case before the criminal court of appeals and the U. S. Supreme Court.

However, though the governor stated in his order that McDonald was to return to jail to complete his sentence after the 60 days, Gary indicated that clemency may be granted though he would follow the recommendations of the pardon and parole board.

The governor has the authority to issue 60-day leaves without the consent of this board, but cannot issue a parole or pardon if the board does not recomend it.

Elect Dr. Dowell Next Tuesday

Integration is the way of the hour. Integration means "ONENESS," a merging of parts into one. Let us have true integration. Let us have integration in education by integration of teachers and other personnel, as well as children. Let us have integration in job opportunities, based upon qualifications alone. Let us integrate the legislature. Although the Negro is almost ten per cent of the Oklahoma population, only ONE Negro, A. C. Hamlin, has ever been a member of the legislature in Oklahoma.

It has been almost fifty years since A. C. Hamlin came to the legislature from Logan county. Now Dr. Dowell is in the run-off in legislative district 4 to succeed Mr. Harkey. Dr. Dowell CAN and SHOULD BE ELECTED next Tuesday, if we go to the polls and vote for him.

Dr. Dowell will be the representative for all the people, not for Negroes alone. He has a good platform, is a good family man. He worked his way through West Virginia State college. He is a good church man, owns his home and has built a creditable and beautiful office building. He has fought his way into the run-off almost on his own.

What does it mean to elect Dr. Dowell to the legislature? It can mean the beginning of placement of qualified Negroes on such state boards and commissions as the State Board of Education, the State Board of Medical Examiners, the State Real Estate Board, and many others on which Negroes are well qualified to serve.

Integration is the talk of the day. Should we integrate on job opportunities, or shall we be "INTEGRATED PAUPERS"? Including federal funds, we spend a hundred million dollars per year upon the highways of Oklahoma, without a single Negro being employed in this capacity. Is this fair?

Of course the answer is "NO." Then elect a man to the legislature whom you can hold responsible should he fail to work to integrate you on highway jobs. Away with "integrated pauperism!" Let us have real integrated "oneness" on jobs and commissions. This will tear no man down, but will lift ALL men up. Many fair-minded citizens of the majority race group will see the justice of this and vote for Dr. Dowell. A vote for Dr. Dowell is a vote for your enlightened best interest.

Dowell Supporters Plan Big Operation Caravan For East Side On Monday, July 21

Mobilize to All-Out Rally "Citizens-for-Dowell" For Representative Race

Spearheaded by the Citizens - for - Dowell committee, "Operation Caravan," a mammoth motorcade has been planned to begin at 6 p. m. Monday afternoon, July 21, in a final "big push" before the election run-off.

"Operation Caravan" will be climaxed by a rally at 8 p. m. at the Douglass Recreation Center. The motorcade will assemble at N. E. 8th and Stonewall at 6 p. m. according to Wesley Edmonds, campaign manager for Dr. Dowell.

Route of the motorcade will be: west on N. E. 8th to Stiles, north on Stiles to N. E. 10th, east on N. E. 10th to Lottie; north on Lottie to N. E. 13th; east on N. E. 13th to Kelham; north on Kelham to N. E. 16th Terrace; east on N. E. 16th Terrace to Eastern; north on Eastern to Granada; north on Granada to N. E. 22nd; east on N. E. 22nd to Miramar Blvd.; south on Miramar to N. E. 16th Terrace; west on N. E. 16th Terrace to Eastern; south on Eastern to N. E. 10th; east on N. E. 10th to Carverdale Drive.

The motorcade will circle Carverdale Addition back to 10th street. Then the route will proceed east on N. E. 10th to N. E. Grand boulevard; north on Grand boulevard, circling Edwards Addition west via N. Page, continuing back to 10th street and ending at the Donglass center.

Persons who are interested in participating in the motorcade should telephone the A. L. Dowell-for-Representative headquarters, FO 5-5748 for further details. Marshal of the motorcade will be E. D. Countee. He will be assisted by A. J. Kirkpatrick and Wesley Edmonds.

The route of the motorcade will take the parade of Dowell supporters and well-wishers throughout the Eastside community as far as N. E. 23rd and Eastern and east to the Creston Hills, Edwards Addition and Carverdale areas.

In an all-out drive to secure the election of Dr. A. L. Dowell to the position of state representative from the fourth district in Oklahoma county, the Citizens-for-Dowell committee is working to alert all qualified voters in the district to the importance of casting their votes for the popular optometrist.

Mobilize Negro Vote

In their effort to mobilize the predominant Negro vote of the Eastside and near northeast area of the district, the Citizens-for-Dowell organization has worked out a structure of block workers in Carverdale, Edwards Addition and Creston Hills.

Pep rallies have been held in Carverdale, Edwards Addition and Creston Hills. Currently the Citizens-for-Dowell committee is busy making plans for Monday's final big effort, "Operation Caravan."

The mammoth motorcade calls for a "fleet of cars for Election Day." It is expected to provide the crowning touch in mobilizing the Negro citizenry to the urgent necessity of helping Dr. Dowell to set an historic and needed "first" for the community.

Bartlesville Man's Platform Has 16-Plank Platform

Bill Doenges is staking his campaign for the Democratic nomination on a 16-plank platform designed to bring about a realistic, business-like operation of Oklahoma government.

The Bartlesville auto dealer has been stumping the state to bring his plan before the people of Oklahoma.

The "plan" in the "Best Man-Best Plan" slogan highlights a voluntary labor law as the most practical approach to industrial expansion. This law, Doenges believes, will substitute leadership for dictatorship in unions, will clarify Oklahoma labor laws and attract industry to the state.

"I believe in labor unions," Doenges declared, "but not in compulsory union membership. It is as alien to my thinking as compulsory church membership would be. The voluntary labor law I propose is not a union-busting law, but one designed to return control of unions to the rank and file members."

The best plan, in a nutshell, includes the following:

Schools—A permentnt school financing program that would eliminate our schools from being the pawn of every election and legislative session. Doenges proposes a committee from Oklahoma Education association members, school boards, P-TAs and taxpayers to bring about a sound financial program of education by initiative or referendum.

Teacher Retirement—Adequate retirement pay for teachers. Doenges will work to see the retirement fund is made actuarily sound.

Higher Education—A long-range building program for colleges. Doenges proposes substantial increases in operational budgets to provide higher faculty salaries.

Roads — Substitution of engineering for politicking, and planning for promising. Doenges proposes to take the Oklahoma Highway Commission away from political pressure, to utilize fully federal matching funds for highways, to eliminate death traps and bring our roads up to date.

Agriculture—Support for the REA program to provide farmers with the cheapest electricity possible. Doenges favors exemption of the state sales tax on feed, seed and fertilizer used by farmers and ranchers.

Law Enforcement—Strict enforcement of present traffic and liquor laws. Doenges proposes an executive order to enforce traffic laws to prevent highway slaughter.

Securities Law — Revision of State Securities Act. Doenges proposes a law to safeguard the investing public by providing adequate budgetary funds for proper auditing procedures.

Highway Patrol—Removing the highway patrol from political pressure. Doenges proposes a bipartisan Public Safety Commission as well as legislation enabling troopers to form a trust to receive reward money which they cannot now accept.

Wildlife Conservation—Consulting with organized wildlife conservation groups on matters of policy and personnel of the Wildlife Conservation Commission.

Oil and Gas—Continued hammering of Oklohoma's opposition to oil imports.

Veterans Affairs—Following the spirit and letter of the law. Doenges favor appointing War Veterans Commissioners from lists submitted by veterans groups.

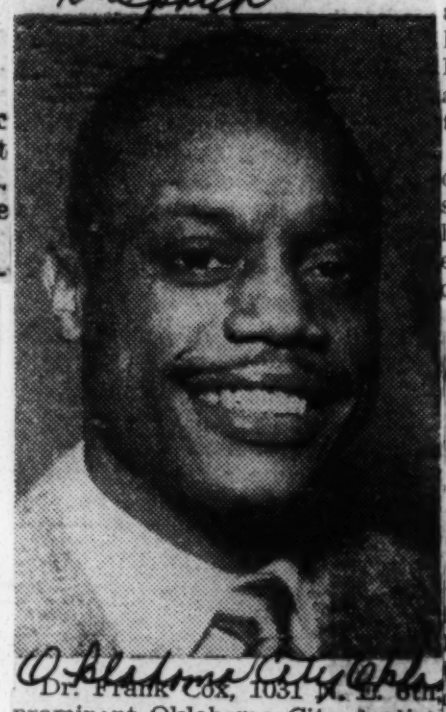
Mental Health — Providing a vastly improved mental health program.

Welfare—A program designed to adequately finance present day requirements of our senior citizens. Doenges will cut to the bone the overhead costs of administering the welfare program.

County Officers — Supporting county officers organizations to bring about four-year terms of office for county officers.

Natural esources—Full cooperation with water policy board to bring about complete development of industrial potential in eastern Oklahoma. Doenges favors full utilization of water for industry and irrigation.

FOR BILL DOENGES



Dr. Frank Cox, 1031 N. E. 6th, prominent Oklahoma City dentist, has been named as an assistant chairman of the Oklahoma county campaign of Bill Doenges for Governor.

Dr. Cox, 33, is a native of Oklahoma City and graduate with honors from Douglass high school in the class of 1942. He was an honor student at Fisk university, Nashville, Tenn., where he participated in football, basketball and tennis. He received his DDS from Meharry Medical college at Nashville and has been a practicing dentist here since 1948.

A veteran of the army medical corps in World War II and the Korean conflict, Cox is active in civic affairs. He is a past president of Beta Eta Lambda chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity, a member of the board of directors of the Urban League and the Douglass golf course and chairman of the board of Douglass Recreational Center.

"I am extremely happy to take an active part in Bill Doenges' campaign," Dr. Cox said. "I know Mr. Doenges is a fair man whose thinking is not tinted with prejudice of any kind. He is the most qualified man in the governor's race."

Along with the announcement of Dr. Cox's part in the Doenges campaign, came the announcement that Miss Mary Davis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Davis, 2118 N. Bath, is a volunteer secretary in Doenges' state headquarters at 104 W. Main.

Bill Doenges is a Bartlesville and Tulsa automobile dealer who lives on a farm 12 miles east of Bartlesville. He formerly served as Democratic National Committeeman from Oklahoma.

Doenges is the son of a Methodist minister and at present is serving his third term as Oklahoma Conference lay leader, highest elective position in the Methodist church.

OC Public School Figure Alex Higdon Seeks Post As County Superintendent

With the 1958 primary elections less than three weeks away, Alex Higdon, director of research for the Oklahoma City school, has received endorsements from various school groups and civic organizations after announcing his candidacy for county superintendent of schools on the Democratic ticket.

Among the groups endorsing Higdon are the Teachers council, school secretaries, the Crooked Oak Alumni association, the Oklahoma City Coaches association, the Oklahoma City Classroom teachers and various other educators and friends.

Higdon has 29 years of experience in the public schools which includes such positions as elementary teacher, elementary principal, secondary teacher, superintendent of a consolidated school, and principal of a large secondary school.

He is a graduate of Edmond high school and has studied at A&M College of Engineering, and at Central State Teachers college, receiging his bachelor's degree in 1930. Besides holding various posts in Oklahoma elementary and secondary schools throughout the state, he has served as educational director at Hill's Business university.

Mr. and Mrs. Higdon are owners of Alex's Greenhouse at 4415 N. W. 10th, which is operated by Mrs. Higdon, a former school teacher. Higdon is affiliated with the St. John Methodist church. Edmond Blue Lodge No. 37, Alpha Council No. 18, Royal Arch Masons, Oklahoma City Chapter No. 91, Bethlehem Commandery No. 45, Knights Templar of Oklahoma City and numerous business and professional organizations in which he has held numerous positions.

In making his announcement, Higdon said, "I will stand for a solid, professionally wholesome and clean educational program . . I will not stand for, nor stoop to bickering, feuding or assassination of character."

Higdon, a native Oklahoman, was born on a farm near Anadarko in April of 1905.

Ex-Evanstonian In Oregon Race

PORTLAND, Ore. — Mrs. Gustava Thompson, former Evanston, Ill., resident, has announced her candidacy for representative in the Oregon state legislature.

She is a Democrat, qualified by education experiences and point of view to speak for East Central District citizens in the House of Representatives.

Mrs. Thompson is a supporter of Gov. Robert D. Holmes and his progressive policies. As a Democratic legislator, she will try to carry out the forward-looking point-of-view of the Party toward labor, senior citizens, and the protection of religious and racial minorities from unfair discrimination.

In her community, Mrs. Thompson has been president of the Parent Teacher Association at the Richmond school. She is secretary of the Portland Branch of the NAACP, and is chairman of this organization's vital Education Committee. A member of the Urban League, she has served on its committees.

She has been very active in the Lewis and Clark Mother's Club. She was secretary of the Womens and Girls of the YMCA in Evanston, Ill.

A trained teacher, Mrs. Thompson lives with her family at 1831 S. E. 46th ave., with her husband William who is an engineer at the Bonneville Power Administration; her daughter Sherelle, who is a Junior at Lewis and Clark college; Gail, a Senior at Franklin High school; and her

ROBERT N. C. NIX
Our Next Congressman

Nix next to Congress

PHILADELPHIA

In a surprise move Thursday, Democratic leaders of the Fourth Congressional District chose veteran attorney Robert N. C. Nix Sr. as their candidate to succeed former Cong. Earl Chudoff.

Congressman Chudoff took office two weeks ago as a Common Pleas Court judge.

City Councilman Raymond P. Alexander was long considered the leading contender for the congressional position. Now, he has been promised the next open judgeship. Two such vacancies were filled this week by Governor Leader.

The governor has set May 20, Primary Day, for election of the New Congressman. It is expected that the Democratic candidate will win, thus assuring Mr. Nix's election as the state's first colored Congressman.

THE CAUCUS Thursday which slated Mr. Nix for the Democratic ticket was called by Eugene Hagerty, City Council sergeant at arms and leader of the 28th ward. He is chairman of the council district.

The 4th District includes the 24th, 28th, 29th, 32nd, 37th, 38th and 47th wards. Now living at 4827 Fairmount Ave. in the 44th ward, Mr. Nix will change his residency to the 32nd ward.

Although it is not required that a Congressman live in the district he represents, it is considered proper for him to do so.

* * *

AFTER HIS nomination, Thursday, Mr. Nix said:

"I have always had the greatest confidence in the liberal leadership of Congressman William J. Green Jr., Democratic chairman in Philadelphia.

"And I feel that this is consistent with his policy of advancing the interest of the colored people in our community.

"As for myself, I think that Congress affords an opportunity for the greatest possible public service, particularly in this crucial period of our country's history.

"If I am elected, I intend to give the utmost of my time, energy and ability in the service of my constituency and my country."

* * *

THE 4TH Congressional District had, as of last Nov. 5, some 133,352 registered voters, including 81,688 Democrats; 50,745 Republicans; and the remainder affiliated with minor parties.

Colored voters of the two major parties number 80,284.

Mr. Nix, 57, maintains his law office at 412 S. 16th St. His son, Robert Jr. has been associated with him since 1956.

Mr. Nix has been active in politics for many years. He has served as chairman for several elections for the interracial committees for the Democratic campaign committees.

He ran for City Council in the general elections of 1943 and 1947; and in the 1951 primary.

In 1955, he aspired for a time, to a Municipal Court judgeship nomination.

He has served as a deputy state attorney general; and has been chairman of the 44th Ward Democratic Executive Committee.

Failure To Name Alexander Judge Irks Philadelphians

PHILADELPHIA (ANP) — An undercurrent among thousands of Negro Democratic voters in this city reportedly points to their bolting the party if the long battle to appoint a Negro judge to the Common Pleas Court bench fails.

The sentiment became very strong Friday, when leading race men in the party called an "impromptu meeting. Chief topic of discussion was the failure on the part of the Philadelphia Bar Association to endorse Councilman Raymond Pace Alexander as one of five candidates whose names were submitted to Government Leader for consideration.

Alexander may still be appointed at the discretion of the Governor, but the Bar Association will still be under fire by Negro and white voters who feel that if the Councilman was qualified for the job in 1957, and appropriately recommended, then he should have been apopinted in 1958

NEGRO SEEMS SURE TO WIN HOUSE SEAT

Philadelphian May Be Fourth Of His Race In Congress

From The Commercial Appeal Washington Bureau

—WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—The House is expected to receive its fourth Negro member shortly after May 20.

The prospective newcomer is Robert N. C. Nix Sr., a 57-year-old Philadelphia lawyer.

He is the Democratic nominee in a special election May 20 to elect a successor to former Representative Earl Chudoff (D., Penn.), who resigned two weeks ago to accept a state judgeship in Philadelphia.

While Republicans have not yet selected their nominee, a Democratic victory is regarded as certain.

A Philadelphia residential area, the district has 81,688 registered Democrats and 50,745 registered Republicans.

Of the total of 132,433 registered voters, 80,284 or about 60 per cent are Negroes.

When Mr. Chudoff was first elected Nov. 2, 1948, the percentage of Negro voters in the district was only about 25 per cent. It was 44.8 per cent by 1956, and has continued to increase since then.

Similar trends are under way in a number of other big city districts and the outlook is for a steadily increasing number of Negro members of the House.

Michigan's First District, in Detroit, now represented by Representative Thaddeus Machrowicz, a Democrat, is the next most likely to elect a Negro. Negroes accounted for 37.1 per cent of its registered voters in 1956.

The House's Negro members at present are Representatives William L. Dawson of Chicago, Adam Clayton Powell of New York and Charles C. Diggs Jr. of Detroit. All are Democrats.

Alexander to be Pa. congressman?

PHILADELPHIA — When Earl Chudoff took office Monday as Judge of Common Pleas Court No. 1, a Pennsylvania seat was left vacant in the U.S. Congress.

Mr. Chudoff, a Democrat had held the congressional position since 1948.

The vacancy will have to be filled by a special election, date to be set by Governor Leader within the next 30 days.

Mentioned most prominently as successor to the congressional seat is City Councilman Raymond P. Alexander (D.)

GOVERNOR LEADER announced a month ago that Mr. Alexander's candidacy would have his blessing.

The special election will be conducted for voters of the Fourth Congressional District only. This embraces Wards 24, 28, 29, 32, 37, 38 and 47.

The Democratic ward leaders will nominate one candidate to run against the candidate selected by the Republican ward leaders.

Whoever gets the majority vote will serve out Mr. Chudoff's unexpired term in the second session of the U.S. 85th Congress which convened this month.

It is almost a certainty that the Democratic candidate will win. It is also likely that the winner will be colored because of the heavy colored population in the Fourth District.

* * *

BUT MR. ALEXANDER, considered the favorite, is not the only person being mentioned for congressional choice of the Democratic organization.

Other names being mentioned are Robert N. C. Nix, attorney, and the Rev. Marshall L. Shepard, a city councilman-at-large.

Also in the running (and with strong support) is Magistrate Joseph J. Hersch.

It is felt that the Republican powers that be are waiting for the Democrats to choose a candidate before making their own selection of his opponent.

IN THE Republican camp, Hobson R. Rynolds is leader in the 47th Ward; Tomlin Campbell in the 32nd and Harry Battiste in the 24th.

It is unlikely, however, that either of these men will get the nod.

As a new jurist, Mr. Chudoff succeeded former President Judge Joseph L. Kun, Republi-

Philadelphia Democrats Name Negro To Run For Vacant Congress Seat

PHILADELPHIA. — (ANP) — Atty. Robert N. C. Nix Sr., 57, may be Pennsylvania's first Negro congressman after May 20, primary day, has come and gone.

In a surprise move recently Democratic leaders of the fourth congressional district selected Nix as their candidate to succeed former Representative Earl Chudoff, who is now a common pleas court jurist.

Because the fourth district had as of last November 5, 81,688 Democrats out of 133,352 registered voters, while the Republicans boasted 50,745, victory for Nix, as the Democratic candidate, is assured.

The veteran attorney, who is associated in the law business with his son, Robert Jr., has been active in politics for many years. He served as chairman for several elections for the interracial committees and Democratic campaign committees. He ran for city council in 1943, 1947 and 1951. In 1955 he contested for a municipal court judgeship nomination. In addition he has served as deputy state attorney general and chairman of the 44th ward Democratic executive committee.

An interesting sidelight to the backing of Nix for congress, is that City Councilman Raymond Pace Alexander, also a veteran legal figure, was long considered the leading Negro contender for the congressional post. However he has been promised the next judgeship vacancy to occur.

Atty. Robert Nix Elected in Philly; Irvis Wins in Pgh.

By COURIER PRESS SERVICE
(Special to The Courier)

Atty. Robert C. Nix became the fourth Negro Congressman by winning a special Pennsylvania election to highlight primary voting in various areas of the nation.

The week also saw political control in Pittsburgh's Hill District pass into "regular" Democratic party hands and a New Mexico Negro pile up a surprising vote in his bid to win a seat in the state legislature.

Nix won his race in a special election against GOP hopeful Clay Moore to fill the unexpired term of Rep. Earl Chudoff in Philadelphia's Fourth Congressional District. The victor was swept into office by a nearly 2-1 majority by piling up 13,742 votes to Moore's 7,505. Chudoff had resigned his Congressional seat to became a judge last November.

NIX' VICTORY was not without "incident." Answering a "bomb threat," police cars converged on Nix' Germantown residence at 6640 Lincoln Dr., where the Congressman's estranged wife lives with his son and daughter-in-law.

However, Nix resides at 3032 W. Diamond St. in the district which elected him to office.

In Pittsburgh, party "regulars" ended the power of Prothonotary David B. Roberts as Attys. K. Leroy Irvis and James F. Clarke won the party's nomination as candidates to the State Legislature from the First District over incumbents Matthew S. Anderson and Daniel Verona.

Philadelphian Gets $9,454 State Post

PHILADELPHIA (ANP) — Mrs. Catherine Coleman of Philadelphia became the first Negro and second woman to hold directorship in the Department of Public Instruction, State of Pennsylvania, when Gov. George M. Leader approved her appointment to the $9,454 a year post. Mrs. Coleman will be director of the Bureau of Teacher Education and succeeds Mrs. Margaret Fulton Sailor, who resigned August 31.

Negro Seeks House Seat In Columbia

COLUMBIA (AP) — The Rev. William McKinley Bowman, 44, a Negro Baptist minister, became a candidate Friday for the House of Representatives from Richland County.

He was the sixth candidate to file thus far for one of the eight Richland County House seats. The deadline for filing is noon Monday.

Bowman previously sought election to the Columbia City Council and was defeated. He is pastor of the Second Nazareth and Second Union Baptist Churches in Columbia.

S. CAROLINA VOTES TUESDAY

By S. L. LATIMER JR.
Editor, The Columbia State
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

COLUMBIA, S.C., June 7 — More than half a million South Carolinians will go to the polls Tuesday to nominate a host of officers ranging from governor to local magistrate.

S. L. Latimer

The official statewide campaigning for constitutional posts came to a climax in Columbia last night with the largest, hottest and most crucial of the 18-stop tour, but the politicking by no means ceased when the last speaker said his piece. Indeed, in a way, political bedlam had just started for in this state the final weekend before election day is always a rat race. Many a candidate has won, and many a one lost, as a result of that last meeting in Columbia, and the rush-hour politicking that follows it.

While supporters of Donald A. Russell, former president of the University of South Carolina, are confident he will head the ticket—in fact are hoping for a first-ballot nomination—those of E. F. Hollings and

SOUTH CAROLINA

Mayor W. C. Johnston are just as quick to make first-place claims for their respective candidates. Fritz Hollings has made a statewide race before (when he was elected lieutenant governor) but neither Bill Johnston nor Don Russell has previously done so. In fact, it is the first time Russell has offered for any political office, local or state.

The lieutenant governor's race has seen more "fire" on the official tour than has that for governor. Rep. Albert W. Watson started jabbing at Burnet Maybank Jr. and Hugo S. Sims and they have come back in spirited style. None of the three has ever before made a statewide race, but the oldest of the three is 37 years of age.

There has been plenty of crossfire in the races for commissioner of agriculture (Red Bethea vs. the incumbent W. L. Harrelson) and in the race for superintendent of education (Odelle Harman vs. Jesse C. Anderson, incumbent), but there has been little controversy in the race for attorney general where Daniel McLeod and John Mason are seeking the place to be vacated by T. C. Callison, who is retiring. (McLeod is an assistant attorney general and Mason is the governor's legal aide).

Comparatively quiet has been the contest of adjutant general where four aspirants would succeed the veteran James C. Dozier, who did not offer for reelection. The candidates for the post are Charles Culbertson, Ted Watson, William A. Reel Jr. and Frank Pinckney.

Other constitutional officers are unopposed: State Treasurer Jeff B. Bates, Comptroller E. L. Rhodes and Secretary of State O. Frank Thornton.

The Week in South Carolina

Columbia bank clearings soared in May, the total being $73,967,158.41 against $67,365,668.28 in May of 1957. For the first five months of the year, the figures also are well up. . . . There were only four traffic deaths in South Carolina over the long Memorial Day weekend. . . . South Carolina's first peaches of the season, produced in the Ridge counties (Lexington, Saluda and Edgefield) were shipped this week, only about one week off schedule despite the very cold winter.

Abolish Grits? Never!

To most South Carolinians breakfast without "grits" just isn't breakfast at all. So much so that many restaurants include them as a routine part of morning menus. However, Mrs. Zane Morgan of Crescent Beach is disgusted, and wonders if the "extra" is worth the trouble—that is, when her customers are from "up North." Of 12 persons from above the Mason-Dixon line one day recently, eight didn't like the Southern dish and three were only passingly pleased. The twelfth ate his fill, but it turned out that he, while a New Yorker now, was "hatched and reared in Charleston."

Local Negro Lawyer Seeks Seat In House

John H. Wrighten, Charleston Negro lawyer, will run for nomination to the Charleston County Legislative Delegation in the Democratic Primary June 10.

Wrighten—who ran unsuccessfully for a legislative post in a special election in December—said he plans to introduce a teacher tenure bill if elected.

This, he said, will be "so that they cannot be fired except for a just cause and not because the principal or some members of the school board do not like the teacher or because the teacher holds other ideas than those held by members of the school board, principal and members of the community in which the teacher works."

Wrighten is a native of Edisto Island. He attended Avery Institute in Charleston and was graduated from S. C. State College and its law school. He began practicing law here in 1953. He was admitted to practice in state and federal courts including the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals and the U. S. Supreme Court.

He is a member of Emanuel AME Church, American Legion, Boys Club, YMCA, Postal Alliance, Phi Beta Sigma and a Mason.

His campaign platform includes a promise to work for jury service for women, enlargement of magisterial court jurisdiction, reforms in state court procedures and establishment of regional industrial institutions.

Negro Minister To Seek Council Seat In Sumter

SUMTER (Special) — Local politics was given a boost Saturday when three additional candidates filed for two places on city council in the municipal primary to be held June 3. Today was the last day for filing.

South Carolina Lists Close With 3 in Governor's Race

Hollings, Johnston and Russell To Fight It Out for Voters' Nod

By S. L. LATIMER JR.
Editor, The Columbia State
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

COLUMBIA, S.C., April 12—With the entry books closed, it's a three-way race for Democratic nominee for governor of South Carolina, with Donald Russell of Spartanburg (former president of the university), W. C. Johnston (mayor of Anderson and brother of United States Sen. Olin D. Johnston), and E. F. (Fritz) Hollings of Charleston (now lieutenant governor) as the candidates. The primary is June 10.

It was not expected that there would be any last-minute entries, and there were not, but in this state there have been so many instances where potential aspirants have waited until just before closing time to announce that it is never safe to calculate otherwise. What held true as to the contest for chief executive, held true as to other state offices to be filled, the lists at closing being as anticipated.

In the meantime the General Assembly, weary of trying to finance the appropriations for fiscal 1958-59 and anxious to adjourn, passed a money bill that apparently is out of balance to the tune of more than one million dollars. And since Gov. Timmerman signed it, it is now law, which means that if revenue does not come in better than expected the outgoing governor (term expires January 1959) and the governor who succeeds him will share a deficit year. However, some way might be devised by the next Assembly (1959) to pass emergency legislation to remedy the situation, or times might get better and revenue therefore be greater than presently anticipated. This is the hope anyway.

To Use Gas Tax

The final free conference report called for use of one cent of the gasoline tax as general funds, and elimination of credit on the state income tax for federal income taxes paid. The present rule is to allow up to $500 as a deduction. As to this, the Assembly refused to go along, leaving the one-cent gas tax as the only new revenue to meet additional expenses estimated at some $6,500,000 or more. Hence the possible deficit.

But back to the candidates: There are three in the race for lieutenant governor: Former Congressman Hugo Sims of Orangeburg, Burnet R. Maybank Jr. of Greenville and Albert C. Watson of Columbia. Maybank is a son of the late Sen. Maybank. When Sims served in Congress just after World War II, he was the youngest member.

SOUTH CAROLINA

The offices of state superintendent of education, commissioner of agriculture, adjutant general and attorney general will be filled by the vote of the people, along with those of secretary of state, comptroller general and treasurer.

For the first of these, Jesse C. Anderson is standing for reelection. He is opposed by Odell Harman of Lexington County.

For the agricultural job, the incumbent, W. H. Harrelson of Marion, is opposed by A. W. (Red) Bethea of Dillon, who is no newcomer as a candidate for this post.

Dozier Retiring

For adjutant general, the veteran holder of that office, Maj. Gen. James C. Dozier, is retiring. There are four candidates seeking to succeed him: Frank Pinckney of Columbia, W. A. Reel of Edgefield, Charles B. Culbertson of Orangeburg and Ted P. Watson of Greenville.

The attorney general, T. C. Callison, is not seeking re-election. There are three who would succeed him: W. E. Anderson of Darlington, D. R. McLeod of Columbia and John A. Mason of Columbia.

Unopposed constitutional offices are Jeff B. Bates, treasurer; E. C. Rhodes, comptroller general, and C. Frank Thornton, secretary of state.

There is no United States senatorial race this year, but all six congressional seats are to be filled and all incumbents are running to succeed themselves. In only one district is there opposition. In that one, Congressman Riley's opponent is Pat Lindler. The unopposed Congressmen are McMillan, Dorn, Ashmore, Hemphill and Rivers.

There are, all told, 35 candidates in the race for the state, congressional and circuit court (solicitors) jobs and hundreds for county and local posts. The usual county-to-county speaking tour for state-wide candidates has been reduced to 14 sessions—one in each judicial circuit. The first meeting for state candidates will be at Sumter April 21 and the last at Columbia June 6, just four days prior to the first primary.

Negro Lawyer Makes Poor Showing As Voters Enter Stump

CHARLESTON, S. C. — (ANP) — Voters in Charleston County went to the polls last week but a Negro lawyer, John H. Wrighten, who tried to gain a seat on the county delegation, ran last in the field of 23.

He polled only 3,055 votes. A total of 538,000 persons were qualified to vote in the primary, 10.8 per cent of them were Negroes.

Wrighten's poor showing surprised politicians who had predicted a fairly heavy Negro turnout. Registration figures show that 7,500 Negroes possess registration certificates.

Former Mme. Florence Talbert running for office in Memphis

Former California and world citizen, Madame Florence Cole Talbert McCleave, who was once a celebrated Metropolitan Opera singer, is fighting for political equality for Negroes in Memphis, Tenn., where she now makes her home.

Mrs. McCleave is one of three Negroes on the Republican ballot for the legislature.

Now 68, Mrs McCleave is the wife of Dr. B. F. McCleave, a medical doctor here, who is also active in politics. Two years ago, she ran unsuccessfully for the State Legislature. On the ticket with her this time is W. R. Bradford, 60, a boilermaker for the Illinois Central Railroad, and Sam Qualls, Jr., a mortician.

Mrs. McCleave was one of the discoverers of Marian Anderson and sang the role of "Aida" in Italy in 1927.

She is a member of the pioneer Cole family of Los Angeles.

Gore, Cooper Seek Election In Tennessee

United Press International

Sen. Albert Gore Saturday said he would seek to raise the income tax exemption for dependents from $600 to $800 to "relieve glaring inequities" and to help combat the high cost of living facing workers.

Gore, running for re-election, spoke at Trenton Saturday night, after a swing through Chattanooga, Cleveland, Athens, Lynchburg, Fayetteville and Winchester.

His opponent, former three-term governor Prentice Cooper, swung through East Tennessee, and at several stops reasserted his stand for segregation and for less "global giveaway."

He campaigned through Russellville, Whitesburg, Bulls Gap, Rogersville, Greeneville, Blountville and Johnson City.

HIGHES POINT

Gore said at Trenton that "as a member of the Senate Finance Committee I have undertaken the responsibility of representing the public interest. One of the glaring inequities of present tax laws is the unrealistic, personal tax exemption of only $600 for each taxpayer and dependent."

He said "With the cost of living at its highest point in history an allowance of only $600 for the cost of rearing a child is utterly unrealistic. An exemption of $800 for each taxpayer and dependent is surely more realistic."

Gore made an election prediction: "I have waged a vigorous campaign and I expect to get more than 400,000" of the expected 700,000 votes to be cast Thursday.

Cooper, also optimistic, continued to criticize Gore's record of "foreign giveaways" and said "Tennessee needs a senator for Tennessee and not from Tennessee."

H said Gore "has been out of the country 16 times since he's been in Congress — as a representative and as a senator—and I don't call that keeping the interests of the homefolks at heart."

Election Roundup—Gore Battle Tops Race In Tennessee

Sen. Symington And Gov. Williams Are Primary Victors

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Tennessee Democrats hold a primary today featuring hotly contested races that may indicate how the border state feels about the segregation question.

Meanwhile, returns from primaries Tuesday in Michigan, Missouri, Kansas and West Virginia revealed no big surprises. Principal races came out as expected.

In Tennessee Democratic Sen. Albert Gore is in the fight of his life seeking a second term nomination.

His opponent, former Gov. Prentice Cooper, has accused Gore of favoring "creeping integration." He also says Gore deserted the South by voting for the compromise civil rights bill and by refusing to sign the Southern Manifesto denouncing the Supreme Court's school desegregation rulings.

Gore has replied he favors segregation and helped senators from the Deep South states remove the most objectionable features of the 1957 Civil Rights Bill.

Two of the four candidates for governor, State Agriculture Commissioner Buford Ellington and Circuit Judge Andrew T. Taylor, are avowed segregationists. They promise to close public schools, if necessary, to prevent integration.

Mayor Edmund Orgill of Memphis, another candidate, has stated he prefers segregated schools, but that court orders must be obeyed.

Here in brief are the results of the Tuesday primaries:

MICHIGAN—Gov. G. Mennen Williams easily won Democratic renomination to a sixth term. His Republican opponent in November will be Paul D. Bagwell, a Michigan State University professor on leave, who had no primary opponent.

Lt. Gov. Philip A. Hart won the Democratic senatorial nomination and will try to unseat Republican Sen. Charles E. Potter.

MISSOURI—Sen. Stuart Symington easily won Democratic renomination to a second term. His November opponent will be Miss Hazel Palmer, a Sedalia attorney who is the retiring president of the National Assn. of Business and Professional Women.

WEST VIRGINIA—Former Rep. Jennings Randolph and Rep. Robert C. Byrd were nominated by the Democrats for two- and six-year senatorial terms, respectively. Incumbent Sens. John D. Hoblitzell Jr. and Chapman Revercomb had no opposition in the Republican primary.

KANSAS—Clyde Reed Jr., newspaper publisher, won Republican nomination for governor over Former Gov. Fred Hall. Reed will run against Democratic Gov. George Docking, unopposed for renomination.

VOTE BACKS GORE AND MODERATION

Tennessee Senator's Victory in Primary Is Viewed as a Setback to Racists

By CLAUDE SITTON

Special to The New York Times

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 8—Democratic primary returns today gave Senator Albert Gore a second term and implied approval of his efforts to maintain a bridgehead of moderation between the North and the South on racial desegregation.

Coupled with the nomination of Senator Ralph Yarborough by Texas Democrats, Mr. Gore's victory tended to discount the argument that the successful third term bid of Gov. Orval E. Faubus in Arkansas had spelled political doom for the Southern moderate.

Both Senators fought off determined attempts by segregationists to oust them.

"This shows that you can still take a position for decency and morality, if you're willing to stick to it," Senator Gore said today.

Tops His Margin of 1952

He defeated former Gov. Prentice Cooper by 120,373 votes, 30,470 more than his margin over the late Senator Kenneth D. McKellar in 1952.

Almost complete but unofficial returns from yesterday's balloting gave the Senator 359,194 to 238,821 for Mr. Cooper.

The nomination assured Mr. Gore of re-election, although he must face the G. O. P. nominee in November. No Republican has won a state-wide race since 1920, when the late Alfred A. Taylor was elected Governor on a political fluke.

The 50-year-old junior Senator, a tobacco farmer's son whose talents as a fiddler helped him to win seven terms in the House, sidestepped his opponent's efforts to force him into an oratorical dogfight over racial issues.

Made Trade an Issue

Instead he campaigned with fiery eloquence on a promise to represent the nation as well as Tennessee in the Senate and to work to increase free world strength by backing reciprocal trade and continued foreign aid.

Mr. Cooper, 62, member of a prominent middle-state family and three times Governor, apparently lost more support than he gained by his bitter attacks on the Senator.

He called Mr. Gore a "one-world do-gooder" and said that he had made "an ideal Senator for the Russian dictator Khrushchev." He accused the legislator of selling out to the North on the race question to further his national political ambitions.

These tactics brought him some votes in sections that opposed any compromise in the integration dispute.

However, he trailed badly in four of the state's five metropolitan areas and even failed to carry his home county.

The former Governor also was reported to have received some Republican votes in East Tennessee, where his criticism of free trade and help to other nations got him a favorable hearing.

The winner of the six-man Governor's race was not known until returns were almost complete. Buford Ellington, former State Agriculture Commissioner, finally emerged with a 7,247-vote edge. Close behind were Andrew T. Taylor, criminal court judge, and Mayor Edmund Orgill of Memphis.

Mr. Ellington received 208,343 votes to 201,096 for Judge Taylor and 200,786 for Mayor Orgill.

Gov. Frank G. Clement endorsed his former aide but did not actively campaign for him.

Both Mr. Ellington and Judge Taylor ran as segregationists, while Mayor Orgill took a moderate tack.

Governor Clement was ineligible to succeed himself under the state's one-term rule.

The three of the state's nine Representatives in Congress who had opposition won easily. They are Representative B. Carroll Reece, Republican, former national chairman from Johnson City; J. Carlton Loser, Democrat of Nashville, and Ross Bass, Democrat of Pulaski.

Rated Ex-Governor Unfit To Serve U. S. In Present Era

Two Men Running For Governor Tried Appealing To Uninformed Haters of Progress in Race Relations For Their Election; Orgill And Allen Exemplified High Grade Statesmanship Throughout Campaign; Clement Reneged

Some of the best known slogans, frequently heard in former campaigns were worth repeating in the present campaign which was settled on Thursday August 7, which was after the Globe went to press for the week.

One of these slogans of the past was: "It is the fellow with the longest pole who will knock down the persimmon."

Another was that "Campaigning for office is mere dress-parade stuff; elections are actually won on election day."

Something that was not a political slogan but something much more important was something that the "man and brother" often repeats—"The prayers of the righteous availeth much."

The last of these phrases was prominent in the saying of practically all of the colored folk as they gave their reaction to the candidacies of Candidate Prentice Cooper and at least two of the four aspirants for governor.

Sen Gore Favored

Laying claim to the belief that they can be considered "the righteous" were many colored voters who made no effort to hide the fact that they intended to do all they could to defeat Mr. Cooper for senator. That is they intended to cast their votes for Senator Albert Gore. Many did not consider Senator Gore their ideal candidate, but they held that it would be something close to sinfulness if they cast their vote for Mr. Cooper.

Possibly these particular citizens were like Gen. U. S. Grant who though a Republican, refused to vote for the Republican nominee for president back in 1856. Gen. Grant said he couldn't vote for Gen. John C. Fremont because he "knew" Fremont too well.

Throughout the state, even before Mr. Cooper started to going up and down the state this year, Negro women of that city.

Judge "Tip" Taylor seemed to have strong backing of machine politicians in West Tennessee. But it appeared he would neither deserve nor receive any strong support from Negro voters in the Western section of the state.

Both Judge Taylor and Commissioner Buford Ellington majored in appeals to Negro haters. Their promise to close down schools to keep any Negroes from being integrated was the "corniest" brand of politics heard in modern times. They talked like "short-pants Hitlers" while knowing full well that Nashvillians, to show just the kind of man Tennessee had as its war time governor.

It is not known that Mr. Cooper made any effort whatever to "stand in" with any Negro voters in his 1958 bid for senator. Negro voters all over the state had deciced to make Mr. Cooper their "second choice" both for governor, which he started out to get, and for senator, which it is charged, he was induced to run for at the behest of Editor Smith of the Republican Knoxville Journal.

Guy Smith's Man

It was being said during the last weeks of the present campaign that Republicans of East Tennessee would seek to make Cooper the Republican nominee for senator if he failed to get the Democrat nomination.

This rumor gave rise to the prediction that should the East Tennesseans pick Cooper as a desirable nominee for their party they thereby would "march through a slaughter house into an open grave," which was a favorite quotation that the illustrious Henry Watterson, editor of the Louisville Courier Journal often made about actions of the Democrat party.

Guy Smith, editor of the Republican Knoxville Journal, himself has no high standing among many Negro Republicans of the state. His espousal of Candidate Cooper as the best man for the Democrats to nominate for senator doubtless has eliminated him as a spokesman for the GOP either in the nation or in Tennessee.

The best thinkers in the state had turned "thumbs down" on the candidacy of Mr. Cooper for senator. He was espousing causes showing hi mto be entirely out of line with his party; what strength he had as a political leader in the state was what was "bestowed" upon him by the late E. H. Crump and the late Senator K .D. McKellar. They were solely responsible for getting Cooper elected governor over the popular and eloquent Gov. Gordon Browning.

In 1944, Senator McKeller tried his hardest to get Gov. Cooper nominated for vice president. That was the year when Franklin D. Roosevelt, although close to death, was nominated and elected for his fourth term as President.

Democrat leaders of the country voters had been "knowing " Mr. Cooper. They knew him for a stretch of six years as governor, and it is doubtful that state ever had a governor who was more unpopular with Negro voters than Hon. Prentice Cooper.

They remember him as the man who gave President W. J. Hale the raw deal of suggesting firing him as president of A&I State College.

They also remeber him as the man who insulted a delegation of colored citizens, headed by Dr. W. J. Faulkner of the Fisk University faculty, when they went to the governor's office to petition for treatment of Negro soldiers of World War II on par with treatment that many other governors were showing toward the Negro soldiers who had been drafted from their states.

It was on this occasion, according to report, that Gov. Cooper sounded off in his claim that no special treatment was due the Negro; that the Negro as a race had done nothing to help make America great.

That statement was given publicity in newspapers all over the country. Doubtless there are clippings that have been retained by they could do nothing about integration if the Federal Courts ruled in favor of desegrgation.

Apparently Mr. Ellington was being deprived of the good stump speaking talent of Gov. Frank Clement. He was claiming he was very definitely on a victory march to the governorship. It was not certain whether he was factual in his claims or merely like the little boy who was whistling as he walked through a graveyard, trying to keep up his courage. What he lacked was the ability to make the welkin ring with superb oratory. He said he was a farmer and certainly sounded like one in his speeches.

It remained to be seen if Tennesseans would turn down their native sons for a politician, who not only was a native of Mississippi, but talked exactly like one in his campaign speeches.

paid no attention to Senator McKellar's efforts to get Gov. Cooper nominated for vice president. Senator McKellar had a hard time keping the Tennessee delegation in line for the vice presidential nomination of Gov. Cooper. He didn't get any votes outside of the Tennessee delegation.

Kefauver Most Popular

Senator Estes Kefauver has the highest standing, nationally, among Tennessee leaders. Senator Albert Gore is close to Mr. Kefauver, although he is not a statesman who could command any great following among Negro voters.

It is now predicted that in 1960, Senator Kefauver who will be running for re-election, is likely to have Gov. Clement as his opponent in the Democrat primary, and if he survives that contest will have the Hon. Ray Jenkins of Knoxville as his Republican opponent in November. Doubtless Senator Kefauver will be hoping Editor Guy Smith sponsors Mr. Jenkins for senator. Colored Republicans will be hoping Editor Smith gets appointed a foreign minister and "the foreigners, the better."

Orgill "Best Man".

"He is the best man running," was proving to be the most "catchy" slogan any candidate had in the last week of the campaign. It was being used by the friends of Mayor Ed Orgill of Memphis. Mayor Orgill also stirred Negro voters with his attacks on machine politics. He had defeated the Memphis Boys, when he was elected mayor. He was promising to relieve the state of all political machines.

State Senator Clifford Allen continued his strong hold on Negro voters of Nashville. Home pride caused most Negroes here to be for Senator Allen for governor, while down in Memphis, Mr. Orgill appeared to have the overwhelming support of the Negro men and

Dallas Minister Still Plans To Enter Election

DALLAS.—Father J. Von Brown, pastor of the Liberated Church of Prayer, has indicated he still plans to run for a place on the Dallas Board of Education.

The Dallas minister's name was removed from the ballot because Texas laws forbid the holding of office by anyone who has not been granted a pardon after conviction. Brown, who served a federal prison sentence, went to Washington this month to try for a pardon.

He also said Wednesday that he is sponsoring a write-in campaign, since his name was removed from the ballot.

Father Brown was convicted of mail fraud and sentenced to a three-year sentence in January, 1952.

The election is Saturday, May 3.

TEXAS RACE POSES INTEGRATION TEST

State Senator Is Running in Gubernatorial Primary and Asks Stand on Issue

Special to The New York Times.

AUSTIN, Tex., May 10—The first Latin American Senator to serve in Texas has pitched a clear-cut racial segregation-integration issue squarely into the race for Governor this year.

Texas voters will hear the debate between now and July 26, when Democrats hold primary elections.

Senator Henry B. Gonzalez of San Antonio became the surprise last-minute entry in the race against Gov. Price Daniel, who seeks reelection.

It will be a six-man race. The other five are either publicly segregationists or silent on the question. That was the way the race shaped up two years ago, with none bidding outright for the vote that will go to the forthright integrationist.

Governor Daniel, always a segregationist, did not seek to make it an issue in the race in 1956. But he firmly aligned himself with the segregation ranks and yielded to their wishes in 1957 by calling a special session of the Legislature to enact pro-segregation laws.

Fought Against Majority

That provided a forum for Mr. Gonzalez to establish himself as a defender of minority groups and leader of the losing bloc in the Legislature. He led a minority in a futile, marathon filibuster against the bills and since has continued his work for integration.

His defense of the minorities won him last year in Texas the award of "Man of the Year" from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

With the assent of Governor Daniel, however, Texas now has laws aimed at preventing use of troops to enforce school segregation, requiring a popular public vote to permit school integration and a law providing for assignment of pupils to segregated schools.

Integration of Texas schools, meantime, has continued to progress without violence. One hundred and twenty five public school districts and more than thirty colleges have integrated, since the enactment of the laws. Only one district has had an integration vote and it approved of mixing the races in one school.

Mr. Gonzalez has clearly injected the racial issue. He said he wanted to force other candidates to get on the record in major issues. He mentioned just two—integration-segregation and taxes.

The tax issue also will be a dominant campaign point because the state faces the likelihood of a new tax levy of more than $100,000,000, when the Legislature meets next year.

On the integration issue, Mr. Gonzalez has vowed to fight throughout the state "to make every citizen a first class citizen."

A Business Man

He is a 42-year-old business man, whose occupation is listed as "bilingual services for publications, radio and television." He calls himself a "liberal, when it comes to human rights," but a conservative in property values. His hometown is fully integrated in public services.

It is too early to appraise the strength of Mr. Gonzalez' campaign, but he holds the potential of getting substantial bloc votes from Negroes, Latin Americans, liberals and the AFL and CIO committee in political education. Those groups could add to enough votes to force a second, or run-off primary in August.

Others in the race for the democratic nomination this summer include W. Lee O'Daniel, a former state governor. He is an outspoken foe of integration.

It will be his second comeback attempt. Two years ago he ran a poor third with Mr. Daniel and Ralph W. Yarborough, now United States Senator, running one-two.

Mr. O'Daniel's campaigning will pour fuel on the flames of the integration issue.

Announcements of the other three candidates made no mention of the racial issue. They are Don Booker, Orange insurance underwriter and until this year a Republican; Joe A. Irwin, retired Dallas business man who formerly headed a now-defunct insurance company, and Alvis Vandygriff, Austin lawyer who was Veterans Land Board Secretary under Bascom Giles, former Land Commissioner now in prison for veterans' land deal frauds.

Man against segregation seeks Tex. governorship

DALLAS, Tex. (ANP)—Texas' colored populace is expected to line up solidly behind an outspoken state senator of Mexican descent, who has carried his fight against segregation to the floor of the legislature, in the gubernatorial election.

According to the New Leader, a record number of colored citizens are preparing to back State Sen. Harry Gonzales of San Antonio who opposes incumbent Gov. Price Daniel in the Texas political campaign this summer.

He will also have the backing of Mexican - American voters who admire him for his defense of the oppressed, the magazine adds.

* * *

GONZALEZ IS a liberal who is stubbornly opposed to segregation. He is opposed to racial segregation in public high schools and once waged a one-man talkathon on the floor of the legislature against biased legislation.

He entered the campaign, he said, because no liberal was challenging the conservatives and segregationists, although he "entertains no illusions of the tough fight ahead."

Mrs White's T-Bird Sprayed With Bee-Bees

HOUSTON — Mrs Charles E White, school board member-elect, told The Informer Tuesday that there is nothing to the report that someone shot at her Monday night.

Mrs White was asked to confirm a rumor reported to The Informer, that someone had fired a volley or barrage of shots into Mrs White's automobile.

"No one shot at me," Mrs White said. "Someone, perhaps only young vandals, cracked the windshield of my car with what I believe were pellets from an air rifle. But I was not in the car, nor was anyone else."

This is what actually happened:

While Mrs White was attending an anniversary program of the Mount Corinth Baptist church, the windshield of her sport model car was shattered with what police believe "beebees" from a "beebe" gu.

The car was parked in the 700 block of Solo.

Last month someone burned a cross on the front lawn of Mrs White's home.

Negro Wins School Post

HOUSTON, Tex., Nov. 5 (UPI) —The Houston School Board was integrated today by Mrs. Charles E. White, as the first Negro to be elected to a public office in Houston.

Mrs. White, wife of an optometrist and mother of five children, beat two white opponents, Dr. John Glen and Karl F. Doerner, by a margin of 6293 votes out of a total of 34,647 cast.

She campaigned on the issues of integration and Federal aid to schools and could not have been elected without white support.

"The outcome of the election was proof, I think, of this," she said. "I did not run for this position in order to represent only the Negro children of Houston.

MAKES HISTORY IN HOUSTON.—Mrs. Charles E. White of Houston, Texas, who was elected to the board of education in the southern city on November 4, is shown here in her home looking over some of the many congratulatory telegrams she received from friends and well-wishers all over the country. Mrs. White won over two opponents, both white and both men.

Houston's Finest Hour

Elect Negro Woman To School Board

By CARTER WESLEY

HOUSTON, Tex. (NNPA)— Houston's finest hour [illegible] when the citizenry elected Mrs. [illegible] as the first [illegible] to serve on the school district board with the highest vote given any candidate among the 11 running for the three positions.

The victory sent an electric wave of triumph through the community, because it was recognized as a victory for the whole population over the forces of bitterness and petty partisanism.

Whites were proud because they had measured up to the best of American citizenship in voting for this woman in an era when it still seemed suicidal.

Not With Little Rock

The election of Mrs. White also proved to the community and, for that matter, to the nation, that Houston does not belong with Georgia, Little Rock, and other areas lost in the fog, contention and rebellion.

The vote for Mrs. White meant that the citizenry of Houston had freed itself from the yoke of fear and strife.

Mrs. White's election is symbolic of the freedom gained by the citizens from the pall of fear that has hung over the community since the 1954 Supreme court decision.

Side By Side

White workers had contributed as much to Mrs. White's victory as had colored people. Side by side, colored and white had worked shoulder to shoulder during the campaign. At the headquarters election night the whites were again there, sharing the pleasures that come from having done a thing according to what was right.

During the campaign various audiences treated Mrs. White the same as other candidates. Contributions had come in from whites.

As the vote came into the headquarters, Mrs. White won overwhelmingly in many boxes in which only whites voted.

The liberal whites were again free, just by exercising their courage and doing what they knew was right.

Faith Restored

The faith of colored people in human was again restored to full measure, because they had seen the whites, with whom they had worked over the years, show their courage and their sense of justice.

Here was the largest city in the South, in the middle of one of its tensest periods in race relations in our history, cutting across party lines, racial lines, and religious lines not only to elect a colored woman to the school board but to give her the largest vote of any of the 11 candidates who were running for the three positions.

Here are complete but unofficial returns of the school election from the district's 182 precincts: Position 5, Dr. W. W. Kemmer, 36,010; Aubrey Calvin, 27,301; Virgil Arnold, 13,487.

Position 6—Dr. John Glen, 28,710; Earl F. Doerner Jr., 11,707; Mrs. Charles E. White, 36,336.

Position 7—Jerry McAfee, 6,985; Mrs. H. W. Cullen, 26,627; E. G. Rountree Jr., 14,934; Hart Stilwell, 24,096; James F. Dermont, 959; Mrs. Enid E. Smith, 980.

Heavy Whites Vote

Returns from the boxes showed that precincts heretofore entirely lily-white had given Mrs. White with her five children, ranging from 19 months to 16 years of age, practically their unanimous vote.

When Mrs. White came into her headquarters about 8:30 p.m. there was a great ovation from the crowd.

Later, after she had taken her children home and come back about 10 o'clock with her mother, there was another ovation from the mixed crowd.

Then there was reflected a beautiful element of restraint when Dr. White remained out of the picture and left it for Mrs. White to fill completely in her capacity as a candidate.

This reflected the family integrity and gave a measurement of Dr. White and his sense of what is appropriate. He could have come, and would have been welcomed and cheered, but he was big enough to give the hour to his wife and insisted upon staying out of the picture.

Negro Is Elected To School Board

First Of Her Race To Hold Houston Public Office

HOUSTON, Texas, Nov. 5.—(UPI) — The Houston School Board was integrated Wednesday by Mrs. Charles E. White, 42, the first Negro to be elected to a public office in Houston.

Mrs. White, wife of an optometrist and mother of five children, beat two white opponents, Dr. John Glen and Karl F. Doerner, by a margin of 6,296 votes out of a total of 74,847 cast.

She campaigned on the issues of integration and Federal aid to schools and could not have been elected without white support.

The outcome of the election was proof, I think, of this," she said. "I did not run for this position in order to represent only the Negro children of Houston."

Of the general integration problem in Houston, she said:

"Gov. Orval Faubus and Little Rock have shown the people of Houston that violence and strife are not the means of working out this problem.

"I feel the integration problem is being solved in our courts and hope we in Houston can follow the fine example of such cities as El Paso, San Antonio and Corpus Christi—without evidence of hard feeling."

Only two off in White vote

HOUSTON, Tex. (NNPA)—Mrs. Charles E. White, first successful colored candidate for a public office here since Reconstruction days, was formally certified Friday as one of three winning candidates, who will hold down a position as a member of the Houston School Board, beginning next year.

Mrs. White was one of the victorious candidates during a special election held on Nov. 4, but a group of die-hard whites sought to embarass her by petitioning for a re-check of the vote count. The petitioning group's effort was obviously designed to discredit Mrs. White's smashing majority vote of 36,350.

THE HOUSTON School Board last week unanimously certified Mrs. White's victory during a special 15-minute session called for that purpose. Two members of the seven - member board were absent.

The canvas, completed after a re-check of the totals of the voting machines, showed only minor changes from the original report of vote totals to the board.

Mrs. White got the highest total vote of any candidate. As revised, the official tabulation of votes showed she had two votes less than her initial election return of 35,350 votes.

MRS. CHARLES WHITE

Houston, Nov. 6 [Special]—Mrs. Charles E. White, 42 mother of five children and daughter of a Baptist preacher, has become the first Negro to be elected a trustee of the Houston public school system.

Mrs. White drew support from all areas of the school district. She said she doesn't expect others of the seven member school board to be hostile toward her.

"Each member," she said, "will realize that it is the will of the people of Houston that I serve on the board."

Mrs. White told newsmen she feels "the integration problem is being solved in our courts." Integration of public schools here has been ordered by a federal judge, but no deadline has been set.

St Louis TV Features Mrs Chas White

HOUSTON — A panelist for the KMOX-TV show, "Close-Up," in St Louis Saturday Mrs Chas E White, said Monday that discussions related to her election to the Houston School Board.

St Louis completed its integration program in 1956, and though two Negroes have served on the school board by appointments, the electorate has never named a Negro as trustee.

The "Close-Up" feature is a weekly St Louis local production sponsored by KMOX-TV, a unit of the Columbia Broadcasting System, and the panel is provided by the St Louis Bar Association. The televised presentation is made each Saturday, 4 p m to 4:30, and is similar to the "Face the Nation" show.

Other panelists were Mrs Robert Starbird, dean at Washington University, and columist for the Washington Post Dispatch; Daniel Schasly, a member of the St Louis School Board; and William Charles, who was appointed to serve an un-expired term by the mayor in 1951.

Like Houston, Negroes in St Louis have had candidates to run in the trustee election before, and civic leaders are hoping to duplicate Houston in the next trustee election, by having a Negro winner.

Mrs White was met Friday night at the St Louis Airport by Mr Bohannon of the Urban League. She held a conference at 10:30 a m Saturday with Dr Kottmeyer, assistant superintendent of Elementary Education and Special Classes of the St Louis Public Schools.

The Houstonian was the honored guest at a luncheon in the Sheraton Jefferson Hotel where she was a week-end guest. Included in the luncheon party were Mrs Margaret Sims and Mrs Lucille Campbell, national officials of the Jack and Jill Club Inc Mr Callway, the immediate past president of the St Louis NAACP Branch; Attorney Margaret Wilson, NAACP branch president; and Parker Wheatley director of Public Affairs for KMOX-TV.

Mrs White was also hosted by Mr and Mrs William Pollard, and guests included several noted local educators. Mr Pollard was former classmates of Mrs White at Prairie View. The Pollards showed Mrs White many historic sites in the St Louis area.

Mrs White also had talks with Chester Stovall, executive secretary of the Human Relations Commission.

The first Negro elected to the Houston School Board, Mrs White will take her seat on the seven-man board Jan 1, 1959 and will serve through 1962.

Texas mother wins school board post

HOUSTON, Tex. — Mrs. Charles E. White, wife of a Houston optometrist and mother of five children, defeated two white opponents in last Tuesday's election to win a seat on Houston's school board.

Mrs. White, who is 42 and the daughter of a Baptist minister, won out over Dr. John Glen and Karl F. Doerner by a margin of 6,296 votes out of 74,847 cast.

Campaigning on the issues of integration and Federal aid to schools, Mrs. White drew support from all parts of the school district, receiving many white votes, without which she could not have been elected.

THE HOUSTON board, which is currently under a court order to desegregate its schools although no date has been set, has never before had a colored member.

Commenting upon her election, Mrs. White said:

"I did not run for this position in order to represent only the colored children of Houston."

Touching upon the possible attitudes of others on the seven-man board, she said that she did not expect hostility because "Each member will realize that it is the will of the people of Houston that I serve on the board."

Of Houston's specific desegregation problem she said:

"Governor Faubus and Little Rock have shown the people of Houston that violence and strife are not the means of working out this problem.

"I feel that the integration problem is being solved in our courts and hope we in Houston can follow the fine examples of such cities as El Paso, San Antonio and Corpus Christi—without evidence of hard feeling."

ONE OF THE quirks of her election, which did not affect

MRS. CHARLES WHITE
Houston voters chose her the outcome, was that Mrs. White got on the Democratic "ticket" at Precinct 56 for a short time Tuesday.

Every time a voter at the precinct voted the straight Democratic ticket, he also voted for Mrs. White. This should not have been. School board candidates are listed in a non-partisan position.

Precinct Judge George Polk caught the defect in the machine shortly after the polls opened. He notified assistant voting machine custodian H.N. McElroy.

McElroy sent a mechanic to fix the machine. He said the machine had not been tampered with but apparently the jarring of the machine in transport had caused the trouble.

Polk estimated that "about a dozen" votes were cast on the machine before the mechanical quirk was caught.

Cross Burns On Lawn Of School Board Member

HOUSTON, Texas. — (ANP) — Mrs. Charles White, who was elected the first Negro member of Houston's school board last week reported that a cross was burned on her front lawn.

Mrs. White said three of her five children noticed the flaming cross about 9 p.m. Her husband, an optometrist, said the cross was five feet tall. He extinguished the blaze.

Mrs. White said she did not think the cross burning reflected the general feeling of the Houston public. "I feel that the persons who did this are ashamed of their act as they did not show themselves," she said.

The board received a petition to recheck results of the election a few hours before the burning cross was discovered. Mrs. White polled 16,000 votes, 8,000 more than her nearest opponent, incumbent John Clen.

George Polk, judge of precinct 56 and one of the signers of the petition, claimed that many of the voting machines were not operating properly. Louis Buchner, superintendent of the voting machine department, denied that many of the voting machines were not working properly.

Pellets Hit Negro's Car

HOUSTON, Tex. — (AP) — Mrs. Charles E. White, first Negro to be elected to the Houston School Board, told police air rifle pellets sprayed the windshield of her automobile.

A small cross was burned on the lawn of Mrs. White's home, Nov. 10, six days after she was elected to the board.

"I think the windshield incident is the work of pranksters, as was the other incident," she said.

W. D. Hawkins, Jr., Local Lawyer, Accountant Civic Worker - Candidate for Delegate to Constitutional Convention

W. D. HAWKINS, JR., a lawyer, licensed public accountant and cashier-accountant at Fisk University, has announced as candidate for delegate to the Constitutional Convention to represent Davidson County.

A life-long resident of Nashville and a graduate of Pearl High School, Fisk University and the Kent College of Law, Hawkins said on making his candidacy public:

"I believe the convention should be as short as possible allowing adequate time for consideration of the issues and proper time for the transaction of business.

"It seems to me it is important that delegates should be completely familiar with the history and the current problems now facing the State. Delegates should be intimately acquainted with the needs and wishes of the people if they are to be effective."

Hawkins is treasurer of the National Bar Association, a member of the James C. Napier Lawyers association and the American Bar association as well as the National Society of Public Accountants.

He is a board member of the Visiting Nursing Service, Grace M. Eaton Home, and the Meharry Alumni Council. He is also chairman of the executive committee of the Fisk University General Alumni association.

In addition, Hawkins is a member of the Nashville Censor Board, a board member of the Nashville Community Council, Tennessee Council on Human Relations, a member of Agora Assembly, and the Seay Hubbard Methodist Church. He is secretary-treasurer of Mt. Ararat Cemetery.

He is married to Mrs. Minerva H. Hawkins, a teacher at Pearl High School.

Election of Mrs. White proof that peace can abide in South

By CARTER WESLEY

HOUSTON, Tex. (NNPA) — Houston had its finest hour Tuesday, when the whole citizenry elected Mrs. Charles E. White as the first colored person to serve on the School District Board with the highest vote given any candidate among the 11 running for the three positions.

The victory sent an electric wave of triumph through the community, because it was recognized as a victory for the whole population over the forces of bitterness and petty partisanism.

Whites were proud because they had measured up to the best of American citizenship in voting for this woman in an era when it still seemed suicidal.

THE ELECTION of Mrs. White also proved to the community and, for that matter, to the Nation, that Houston does not belong with Georgia, Little Rock, and other areas lost in fog, contention and rebellion.

The vote for Mrs. White meant that the citizenry of Houston had freed itself from the yoke of fear and strife.

Mrs. White's election is symbolic of the freedom gained by the citizens from the pall of fear that has hung over the community since the 1954 Supreme Court decision.

White workers had contributed as much to Mrs. White's victory as had colored people. Side by side, colored and white had worked shoulder to shoulder during the campaign. At the headquarters election night the whites were again there, sharing the pleasures that come from having done a thing according to what was right.

* * *

DURING THE CAMPAIGN various audiences treated Mrs. White the same as other candidates. Contributions had come in from whites and from colored people.

As the vote came into the headquarters, Mrs. White won overwhelmingly in many boxes in which only whites voted.

The liberal whites were again free, just by exercising their courage and doing what they knew was right.

The faith of colored people in humanity was again restored to full measure, because they had seen the whites, with whom they had worked over the years, show their courage and their sense of justice.

Here was the largest city in the South, in the middle of one of its tensest periods in race relations in our history, cutting across party lines, racial lines, and religious lines not only to elect a colored woman to the school board but to give her the largest vote of any of the 11 candidates who were running for the three positions.

HERE ARE complete but unofficial, returns of the school election from the district's 182 precincts: Position 5, Dr. W. W. Kemmer, 36,010; Aubrey Calvin, 27,301; Virgil Arnold, 11,487.

Position 6 — Dr. John Glen, 28,710; Earl F. Doerner Jr., 11,707; Mrs. Charles E. White, 36,336.

Position 7 — Jerry McAfee, 6,985; Mrs. H. W. Cullen, 26,627; E. G. Rountree, Jr., 14,934; Hart Stilwell, 24,098; James F. Dermont, 959; Mrs. Enid E. Smith, 980.

Returns from the boxes showed that precincts heretofore entirely lily-white had given Mrs. White practically their unanimous vote.

When Mrs. White came into her headquarters about 8:30 p.m., with her five children, ranging from 19 months to 16 years of age, there was a great ovation from the crowd.

Later, after she had taken her children home and come back about 10 o'clock with her mother, there was another ovation from the mixed crowd.

Then there was reflected a beautiful element of restraint when Dr. White remained out of the picture and left it for Mrs. White to fill completely in her capacity as a candidate.

This reflected the family integrity and gave a measurement of Dr. White and his sense of what is appropriate. He could have come, and would have been welcomed and cheered, but he was big enough to give the hour to his wife and insisted upon staying out of the picture.

Runs strongest in latest survey—

Nixon edges Kefauver for No. 1 job in nation

BY GEORGE GALLUP
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

The vice presidential candidates in 1956, Nixon and Kefauver, run a neck-and-neck race for the No. 1 job with voters across the country today.

If a presidential election were being held today, indications are the vote between the GOP's Nixon and the Democrats' Kefauver would split as follows:

NIXON VS. KEFAUVER

Nixon	47%
Kefauver	42
Undecided	11

Excluding the undecided, the vote is:

Nixon	51%
Kefauver	49

Although both men have the support of overwhelming majorities in their own parties, Nixon fares better in a "party vote" than Kefauver does.

About one Democrat in six (17 per cent) in the survey said he would prefer Nixon to Kefauver. On the other hand, about one Republican in eight (12 per cent) would rather see the Tennessee senator win over the vice president.

AMONG independents — a voting group which can swing the victory to either man in a close election—Nixon enjoys the following lead:

NIXON VS. KEFAUVER
(Independents only)

Nixon	47%
Kefauver	38
Undecided	15

In determining today's vote of the two men, the Institute used the same question that it has asked at regular intervals over the last three years:

"Suppose the presidential election were being held today. If Vice President Nixon were the Republican candidate and Sen. Estes Kefauver were the Democratic candidate, which would you like to see win?"

Vice President Nixon runs a stronger race today than in any of the past contests between the two men. The trend since April, 1955, has been generally in Nixon's favor as the following table shows:

NIXON VS. KEFAUVER
(Excluding undecided)

	Nixon	Kefauver
April, 1955 ..	42%	58%
Nov., 1955 ..	48	52
Aug., 1957 ..	48	52
TODAY	51	49

THE VICE PRESIDENT is currently the top choice of GOP voters for the 1960 nomination. He heads the list of leading Republican possibilities for the next election slate, running comfortably ahead of his nearest rival, Sen. William Knowland.

When Republican voters were asked to make a "convention showdown" choice between Nixon and Knowland, the vice president polled 76 per cent to the California senator's 24 per cent among those who made a choice.

Senator Kefauver ran second to Sen. John Kennedy of Massachusetts in a "showdown" choice of Democratic voters reported on Friday. Kennedy polled 61 per cent to Kefauver's 39 per cent among those making a choice.

Running in a wide open test of candidate popularity, however, with all leading Democrats included, the Tennessee senator runs slightly ahead of Kennedy.—(c).

A Negro Candidate For Council?

THE recent announcement by the five members of City Council whose terms expire September 1 that they will seek re-election on June 10 has stirred up very little political activity in Norfolk.

The incumbents who will be asking the voters to give them another four years in office are Mayor W. FRED DUCKWORTH, and Messrs. N. B. ETHERIDGE, L. C. PAGE, LINWOOD F. PERKINS and ROY B. MARTIN.

There have been some rumblings of opposition to the admittedly strong administration ticket. At least two persons have acknowledged that they are "considering" entering the race. The JOURNAL AND GUIDE hopes that they do, and others besides.

This is said in the interest of strengthening our democratic processes locally, rather than in criticism of or opposition to the present councilmen who have certainly established an enviable record of devoted and progressive leadership.

But election by default, already much too prevalent in Virginia and the rest of the South, is almost as bad as usurpation of public office by force. Only when there is brisk competition among the aspirants for public office is their open and free discussion of the issues with which the victors will have to deal when they take office. Only under such circumstances are the candidates obliged to make their views and their intentions known to the people whose votes they seek. A bona fide contest for the five council seats might breathe a little life into the near-dead body politic here.

We suspect that the decadent state of democratic government in Virginia is due to the fact that too many office holders, in good favor with the all-powerful machine which calls the turns and jumps, get elected without a contest. In fact, the machine is so devastating to its opposition that very few capable people are willing to make the sacrifices required to wage an effective campaign. Even against an inferior opponent running with the blessing of the machine, an unblessed candidate has virtually no chance of being elected in this State.

While a lively, free-for-all contest featuring a multiplicity of candidates this spring is desirable, the JOURNAL AND GUIDE doubts that the entry of a Negro candidate into the councilmanic race would serve any useful purpose. In fact, it could do considerable harm. There does not now exist any clear cut issue on which to rally indifferent and dissident white voters and congeal them into a solid mass of supporters.

All that the incumbent candidates need to arouse the white voters and solidify their support is a Negro candidate in the field. That would unloosen the fears, the antagonisms and the prejudices so ingeniously cultivated during the past few years. Let us not forget that it was the race issue which made victory for the present state government a certainty last November. The Negro thing worked so well during Governor ALMOND's campaign, it seems, that he just cannot put away that music and get on with the State's business.

It is said that the best tactic for campaign managers with weak candidates is to pray every night, "Lord, please send me a Negro opponent!" There are some people downtown who would like nothing better than an excuse to drag out the old Negro bug-a-boo to kill off all potential competition in the upcoming election. They will probably offer more encouragement to a reluctant Negro prospect than will his colored friends. For that would settle the election matter quicker than anything else.

We do not believe that any of the announced candidates would resort to such a device, for they are men of character. But they cannot control all of their supporters, and they do have quite a variety of them. That kind of campaigning is usually initiated by those on the lunatic fringe, and it gathers momentum thereafter.

There is a valuable lesson to be learned from the strategy employed by other minorities. When feeling against them is running high they don't aggravate their woes by putting up candidates for public office and thereby giving their enemies unlimited access to the prejudices and fears of the majority. It is hoped that our Negro leaders will ponder these considerations carefully before committing themselves to any course of action in the councilmanic election.

Grover Grant Runs For Richmond City Council

RICHMOND, Va. — Grover C. Grant, one of the outstanding civic and religious leaders of Richmond, has announced his candidacy for the City Council subject to the general election on June 10th.

Mr. Grant who was a candidate for the City Council in the last election, decided to offer his name in this campaign after he was urged by many friends, white and colored to run again.

GROVER C. GRANT
Candidate

AS IN THE former campaign, Mr. Grant is not running on a race ticket or just to appeal to the members of his race. If elected, he promises to work for the best interest of all the residents of Richmond. He has promised to conduct a campaign among white and colored voters.

Another unique plan of Mr. Grant's in his campaign is to work for all liberal candidates as embodied in Messrs. Howard Carwile, Jackson and Storrs, and others who may come into the liberal camp." In his statement last week on his candidacy, Mr. Grant said:

"I am convinced that liberal candidates, if elected, will help bring sanity and balance to the torn civic and political life of both races here in our beloved Richomond.

Negro Candidates In Virginia Lose

PORTSMOUTH, Va. (ANP)—Atty. James E. Overton, Negro candidate for city councilman, lost the election, but polled more votes than did the incumbent, William H. Hinton.

Overton polled 2,600 votes to Hinton's 2,090 votes.

In Richmond, Negro voters turned out in large numbers to support Negro candidates Atty. Howard H. Carwile and Dr. I. A. Jackson Jr. The two finished 12th and 14th, respectively, after leading through early returns.

Aspirant Mum on Segregation Views

Negro Candidate Stirs Alexandria With Pledge to Democratic Party

The significance of a pledge to the Democratic Party by a Negro candidate for city council has become an issue in Alexandria.

The Rev. N. Howard Stanton signed the party pledge, as required in order to enter the April 1 Democratic primary.

City Democratic Committee member William F. Carne said the pledge indicated that Stanton, president last year of the NAACP, had endorsed the state segregation program which he attested that he voted for Governor-elect J. Lindsay Almond. Carne made the statement Thursday night at a closed Committee meeting to certify the 15 Council candidates.

Stanton, who declined to reveal his views on segregation, said in signing the pledge did not mean he endorsed Almond's whole program. He said Carne's statement was just an effort to "embarrass" him.

"It is gratifying to me," Carne told the meeting Thursday, "to be able to point with pride to Alexandria, which is taking the lead in the Tenth District by being the first political jurisdiction to have a Negro citizen seek office on the local Democratic ticket.

"As we all know, this constitutes a vote of confidence on the part of Mr. Stanton (for) the Commonwealth's stand on segregation and further endorsement of the Governor-elect . . ."

Committee Chairman Samuel D. McIlwain said no action was taken on the statement. He said Stanton's papers were in order, and his candidacy was certified.

Stanton, an Alexander resident who is pastor of the Nazareth Baptist Church in Orange, Va., said he signed the party pledge "without compromising my principles."

The minister said signing the pledge meant that he "believes in the principles of the Democratic Party as a whole" and voted for J. Lindsay Almond for Governor. "But that doesn't mean I support all his ideas," he said.

He said he did not "want to be pinpointed yet" on the segregation issue, which he said the City Council "would not deal with anyway."

"Carne is trying to set up an embarrassing situation to hurt my chances to win the election," Stanton said. "He should have consulted me before making that statement."

Almond Vows to Push Fight for Segregation

Compromise Plan Blasted At Inaugural

By MARY LOU WERNER
Star Staff Writer

RICHMOND, Jan. 11. — J. Lindsay Almond, jr., today took the oath of office as Virginia's 63d governor, and vowed to carry on the segregation struggle launched by out-going Gov. Stanley.

He did not recommend any changes in Virginia's existing anti-integration laws, but asked for additional authority to close any public school patrolled by Federal troops.

Text of Almond's Comments on Segregation. Page A-10

With the same brand of dramatic oratory that characterized his election campaign, the new Democratic governor brushed aside suggestions of "compromise." "token integration," or local control of the racial problem.

No compromise means to integrate, he warned. "I find no area of compromise that might be usefully explored."

He said he could not visualize a "little integration" anymore than he could picture "a small avalanche or a modest holocaust."

His stand ended speculation that he might pursue a softer course than his predecessor on the school segregation issue. Some circles had interpreted his silence on certain aspects of the controversy as meaning that he might recommend some token integration as a means of warding off integration on a large scale.

Sees Clear Mandate

As for local control, which his Republican opponents advocated in the gubernatorial campaign, Gov. Almond declared:

"I am convinced that there is not one political subdivision in Virginia where racially mixed schools can be conducted without such serious and irretrievable loss and damage to the cause of public education as to render the attempt, even on an experimental basis, all but futile.''

He said he considered his election in November a clear mandate from the voters to continue Virginia's battle against Federal encroachment, and said "to sanction any plan which would legalize the mixing of the races in our schools would violate the clear and unmistakable mandate of the people to which I earlier referred. This I cannot do."

Sworn in at Noon

The oath-taking took place shortly past noon on a flag-draped platform erected on the Capitol's south portico steps with Chief Justice Edward W. Hudgins of the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals administering the oath to Mr. Almond.

Taking the oath ahead of Mr. Almond were the new Attorney General, Albertis S. Harrison, jr., and the Lieutenant Governor, A. E. S. Stephens, in that order. Administering the oaths were Justices John W. Eggleston and Claude Vernon Spratley, respectively.

On the eve of his inauguration, Mr. Almond confirmed previously published reports concerning his administrative staff appointments.

Executive Aide Retained

Carter O. Lowance, executive secretary to Govs. Tuck, Battle and Stanley, will continue in that post.

Wilbur Walker, who was office manager in Mr. Almond's State campaign headquarters, will become administrative assistant to the Governor. John W. Garber, temporarily in this assignment in recent months, will return to his post as director of public relations and statistics for the State Alcoholic Beverage Control Board.

It was a fiery inaugural address from beginning to end, colored by sarcastic references to the Supreme Court and patriotic pledges to States' rights. Occasionally, the audience of 3,000 broke into loud cheers, but more often the applause was moderate as though the listeners did not quite grasp all of the intricate phrases and complex constitutional arguments set forth so eloquently by the new chief executive.

Gov. Almond did not single out for a special commendation any of the existing anti-integration laws he inherited from outgoing Gov. Stanley. But he made it clear he was not at this time recommending any change in those laws, declaring:

"I am not dissatisfied with the defenses erected by the Assembly 15 months ago . . ."

Drastic Laws Included

Those defenses include one law that provides for the closing of any school where integration occurs, and another that automatically withholds State funds from any locality that attempts to operate mixed classes.

During his campaign, he embraced "massive resistance" in principle, but never disclosed what position he would take on the State's existing anti-integration program.

In today's address, the incoming Governor still left room for debate about his future plans on the school question. He warned that the State should not rely on any 'Maginot line" and said Virginia must remain in a "flexible position" to meet new developments as they arrive. He said he would "not heitate to convene the Assembly in extraordinary session whenever the public interest may so require."

An impending integration order in Arlington County is apt to provide the "public interest." The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals within the next two weeks is expected to rule on Judge Albert V. Bryan's order directing admission of seven Negroes to white Arlington schools. The case presumably will go to the Supreme Court, however, which probably would push the ultimate effect of any decree beyond March 8 when the present Assembly session ends.

More Funds Requested

Turning from the segregation issue, Gov. Almond said, "The second aim, to which we must devote ourselves with equal energy, resourcefulness and sacrifice, lies in the improvement of our entire educational offering."

He asked the General Assembly to appropriate a substantial part of this year's $53 million surplus to the literary loan fund from which localities may borrow to build schools.

He said it was his "earnest hope" that the appropriation would be approximately $15 million. Outgoing Gov. Stanley recommended a $10 million appropriation.

The new Governor urged reduction of the 3.5 per cent interest rate on literary fund loans, and advocated modification of school construction regulations with an eye to economy. Without specifying any amount, he recommended appropriation of "sufficient funds" for a "substantial" increase in teachers' salaries. Gov. Stanley has recommended a $100 increase in the State teachers'

STATES' RIGHTS KEYNOTE

Almond School Stand Praised and Assailed

By a Star Staff Writer

RICHMOND, Jan. 11—Gov. Almond's inaugural address today drew warm praise from supporters of Virginia's massive resistance movement, but was disappointing to some of those who had hoped for a new approach to the school segregation problem.

Senator Byrd, Democrat of Virginia, called the address "one of the most memorable speeches ever delivered in Virginia, filled with sound doctrine."

He said he "throughly approved" of the anti-Federal troop law, and declared that it would be a "great deterrent" to unwarranted Federal intervention.

Dalton "Disappointed"

Republican State Senator Ted Dalton, who opposed Gov. Almond in the November election, said he was "disappointed that Gov. Almond plans to follow Gov. Stanley's pattern on the school problem."

He said this means "that Virginia will not begin to look for a solution until she finds herself engulfed in troubles."

Delegate James Thomson of Alexandria called the address "an excellent speech—needless to say, I wholeheartedly agree with it."

State Senator Armisted Boothe said the speech was "a magnificent real, old-time oration—his summary of the Southern position on States' rights—was perhaps the most masterful presentation since 1861."

But the Alexandria Senator added that he was in "respectful disagreement with the Governor on one issue. I cannot vote to close public schools in any area of the State, unless the people of that area themselves have first voted to close their schools. Local rights and individual rights can be destroyed by the State as well as by the Federal Government."

Fenwick Sees Changes

State Senator Charles R. Fenwick of Arlington pointed out that Gov. Almond said he would not hesitate to convene the Assembly in special session whenever he feels it is necessary.

"I anticipate that there will of necessity be certain changes made as court decisions are rendered," said Senator Fenwick.

Delegate Harrison Mann of Arlington said he was "disappointed" to find no mention made of repealing the fund cutoff bill which takes effect whenever any integration occurs. He said he believed the proposal to close schools threatened by Federal intervention "is a good one—it is better that children be out of school than attending classes under threat of bayonets."

Points to Litigation

Delegate William Winston of Arlington said a change in State policy at this time by Gov. Almond would mean admission of defeat while litigation involving the present laws is before the courts.

Delegate Kathryn Stone of Arlington said "it was the expected inauguration oratory. I am more interested in what will follow."

State Senator John A. K. Donovan of Fairfax-Falls Church, noted that Gov. Almond said he would recall the General Assembly when "public interest" requires it.

"I say the public interest requires it today," said Senator Donovan.

WHO STARTED IT?

(From The Washington Post)

Virginia's new Governor, J. Lindsay Almond, is entitled to his rather eloquently stated view of the school desegregation problem, but he is not entitled to distort the record. "Nothing could be more provocative of civil strife and unrest, nor more conducive to racial tension and violence," he said in his inaugural address the other day, "than the patrolling of public school property by armed forces of the United States." He therefore requested authority to close any public school "whenever and wherever military forces may be employed by Federal authority to police its operation."

For the record, it is necessary to review the lamentable chronology at Little Rock. It was Arkansas Governor Faubus who first used military force—by calling out the National Guard, nominally for the purpose of maintaining order but actually for the purpose of preventing the Little Rock School Board from carrying out its own plan to comply with the laws of the United States. Federal military force was employed, not in the initial instance, but to cope with what amounted to a rebellion instigated by Gov. Faubus against the Constitution and courts of the United States. The responsibility for the use of military force was and is his alone, and this fact ought not to be overlooked in Richmond.

Senate Reverses Self, Kills High-Court Curb

Bill Would Have Kept Tribunal From Voiding State Statutes Not Conflicting With U. S. Laws

By The Associated Press

Washington, Aug. 21.—The Senate reversed itself Thursday night and killed a bill designed to prevent the Supreme Court from striking down State laws not in direct conflict with federal laws on the same subject.

On a roll-call vote of 41 to 40, the Senate sent the measure back to its Judiciary Committee. The effect was to kill it for this session of Congress, now in its final days.

This apparently brought to an end a three-day Senate struggle over legislation aimed at some recent rulings of the court—a day-and-night debate that blocked other legislation behind it in the drive for adjournment.

The bill, virtually identical with a measure passed by the House last month over Eisenhower Administration opposition, survived an effort by its opponents to kill it Wednesday night.

Behind-Scenes Scramble

The senate then rejected, 46 to 39, a motion to table it, but during the day there was a behind-the-scenes scramble to change votes and reverse the result.

The bill was an outgrowth of the Supreme Court decision reversing the conviction of Communist leader Steve Nelson under a Pennsylvania sedition law. The court held then that Congress had assumed jurisdiction in the field by enacting anti-Communist laws. The effect was to invalidate the sedition laws of 42 states.

The bill would have provided that federal laws shall not be construed as superseding State laws in the same field unless Congress expressly says so, or unless there is a direct and irreconcilable conflict between them.

The motion to send the bill back to committee was offered by Senator John J. Carroll (D., Col.).

Carroll and other opponents of the bill contended its adoption would create chaos in U. S.-State relations in many fields. They also termed it an unjustified assault on the Supreme Court.

This was denied by Senator John L. McClellan (D., Ark.), who called the bill up for action Wednesday night. McClellan said his purpose was not to attack the Supreme Court, but to correct a situation that exists under its rulings that federal laws supersede State enactments in the same field.

'100 Years Too Late'

Sen. Olin D. Johnston (D., S. C.) said, "All that's involved here is to let the states pass laws that are not in conflict with federal laws."

Senator Thomas E. Hennings (D., Mo.), who had made Wednesday night's unsuccessful move to kill the bill, told the Senate it was a measure "which comes 100 years too late."

"It would destroy decades of regulatory law," Hennings said, adding it raised constitutional questions "so grave that many lawyers and legal scholars believe that governmental and economic chaos would be its end result."

The House in passing the bill July 17, 240 to 155, ignored warnings that it would run into a veto by President Eisenhower. Earlier this week, Attorney General Rogers reaffirmed his opposition to the measure.

Kentuckians Vote for Kill

Washington, Aug. 21 (AP)—Senators John Sherman Cooper and Thruston Morton of Kentucky voted with the majority Thursday night when the Senate killed legislation aimed at the Supreme Court. Senator Homer E. Capehart and William E. Jenner of Indiana voted against killing the bill.

BIG TO INTRODUCE EDUCATION AID BILL

Hill And Elliott To Sponsor Broad Legislation

WOULD PROVIDE GRANTS

By The United Press

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Senator Lister Hill (D., Ala.) and Representative Carl Elliott (D., Ala.) announced Friday they will introduced an omnibus defense education bill when Congress convenes to attack America's educational deficiencies from the first grade through postgraduate and doctoral levels.

"America is now engaged in a desperate battle for her very survival," the two congressmen said, "and we propose to leave no stone unturned in our efforts to buttress our entire educational program that we can regain and maintain scientific, engineering, technological and other educational supremacy.

Stakes Are Greater

"The hour demands much sacrifice and hard work from all of us but the stakes are even greater than the price—civilization itself hangs in the balance."

Senator Hill and Representative Elliott said they propose a broad program of aid founded on three principles:

1. States and local communities must continue to be the fountainhead of our educational system and our schools and colleges must ever remain free from Federal control.

2. Additional funds must be made available where state, local and private sources are unable to provide adequate teaching and facilities.

3. We must concentrate our efforts in the fields of science, engineering, mathematics and foreign languages, but we should not do so in derogation of other fields of learning.

The lawmakers said, "The plain fact that we are second best and the tremendous loss of world prestige which inevitably followed are the price which we are paying for years of tragic indifference to the educational needs of our children."

Senator Hill and Representative Elliott propose a broad program of defense scholarships, fellowships, work scholarships and loans to college students based on the principles established in the GI Bill of Rights. "We contemplate the necessity of about 40,000 scholarships, not exceeding $1,000 per year each, with perhaps 75 per cent earmarked for the sciences, engineering, mathematics and languages, subject to revision after expert testimony is given."

Low-Cost Loans

The legislators said the scholarship program must be supplemented by long-term, low-cost loans repayable after the student has graduated and been hired.

Senator Hill and Representative Elliott said, "We also believe it is necessary to establish a program of fellowships for postgraduate study for people who, having proved their ability, are incapable of undertaking graduate and postgraduate study, particularly in the fields of science. We believe that fellowships will pay off, perhaps more quickly than anything else, by providing the brain power in the short run period to enable us to regain our scientific, engineering and technological lead."

The two legislators also propose to expand the functions and services of the National Science Foundation which "is already a successful, going concern."

They also propose establishment of a national library of science to serve as a center for the accumulation, translation, correlation and prompt exchange of scientific advances as they develop.

"This concept must include ways of attracting more of our young people to work in languages than has been the case, and we must find ways of assuring those who do so develop their abilities that they will find properly remunerated employment," they said.

Matching Funds

The Hill-Elliott Bill would provide matching grants for the construction of science facilities and the purchase of scientific equipment for high schools and colleges. They said vastly improved teaching facilities are one of our greatest and most immediate needs.

In order to provide better qualified teachers, the Hill-Elliott Bill would extend the program of summer institutes for science teachers to be administered by the National Science Foundation.

The program would pay expenses and tuition for postgraduate work and also provide teachers with stipends and allowances for those who have families or dependents.

SIX SEGREGATION BILLS STUDIED

(The Times-Picayune Capital Bureau)

BATON ROUGE, La., Jan. 22—State Rep. E. D. Gleason, of Webster parish, said Wednesday he knew of at least six segregation bills that would come before the Legislature in its May session.

Gleason, who introduced the athletic segregation bill in the 1958 session, added, "I think there will be more opposition to them in this session than there was before."

Segregation, he predicted, would be the key issue in the upcoming session. However, he thought all segregation bills would pass by substantial margin.

"Ten or 12 members of the Legislature might get up and oppose them," he said. "But I think after that they will have smooth passage."

Most of the bills, he said, would come out of the joint legislative committee on segregation, of which Sen. W. M. Rainach, of Summerfield, is chairman.

They will include, he said, a bill providing for closing of any integrated public schools. Gleason said "a lot of people are not in favor of closing down schools," and this might be the principal bone of contention in the legislature.

Gleason also predicted an effort would be made to have the athletic segregation bill repealed. "But I don't think it will be successful," he added.

The north Louisiana legislator said citizens' councils throughout the state were gathering strength to give maximum support to segregation measures.

Bill To Provide Federal Experts In Integration

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23 (AP)—Responsibility for enforcement of civil rights in schools would be given to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare under a bill introduced today by Rep. Sheppard (D., Calif.).

The department would be authorized to employ specialists in planning means for eliminating segregation in the public schools. The specialists would be placed at the disposal of any state, city or school board requesting their services.

The bill would authorize appropriations of $2½ million a year to pay the specialists.

It also would authorize $40 million a year for five years for grants for school construction and hiring of teachers in communities which want to comply with Supreme Court decisions on segregation but whose states threaten to cut off funds or close the schools.

Proposal for secret labor vote beaten

BY FRED S. HOFFMAN

WASHINGTON, June 14—(AP)—The Senate Saturday night rejected a proposal to permit 20 per cent of a union's members to force a secret vote on removing their officers or revising a union constitution or bylaws.

Sen. William F. Knowland (R., Calif.) was sponsor of this amendment to the pending labor control bill. It was defeated 52-31.

Knowland said his amendment was needed to prevent hoodlums and "unscrupulous union bosses" from remaining in control of unions and their big funds without proper accounting.

But Sens. John F. Kennedy (D., Mass.), the bill's chief sponsor, and Irving M. Ives (R., N. Y.) joined in fighting the Knowland amendment.

Kennedy said the proposa would be "a great mistake fo those who believe in stabilit in union matters."

Sen. John O. Pastore (D., R. I.) shouted "its whole intent is to destroy organized labor."

Forty Democrats and 12 Republicans voted against the Knowland amendment while 25 Republicans and six Democrats supported it.

EARLIER, the Senate defeated an administration proposal to retain a Taft-Hartley Act penalty against unions failing to file required financial reports.

Its rejection by a 53-30 vote was the third major setback for administration supporters trying to bring the labor control bill more in line with recommendations of President Eisenhower and Secretary of Labor Mitchell.

However, seven lesser administration amendments were approved. Democrats dismissed them as of little importance and their Republican sponsor, Sen. H. Alexander Smith (R., N. J.), agreed.

Labor loans curbed

APART FROM this, the Senate adopted an amendment to bar unions from loaning more than $1500 to any officer or member.

Sen. Kennedy led the fight against Smith's amendment to strip a union failing to file the required financial reports of its right to be certified as a bargaining agent and to use the services of the National Labor Relations Board.

A similar penalty is provided in the Taft-Hartley Act for unions that fail to file less comprehensive reports that law requires.

The pending bill would repeal this provision and would provide instead criminal penalties for union officers failing to file the reports

Administration Introduces Communism Passport Ban

By WARREN ROGERS JR.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Eisenhower administration proposed Tuesday a passport law which would ban travel abroad by any American whose activities helped communism in the previous 10 years.

Secretary of State Dulles called for its prompt passage as a matter of urgency.

The proposal was designed to offset a June 16 Supreme Court ruling. The court held the secretary of state had no legal authority to withhold passports on grounds of Communist party membership or associations.

Sen. Theodore Green (D-RI), and Rep. Kenneth Keating (R-NY) promptly introduced the bill in Congress.

Green, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, said this did not necessarily mean he supports it. He said the whole issue will be explored at hearings starting July 16.

The heart of the bill is a proposed congressional finding that the international communist movement seeks everywhere to thwart United States policy, and that passports should be denied any persons fostering this movement.

Armed with such a finding in law, the secretary would be authorized to consider "whether the applicant is a person who, whether or not a member or former member of, or affiliated with, the Communist party, knowlingly engages or has engaged within 10 years prior to filing the passport application in activities in furtherance of the international Communist movement."

Government officials said this, if enacted into law, would put the State Department in a strong position to deny passports not only to known Communists but also to non-Communists whose activities advance the Communist cause.

Under the bill, the department could revoke passports granted Negro singer Paul Robeson and several others after the Supreme Court's June 16 ruling. They had been refused passports before the court acted.

Seeks To Get "Gag Rule" On Filibuster

BY LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA)—Senator Jacob K. Javits, Republican, of New York, Thursday dumped a "hot potato" in to the full Senate Rules Committee.

Javits, a member of the two - member subcommittee appointed to consider various resolutions to curb filibuster, filed his report with the full committee. He recommends the adoption of a cloture rule which would permit debate to be limited by a vote of two-thirds of the Senators present and voting two days after 16 Senators file a petition to invoke cloture.

The proposed rule also provides that 15 days after the filing of a cloture petition, signed by 16 Senators, the Senate by a vote of a majority of all Senators or 49 votes, impose cloture.

THE PRESENT rule requires a two-thirds vote of the entire Senate membership, or 64 votes, to end debate.

The other member of the two-member subcommittee is Senator Eugene Talmadge, Democrat, of Georgia. He favors the present rule which southern Democrats regard as their strongest weapon against enactment of civil rights legislation.

SENATOR TALMADGE, however has said he will file his individual views before the end of the month. When the Rules Committee gets his views, a bitter fight is expected to develop to block any resolution to change the cloture rule from being reported from the committee.

"Neither freedom of speech nor the right of full debate in the Senate in the Senate is at issue," Senator Javits states in his report.

In advocating a change in the filibuster rule to permit effective cloture while allowing for full and adequate debate, he said, "I seek no abridgement of the liberty of speech, but a just and necessary restraint upon an abuse which hinders or frustrates the performance by the Senate of its constitution duty and perverts the reasonable function and objective of the so-called word.

THE DEEP responsibility which rests on the committee in this matter, Javits asserts, "is highlighted by the emergency character of issues facing our country—issues of peace or oblivion, issues which the United States Senate will play a leading role in resolving.

"As our country and our world move forward at this rapid pace, we cannot permit a procedural roadblock that can paralyze the functioning of the Senate. Important at any time, that fact is of a crucial nature now.

"I DEEM it our committee's duty to report to the floor of the Senate a recommendation to eliminate that roadblock."

THE JAVITS report comes at a time when Senate leaders were agreed that no civil rights legislation would be pushed at this session.

Unless the Rules Committee stalls action, the fight to change Senate Rule 22, as the filbuster rule is officially known, could grow into a Senate filbuster on the Senate floor.

Both Senators Lyndon B. Johnson, of Texas, the Senate Democratic leader, and William F. Knowland, of California, the Senate Republican leader, are co-sponsors along with 36 other Democratic and Republican Senators of a resolution providing for ending debate by a two-thirds vote of Senators present and voting.

SENATOR JAVITS dismisses the Knowland-Johnson resolution along with similar resolutions offered by Senators Francis Case, of South Dakota, and Prescott Buch, of Connecticut, both Republicans, as not making a significant enough change.

The resolution he recommends was introduced by Senators Paul Douglas of Illinois, James E. Murray of Montana, Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota, Wayne Morse of Oregon, Thomas C. Hennings, Jr., of Missouri, Dennis Chavez of New Mexico, Henry M. Jackson of Washington, Pat McNamara of Michigan, Richard L. Neuberger of Oregon, John A. Carroll of Colorado, and Joseph S. Clark of Pennsylvania, all Democrats, and Irving M. Ives of New York, Charles E. Potter of Michigan, and Clifford P. Case of New Jersey, Republicans.

Careful study of the legislative history of the Civil Rights Act of 1957, Senator Javits states, illustrates "the persuasive and subtle effect" of Rule 22.

After the vote to bypass the Senate Judiciary Committee with the House approved civil rights bill, Javits says, it became apparent that a bloc of Senators had selected Part III as the most objectionable feature of the bill from their viewpoint, and were prepared to filibuster to prevent its passage.

PART III would have authorized the Attorney General to bring civil suits for injunctions in the name of the United States to prevent threatened violations of constitutional rights other than the right to vote.

Javits states that he believes a number of Senators, some of whom favored keeping Part III in the bill, felt that insistence on Part II would inevitably force the Dixiecrats into a filbuster.

"Once Part III had been eliminated and the other concessions given, it was not at all clear that there would not be a filibuster against the remaining bill," Senator Javits states, adding:

"BUT, ironic as it may seem, at this point Rule 22 well may have had an unexpected effect upon the chances for passage of the bill.

"Rule 22 is the final inner citadel of the opponents of civil rights legislation. It is the last fortress in the legislative arm for a determined minority to prevent altogether or to waterdown substantially legislation that they violent oppose.

"As a consequence, there came a point at which the minority had to face the realization that reckless opposition to a very mild civil rights bill would build up tremendous forces for a direct assault on Rule 22.

"Having drawn a number of teeth from the civil rights bill, the decision was seemingly made to keep Rule 22 as impregnable as possible by permitting the bill to come to a vote."

TALMADGE HITS PROPOSED BAN ON FILIBUSTER

Strikes at Freedom, Georgian Asserts

BY PHILIP DODD

[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

Washington, Jan. 26—Sen. Herman E. Talmadge [D., Ga.] today branded the attempt to tighten the Senate's anti-filibuster rule "an attack which . . . strikes at the very vitals of representative government."

Talmadge was chairman of a two man subcommittee which studied proposals to make it easier to shut off senate debate. The other member was Sen. Jacob K. Javits [R., N. Y.].

The two senators issued individual reports. Javits, in a report he filed last week, urged adoption of a rule which would permit debate to be limited by majority vote rather than the two-thirds provided for in the existing senate rule 22 on debate limitation.

Present Rule Sufficient

Talmadge made his report public today. He said there should be no tampering with the present rule because "ample means," including protracted sessions and strict enforcement of the Senate's rules, are available to end even the most determined and prolonged debate.

"There is only one conclusion," Talmadge said, "which can be drawn logically and dispassionately from the efforts of those who persist in their efforts to change rule

"That their onslaught to stifle freedom of speech on the floor of the Senate is an attack not only on the Senate itself but also on the stature, prerequisites and prerogatives of each senator in national affairs and every other responsibility incident to the senatorship."

"Death Blow to States"

Talmadge said the drive of the filibuster foes was an attack which:

". . . Threatens the whole fabric of our form of government and strikes at the very vitals of representative government.

". . . Seeks to destroy the constitutional balance of federal and state power and deal a death blow to the states as political entities.

". . . Seeks to make big government bigger and to centralize more and more power in Washington in a government less responsive to the wishes of the citizenry.

". . . Seeks to eliminate the spirit of compromise and respect for divergent views which has characterized the Senate for more than one and one-half centuries and substitute for it the brute force of numbers."

Invokes Rights Law

Talmadge pooh-poohed the contention of self-styled liberals that unlimited debate prevents enactment of civil rights legislation. He pointed to last year's passage of the first civil rights bill put on the law books since Reconstruction days.

The present cloture [debate limitation] rule provides for ending debate by a vote of two-thirds of the Senate's membership, or 64 senators. Javits' proposal would permit a cloture vote by a majority of the elected membership, or 49 senators.

"Frankness compels the observations," Talmadge said, "that the ultimate objective of opponents of free debate in the Senate is cloture by a simple majority vote of senators at any given time. Eventual adoption of such a rule would make it possible for 25 senators, a majority of a quorum, to impose gag rule."

Hawaii Leaders Unite In Drive For Statehood

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three groups of Hawaii business and political leaders joined forces here Monday in a drive to get Congress to admit Hawaii to statehood before adjourning this year.

Their objective was supported in a personal statement issued by President Eisenhower after he signed the Alaska statehood bill.

"I personally believe that Hawaii is qualified for statehood equally with Alaska," the President said.

Gov. William F. Quinn of Hawaii, speaking for a combined group of 16 statehood seekers from Hawaii, made it clear to a news conference that he believes so too.

Hawaii, he said, is "a highly American community, with a highly developed economy, a standard of living above the average, high political development, a fine educational system, and has paid billions of dollars in federal taxes."

Since the passage of the Alaska statehood bill by Congress a week ago, Quinn said the people of the country and the people of Hawaii want to know why Hawaii isn't getting statehood too.

After years of failure in efforts to get both Hawaii and Alaska statehood bills passed simultaneously, congressional supporters of statehood for the two territories pressed ahead with the Alaska bill alone this time and held Hawaii back for strategic reasons.

Their position now is that insufficient time remains in the present session, expected to adjourn early next month, to attempt to pass the Hawaii bill also. They advocate a fresh start on Hawaii next year.

Hawaii's elected delegate to Congress, Democrat John A. Burns was not present at the initial strategy meeting on visiting Hawaiians Monday.

Burns told a reporter that each passing day made an attempt to force the Hawaii bill through Congress this year less hopeful of success and more dangerous to Hawaii's chances in the future.

"An abortive attempt would be very damaging," he said.

Quinn expressed confidence that the Hawaii bill would pass in both the House and Senate if it could be brought to a vote.

He said Sen. William F. Knowland (Calif.), the Senate Republican leader, told him Monday the Senate vote for Hawaii would exceed the majority given Alaska statehood.

Quinn conceded, however, that the Hawaii bill faces a very difficult situation in the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee where it is snarled behind controversial reclamation legislation.

President Signs Bill For Alaska Statehood

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Eisenhower signed the Alaska statehood bill Monday paving the way for the Territory's admission into the Union later this year.

Eisenhower, penned his signature to the historic legislation approved by Congress a week ago, handed it to a White House aide and said: "Okay. Now, that's 49 states."

Then he grinned and amended the remark: "No, maybe we don't do that until the plebiscite."

The aide, special White House counsel Gerald D. Morgan, smilingly agreed that Alaska Territory would not become a state until after a vote of its citizens.

But Eisenhower's action set in motion the machinery which is expected to bring Alaska into the Union as the 49th state by next Christmas. It will add a new star to the flag on the next date for adoption of a new flag, July 4, 1959.

A few minutes after the President signed the Alaska statehood bill, the White House issued an Eisenhower statement calling on Congress to admit Hawaii as a state during this session.

"I personally believe that Hawaii is qualified for statehood equally with Alaska," Eisenhower said.

Although there is some opposition within the Territory, leading Republicans and Democrats have predicted Alaskans will accept Congress' terms overwhemingly in elections this fall.

To extend the Union within eye range of the Soviet Union's main land, Alaskans must vote to accept immediate statehood, to approve proposed state boundaries which encompass all the area now within the territory, and to agree to permit a president of the United States at any future date to withdraw certain areas of the proposed state and place them under exclusive federal control.

ANTI-RECESSION BILL IS MADE LAW

IKE SIGNS MEASURE INTO LAW

Daily World

By JAMES LEE

WASHINGTON —/ (INS)—President Eisenhower signed into law Tuesday the Democratic-sponsored one billion 850 million dollar Emergency Housing bill but complained that parts of the anti-recession measure were "wholly inconsistent" with free enterprise.

The Chief Executive conceded that some of the bill's provisions will help economic recovery by stepping up housing construction but said it calls upon the taxpayers to do in some instances "what private investors should, can and will do."

The housing bill was the first major anti-recession measure to become law.

URGES PROMPT ACTION

Mr. Eisenhower, in an unusual special message to congress announcing that he had signed the legislation, urged prompt action to correct what he viewed as objectionable features.

He called for enactment of his administration's proposals to provide interest rates for veterans administration-guaranteed and direct housing loans sufficiently flexible to assure private participation.

The President also asked for elimination of par purchase requirements on government mortgage purchases.

FULLEST OPPORTUNITY

He said this should be done "so that the taxpayers will not be called upon to do what private investors should, can and will do—so that in this field our free enterprise system may have the fullest opportunity to work.

As the President signed the housing bill, congress drove to complete action before the Easter recess, which starts Friday, on other legislation aimed at speeding recovery.

The House approved a compromise one billion 579 million dollars rivers and harbors authorization bill. But Senate GOP Policy Leader Styles Bridges (R) N. H., said the possibility of a veto of that measure had been discussed at Mr. Eisenhower's weekly conference with Republican chiefs.

The Senate, scheduling a night session, debated a bill to advance a billion dollars to State and local authorities for public works projects.

Senate Republicans voted at a luncheon conference to attempt to block Democratic attempts to force action on the bill before the Easter recess. Bridges told newsmen that Mr. Eisenhower is certainly opposed to rushing this through.

New Jersey Bill Joins Fight on Discrimination

Constitution

TRENTON, N.J., (AP)—The New Jersey Assembly today passed a bill to give the state a stronger hand in dealing with discrimination.

The Assembly voted 49-0 for a bill by Mrs. Madaline A. Williams (D-Essex) which would permit the Division Against Discrimination to act without waiting for a formal complaint to be filed.

The measure now goes to the Senate.

The division was set up in the State Department of Education in 1945 to handle cases of discrimination in schools and other public places. Most of the cases which have come before it since then have been settled out of court.

Mrs. Williams said her bill was designed to help New Jersey maintain "its good civil rights record."

New Eastland Bill Affects Passports

Commercial

Measure Would Give Right To Exclude Communists

From The Commercial Appeal Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 18. — A bill to authorize the State Department to deny passports to communists was introduced Wednesday by Senator James O. Eastland (D., Miss.).

The measure would reverse two recent Supreme Court decisions which Senator Eastland told the Senate "invisibly deferred to communists."

The bill would empower the Secretary of State to withhold a passport from a communist or anyone he believed to be going abroad to aid the world communist conspiracy or to engage in other activities harmful to United States foreign policy.

The Supreme Court held, in effect, that everyone has the right to travel and that consequently the State Department has no authority to deny passports.

Senator Eastland told the Senate he will have more to say soon on the Supreme Court's attitude toward the communist conspiracy.

HATCH ACT HEARING SET IN MARYLAND

A House subcommittee will hold the first in a series of hearings on possible revisions in the Hatch Act at 10:30 a.m. Thursday in the Hyattsville county Office Building.

The hearings, to be conducted by a subcommittee of the House Administration Committee, are an outgrowth of a proposal by Rep. Richard E. Lankford (D-Md.) to study the act.

In announcing the hearings, Lankford said yesterday, I am more than ever convinced that the HATCH ACT should and can be amended to grant to greatest possible freedom of political activities to the greatest possible number of Federal employes. He said the act, which restricts political activity by Federal Workers, is now "interpreted differently by the various agencies.

House Votes, 294 to 79, for Measure To Clarify Court's Mallory Ruling

By a vote of 294 to 79, the House yesterday passed a bill to "clarify" Washington's Mallory ruling and sent it to the Senate.

Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D-Wyo.), chairman of the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee that will consider it, said he will hold hearings "as soon as we can" after the holiday week end.

O'Mahoney said he favors passage of some legislation. The varying interpretations which courts here have given the Supreme Court's Mallory decision "point to the necessity for clarification," he said.

The bill provides that a police confession "otherwise admissible" shall not be excluded from evidence "solely" because of a delay in arraignment. It also requires police to tell an arrested suspect before questioning that he need not talk to them and that anything he says can be used against him.

Federal Court rules require that an arrested person be told of his rights at arraignment "without unnecessary delay."

Andrew R. Mallory, a 19-year-old of limited intelligence, confessed to rape during a seven and one-half hour questioning period before arraignment. The Supreme Court reversed his conviction on grounds this was unnecessary delay.

Washington police feared the decision meant they could not question suspects at all before charging them with a crime. They asked for a change in the Federal rules, partly on grounds that questioning is necessary to clear the innocent as well as to find the guilty.

Supporters of the House bill say it balances the right of society to be protected against the rights of the individual.

Opponents, notably Emanuel Celler (D-N. Y.) of the House Judiciary Committee, called the bill an invitation to police to wear out suspects through long drawn-out questioning.

Senators Kill Court Curb Bill

Action Sets Off New Controversy Over Powers

WASHINGTON, Aug. 20 (AP)—The Senate today killed a bill to curb the power of the Supreme Court. But inflamed controversy over rulings of the court immediately broke out anew.

Suddenly tossed into the midst of the boiling dispute was a proposal by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill) to put Congress on record in support of the court's school desegregation decision.

By a roll call vote of 49-41, the Senate tabled and thus killed a measure to clip the court's review powers and undo the effects of its decisions in several Communist cases.

Sen. William E. Jenner (R-Ind) a co-sponsor of the bill with Sen John M. Butler (R-Md) urged its adoption to check what he called "a runaway wild court" that he said is tearing down the Constitution.

Bill Denounced

But opponents denounced the bill as punitive and as an attempt to impose the will of Congress on the court. They said it would upset the constitutional balance of power between the judiciary and the legislative branch.

Voting to kill the measure were 30 Democrats and 19 Republicans. Voting to keep it alive were 16 Democrats and 25 Republicans.

As soon as the Jenner-Butler proposal went down to defeat Douglas moved that Congress express "its full support and approval of recent historic decisions declaring racial segregation in public schools to be unconstitutional."

He said this would put the real issue out in the open. He called various bills that have been offered to overcome the effects of other Supreme Court decisions just a smokescreen.

Surprise Move

Douglas' move caught Senate leaders by surprise. They immediately countered with an attempt to call up another bill that would undo the effect of a Supreme Court decision by restoring to the states the right to enforce their own antisubversive laws. The Senate agreed to make this bill the pending business.

Earlier, Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D-Tex) told newsmen he hoped the Senate could finish tomorrow with a series of bills aimed at recent rulings of the court.

The controversy over them has slowed the Senate's adjournment pace to a walk.

The Jenner-Butler bill was opposed by the Eisenhower administration and by the American Bar Assn.

One section would have stripped from the Supreme Court its power to review cases of lawyers refused admission to practice in state courts, except those involving discrimination based on race, color or religion.

Other parts of the bill were designed to overcome the effect of Supreme Court decisions freeing some California Communist leaders, barring the enforcement of state sedition laws, and overturning the contempt of Congress conviction of a witness who refused to name one-time Communists he had known.

Sen. Thomas C. Hennings Jr. (D-Mo), who made the successful motion to kill the bill, termed it a hodgepodge striking out in every direction and said the Communist danger must be met "with the weapons of free men."

"True, the methods of tyranny would be far more effective in meeting this danger," Hennings said, "but our forefathers have set our course and we must continue along this path of liberty and justice."

Hailed by Reds

Jenner accused the high court of "usurping legislative functions and destroying the internal security of the country. He said it has handed down "a line of decisions hailed by the Communists."

Hennings also said the bill is reminiscent of the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt's attempt to pack the Supreme Court after it struck down New Deal legislation.

GOP Eases Its Opposition To Farm Bill

WASHINGTON (AP)—Senate Republican opposition to a one-year freeze of farm price supports declined Tuesday under the impact of pleas from GOP candidates that a presidential veto would increase their re-election difficulties.

In a surprising shift of sentiment, the Republicans voted 17-14 in a stormy closed session of their party Policy Committee to tell President Eisenhower they hope he lets the freeze bill become law.

At the White House, Press Secretary James C. Hagerty had no comment on the action of the Senate Republicans.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson has opposed the measure vigorously. Eisenhower has said it represents a 180 degree turn in the wrong direction.

MORE SURPLUSES

When the Senate passed the bill last Friday by a 48-32 margin, 13 Republicans supported it and 28 were opposed.

Benson has contended the measure—freezing for one year major crop supports at their 1957 levels or higher—would pile up more of the farm surpluses for which the government has spent billions of dollars in disposal costs. Eisenhower is widely expected to veto the bill which Senate Democratic Leader Lyndon B. Johnson of Texas labeled an anti-recession measure.

While declining to confirm the results of a show of hands in the GOP policy session, Senate Republican Leader Knowland of California indicated it was reasonably accurate. Knowland phoned the White House later in the day to tell Eisenhower about the developments.

SEVERAL ABSENT

Knowland pointed out several of the Senate's 47 GOP members were absent from the session. He said eight or nine more had left before the vote was taken, indicating belief that a majority of Republicans still opposes the measure.

However, Sen. Hruska (R-Neb), who was attending the Senate while his colleagues were in meeting, said he would have voted with the 17 to urge the President to sign the bill.

Sen. Kuchel (R-Calif), an opponent of the freeze plan, said he remains confident the President will veto it and that veto will be sustained.

He attributed the shift in sentiment to pleas by some of this year's candidates that a veto would damage their chances of reelection.

One candidate, Sen. Thye (R-Minn.), said he had voiced the belief in the meeting that the President should sign the bill. He said if a veto is forthcoming he personally will vote to enact the measure.

MISSISSIPPI HOUSE TO STUDY RACE BILL

Substitute Measure Allows Donations On Local Level TO FIGHT INTEGRATION

JACKSON, Miss., March 26. (UP)—A substitute bill to permit boards of supervisors and municipalities to contribute money to White Citizens Councils to fight integration was introduced in the House Wednesday.

The measure, reported out favorably by the County Affairs Committee with 16 signatures, virtually assures the three-fifths majority necessary for passage of the revenue measure.

Replaces Earlier Version

It replaces a Senate bill passed 30-2 last week which would have allowed shpervisors or municipal officials to give up to $100 for each one million dollars of assessed valuation to any organization "dedicated to the preservation of constitutional government." It did not provide for any aslounting of the money.

The new bill would permit similar donations but changed the language of the measure to make it for the purpose of "dissemination of information, advertising and education of persons . . . concerning the principles of the sovereign rights of the states and the preservation of constitutional government."

Gives Local Authority

Its backers said the bill would give local officials the same authority to use tax money for furthering segregation as the State Sovereignty Commission. The Sovereignty Commission was created by the 1956 Legislature as the state's segregation watchdog.

The commission, however, previously refused to give money to the councils because of their political entanglements.

The new bill would not specifically require an accounting of funds. It would provide that officials would contribute the money for specific purposes.

It was expected to be acted on this week.

BOMB BILL INTRODUCED

Congress Won't Have Time To Act On Measure

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—(UPI)—Senator John Kennedy (D., Mass.) introduced a bill Saturday to help curb bombings of schools and churches.

He said that he realized the measure had no chance for action because Congress was in its final hours. But he said it might help point the way for legislation in the next Congress.

The bill would prohibit importation or interstate transportation of explosives for illegal purposes. It would thus permit the Federal Government to investigate when a bombing occurs.

Senator Kennedy said recent bombings of schools and synagogues in the South appears to be "part of an interstate conspiracy, for the bombings follow a discernible pattern and . . . seem to be directed at those of our citizens who have expressed their constitutional right to free speech."

$1 Billion Public Works Approved

By J. W. DAVIS

WASHINGTON (AP)—The House Monday passed an administration bill to speed up the spending of 840 million dollars on government equipment and supplies.

It was requested by President Eisenhower as an antirecession measure to get the money into the business stream months earlier than would otherwise be the case.

Some Democrats said they didn't think it would help much. Passage came on a voice vote, with not much debate.

OTHER DEVELOPMENTS

In other major developments:

1. Secretary of Labor Mitchell indicated that April may be the month of decision on whether the administration will propose a tax cut. "If and when a next big step is necessary certainly this is one that should be seriously considered," Mitchell told a news conference.

2. The Senate Banking Committee approved a bill to lend up to one billion dollars to municipalities for public works projects. The maximum interest rate would be 3½ per cent. Under present similar programs the rate ranges from 4⅛ to 4⅝ per cent.

NAM CRIES DOLE

3. The National Assn. of Manufactuers presented testimony against bills for federal payment of emergency unemployment benefits. The NAM said this would just be a dole. Democratic Gov. Mennen Williams of Michigan testified that federal aid is badly needed.

Secretary Mitchell said March data on unemployment will probably not show much change from the 5,173,000 reported idle in February.

BASICALLY SOUND

But, he told reporters, "Certainly there is no reason for alarm, no reason for hysteria, because we have a basically sound economy."

The bill the House passed would direct most federal agencies to start making purchases without waiting for the arrival of the new fiscal year July 1.

It would limit advance purchases to 840 million dollars, or 50 per cent of planned buying in the new year. However, the Appropriations Committee estimated that not more than 200 million would be spent before July 1.

Chairman Cannon (D-Mo) of the Appropriations Committee said it might sustain or increase inflation by increasing the demand for goods. He also said there is a danger of a slump later when purchases normally made then could not be made.

Rep. Gross (R-Iowa) asked if the bill were not "a tongue-in-cheek proposition."

TABER TALKS

Rep. Taber (R-NY), top Republican on the committee, replied that the committee didn't want to turn down the President's request.

The vote in the Senate committee on the bill to provide loans to municipalities was 13-2. The bill was sponsored by Sen. Fulbright (D-Ark); the Eisenhower administration opposed it. The committee reduced the bill from two billion dollars to one.

Fulbright said widespread employment could be provided quickly with his bill.

"Local projects exist in virtually every communit. There is a huge backlog because of war, inflation, and tight money," he said.

Loans that would run as long as 50-55 years would be allowed for such projects as construction and repair of streets, sidewalks, bridges, parking lots, airports, parks and other recreation facilities, hospitals and health centers, garbage disposal plants, water and sanitary facilities and public buildings.

House Adopts Bill To Aid The Jobless

WASHINGTON — (I N S) — President Eisenhower scored a major legislative victory Thursday when the House rejected a Democratic sponsored unemployment benefit proposal and adopted the administration's bill to help the jobless.

SOUTHERN DEMOCRATS

A coalition of Republicans and Southern Democrats joined forces to spike the more liberal Democratic anti-recession measure and pass the Eisenhower bill by a vote of 370 to 11.

The President's victory was signalled earlier when the House tentatively voted 194 to 95 to substitute the administration bill. A key roll call vote of 223 to 165 confirmed the move.

More than 40 Southern Democrats joined an almost solid bloc of Republicans to take the action.

SENT TO SENATE

The measure, as sent to the Senate, would authorize continuation of existing jobless pay benefits for a period half-again as long as provided by widely varying state laws. In many states this would amount to an additional 13 weeks of benefits.

It would help an estimated three million persons before it expires April 1, 1959.

Any worker who exhausted jobless pay benefits under existing law before April 1, 1959, would be eligible for additional payments under the bill.

MADE NO ATTEMPT

Democratic leaders made no attempt to amend the prolonged proposal when it became clear that the coalition was in control.

An estimated 400,000 workers have exhausted their unemployment compensation benefits during the first three months of the year. They would be eligible to receive the additional benefits after the bill becomes law. Administration officials have estimated that approximately three million persons will exhaust benefits under existing law during the life of the proposal.

House dumps Kennedy-Ives labor curb bill

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18 —(AP)—The House today killed the Kennedy-Ives Labor Control Bill.

Republicans led a protest against the procedure under which the bill came to the floor allowing little debate and no amendments.

The Senate passed the measure two months ago by an 88-1 vote.

AIMED AT CURBING thefts of labor funds and safeguarding the rights of union members, the bill grew out of hearings before the Senate rackets investigating committee.

It was sponsored by Sens. John F. Kennedy (D., Mass.) and Irving Ives (R., N. Y.).

Among other things, the bill would have required the disclosure of union finances through public reports to the secretary of labor.

It also would have required secret balloting for union officers, and would have limited the terms of officers.

THE AFL-CIO executive council adopted a resolution today at its meeting in Unity House, Pa., urging House approval of the bill.

Rep. John McCormack (Mass.), House Democratic leader, brought the bill up saying this was the only opportunity of this session "to meet these dastardly practices which have been disclosed."

Rep. Charles Halleck (R., Ind.), a House GOP leader, said he was afraid today's action was "just a political exercise for partisan advantage."

But Rep. James Roosevelt (D., Calif.) said the question was whether Congress would go home without passing legislation that would do something about the disclosures made in the Senate committee.

Ike Signs 42 Bills Into Law

President Hails Old-Age Boost

WASHINGTON — (UPI) — President Eisenhower signed 42 bills into law Friday, including measures providing more foreign aid, a revised farm program, disclosure of employe welfare fund operations and social security boosts affecting 20 million Americans.

The President's approval of the measures, plus veto of two minor bills, reduced to 135 the total awaiting his signature in the wake of adjournment of Congress last Sunday morning.

The President acted on the bills preparatory to leaving on his hurricane-delayed vacation at Newport, R. I. He took with him the rest of the measures which still must get his signature or veto.

The President hailed the social security bill as a "significant step forward." It boosts social security benefits by seven per cent and raises taxes on both workers and employers to help foot the bill.

Under the new law, social security checks for the 12 million persons now drawing benefits will be fatter, starting in February, by an average of $4.75 a month for most beneficiaries.

The new tax rate on employes will be 2½ per cent on the first $4,800 in annual earnings. The tax now is 2¼ per cent on the first $4,200. Self-employed persons will have to pay 3¾ per cent on the first $4,800 instead of 3 3-8 on the first $4,200. The tax boosts are effective Jan. 1.

The $3,298,092,500 foreign aid bill approved by the President was 652 million dollars less than he had asked of Congress. He has called the cut one of his major disappointments and said he hopes the reduced sum will be adequate for mutual security needs.

The labor bill signed by the president requires both employers and unions operating welfare and pension funds to file reports on their operations with the Labor Department.

A requirement that only summary reports be filed was criticized by the President as "making it possible to conceal many abuses."

The labor bill signed by the president requires both employers and unions operating welfare and pension funds to file reports on their operations with the Labor Department.

Major provisions of other bills approved:

Farm — Provides lower price supports and greater planting freedom for farmers in accord with much of the controversial program recommended by Agriculture Secretary Ezra T. Benson.

Euratom — Hailed by the President as "highly beneficial to Europe and to the U. S." it enables this country to join six European allies in developing nuclear power for peacetime use.

Military Construction — A $1,353,850,000 appropriation for missile-age projects including $252,500,000 for ballistic, defensive strategic missiles installations.

Agencies — Provides $6,090,156,900 to finance operation of 17 independent federal agencies in the current 12 months. The bill — modified after an earlier veto — includes 40 million dollars for the new aid-to-science education program, $152,810,000 to build 47 new federal buildings in 20 states and Hawaii and $100,000 for newly-approved pensions and expenses of former Presidents Truman and Hoover.

COMMITTEE STALLS STATES' RIGHTS BILL

Measure Designed To Kill 'Pre-Emption Doctrine'

WASHINGTON, March 11.—Bills aimed at turning back the rising tide of Federal power and restoring states' rights are having their customary difficulty in the present Congress.

Chief among numerous measures on the subject by Representative Howard W. Smith (D., Va.), which would wipe out the so-called "pre-emption doctrine" which the Supreme Court has applied to strike down various state laws.

The doctrine holds that when Congress legislates in a particular field, states automatically lose their rights to legislate in the same field.

The Smith Bill would provide that state laws remain valid, even when they're in the same field as Federal laws, unless Congress says otherwise or the state laws are in direct conflict with the Federal laws.

Mr. Smith has been introducing his bill each session for the past several sessions. This time it has been approved by a House Judiciary Subcommittee but is stalled before the full House Judiciary Committee, presided over by Representative Emanuel Celler (D., N. Y.).

A companion bill, S. 337, sponsored by about 10 Senators, is awaiting action by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

IN THE NATION'S CAPITAL

Javits offers bill to end filibusters

By LOUIS HUTTER

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R., N.Y.) Thursday dumped a "hot potato" into the full Senate Rules Committee.

Mr. Javits, a member of the two-member subcommittee appointed to consider various resolutions to curb the filibuster, filed his report with the full committee.

He recommends the adoption of a cloture rule which would permit debate to be limited by a vote of two-thirds of the senators present and voting two days after 16 senators file a petition to invoke cloture.

The proposed rule also provides that 15 days after the filing of a cloture petition, signed by 16 senators, the Senate, by a vote of a majority of all senators, or 49 votes, impose cloture.

THE PRESENT rule requires a two-thirds vote of the entire Senate membership, or 64 votes to end debate.

The other member of the two-member subcommittee is Sen. Eugene Talmadge (D., Ga.). He favors the present rule which southern Democrats regard as their strongest weapon against enactment of civil rights legislation.

Senator Talmadge, however, has said he will file his individual views before the end of the month. When the Rules Committee gets his views, a bitter fight is expected to develop to block any resolution to change the cloture rule from being reported from the committee.

* * *

"NEITHER FREEDOM of speech nor the right of full debate in the Senate is at issue," Senator Javits states in his report.

In advocating a change in the filibuster rule to permit effective cloture while allowing for full and adequate debate, he says:

"I seek no abridgement of the liberty of speech, but a just and necessary restraint upon an abuse which hinders or frustrates the performance by the Senate of its constitutional duty and perverts the reasonable function and objective of the spoken word."

The deep responsibility which rests on the committee in this matter, Javits asserts, "is highlighted by the emergency character of issues facing our country—issues of peace or oblivion, issues which the United States Senate will play a leading role in resolving.

* * *

"AS OUR country and our world move forward at this rapid pace, we cannot permit a procedural roadblock that can paralyze the functioning of the Senate. Important at any time, that fact is of a crucial nature now.

"I deem it our committee's duty to report to the floor of the Senate a recommendation to eliminate that roadblock."

The Javits report comes at a time when Senate leaders were agreed that no civil rights legislation would be pushed at this session.

Both Sens. Lyndon B. Johnson of Texas, Senate Democratic leader, and William F. Knowland of California, Republican leader, are cosponsors along with 36 other Democratic and Republican senators of a resolution providing for ending debate by a two-thirds vote of senators present and voting.

* * *

Sen. Jacob K. Javits, Thursday, introduced on behalf of himself and Sen. Clifford P. Chase (Rep., N.J.), a bill to restore Part III which was stricken from the civil rights bill in the last session of Congress.

The resolution he recommends was introduced by the following senators:

Paul Douglas of Illinois, James E. Murray of Montana, Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota, Wayne Morse of Oregon, Thomas C. Hennings Jr. of Missouri, Dennis Chavez of New Mexico, Henry M. Jackson of Washington;

Sens. Pat McNamara of Michigan, Richard L. Neuberger of Oregan, John A. Carroll of Colorado, and Joseph S. Clark of Pennsylvania, all Democrats, and Irving M. Ives of New York, Charles E. Potter of Michigan, and Clifford P. Case of New Jersey, Republicans.

Negroes Hit in New Bills

WASHINGTON — Two Democratic Congressmen, one from the North, and the other from the South, have proposed bills aimed at giving state law equality with Congressional law, and a third Democrat has ripped one of the bills as being aimed specifically against Negroes.

Howard W. Smith, Virginia Democrat, introduced a bill which would keep alive state laws even after Congress has enacted legislation in the same fields.

EMANUEL CELLER, New York Democrat, stated that the bill, which deals with "subversion," is actually anti-Negro. He said, "It is apparent the primary purpose of the bill is to strike at the growing and budding rights of Negroes, especially in labor and public life. Of course, it is unconstitutional."

SMITH, LEADER of the Southern bloc in Congress, has been sent to the House for action.

Representative Francis Walter, Pennsylvania Democrat, has also authored a bill which would restore the effectiveness of any state laws hit by the ruling in the Communist Steve Nelson case.

Smith's bill also revolved around the circumstances of Mr. Nelson's conviction in Pennsylvania which was cast aside by a verdict of the U. S. Supreme Court.

House Unit Backs Railroad Aid Bill

WASHINGTON, June 12 (UPI)—The House Commerce Committee today approved a five-point railroad aid bill. The Senate passed a generally similar measure yesterday.

Both bills would authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to permit railroads to discontinue unprofitable interstate passenger service on interstate lines.

They also would set up a multi-million - dollar guaranteed loan program. The Senate bill sets the ceiling on the program at 700 million dollars. The House bill sets no ceiling.

The legislation is aimed at bolstering the railroads financially. Several companies have said they face bankruptcy this year unless the government gives them help.

The discontinuance provision in both bills would not affect intrastate lines or depots and other facilities.

The power to alter these would remain with state governments.

Railroad officials told the House committee they seek the discontinuance provision more as "a club" to use against what they called discriminatory state and local taxes than as a means of cutting passenger service.

Both bills also contain provisions that would:

Direct the ICC not to give as much emphasis as before to holding rates of one carrier at a high level to protect another type of carrier.

Tighten up exemptions from ICC regulation now enjoyed by truckers who carry only agricultural products.

Tighten regulations on truckers who haul freight under the guise of private hauling.

The House committee approved the bill by voice vote after a broader loan guarantee program was knocked out of a draft version. The earlier proposal would have opened the program to all common carriers regulated by the ICC.

Ike Loses Fight On Labor Bill

Senate Refuses to Tighten State Authority in Utility Strikes

WASHINGTON, June 13 (AP)—The Senate tonight beat back Eisenhower administration efforts to amend its labor reform bill, and ordered an unusual Saturday session in an effort to bring it to a final vote tomorrow.

A move by the administration to give the states jurisdiction over labor disputes in which the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) refuses to act went down to a decisive defeat.

In an about-face, the Senate adopted instead an amendment by Sen. Irving M. Ives (R-NY) ordering the board to take jurisdiction in such cases, after first rejecting it.

In another action, the Senate refused 60-27 to accept legislation designed to strengthen the authority of states to ban strikes by public utility workers.

This was proposed by Sen. Spessard Holland (D-Fla), who asked that the bill declare that nothing in the Taft-Hartley Act nullify state laws banning utility strikes.

Holland argued the amendment was needed because of what he called a strained interpretation of the Taft-Hartley Act by the Supreme Court. Some senators said they agreed with him but didn't believe the pending bill should be broadened into a general overhaul of the Taft-Hartley Act, the country's basic labor-management law.

Another of a block of 18 administration amendments hanging fire went down by a narrower 47-42 margin, this one offered by Sen. H. Alexander Smith (R-NJ) to require that union officers carry the liability of trustees when handling union funds or property.

Whether a final vote tomorrow would be possible, despite the aim of Senate leaders, remained in doubt.

Fifty-four new amendments, 18 of them administration proposals, were tossed into the hopper at the start of the day, and only two of them were among those disposed of in the session which ran more than 12 hours.

Requiring the NLRB to take jurisdiction in all interstate labor disputes would end an existing "no man's land" between the federal and state governments in the field of labor disputes.

The decision came on a voice vote, after the Senate had voted a 53-37 "No" to an Eisenhower administration amendment under which the states could have taken jurisdiction in disputes in which the NLRB refuses to act.

The decision represented a victory for Sens. John F. Kennedy (D-Mass), floor manager of the bill, and Sen. Ives. Ives was author of the amendment forcing the NLRB to accept jurisdiction over disputes in industries which are in interstate commerce or which affect it.

The administration's amendment was offered by Sen. Arthur V. Watkins (R-Utah).

Its defeat came by a surprisingly big vote, on the heels of a speech in which Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore) had denounced the Watkins amendments as a legal monstrosity."

Then, after its roll call defeat, Sen. Francis Case (R-SD) moved to revive the Ives amdnement. He said he had voted against it on the first test because he preferred the Watkins proposal, but that he liked the Ives amendment better than what the bill itself had proposed to do.

The bill's language would have provided that the NLRB may not adopt any rule, standard or policy which precludes it from acting on interstate labor disputes. This, however, still would have left with the agency discretionary power to refuse to handle individual cases.

Meanwhile, at a news conference, Secretary of Labor Mitchell said the pending labor measure "isn't effective enough yet" to curb labor corruption.

Mitchell listed 10 amendments he said he wanted included in the legislation.

These would give the secretary of labor more authority to investigate corruption and take corrective action, require more legal responsibility for custodians of union funds, give union members access to union records, and generally tighten government controls on union activities.

Ike Fights for His Reciprocal Trade Bill

WASHINGTON —(AP)— President Eisenhower twice put his personal prestige and influence on the line Tuesday in a House battle over extension of his authority to cut tariffs.

For the sake of American prosperity and Free World strength and unity, Eisenhower said, the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act must be continued for five years. Crucial votes on an extension bill are coming up today, with proponents sounding more hopeful of the outcome than heretofore.

In two letters, read Tuesday in the closing stages of debate, the President threw his weight squarely against an alternative proposal offered by Rep. Richard M. Simpson (R-Pa.).

He said the substitute would be disastrous as a "g tragic blunder which could seriously jeopardize the national interest, the foreign relations, as well as the security of the U. S."

Fores of the five-year extension contended the U. S. textile industry is threatened with doom and that "Communist Russia is beginning to dictate the domestic policy" of America.

The substitute would extend for only two years Eisenhower's authority to make tariff concessions in exchange for concessions by other countries. It would shift from the President to the Federal Tariff Commission final authority to raise tariffs against imports threatening substantial harm to American industry.

It was the latter provision Eisenhower said would damage the trade program beyond repair — and possibly force America's Free World partners into economic dependence on the Communists.

Republicans and Democrats demanding stronger protection for domestic industries are backing the substitute. Principally, they represent textile, coal, oil and mineral producing areas feeling the pinc hof competitive imports.

In this battle, Eisenhower has the support of both the Republican and Democratic leadership of the House and the 18-7 backing of its Ways and Means Committee.

Despite buck passing—

White House held to blame for blunder on Kennedy bill

Birmingham News - Pt. I Sun. 6-15-58

BY ROWLAND EVANS JR.

While Joseph Alsop reports from Algeria, Rowland Evans Jr. covers the Washington base.

WASHINGTON, June 14—The White House, not the Labor Department or Sen. Knowland or the Republican National Committee, must wear the dunce's cap for the incredible blunder committed in the name of Sec. of Labor Mitchell this week.

No matter what the parade of official statements may say, this has been a White House operation from start to finish.

Of course Mr. Mitchell approved the inept statement attacking the Kennedy bill. The fact is, however, that he scarcely had any choice. The strategy that led to this extraordinary piece of bungling was laid down in the White House.

In the candid words of one honest participant, that strategy was designed "to make the issue by the strongest kind of shock treatment, and then to lose it." The statement itself, with its implication that the Kennedy-Ives bill was a fraud, was the shock treatment. The plan, in other words, was nothing less than a deliberate effort to "shock" the Senate into the kind of divisive debate that would end in no bill at all. The Republicans could then campaign this Fall waving the McClellan labor-racket hearings in one hand and in the other the refusal of the Democratic Congress to pass any reform.

Civil rights bill

THIS STRATEGY was faintly reminiscent of the administration's conduct one year ago. Then, as every one remembers, the Senate had done the impossible and passed out a civil rights bill, the first since Civil War reconstruction.

Mere passage of the bill killed what had promised to be the hottest political issue for the Republicans since the numbers game. The Republicans and almost everyone else had counted on a glorious Southern filibuster to break the Democrats in two. It failed to materialize. When the resourceful Sen. Johnson then went on to win the votes of 12 Republicans for the disputed jury trial amendment, and passed the bill, the Republicans resorted to a maneuver of delay that looked suspiciously like an effort to kill the bill by having the House delete the jury trial amendment.

The inevitable result was a conviction still held by leading Negro organizations that the Republicans had simply meant from the start to agitate and exploit the civil rights issue, not resolve it.

The same result, unhappily for the Republicans, is a likely legacy of the White House labor bill intrugue.

Even though Mr. Mitchell's denunciation of the Kennedy bill has put more teeth into it, the White House strategy is likely to boomerang in several obvious ways.

Out of character

ITEM: It has put Mr. Mitchell "entirely out of character," in the words of one of his staunchest Republican admirers on Capitol Hill. Mitchell's bright future as a Republican who merited the full respect of labor has been damaged, perhaps irreparably. A political figure caught "out of character" is not unlike a temperance leader caught with a keg of beer.

ITEM: The Eisenhower administration has now appeared to place itself cozily in between Knowland and Sen. Goldwater, although the brightest future of the Republican Party must lie elsewhere and although Mitchell has personally moved his party toward a liberal labor position over the past four years.

ITEM: The implication that Kennedy and Ives had deliberately contrived to write a bill that would weaken, not strentghen, the controls over unscrupulous labor leaders has greatly enhanced the chance for final passage of a reform bill.

In the House, Speaker Rayburn will use his considerable powers to have the Senate Bill approved. Should the House actually pass the bill and send it to the White House, the big winner now would more likely be Kennedy, not Mitchell.

For the Republicans, the most unfortunate aspect of the whole affair is that they, not the Democrats, have kept the heat on the labor reform issue. They may now wind up with no credit and with no issue.—(c).

LABOR BILL VOTED IN SENATE BY 88-1; HOUSE LUKEWARM

Times

Malone Is Lone Dissenter —Amendment Relaxes Building Trade Rules

newyork Ny

By JOSEPH A. LOFTUS

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 17 — The Senate passed the Kennedy-Ives labor reform bill tonight.

The vote was 88-1. The dissenter was Senator George W. Malone, Republican of Nevada.

The bill now goes to the House of Representatives, where its future is doubtful. Most observers believe the House is not disposed to act, but a drive by the leadership could reverse that.

Wed. 6-18-58

If enacted, the bill would be the first general labor control law since the Taft-Hartley Act of 1947.

Substantial labor support for House approval of the bill is now talked of as a possibility on the theory that the new Congress, faced with the fact that nothing has been done about the scandals revealed by Senate investigation, might enact a much harsher measure than the Kennedy-Ives bill.

Bipartisan Sponsorship

There is the further consideration that some Democrats seeking re-election this year feel vulnerable on the issue of labor legislation.

The bipartisan sponsors of the Kennedy-Ives bill feel that it safeguards the democratic rights of union members and the funds of their unions.

While it intervenes more than ever in the internal affairs of unions, they feel the intervention is a hazard for the dishonest labor leader but little more than a nuisance for the clean union and the honest leader. However, this sets precedents that virtually all labor leaders dislike.

These conditions are offset to some extent by Taft-Hartley changes that the labor leaders have long wanted. Certain restrictions on unions are liberalized and employers are brought under some Taft-Hartley provisions for the first time.

Beaten on Communist Oath

The Senate made many changes during the five-day debate on the bill, most of which were accepted by one or both of the managers and sponsors, Senator John F. Kennedy, Democrat of Massachusetts, and Irving M. Ives, Republican of New York.

The most important defeat for Mr. Kennedy probably was the Senate's refusal to knock out the Taft-Hartley Act, the requirement of non-Communist affidavits by union leaders as a condition of using the services of the National Labor Relations Board.

Mr. Kennedy said the affidavit had been useless or worse. The Senate rejected this and extended it to cover employers as well, with Mr. Ives going along.

Senator Kennedy was gratified, however, by approval of the bill in its final form. He congratulated the Senate "on the successful conclusion of its labors in an area filled with complexities, prejudices and pressures.

He said the passage "represents a major step forward in the protection of the rights of union members and the general public. It will be an effective weapon in the hands of responsible leaders, honest members and the Federal Government in driving the racketeers and mobsters out of the labor movement.

Cites Senate Inquiry

"The Senate has acted wisely in rejecting amendments which were either irrelevant to the findings of the McClellan committee, overly punitive in their effects on the entire trade union movement or disruptive of stable labor-management relations."

Wed 6-18-58

The bill passed by the Senate is a strong bill. It affords substantial guarantees of democratic rights to union members and retains all of the essential provisions of the bill originally reported by the committee.

"I earnestly hope that the bill will become law this year."

In the closing hours of debate the Senate voted to exempt construction employers and unions from some important restrictive provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The Senate also voted to restore the right of strikers to vote in a representation election even though their employer has hired replacements. The so-called "strikebreakers" could vote, too.

McClellan Bid Fails

The exemption for the construction industry was a defeat for Senator John L. McClellan, Democrat of Arkansas, who tried to strike it from the Kennedy-Ives bill. His amendment was rejected by a vote of 29 to 60. The exemption attracted support from the Republican side.

Senator H. Alexander Smith, Republican of New Jersey, tried a less liberal substitute exemption in behalf of the Administration. That was rejected on a standing vote.

As the bill now stands, construction industry employers and unions could make a collective bargaining agreement before any employes were hired. The hiring then could be done through a union hiring hall though not necessarily exclusively. Employes could be required to join the union in seven days, instead of the customary thirty days.

Senator McClellan declared this was "a regression from democracy" that he could not support.

Special Problem Cited

The stated justification for these exceptions is that the construction industry has peculiar problems. Because building projects provide relatively short-term employment for the various crafts, there is not time in many instances to set up the conventional representation election machinery.

The operating engineer, for example, may have finished his work and gone to another project and employer before the National Labor Relations Board can set up an election.

It is generally conceded that the building trades unions practice these exceptions even now because of their control of the skilled labor supply in the industry and the virtual impossibility of complying with the Taft-Hartley machinery.

Provisions of Labor Bill

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 17—Following are the major objectives and requirements of the Kennedy-Ives Bill:

Public disclosure of union internal processes and financial operations, except that the Secretary of Labor may exempt unions with fewer than 200 members and with incomes of less than $20,000 a year.

Criminal penalties for failure to make reports, for false reports, for false entries, and for destruction of union records.

Reporting and public disclosure of financial transactions and holdings by union officials that might conflict with their obligations to their members.

Reporting and disclosure of any arrangement by an employer with another person to affect the decision of employes in exercising their rights under the Taft-Hartley and Railway Labor Act.

Reporting and disclosure by employers of expenditures of $5,000 or more to influence employes in the exercise of their rights.

Reporting and disclosure by labor relations consultants of their arrangements to influence employes.

Penalizes 'Middlemen'

Criminal penalties for payments by "middlemen" to union officials, and for failure of employers and consultants to file correctly the foregoing reports.

Reporting and disclosure of trusteeships imposed by national unions on subordinate unions. Limitations on procedure for establishing such trusteeships.

Election of constitutional officers of international unions at least every four years, and of local unions every three years, by secret ballot. Felons whose state voting rights have not been restored would be barred from office. Officers who fail to file and publish required union reports would be barred from office for five years.

Provision for removal of officers for misconduct by a majority of members under regulations that the Secretary of Labor may set up.

Prohibition on the use of union funds to promote individual candidacies for union office.

Establishment of an advisory committee on ethical practices.

Directing the National Labor Relations Board to assert jurisdiction over all cases within its jurisdiction, except those ceded by agreement to states with labor laws consistent with Federal law.

Banning "shake-down" picketing (offering to withdraw pickets for a price).

Banning demands for improper fees for unloading trucks.

Requiring employers as well as union officers to take non-Communist oaths as a condition of using the services of the National Labor Relations Board.

Permitting, under certain conditions, employers and unions in the construction industry to make an agreement before actual hiring of employes. Such agreements may require employes to join a union seven days after hiring instead of after thirty days, as in other employments covered by the act.

Permitting strikers to vote in a representation election even though the employer has hired replacements.

Provides that union members may sue to recover for the union property or funds stolen by an officer.

Prohibits union loans of more than $1,500 to officers.

EFFECTS ONLY HOUSTON COUNTY

'Reapportionment' Bill Introduced

By DON McKEE
Advertiser State Editor

A "reapportionment" bill which would give the Alabama legislature one more member has been introduced by Sen. Richmond Flowers of Dothan.

FLOWERS

The bill affects only Houston County. It calls for a constitutional amendment changing the section pertaining to apportionmen and giving "counties created after the adoption of the 1901 constitution" two representatives.

Houston is the sole county in the state formed after that date. If was crated in 1903 from parts of Henry, Dale and Geneva.

Houston's only representative,

TAYLOR

KILLOUGH

R. J. (Bob) Stembridge, will introduce the measure in the House

Lt. Gov. Guy Hardwick, president of the Senate, joking dubbed the bills "Flowers' return bill," referring to reported intentions of Flowers to run for the House in the next election.

Rep. Stembridge also will put a bill in the House hopper for redistricting of Houston County, adding another board of revenue member and district. He said Ashford and Cottonwood would "be separated" by the redistricting which would "give better representation" with five commissioners instead of four.

Under the bill, the county probate judge will retain chairmanship of the board of revenue Stembridge said.

probate judge will retain chairmanship of the board of revenue Stembridge said.

Another Houston County bill authorizes a salary hike for clerical workers employed by the county. The raise runs proportionate to the number of years of employment, Stembridge said.

A bill drawn up by Butler County's two representatives would prohibit payment of state welfare aid to an unwed mother for more than one illegitimate child.

The bill would amend existing law which created the welfare department and provide that any children in addtion to the one specified in such cases will be supported by the state, either in foster homes or state institutions.

"We're willing to allow them one mistake," Rep. A. L. Killough of Nonoraville said. "But i don't favor paying for immorality."

His colleague, Rep. H. B Taylor, Georgiana auto dealer, said "the people in my county brought it to my attention—the farmers say they can't get these people on welfare rolls to work."

Taylor is trying for the second time to ban vehicles which burn diesel fuel from the highways unless they have exhaust pipes not less than eight efet above the surface of the road. The bill was introduced in the 1955 legislature but failed to gain passage. At a public hearing then, Taylor said bus and truck representatives promised to correct the situation, but have not done so.

Coffee County's Rep. Bill Stokes of Elba is working on a bill creating a county inferior court. Other local bills will extend the city limits of Elba and Enterprise, "squaring up" Elba's boundaries, and extending Enterprise's borders three miles from its center.

STOKES

Stokes is one of several legislators — in what appears to be headed toward a statewide trend—considering a county tax for construction of a hospital with Hill-Burton fund aid.

The personable Coffee representative at 28 is the youngest member of the House. Serving his second term, he also holds the title of being the first Coffee representative ever to succeed himself.

Coving County Rep. Clyde Love, Florala, said he probably will introduce bills extending the city limits of Florala, Opp and Andalusia.

Another bill provides the Covington County sheriff an additional deputy at a salary of $2,400 to $3,600 a year. Salary increases are provided for the sheriff's dpeuties in another measure.

Legislators Endorse Waterways Resolution

Montgomery's State Sen. Vaughan Hill Robinson yesterday bid for an won approval of a joint legislative resolution asking that Congress go ahead with development of the Alabama-Coosa River System.

The project recently was killed by the Rivers and Harbors Commission in Washington as being economically unfeasible.

Robison first introduced in the senate a resolution asking that Alabama's delegation be notified of the need for the development, and urge action. On a suspension of rules, he won passage.

A short time later, the slower moving House also approved the resolution. It calls for work to go ahead with the Jones Bluff Dam project, near Benton in Lowndes County.

State Senate Is Deadlocked

Alabama's Money Bills Seem Hopelessly Lost In Filibuster

Final Session Began This Morning Just Past Midnight; Schools May Have To Close

Daily Home Leader
Talladega, Ala.
Fri. 9-13-57

MONTGOMERY (AP)— A crippling filibuster in the final hours of the 1957 legislative session threatened with increasing reality today to leave the state government without operating funds after this month.

Frantic efforts to break the deadlock in the Senate and clear the way for passage of two vital appropriation bills before the dead line at midnight tonight failed time after time.

The session ends at midnight.

There was still hope, however, that the appropriation bills would get through somehow. Lt. Gov. Guy Hardwick, the presiding officer, said he felt certain some compromise would be worked out.

The filibuster bottling up two bitterly contested measures as well as the appropriations meanwhile raged on unchecked with no sign of an agreement to cut it off.

A minority block held the Senate floor hour after hour to prevent a vote on a proposal school tax increase and a 20 million dollar road bond issue. Education leaders, holding out for consideration of the tax bill, refused to let the appropriations come up either.

Leaders of both factions insisted unequivocally that they have no intentition of yielding ground regardless of the fate of the appropriation bills.

The school spokesmen said passage of the appropriations first would kill any chance of getting the tax bill through.

Unless the appropirations are passed before the 1957 session ends at midnight tonight, the state will be left without funds for the new fiscal year which ends Oct. 1.

In a desperate attempt to break the deadlock, the Senate convened at 12:03 a. m., determined to stay in continuous session until midnight if necessary.

But the debate raged on unchecked and the filibustering minority claimed more than enough support to keep it going through the day and night.

A coalition of education leaders and administration forces refused to put the appropriations ahead of two bitterly contested measures—a corporation income tax increase bill and a 20-million-dollar road bond issue.

Instead, with Gov. James E. Folsom himself calling the shots, the Senate voted to put the bond issue first on a special order calendar, followed by the tax measure and then the appropriation bills.

Tne governor was on the rostrum alongside Lt. Gov. Guy Hardwick when the Senate convened for what promised to be a 23-hour 57-minute continuous session, broken only by the automatic adjournment at midnight. The 1957 session must end then because it marks the close of the 36 legislaticve days alloted by law.

Folsom, who earlier had agreed to back the appropriations ahead of the other matters, changed his stand. He called administration leaders into a huddle during the early morning hours an dinstructed them to insist on a vote on the road bond issue and corporation tax first.

Under Senate rules, each member can speak twice, an hour at a time, on the pending question, and the issue under consideration.

Meanwhile, State School Supt. A. R. Meadows, watching anxiously from the Senate floor, said failure to enact the appropriation bills would mean the probate closing of schools in most counties shortly after Oct. 1.

Meadows said 51 counties out of the 67 could keep their schools open less than a month without state funds. Others, he said, would have to close within three months.

State funds account for 76 per cent of the total spent on schools in Alabama.

Despite the hourly increasing threat, a majority bloc still hoped for a compromise, and convened at midnight this morning in a weary effort to force an agreement by keeping the Senate in session for 23 hours and 59 minutes.

Alaskan Hope For Statehood Threatened

GOP Leaders Want To Bring Hawaii Into Bill

BY DOUGLAS SMITH
Scripps-Howard Staff Writer

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10 — Prospects for statehood for Alaska at this session of Congress are threatened by a new Republican effort to bring Hawaii into the picture.

Until a few days ago Democratic leaders in both Houses expected to bring up the Alaska bill for a vote within the next few weeks, and indicated that private nose counts assured enough votes to pass it.

But now both President Eisenhower and Republican Senate Leader William Knowland have made known they want both the territories admitted now.

This could lead to the same kind of impasse that has blocked statehood bills in other years.

The Democratic decision to "let Hawaii wait" resulted largely from the fact that there is strong Southern opposition to admission of Hawaii now, while the former Southern coolness toward Alaska has diminished considerably.

It is felt that a number of Southerners would refuse to vote for a dual statehood bill even though willing to vote for Alaska alone.

Republicans historically have been more favorable to Hawaii than Alaska, and the GOP was the majority party in Hawaii until quite recently, when the Democrats gained an edge. In Alaska, on the other hand, the Republicans have shown signs of new strength recently and might be able to threaten seriously or overturn the dominant Democrats.

ALASKA AND HAWAII AGAIN LOSING STATEHOOD FIGHT

Each Is Supported by One of the Parties But Not Enough Members Support Both

By ALLEN DRURY
Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22— Once again the perennial issue of Hawaii-Alaska statehood is before Congress and again it appears that the same sad frustration for the territories will be repeated.

A year that began promisingly for Alaska, at least, seems destined to conclude with both territories still seeking admission to the Union. Barring a last-minute reprieve, which could come in the closing weeks as part of some more elaborate political deal, statehood for all practical purposes is already dead in the second month of the session.

The reasons for this are not overly complex, and as usual they center around politics. Although both territories are changing, with traditionally Republican Hawaii moving toward the Democrats and traditionally Democratic Alaska showing Republican gains, it still remains a basic tenet of political faith on Capitol Hill that if Hawaii is admitted it means two Republican Senators and if Alaska it means two Democratic Senators.

Whether this would be true in the event no one can say for sure. But the superstition that it would effectively ties the fates of the two aspirant states together in a vise-like connection that apparently cannot be broken.

Particularly is it tough to break now when it begins to appear that the arithmetic may be faulty, and that conceivably this neat two-to-two balance might be upset by the voters in one terrritory or the other.

Faced with this problem, the Democrats, who believe that their edge in Alaska still holds, decided this year to separate the two and give Alaska statehood with Hawaii put off to some future date.

Both or None

This arrangement at first had tentative Republican approval, on the theory that one new state was better than none, but on Feb. 8 this was blasted into the discard. The Senate Republican leader, William F. Knowland of California, emerged from a White House conference to announce that the Administration considered it "inadvisable" to call up Alaska for action without calling up ... said that if he could not arrange with the Democrats to have Hawaii called up, an attempt would be made to add an amendment giving Hawaii statehood to the Alaska bill.

Former Gov. Ernest Gruening of Alaska, one of the most active fighters for Alaska statehood, denounced the Knowland statement. He said the Senator should know that forcing consideration of the two territories together would be "an obvious way of defeating both."

Since this was an accurate reflection of the situation, the assumption is now general on Capitol Hill that nothing will be done on either.

Therefore the other three factors that have complicated the picture will probably not even be discussed this session. One is the fear on the part of some legislators that Hawaii has more than its share of Communists, particularly among dock workers.

Hawaiian Protests

Despite indignant Hawaiian denials, this feeling persists among such powerful opponents of statehood, for instance, as Senator James O. Eastland, Democrat of Mississippi, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee. It is not the type of argument that an unemotional recital of facts and figures can easily refute.

Another troublesome factor is the prejudice that some legislators have against adding nonadjacent territory to the Union in the legal form of a state.

The third factor is the argument, in the case of Alaska, over how much land the Federal Government is to retain of the vast territory for purposes of national defense.

Around these points considerable debate might center should the statehood issue come to the floor. But for the time being it seems probable that it will not do so, for while the Democrats are willing to take Alaska without Hawaii, the Republicans are not, and the Democrats have shown themselves to be no more willing to take Hawaii without Alaska.

Alaska Renews Statehood Bid Without Hawaii

Alaska starts another trek in Congress this week in its quest for statehood. This time its bill, without being tied to Hawaiian statehood requests, will go before a cool, but not entirely frigid, House Rules Committee.

The Rules Committee has scheduled a hearing for Thursday and may possibly clear the bill for floor debate. The measure was approved last June by the House Interior Committee. It is understood to have the support of Speaker Rayburn.

Cleared by Senate Unit

Separate bills for Alaskan and Hawaiian statehood were reported out last year by the Senate Interior Committee. There is no indication they will be called up soon in the Senate.

Advocates of Alaskan statehood note several developments they believe have improved chances of congressional action this year. The House bill attempts to meet some earlier objections by granting statehood to all of the territory but permitting the President to establish vast military reservations in the sparsely settled northern and western regions.

Alaska-Hawaii Clash Unlikely

Chances of a direct clash between Alaskan and Hawaiian statehood moves also have diminished this year. Delegate John A. Burns, Democrat of Hawaii, said last month he favored letting the Alaska bill go on alone in Congress at this time. Linking the two issues, he recalled, was one of the principal reasons both were killed or stalled in Congress in recent years.

If and when Alaska is admitted to the Union it will be ready with a State constitution approved by Alaskan voters in April, 1956. Moreover, on the basis of a territorial election in 1956, Alaska has members ready to be seated in Congress. They are "Senators" William A. Egan and Ernest Gruening and "Representative" Ralph J. Rivers. They were chosen under the so-called "Tennessee Plan." Tennessee's first Representatives in Congress were elected in anticipation of statehood and took office as soon as Tennessee was admitted to the Union in 1796.

Southern Fight Against Alaska Believed Easing

WASHINGTON [illegible] Southern opposition to the Alaska statehood bill appeared to be diminishing somewhat today.

As the Senate went into its fourth day of debate on the vigorously contested measure, several senators still were expected to speak at length but any threat of a "filibuster" apparently had dissipated.

In addition, if the opponents had any plot to quickly kill the bill there were no visible signs of it.

Sen. Strom Thurmond (D-SC), one of the Senate's most durable orators, took to the floor Thursday night and started what had been expected to be a marathon speech against the statehood issue.

ONLY TWO HOURS

But after only two hours and 10 minutes, Thurmond quit talking. He was persuaded to do so by Sen. Mike Mansfield (Mont), the acting Senate Democratic leader.

Mansfield had conferred previously with Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss), one of the chief opponents of statehood for the territory.

All three denied there was any "deal" involved in Thurmond's decision to stop early. Thurmond said he still planned to speak further on the bill and Sen. George Malone (R-Nev) was reported standing by with a 12-hour opposition speech.

Both Thurmond and Eastland, although insisting they had "no intention" of staging a filibuster, said they would continue to resist efforts to limit debate.

MAKE A COMMONWEALTH

Mansfield said he hoped the Senate would finally get around to voting today on three legal objections Eastland raised against the bill.

Eastland said he thought the Senate would at least "consider" his objections, indicating the speech-making might be interrupted long enough to get the first real action on the bill of the week.

Eastland's objections, which challenge the constitutionality of the bill, and a proposal by Sens. A. S. Mike Monroney (D-Okla) and George Smathers (D-Fla) to make Alaska a commonwealth, were the only major roadblocks standing in the way of a vote on the statehood bill itself.

Alaska supporters said they knew of no other amendments which might be introduced.

House Reversal OKs Alaskan Statehood

WASHINGTON, May 28 (AP)—The House today passed 208-166 a bill to admit Alaska to statehood.

In a dramatic reversal of form, the House twice rejected efforts to send the bill back to the House Insular Affairs committee.

It also defeated on a voice vote the decision by which it voted tentatively yesterday to kill the bill.

The action sent the bill to the Senate where it faces a new and possibly stronger challenger. An Alaskan bill, as well as one to admit Hawaii, has been on the Senate calendar since last June.

The statehood bill is opposed by most Southern senators who cite various reasons. But it generally is recognized that the Southerners mainly fear that the addition of new Senate seats would upset their balance of power in the Senate.

However, it was considered likely the bill will come up in the Senate by mid-June.

cans. Against it were 81 Democrats and 85 Republicans, including Republican Leader Joseph W. Martin Jr. of Massachusetts.

Moves to send the bill back to committee, thereby killing it for this session, were defeated 199-174 and 201-172.

South Only Obstacle For Alaska

Dixie Talkathon Bars Final Statehood Vote

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Sen. A. S. Mike Monroney (D-Okla) said Saturday that unless a southern "talkathon" against the Alaskan statehood bill is broken, the measure may be pigeon-holed.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson (D-Wash) floor manager of the legislation, said, however, that the way is clear for "an overwhelming vote for final passage, probably by Wednesday."

Wednesday is July 2. The text of the bill already passed by the House requires that President Eisenhower notify the Alaskan governor no later than July 3 that the bill has been passed.

Monroney said that southern opponents are trying to continue debate beyond July 3 and thus force a Senate-House conference which could shelve the measure.

Jackson, armed with a legal opinion from the Interior Department, said that forcing the bill past July 3 would not necessitate a change in the House deadline provision.

Acting Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont), joined Jackson in claiming enough votes to defeat all pending amendments. He said he hopes for passage next week. He believes 60 to 70 senators will vote to make Alaska the 49th state.

Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss), a leader in the group opposed to statehood, said he knows nothing of any talkathon. But he said he cannot predict when a final vote will come.

Eastland said he will offer a second constitutional point of order Monday. It will assert that a provision in the Alaska Constitution for electing senators, one to a long term, the second to a short term, is unconstitutional.

Senate Passage Seems Certain

House OKs Alaska Statehood

WASHINGTON — (UPI) — The House Wednesday passed a bill to admit Alaska to the union as the 49th state. The roll-call vote was 208-166.

The bill, approved after two attempts to send it back to committee were rejected, now goes to the Senate where chances of passage are good.

The House acted over the opposition of Republican leaders and Southern Democrats. Top GOP members had voted previously to return the measure to the House Interior Committee despite President Eisenhower's personal plea for the bill.

The legislation to admit the northern territory to the Union was approved without any crippling amendments.

Before the final vote, however, the House adopted a proposal by Rep. William A. Dawson, (D., Utah), to reduce from 182 million to 102,500,000 acres the amount of unreserved public lands the federal government would turn over to the new state.

Rep. Leo W. O'Brien (D., N.Y.), author of the measure, had said previously that statehood advocates would not object too strenuously to a reduction. He said the new state would need a large area of land to give it a "substantial tax base."

The bill also gives the Defense Department "exclusive jurisdiction" over a large area of northwest Alaska for defense purposes. The exact amount has not been determined but it is expected to be about 102 million acres.

The House-approved measure also would give Alaska the rights to minerals on the 102,550,000 acres included in the proposed land grant. Statehood opponents have called this a "giveaway" of the nation's resources.

The House last passed an Alaska bill in 1950, by a vote of 186-146. A separate Alaska bill has never passed the Senate although a combined Alaska-Hawaii statehood measure cleared that body in 1954 only to die.

President Eisenhower told his news conference Wednesday he believes Congress should carry out the platform pledges of both the Democrats and Republicans by voting statehood for both Alaska and Hawaii.

Voting for the bill today were 117 Democrats and 91 Republicans. Against it were 81 Democrats and 85 Republicans, including Republican Leader Joseph W. Martin Jr. of Massachusetts.

Alaska Statehood Bill Defeated

Roll Call Sought to Revive Measure

By FRANK VAILLE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Opposition forces Tuesday maneuvered the Alaska statehood bill into position for a knockout blow.

On an unrecorded teller's vote, where members pass down the aisle but do not respond by name, the House voted 144-106 to strike out the bill's enacting clause.

Statehood forces, hurt but not out, had overnight to rally their forces for a roll call vote to stave off final defeat.

The motion to strike the enacting clause, made by Rep. Walter Rogers (D-Tex), was a technical maneuver, which in effect would kill the bill.

'BACK TO COMMITTEE'

Wednesday's first roll call will come on a motion, also by Rogers, to send the bill back to the House Insular Affairs Commitee where it originated. Such a move, which also would in effect kill the bill for this session, usually musters more support than a motion to strike the enacting clause.

During debate which began last Wednesday, statehood opponents attacked he bill on grounds its land grant provisions would constitute a giveaway of natural resources belonging to all the people, that Alaska is not contiguous to the existing Unio ad tha is for similar acto for other distant areas, and its two senators would dilute the Senate representation of more populous areas.

PREDICTS DEATH BLOW

Rep. Howard W. Smith (D-Va), a leader of the antistatehood forces, predicted opponents would succeed in dealing the bill a death blow Wednesday.

Advocates looked hopefully, however, toward the possibility of picking up needed support from among the 130 house members not on hand for Tuesday's vote.

Two amendments, both by Rep. Craig Hosmer (R-Calif), were defeated Tuesday. One, voted down 53-33, would have delayed the effective date of statehood until the Alaska legislature amended the proposed state constitution to prevent any future legalization of gambling.

The other, rejected on a voice vote, would have required Alaska to attain a population of 250,000 U.S. citizens before becoming a state. The population was 128,643 in the 1950 census.

Talmadge Warns Against Alaskan Statehood

By ALBERT RILEY
Constitution Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON—Sen. Talmadge warned Thursday that admission of Alaska to statehood would set a dangerous precedent that would destroy the geographical solidarity of the United States.

It would lead, he said, to demands for statehood from Hawaii, Puerto Rico, Guam, the Virgin Islands and even the 2,000 Pacific island trust territories now under U.S. protection.

"I fear, Mr. President, that we may be about to put ourselves into the dangerous and undesired position of attempting to become, instead of the United States of America, the United States of the World," he told the Senate.

"How then will we be depicted by our enemies who already are propagandizing the world with the charge that we are a nation of imperialists?", Talmadge asked.

"Before we act to make Alaska a state, we should ask ourselves these two questions:

"Where do we go from there?

"Where can we stop?"

Noting that Alaska would forever be separated from the continental United States, Talmadge pointed out that an enemy could at any time surround it without once violating our national sovereignty or territorial integrity.

"Those who cannot forsee the potential dangers and difficulties inherent in admitting a non-contiguous state," the Georgian said, "would do well to reflect upon the experience of the French in attempting to absorb the country of Algeria into metropolitan France."

Talmadge said the arguments for Alaskan statehood stem from emotion rather than logic and declared that the real issues have been obscured by "specious slogans."

Alaskans themselves are divided, he said, on the statehood issue and have had an opportunity to vote on the question of immediate statehood.

He quoted editorial opposition to immediate statehood from daily newspapers in Juneau and Anchorage and the results of a poll taken by Rep. Miller (R-Neb).

Miller recently asked 10 radio stations and five newspapers in Alaska to request Alaskans to write him their views on immediate statehood, Talmadge said.

Within three weeks the Nebraska congressman received 1,394 letters opposing statehood now and only 522 favoring it, Talmadge told the Senate.

Although the Constitution provides that Congress may vote a new state into the Union, Talmadge said the Federalist Papers and the Articles of Confederation show that the nation's forefathers really intended that no new state should be admitted without approval of three-fourths of the states.

A constitutional amendment, as proposed by Rep. James C. Davis. (D-Ga), should be adopted, Talmadge said, to provide for admission to statehood by vote of the states.

"The granting of statehood, Mr. President, is an irrevocable act," he said. "The outcome of the War Between the States determined for all time that, once admitted, a state cannot leave the Union.

"Therefore, it is incumbent upon us as members of the Senate, to make sure beyond any shadow of a doubt that the admission of any new state will not be a mistake for which the nation will have to pay the consequences for all time to come."

TWO TOWNS TO VOTE ON PROPOSED MERGER

Petitions Request Union Of Nettleton, Jonesboro

From The Commercial Appeal Jonesboro, Ark., Bureau

JONESBORO, Ark., Feb. 18.—The City Council adopted an ordinance Monday night asking that special elections be held on the proposed merger of Nettleton and Jonesboro.

The City Council action came after petitions were received from more than 50 citizens of each city calling for the merger.

The ordinance calls upon Judge Paul Hanshaw to hold a session of County Court to set the date for special elections in Jonesboro and Nettleton on the proposal.

Under the law, Judge Hanshaw must set the date for the elections. It probably will be within 30 days.

The merger will occur only if a majority of citizens in both municipalities vote for combining the two.

WILLIAMS FOR BILL TO AID INTEGRATION

Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan urged support yesterday for a Senate bill that would give "a form of technical assistance" to communities seeking to desegregate schools.

He was addressing 300 persons at the annual luncheon meeting of the New Jersey State Region of the American Jewish Congress in the Governor Clinton Hotel here.

The Michigan Democrat said the bill — No. 3727 — was before the Senate with bipartisan support. It would provide for advisory conucils, regional conference and other devices, he explained, by which specialists could help in developing broad programs of community cooperation in ending school segregation.

Governor Williams was introduced by Isaac Toubin, executive director of the American Jewish Congress.

Russell Expects Senate To Pass Bill Undoing Decisions Of Supreme Court

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Richard B. Russel D-Ga) said Thursday that in his opinion the Senate will pass a bill to undo the effects of some recent Supreme Court decisions if it gets a chance.

He referred specifically to a bill passed by the House providing that state laws paralleling federal statutes shall not be invalidated by the court unless they are in irreconcilable conflict or unless Congress expressly states the federal measures preempt the field.

Russell is a co-sponsor of a companion Senate bill, introduced in January of last year by Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark), and now pending before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Over two months ago the Judiciary Committee approved by a 10-5 vote a much broader bill sponsored by Sens. William E. Jenner (R-Ind) and John M. Butler (R-Md) to curb the court's review powers and overcome the effects of some of its decisions in communist cases.

Russell told a reporter that he is "very vigorously" in favor of passage of the Jenner-Butler bill, but he said he regarded it as "more practical" to press for passage of the more limited bill passed by the House last week.

A member of the Senate Democratic Policy Committee, Russell moved a meeting of the group earlier this week to bring up the Jenner-Butler bill for Senate action before Congress adjourns.

A decision by the Policy Committee was deferred at least until next week.

Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss), chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, had hoped for action by it this week on the bill passed by the House or the companion Senate bill.

However, committee action was deferred after McClellan left for Arkansas because of the death of his son in an airplane crash.

Russell said that if the bill is approved by the Judiciary Committee he will try to get the Democratic Policy Committee to schedule either it or the Jenner-Butler bill for Senate action.

No action seen on 4 measures

WASHINGTON (NEA) — In what appears to be a maneuver to keep harmony within the Democratic party as intact as possible, Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson of Texas, Senate Democratic leader, avoided action by the Democratic policy Committee Tuesday on four bills to curb the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court or nullify certain of its decisions in civil liberties cases.

After the Democratic Policy Commitee meeting, Senator Johnson told reporters that Sen. James O. Eastland of Mississippi, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, had attended the meeting and discussed the bills, but no action had been taken on them.

Prior to the committee meeting, it had been generally believed in informed circles at the Capitol that a compromise would be reached and that the Policy Committee would schedule the Bridges bill and the Mallory bill and would pigeonhole the more sweeping Butler-Jenner bill and the House-approved Smith bill.

* * *

SENATOR JOHNSON indicated that the Democratic Policy Committee will schedule some court-curbing legislation before the Congress adjourns. The Bridges bill and the Mallory bill have been ordered reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee, but the printed reports were not available for the committee.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has not yet acted on the Smith bill.

The Butler-Jenner bill is on the Senate calendar and Sen. Richard B. Russell, influential Georgia Democrat, has urged the Policy Committee to schedule it for Senate debate and vote.

Senator Johnson said no action was taken on any of these bills "because there are so many different approaches to considered. He added that it was agreed that the committee is to act promptly on some of these bills in a short time.

* * *

ANY OF the four court-curbing bills probably will provoke lengthy debate. The one which would have the least effect is the Bridges bill.

Sen. Wayne Morse, Oregon Democrat and former dean of the University of Oregon Law School, has indicated that he will oppose the Mallory bill.

The House-approved Smith bill would draw widespread opposition because it appears that it goes beyond the area of state sedition laws and would affect broad questions of interstate commerce, criminal law, labor relations and many others.

There appears to be so much opposition to the Butler-Jenner bill that it might provoke Senate liberals into a filibuster which could result in a legislative snarl in the closing days of this session.

* * *

SENATOR JOHNSON would like to avoid a floor fight. It is therefore likely that he will move to bring up the two bills which will meet with the least opposition — the Bridges bill and the Mallory bill.

The Bridges bill, like the Smith bill, would nullify the Supreme Court decision in the Steve Nelson case, but, unlike the Smith bill, it is limited to state subversive or sedition statues.

It provides that Congressional acts which may be passed in the future prescribing criminal penalties for any act of subversion or sedition against the United States, "shall not prevent the enforcement" in any state court of any state law prescribing any criminal penalty for any such act, or conspiracy to commit sedition, unless the Congressional Act so provides.

In the Steve Nelson case, the U.S. Supreme Court affirmed a decision of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, declaring unconstitutional the Pennsylvania sedition law insofar as it applied to subversive activites against the U.S.

* * *

THE SO-CALLED Mallory bill would nullify the Supreme Court decision in the case of Andrew Mallory, 19-year-old colored youth of limited intelgence, who was convicted of criminal assault.

The Supreme Court set aside his conviction on the ground that there was undue delay between the time of his arrest and the time when he was taken before a committing magistrate.

The Jenner-Butler bill would take jurisdiction away from the Supreme Court in cases involving subversive activities, congressional investigations and contempts of Congress, removal of Federal employees on security grounds and disbarment proceedings.

BILL TO FIGHT BOMBINGS

BILL INTRODUCED BY SENATOR JACOB K. JAVITS, REPUBLICAN, NEW YORK

BILL FIGHTS BOMBINGS

Javits Would Permit U. S. to Act in Racial Incidents

WASHINGTON, June 5 (AP)—Senator Jacob K. Javits, Republican of New York, introduced a bill today to permit Federal prosecution and investigation of what he called "racially inspired bombings."

He told the Senate that the measure had been prompted by recent bombings in Florida, Tennessee and Alabama.

Senator Javits also introduced a bill to extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission to June 30, 1960, or by nearly ten months. He said he had acted so because the commission had been "so regretably delayed in getting started."

Similar measures recently were introduced in the House of Representatives by Representative Kenneth B. Keating, Republican of Upstate New York.

Racial Bombings Bill Introduced

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-NY) introduced a bill Thursday to permit federal prosecution and Federal Bureau of Investigation investigation of what he called "racially inspired bombing."

He told the Senate that the measure was prompted by recent bombings in Florida, Tennessee and Alabama.

Javits also introduced a bill to extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission to June 30, 1960, or by nearly 10 months. He said he did so because the commission has been "so regrettably delayed in getting started."

Similar measures recently were introduced in the House by Rep. Kenneth Keating (R-NY).

Anti-Bomb Bill Backed By Congressmen

Illinois congressmen were urged this week by the American Civil Liberties Union to support pending legislation which would permit federal intervention in the type bombing of religious institutions which has taken place recently in Florida, Tennessee, and other southern states.

Under present law, the FBI and the Department of Justice, generally, cannot enter such situations. Proposed legislation, similar to that which permits FBI investigation of kidnapping cases, creates a rebuttable presumption that explosives, used in violation of federal or state law, are transported across state lines.

Proposes Amendment to Constitution

[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

Washington, March 4—A constitutional amendment permitting the Vice President to serve as acting President during the disability of the President of the United States was introduced in the Senate today by nine senators.

The proposal was dropped in the hopper by Senators Dirksen [R., Ill.], Estes Kefauver [D., Tenn.], and seven others less than 24 hours after the White House announced the terms of an agreement between President Eisenhower and Vice President Nixon on the same subject.

The amendment introduced today was agreed upon by Kefauver and Dirksen after several months of hearings conducted by the Senate constitutional amendments subcommittee of which Kefauver is chairman.

List Key Provisions

Key provisions of the amendment were:

1. The President, upon declaring his inability to discharge the duties of his office, may turn the office over to the Vice President, who shall act as acting President.

2. Should the President fail to declare his inability, the Vice President, upon the written advice and consent of a majority of the cabinet, may declare the President unable to function as chief of state and take over as acting President.

3. Upon the recovery of the President, he may declare his inability ended and resume the office of President, after one week's public notice.

4. If the Vice President, as acting President, and a majority of the cabinet determine the President is not in fact able to resume his office, they shall make a declaration to that effect, but their decision must be submitted to Congress. Congress then may override or sustain the decision of the Vice President and cabinet..

Kefauver Compliments Ike

In introducing the amendment, Kefauver complimented Mr. Eisenhower for entering into the agreement with the Vice President. But he said the fact the agreement was considered necessary showed the need for handling the problem in a fundamental way—by constitutional amendment.

"Any agreement is subject to the language of the Constitution," Kefauver said, "and I think it much better to write that language into the Constitution. The only test of the agreement that could ever arise would be in a period of emergency, and that is what we are trying to avoid."

Dirksen said he believed he and Kefauver had hit upon a solution "agreeable to the administration and the country."

Earlier, Sen. William F. Knowland [R., Cal.], and Rep. Joseph W. Martin [R., Mass.] G. O. P. leaders of the Senate and House, told reporters they believed the Eisenhower-Nixon agreement would spur congressional action on the disability question.

Rayburn Raises Issue

But House Speaker Sam Rayburn [D., Tex.] challenged the right of the White House to create the office of acting President. He told reporters he did not see how the Vice President could take over the duties of the President without taking the Presidential oath.

Rep. Kenneth B. Keating [R., N. Y.], a leader in the effort to amend the Constitution to provide for Presidential inability, said the Eisenhower-Nixon agreement was the best procedure under present circumstances.

"But history proves," he said, "that we can't rely on future combinations of President and Vice President to act with the same vision and understanding as the present incumbents."

The constitution as presently written provides that the Vice President shall take over in the event of the death, inability, or resignation of the President. But it does not state who shall declare the President unable to discharge his duties.

Stormy Red Probe Ends in South

ATLANTA, July 31 (AP).—A congressional committee investigating charges of un-American activities in the South today winds up a three-day probe marked by balky witnesses and references to racism.

A 22-year-old camera plant worker, William Matthews of Brooklyn, N. Y., was the only one of 11 witnesses called who denied any connection with the Communist party. The others were silent under the First or Fifth Amendment.

Among those declining to answer yesterday was Hunter Pitts O'Dell, a Montgomery (Ala.) Negro insurance man. The Detroit-born witness was described by Richard Arens, staff director of the House un-American Activities subcommittee, as a "zealot of the Communist movement."

Statement Ruled Out

Mr. O'Dell was ruled out of order when he sought to inject a discussion of mistreatment of Negroes in the South into the hearing. He tried to read a statement but was told a committee rule provided that such statements must be submitted 24 hours in advance.

The committee also heard Carl Braden of Louisville, Ky., a proponent of racial integration, say that the group should be looking into violence against Negroes and Jews in the South.

Mr. Braden told the investigators that his business and associations were none of their business. He is field secretary for the Southern Conference Educational Fund, which has headquarters in New Orleans.

Conviction Voided

Mr. Braden, a former copy editor for the Louisville Courier-Journal was freed of a Kentucky sedition conviction as the result of a U. S. Supreme Court ruling.

Another witness, Frank Wilkinson, refused any information about himself other than his name. He said he did so in co-operation with the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee to make a legal test of the constitutionality of the congressional committee's mandate.

Marge Spurny Cole, a textile worker from Greensboro, N. C., relied on the First and Fifth Amendments in refusing to answer numerous questions. One question was whether she knew former FBI undercover agent Armand Penha and if he lied in identifying h eras a Communist colonizer.

Mr. Penha said the party sent highly educated persons into Southern textile mills, concealing their educational background, to get jobs and cultivate workers. Mrs. Cole has two college degrees.

William Robertson, a college graduate who is now a Chicago writer, tol dof numerous jobs he had held in the South and elsewhere, many of them menial.

Red Hunters Accused Of Trying To Stall Integration In South

House Un-American Activities Committee Hit For Refusing To Probe Anti-Negro Elements

The Congressional subcommittee investigating un-American activities in Dixie was severely criticized Wednesday for allegedly trying to halt integration in the South, for refusing to include in its schedule the investigation of anti-Negro elements, and for doing what is not supposed to do.

These complaints were aired by several witnesses appearing before the group on its second day in Atlanta. They were also presented in the first-day hearing which saw the first five of 15 or more witnesses summoned to appear before the subcommittee.

At least six of the 13 persons who have thus far testified have charged the three-member investigating group with persecuting white Southern liberals who are seeking peaceful integration. As far as these witnesses are concerned, this investigation is directed by Washington political elements who are seeking to halt integration in the South.

NEGROES ENSLAVED

A Negro witness, Hunter O'Dell, insurance executive from Montgomery, accused the group of looking into everything except what is right under its nose. He said un-American activities in this country began with the enslavement of Negroes "and has been going on for 300 years."

In a signed statement, which he tried unsuccessfully to present to the subcommittee while it was in session Wednesday, O'Dell advised the group to investigate such activities as Georgia's Rosa Lee Ingram case, "the murder of Isaiah Nixon," movements against the NAACP and the "reign of terror" in Dawson, Ga.

He labeled the investigating group as an "Eastland-type Committee" and described it as "arrogantly presuming authority which it does not have."

HARASSING DIXIE LIBERALS

Charges that the subcommittee is seeking to harass white liberals was refuted by the group's most eloquent spokesman, Rep. Donald Jackson of California. Jackson, at one point, said he supported Civil Rights legislation in the House and had perhaps done more to promote civil rights than any of the witnesses.

A counter-charge by those labeled Reds is expected. However, the fact that for years the leading proponents of keeping Dixie down South, or vice versa, have painted everybody, Negroes and whites, who talked integration as being communists, makes the hearings here in Atlanta, the hard core of segregation, of unusual interest.

Carl Braden, noted Kentucky integrationist, told the subcommittee that it ought to investigate maltreatment of Negroes and Jews in Atlanta and other Southern areas. He further stated that "all of the people subpoenaed here are integrationists." He asked: "Are you investigating integrationists?"

Braden, who has been released from a sedition conviction, later charged that this hearing is a "common technique of harassing white liberals in the South."

EQUAL OPPORTUNITIES

Another witness, Frank Wilkinson, former assistant to the director of the Los Angeles, Calif., housing authority, said the committee is trying "to smear decent white liberals in the South . . ." He told reporters this method is apparently attaining some success. A well-known worker with group purporting to seek equal opportunities, Franklin charged that this subcommittee singles out a certain thing to smear in each area in which it holds hearings. "Here it is integration."

Wilkinson, who previously appeared before this group and who has been identified as an active communist, is accused of being sent to Atlanta to incite negative reaction to the subcommittee's hearings.

In a brief interview with the Press following his testimony, Wilkinson, who refused to answer pertinent questions, said:

"The stand I took was done in cooperation with the American Civil Liberties Union in an effort to make a basic legal test of the constitutionality of the mandate of the House Committee on Un-American Activities."

He said earlier that he challenged the committee and the authority of Congress to give it a mandate to ferret out communists.

JACKIE'S VIEWS CITED

Answering charges hurled at the committee by Insuranceman O'Dell, Rep. Jackson said that the "emphasis on minorities is overdone." He said that progress has been made in the areas the witnesses referred to and mentioned testimony which Jackie Robinson made before the Un-American Activities Committee which he said was "some of the best I've ever heard."

Jackson pointed out that efforts of communists to infiltrate the Negro race "have fallen flat."

The Atlanta hearings, which end today, have taken a twist the subcommittee apparently did not hope for. Little has been said about Dixie communistic activities, but much has been said about the race problems. The committee has constantly repeated its intention to remain aloof from discussions of integration and segregation.

However, witnesses have not allowed the hot racial issue to cool

Red Probe Is Welcome In Atlanta

By CHARLES MOORE

The welcome mat will be rolled out for the House Un-American Activities subcommittee when it comes here July 29 although most officials feel you could probably question all Atlanta's Communists in a telephone booth.

"I'm delighted they're going to hold hearings here," said Attorney General Eugene Cook. "My department and the Georgia Bureau of Investigation will cooperate with them in every way."

MAYOR COMMENTS

Mayor Hartsfield said, "I'm always happy to have our congressmen come here." He said he didn't know anything about communist activities here.

"I think there's very little communist activity in this section," he added.

Attorney General Cook said he believes Georgia probably has less communists than any other state. His office has been looking into the conspiracy since the passage of the state subversive act in 1954.

During that four years "we've accumulated a lot of evidence," Cook said. "If we have any information they want, we'll certainly turn it over to them."

BENEFICIAL EFFORT

Cook said that while there probably aren't many communists in Georgia, he believes the hearing will have a beneficial effect by letting them know they are under observation. "It might keep them out."

The subcommittee began making arrangements about coming here a month ago. An investigator was here this week talking to local officials about the situation.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation, the department charged with keeping an eye on communism, said it had "no comment" on the number of their activities in Georgia.

Atlanta Police Chief Herbert Jenkins declined to comment on the subcommittee's proposed visit.

U.S. District Atty. James Dorsey said he knew nothing of communist activities in the Southeast and said the FBI has not turned any such cases over to him for prosecution.

Solon Charges Commies Duped Negro Leaders

ATLANTA, Ga.—(SNS)—A large group of prominent Negro leaders were described Wednesday as possibly having been duped into signing a letter which might have been Communist - inspired, urging the subcommittee of the House Un-American Activities Committee to stay out of the South unless it plans to help defend Negroes against "subversive" who oppose the U. S. Supreme Court, civil rights and "our American ideals."

The letter was signed by 150 Negro leaders from the South and Washington, D. C., and sent to the U. S. House of Representatives.

Reference was made to it Wednesday by Rep. Donald Jackson subcommitteeman from California who said, "there is a very strong possibility that that letter may have been prepared by a communist."

Members of the investigating group had indicated earlier the letter would not come up in the hearings. However, it was given to Carl Braden, witness from Louisville Ky., who was asked to relate his connection with it. Braden is labeled a communist by the subcommittee.

HITS DIXIE BOMBINGS

Braden pleaded the First Amendment when asked his part in conjunction with the letter, but he took the opportunity to read it aloud. The letter called for an investigation of bombings, school segregation and the activity of the White Citizens Councils.

It further charged that the House committee was more interested "in harrassing and labeling as 'subversive' any citizen who is inclined to be liberal" than in the stated subversive activities.

Rep. Jackson said the letter had been placed in Congressmen's circular file" because it was "quite obvious" that the names of some of the signees "have been closely allied with the Communist Party". He did not identify them.

He later said the signees could petition the subcommittee to have their names removed from the letter before it was admitted in the official record of the hearings.

PREPARED BY REDS

"There is a very strong possibility that that letter may have been prepared by a communist," Rep. Jackson said. This shows how subtle the communist Party is in duping non-communists," he continued However, he made it clear that the Negro leaders may not have been unaware of what they were signing.

A photostatic copy of the letter was presented by Director Richard Arens in connection with the testimony of Carl Braden. Arens said the copy of the letter indicated it had been connected with the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc., an organization which was cited as questionable by the subcommittee.

Arens said SCEF, for which Braden and his wife are field secretaries, is the successor of the Southern Conference For Human Welfare which has been cited as subversive. He said the structure and leadership of SCHW took over SCEF.

However, he did not definitely state that SCEF has been considered subversive.

A brochure put out by SCEF lists among its members on the board of directors Dr. James P. Brawley, of Georgia; John Wesley Dobbs of Georgia; Dr. E. Franklin Frazier of Washington, D. C.; Charles G. Gomillion of Alabama; Bishop S. L. Greene of Georgia; Bishop C. Eubank Tucker, counsel for Braden and several other witnesses, of Kentucky; other outstanding leaders.

The brochure said the conference works toward that day: "When second-class citizenship will be a thing of the past in the United States . . . . when racial segregation will no longer place its lifelong blight on the bodies of Negroes and the spirit of white people . . . . when Negro and white Southerners will build together . . . toward greater opportunity for all."

ROBESON INTENDS TO LIVE IN LONDON

But Singer Says He Is Not Deserting U. S.—Foresees Concerts in New York

BLACKPOOL, England, Sept. 21 (Reuters) — Paul Robeson said here tonight that he would make his future home in London.

"I find the British people very warm and I have lived here before," the American singer declared. "London will be my center, as Hollywood is the center for some British film stars.

"I don't want any overtones of suggestion that I am deserting the country of my birth," Mr. Robeson added. "If I have a concert in New York, I will go there and return to London.

Passport Granted Recently

Mr. Robeson recently received his passport, making it possible for him to leave the United States, after a long dispute with the State Department.

He was one of the first personssons denied a passport when he refused to answer questions about Communist affiliations. His fight with the State Department began in 1950, and ended last June with the Supreme Court decision overturning the State Department regulations denying passports to suspected Communists.

Mr. Robeson has never made a secret of his bitterness over racial discrimination in this country. He has fought for left-wing causes for many years and in 1952 was awarded the Stalin International Prize.

A man of many facets, he has achieved fame as an athlete, singer and actor. Twice he was named to Walter Camp's All-America footbal team. Though admitted to the New York bar in 1923, he gave up law to become an actor. Then he turned to singing and quickly became one of the most popular concert stars.

Russians hail Robeson on return to Moscow

MOSCOW—British News Agency, Reuters, reported Saturday that concert star Paul Robeson was wildly acclaimed on his arrival here late last week.

According to the dispatch, Robeson and his wife, Mrs. Eslanda Robeson, arrived by air for a two-week visit. It marked his first appearance in Russia in nine years.

Smiling and undisturbed by the swaying crowd at the foot of the Soviet jet airliner which brought him from Brussels, Robeson spoke a few words, of Russian, into a forest of microphones.

He said: "Greetings friends ... greetings ..... I am very happy to be here again.

Culture Minister N. A. Mikhailov, chief Soviet greeter, tried desperately to clear a path for Robeson and his wife from the plane to a waiting limousine.

THE EXUBERANT admirers waved large bunches of gladioli and tried to push their way through to Robeson to present their bouquets in person.

Soviet and foreign radio reporters, waving microphones, swept the 6-foot singer away from his wife Eslanda.

Photographers clambered onto the wings of the TU-104 and the landing stairs for more pictures.

AMONG THE official and unofficial greeters were singers from the Bolshoi Theater, poets, composers and other representatives of Soviet cultural life.

As Robeson stepped out of the airliner, 50 newsreel cameras began grinding away.

After the crowd began to clap, Robeson dropped his two suitcases and hat to clap his hands in time with the welcomers—a Slavic custom.

Paul Robeson Set To Resume Flicker Career in Russia

NEW YORK — According to a report received here, Paul Robeson, the controversial concert singer, will make his film comeback in several Russian pictures. The announcement was made by the celebrated artist himself at the Asian-African film festival in Tashkent, Russia. He was guest of honor at the affair.

Broadcasting the highlights of the affair in English to India and Pakistan, which was picked up by the United States Government, the Russians described in great detail Robeson's chores at the festival. According to the broadcast, the singer compared Western films unfavorably with those of Eastern producers. He is alleged to have said that the West concentrates on detective stories, while Asia and Africa truthfully reflect people's lives, and educates them in the spirit of humanism.

GROUP PREDICTS:

Southland's Demo Claim Nearing End

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Committee for an Effective Congress predicted Sunday after November the Democrats will "shift the balance of power within their party in Congress away from the South."

It based this prediction on estimates that the Democrats will pick up six more Senate seats and from 35 to 50 additional House seats, most if not all of them from the North and West.

The committee describes itself as non-partisan. Headquartered in New York, it supports various candidates for Congress and otherwise interests itself in politics. Where it supported efforts to censure the late Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy in 1954, McCarthy described it as a leftwing organization.

Democrats now hold a 49-47 margin over Republicans in the Senate and 34 seats are at stake in this year's elections. These include 32 for full-year terms and two for 4-year terms caused by deaths now filled by appointments.

PARTY LINEUPS

A gain of six seats would give them 55 seats to 41 Republicans.

In the House the party lineup now is 233 Democrats and 198 Republicans with four vacancies.

In its survey, the committee listed 12 Senate seats as safe or probably safe for Democrats in this year's elections and six for Republicans. Of the 16 remaining Senate races rated as contests or doubtful, it listed 15 Republican seats and only one Democratic.

The later is held now by William Proxmire of Wisconsin, who was chosen to fill the vacancy caused by the death of McCarthy.

It listed as "contests" these seats now held by Republicans: Arizona where Sen. Barry Goldwater asks re-election; California where William F. Knowland is quitting to run for governor; Connecticut where William A. Purtell asks re-election; Indiana where William E. Jenner is retiring; Maine where Frederick G. Payne asks re-election; Maryland where J. Glenn Beall asks re-election; Michigan where Charles E. Potter asks re-election; Minnesota where Edward J. Thye asks re-election; Nevada where George W. Malone asks re-election; New Jersey where H. Alexander Smith is retiring; New York where Irving M. Ives is retiring; Pennsylvania where Edward Martin is retiring; West Virginia where Chapman Revercomb and John D. Hoblitzell Jr., hold both seats; and Wyoming where Frank A. Barrett asks re-election.

3 RATED SAFE.

Only three seats now held by Republicans were rated as safe for the incumbent party.

They are Delaware, where John J. Williams is asking re-election; North Dokota where incumbent William Langer is running again; and Vermont where Ralph E. Flanders is not seeking re-election.

Eleven Democratic seats lised as safe were: Florida where Spressard L. Holland asks re-election; Massachusetts where John F. Kennedy asks re-election; Mississippi, where John Stennis asks re-election; Missouri where Stuart Symington asks re-election; Montana where Mike Mansfield asks re-election; North Carolina where B. Everett Jordan holds an appointed seat; Rhode Island, where John O. Pastore asks re-election; Tennessee where Albert Gore asks re-election; Texas where Ralph Yarbrough asks re-election; Virginia where Harry F. Byrd asks re-election; and Washington where Henry M. Jackson asks re-election.

One other Democratic seat is listed as probably safe: New Mexico where Dennis E. Chavez asks re-election.

Three Republicans seats were listed as probably safe; Nebraska where Roman L. Hruska asks re-election; Ohio where John W. Bricker asks re-election; and Utah where Arthur V. Watkins asks re-election.

Negro Woman Is Elected To Democratic Nat'l Committee

LA CROSSE, Wis. (UPI)— The precedent-setting election of a Negro attorney as national committeewoman of the Wisconsin Democratic Party threw the state organization into bitter controversy Saturday night.

Mrs. Vel Phillips, 34, a Milwaukee alderman and the first Negro member of the city's Common Council, won over opposition candidate, Mrs. Marguerite Benson, by a 597-447 vote margin late Saturday.

A few hours later it was revealed, political observers had predicted that National Committeeman Herman Jessen would resign his post in protest over Mrs. Phillips' election.

"I will probably have to resign because of the outcome of this," Essen told United Press International.

It was believed by party spokesmen in Washington that Mrs. Phillips was the first Negro to be elected national committee woman of a state Democratic Party organization.

SURE WINNER

Mrs. Benson, a grandmother and 25-year veteran party worker and officeholder, was viewed by many observers as an almost sure winner.

State party leaders had political observers in suspense over their choice between a "liberal symbol" candidate and a party veteran but had also skirted the racial issue carefully.

It cropped up, nevertheless, in nominating speeches before the 1,350 voting delegates to the party's convention.

IDEA WRONG

Former Assemblyman Walter Stewart, a Negro, said in a seconding speech for Mrs. Benson, that "the idea that we should elect a person just because he or she is a Negro is just as wrong as not electing a person just because he or she is a Negro."

Jerry Flynn, who seconded Mrs. Phillips nomination, said the party needs the progressive vote in Wisconsin and that Vel Phillips is a symbol that will bring in the progressives. He said "We are practical politicians. We are not here to reward past service, but to elect someone who can do us some good."

Ed Reed Elected Vice President Of Young Democrats

DALLAS. — Edward L. Reed well known young Dallas businessman and civic worker, has been elected vice president of the Dallas county organization of Young Democrats. He will serve under Miss Paulia Weaver, elected president at the same time.

Reed, a member of the organization for the past five years, is probably the most active of the 15 card-carrying Negro members of the organization which has a total of about 250 active members.

ED REED

Reed was recently an active member of several committees at the state convention of Young Democrats in Austin. The Dallas county organization is well known for the liberality of its policies and for the courage of its leaders in fighting for democratic procedures in all areas of its activities.

SEGREGATION KEY IN TENNESSEE BID

Democrats Split Over Issue as Primary Nears—Gore Facing a Battle

Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., July 12 —A sharp division between moderates and conservatives, with racial segregation as the key issue, is shaping up in the Tennessee Democratic primary Aug. 7.

At stake are a seat in the United States Senate and the Governor's office, with its control over the state's delegation to the Democratic National Convention in 1960. A victory in the primary is equivalent to election in this predominantly Democratic state.

In the Senate race the contestants are Albert Arnold Gore of Carthage, the incumbent, and former Gov. William Prentice Cooper of Shelbyville.

Mr. Cooper warmed up last winter and spring as a candidate for the gubernatorial nomination but switched to the Senate race a month before the qualifation decline.

Gore Delayed Move

Hoping to get by without opposition in his bid for a second term, Senator Gore delayed announcing for re-election and allowed most of his campaign organization to be appropriated by the gubernatorial candidates.

Mr. Cooper opened a free-swinging attack on the state's junior Senator. He accused Mr. Gore of having "turned his back" on Tennessee and the South, aligning himself with "northerners" and favoring a "global give-away program" at expense of the state and nation.

Mr. Cooper promised to pattern himself after the late Senator Kenneth D. McKellar of Tennessee, whom Mr. Gore defeated in the 1952 Democratic primary. The 62-year-old former Governor and one-time Ambassador to Peru has sought to appeal to Tennessee's textile and zinc mining interests, which want higher protective tariffs.

Mr. Gore has spent much of the time defending himself against Mr. Cooper's attacks. But the 50-year-old Senator has landed a few blows of his own.

He charged, for example, that Mr. Cooper was drawing support from East Tennessee Republicans, who frequently cross party lines to vote in the Democratic primary, and from enemies of the Tennessee Valley Authority. One of Mr. Cooper's main financial backers, the Senator contends, is Justin Potter, Nashville insurance executive and bitter opponent of T. V. A.

But it is on the segregation issue that Mr. Cooper seeks to hit hardest. He calls attention to the fact that Senator Gore did not sign the Southern Manifesto, a document in which a group of Southern Senators promised to preserve segregation if they ever found a means of doing it. Mr. Cooper says, too, that Mr. Gore favored legislation that would force racial integration upon the south.

The incumbent Senator's reply is that a bill to enforce racial integration has never been considered by the Senate. He ignores the Southern Manifesto issue.

Of the three major candidates for Governor, two have proclaimed themselves in favor of more stringent laws to preserve segregation, while the third, though expressing a desire for continued segregation, promises to obey the courts and maintain law and order.

Buford Ellington of Lewisburg, former State Agriculture

Commissioner, is supported by the incumbent Governor, Frank G. Clement. He declared he would not hesitate to close a public school to prevent racial violence. He promised enactment of laws that would prevent whites and Negroes from attending the same schools.

The other pro-segregation candidate is Judge Andrew T. Taylor of Jackson, who said he would authorize local school boards to close schools where racial violence threatened.

Neither has said whether he would terminate the token integration already in effect under Federal Court order at Clinton and Nashville.

On a more moderate note, though desirous of maintaining segregation, is Mayor Edmund Orgill of Memphis. Mr. Orgill, a late-comer to the gubernatorial contest, promised to abide by decrees issued by courts of competent jurisdiction and to maintain order.

Rayburn Shuns Racial Comment

House Speaker At Jackson For Party Dinner

NO THIRD PARTY SEEN

By KENNETH TOLER
From the Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 9. — House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D., Texas) who has supported civil rights legislation in Congress, refused to discuss racial integration here Thursday.

Here to keynote a $20-a-plate Democratic Party fund raising dinner, the gifted and loyal 'Mr. Democrat' opened a press conference at the Governor's Mansion with the statement that "I am not going to talk about integration."

"I don't think it would be helpful to talk about it," he said.

However, on questioning as to reports that the Democrats plan a stronger civil rights plank in the 1960 platform, Speaker Rayburn said, "Two years is a long time off."

Seemed To Please

"The last plank on civil rights seemed to please everyone," he said with reference to the 1956 convention action.

Asked whether he thought the issue could be compromised at the 1960 convention, Mr. Rayburn answered—

"We did it last time."

Speaker Rayburn said he does not think there will be a third party in the South.

"The only thing it would help would be the Republicans," he said.

Relative to the statement by Paul Butler, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, that the South can leave the party if it doesn't like the proposed civil rights position, Mr. Rayburn said—

"Every time a presidential candidate is nominated the chairmanship changes—that is, in most cases."

Foreign Policy Scored

Speaker Rayburn said the nation's foreign policy has failed because the other nations "don't want a big brother—they want a friend." He said the Republicans have blundered so in handling the foreign policy that "we don't have as many friends in other nations as we should have."

The Texan said he believes the next Congress will pass legislation curbing the United States Supreme Court.

"There is quite a bit of sentiment for it," he said.

Mr. Rayburn said if the Democrats can be accused of running the country into socialism by some of the legislation passed during their administration, "then the Republicans are just as socialistic by leaving them on the books."

"No Republicans, from the President down, had made any move to repeal any of the measures," he said.

Powell Makes Peace With Tammany Hall

NEW YORK (AP)—Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D-NY) made peace Tuesday with Tammany Hall. He pledged to work for the entire state Democratic ticket in next month's election.

The Negro congressman, virtually assured of his own re-election, controls better than 70 per cent of the vote in normally Democratic Harlem. Democratic leaders have been ardently wooing this vote, despite the fact Powell had been read out of the party.

The price the party paid for Powell's support was a secret. In the first flush of his primary victory of last August, Powell demanded full political control of Harlem and the replacement of Tammany district leaders with his own men. Otherwise, he threatened to support the Republican ticket.

The congressman said he had won from the Democrats a pledge of increased patronage for Harlem. Tammany Hall is the Manhattan Democratic organizations.

In Geneva, N.Y., Nelson Rockefeller, Republican candidate for governor, said of Powell's decision, "I think it's pretty clear what happened. I don't know what the reaction of his people will be. It's very interesting."

Both Democratic Gov. Averell Harriman, seeking re-election, and Tammany chief Carmine DeSapio were quick to welcome Powell back into the party fold, just as they had been quick to extend the olive branch after his smashing 3-1 primary victory over Tammany Hall.

Powell fell out with his party in 1956 when he supported President Eisenhower and the Republican national ticket, because of the President's civil rights plan.

Earlier this year, Tammany denied Powell Democratic primary support in his bid for an eighth term in Congress. Powell ran independently and defeated the Tammany choice, city Councilman Earl Brown, also Negro, 14,837 to 4,935.

Housewife On National Committee

Mrs. Vel Phillips First Of Race To Top Policy Group

United Press International

MILWAUKEE, Wis. — A family quarrel among Wisconsin Democrats over the election of a Negro national committeewoman appeared to be subsiding this week.

Apologies were proffered and appeals for unity made in the wake of the controversy that threatened to weaken an all-out political offensive against the Republicans this fall.

The two main figures in the squabble were Mrs. Vel Phillips, an attorney and housewife, and Sen. William E. Proxmire, who was accused of dictatorial methods in ramming through Mrs. Phillips' election to the party's national committee.

THE ELECTION at the state convention at La Crosse last week touched off a battle between the "Madison and Milwaukee" branches of the party. The Milwaukeeans charged that Mrs. Phillips' election over party veteran Mrs. Marguerite Benson amounted to "racial prejudice in reverse."

Proxmire said in Washington that charges of one-man rule were "ridiculous" He added that he had "absolutely nothing to do with the election of Mrs. Phillips and I instructed the people working for me to take no part. This is not a disagreement over issues. It is strictly and completely a matter of personalities."

• • •

STATE CHAIRMAN Pat Lucey, accused of being Proxmire's tool, issued a statement at Madison appealing to state Democrats to "forget their bitterness" and concentrate on putting up a united front against the GOP.

An attempt to ban Lucey from further party meetings was voted down by the Milwaukee County Democrats Wednesday night.

County chairman Christ T. Seraphim had warned his fellow Democrats that "those who live by the ballot die by the ballot," a reminder that hassle over Lucey now could affect Democratic chances in the fall. Lucey does not come up for reelection until next year.

THIRD PARTY SIGNS ABSENT

Southern Demos Talk Organization

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP)—Democrats from nine Southern states gathered yesterday in an atmosphere more like a trade association sales meeting than a political gathering.

They talked about how to organize and sell the Democratic Party better in the South and how to get the money to do this job. They agreed that Southern states without permanent Democratic headquarters ought to have them.

Signs of a Southern rebellion were conspicuous by their absence. Or as Hugh Clayton, national committeeman of New Albany, Miss., put it:

"The presence of Sam Wilhite should be enough to establish that this was not a split party meeting."

Wilhite, of West Point, Miss., Democrats there expect to raise through a $20 a plate dinner and through the "Dollars for Democrats" program.

The other states took the matter under advisement. Clayton said Democrats will no longer "take the South for granted."

The spectre of Republican congressmen from Florida and North Carolina, plus the defections of 1952 and 1956 in presidential voting, have made it clear that this cannot be done, he said.

He talked of fish fries and barbecues as they are staged in Florida as possible fund raising devices for Southern states which have historically failed to make their financial contributions to the party war chest.

Clayton said all such matters as regional representative of the national party committee. His territory embraces the states represented—the Carolinas, Virginia, Louisiana, Florida, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi.

No informed source had suggested that the meeting might have anything to do with forming a splinter group.

Instead, emphasis was placed on getting women and younger voters into party work.

Of the nine states represented, only Virginia, Florida, North Carolina and Tennessee have permanent headquarters.

Mississippi will set up a permanent shop with $35,000 which were only discussed, however, and no resolutions were presented or adopted. No committees were appointed nor were any formal actions taken.

Those attending included:

Mississippi — Wilhite, Clayton, state chairman, Bidwell Adam and Mrs. Louie L. Gore, committeewoman; Tennessee — Mrs. Ruth Russell, committeewoman; Herbert S. Walters, committeeman; Florida — Mrs. Christine Maxwell, proxy for the committeeman; Alabama — committeeman Charles W. McKay; Louisiana — Ralph N. Jackson, president of the United Democrats of Louisiana. and Paul C. Tate,

Rep. Adam Clayton Powell Gets His Anti-Racial Bias Amendments Voted In The National Educational Bill

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — Before the House passed the National Defense Education Act of 1958 Friday, Representative Adam Clayton Powell, Harlem Democrat, got adopted three anti-discrimination amendments.

There was no opposition to the Powell amendments. They are aimed at preventing all forms of discrimination, he said, wherever they may crop up.

They were written into title II of the bill, establishing a limited program of federal scholarships; title III, establishing a loan program for students in institutions of higher learning, and title IV, providing fellowships for graduate education.

Before final passage of the bill, however, the House struck out title II and shifted the scholarship funds to the bill's loan provisions.

The Powell amendments would bar discrimination, based on race, color, national origin, religion, or sex.

With respect to "race and color," Powell said his aim was to prevent discrimination against colored people, including Puerto Ricans, Mexican-Americans, Japanese-Americans, and American Indians.

He said he included religion because there are certain areas of the country which discriminate because of religion.

"There is no need for anyone to use these anti-discrimination amendments as pegs to hang their hats on as a means of killing this bill," Powell told the House.

He pointed out that the House had adopted similar amendments offered by him to other bills, including the federal school-lunch program, and the Senate had accepted them.

Representative Stuyvesant Wainwright, New York Republican, said he was not sure the Powell amendment was necessary, but it "adds certain safeguards which are already in the Constitution of the United States," and he would vote for them.

Mr. Wainwright last year, while Mr. Powell was ill, offered the Powell amendment to a federal-aid-to-school construction bill.

Representative James Roosevelt, California Democrat, also supported the Powell amendments.

"Certainly, in the times in which we live and in the world today," Roosevelt said, "it is well for us to hoist the flag to equality of opportunity for all because we are being attacked at every level for our failure to practice that principle."

Mr. Roosevelt had opposed the Powell amendment to the school construction bill a year ago.

In offering a substitute bill, Representative William H. Ayres, Ohio Republican, accepted the Powell amendments. The Ayres substitute, however, was rejected on a standing vote, 130 to 68.

Powell later offered his amendments to the committee bill.

Representative Stewart L. Udall, Arizona Democrat, who had opposed the Powell amendment to the school construction bill, supported the amendment to the scholarship bill.

He pointed out that the amendment was directed to funds which go to individuals, "and merely states as a matter of declaration of policy that there shall be no discrimination in the application and granting of these funds."

Representative Clare E. Hoffman, Michigan Republican, asked Powell that he be permitted to join his colleagues in support of the amendments since this is an election year.

Representative Lee Metcalf, Montana, Democrat, who also opposed the Powell amendment to the school construction bill, complimented Powell for the amendment to the scholarship bill, which, he said, carries out the policy of the United States Office of Education. He called it "a worthy addition to the bill."

The Powell amendment was agreed to by voice vote.

The House passed the bill after it rejected a motion to kill it by returning it to committee. The vote against recommital was 233 to 139.

Before passing the bill it adopted a series of amendments which made the measure more nearly conform to that requested by the President.

The bill would provide:

1. Loans averaging $600 to more than 90,000 needy students of which the federal government would pay a total of $60,000,000

2. Grants to the states for scientific teaching equipment and laboratory improvement, totaling $60,000,00.

3 One thousand fellowships of $2,000 each to train college teachers, with reimbursement to universities for additional costs to expand graduate schools.

4. Grants to states to improve testing and guidance programs, $15,000,000 and $6,000,000 to set up teacher-training institutes in this field.

Education Bill Gets Anti-Bias Amendments

Washington, D. C. (NNPA) — Before the House passed the National Defense Education Act of 1958 Friday, Representative Adam Clayton Powell, Harlem Democrat, got adopted three antidiscrimination amendments.

EDUCATION AID BILL APPROVED

$9 Million Measure Is Passed by House

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House passed a 900-million-dollar aid-to-education bill Friday after stripping it of a college scholarship program.

The legislation, inspired by Russia's striking in developing Sputnik and missile scientists, now goes to the Senate where a similar, more ambitious bill is ready for action.

The Senate bill includes 175 million dollars for a four-year program of college scholarships. If the Senate votes to retain this provision the issues will have to be settled by a Senate-House Conference Committee.

BOOSTS LOAN FUND

The House first voted to reduce the number of four-year scholarships from 23,000 to 10,000 a year, in line with a recommendation by President Eisenhower. Then it knocked out the scholarship section altogether. The action was by a 109-78 standing vote, on an amendment by Rep. Walter H. Judd (R-Minn).

The $140 million which was to have been used for scholarships was transferred to a student loan progrom, boosting that fund from $315 mallion to $455 million.

In the process of reducing the number of scholarships to 10,000, the House cut the over-all total cost of the bill from $1,070,000,000 to 910 million dollars.

Rep. Peter Frelinghuysen (R-NJ) argued against eliminating the scholarships, saying the House Education and Labor Committee had tried to present a balanced program.

AMERICAN WAY

But other members said the loan program was the American way of doing things and would provide help for those who actually needed help.

Final passage of the mill was on a voice vote after a motion to send the measure back to committee failed by a roll-call vote of 233-140.

In addition to student loans, the measure provides for expansion of graduate study and grants to the states for science-teaching equipment and for guidance and encouragement of able young men and women.

Arthur S. Flemming, secretary of health, education and welfare, said the House measure would have far-reaching benefits for American education in these critical times.

DEFENDS SCHOLARSHIPS

But he added in a statement: "I am disappointed, however, that the House bill does not include, along with the student loan program, the President's recommendations for competitive scholarships, rewarding scholastic achievement. Such a program, I am convinced, would serve as a major incentive for highly capable but needy students."

Under the scholarship program, state commissions would select recipients of $500 a year for four years of college, plus up to $500 additional each year on the basis of need.

The state commissions also would handle the loan program under which students could borrow as much as $1,000 a year.

Amendments by Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D-NY) to bar any discrimination in administering the programs because of race, color, religion, national origin or sex were adopted by voice vote.

Incentive For Survival

A SENATE subcommittee yesterday approved a federal-aid-to-education bill which could have, as intended, an important pump-priming effect on higher education.

Designed primarily to mobilize U.S. brainpower and science for the long cold war with Russia, the bill would grant some 20,000 college scholarships awarded on a competitive basis and under the full control of the respective states. To participate, a state need only establish a state commission for scholarships or designate an existing agency as the commission.

The "national defense scholarships," as they are called, are intended to inspire high school students to work harder and prepare for college. Although the number actually selected will be a small percentage of the nation's total high school enrollment the incentive effect is expected to be broad. This intent was spelled out in a House committee's favorable report on its version of the bill July 15.

THE government cannot, by sheer weight of dollars, make America a nation of scholars and scientists. But it can point the way. The bill does that in other ways than the national defense scholarships. For instance:

¶ It sets up a $40,000,000 loan fund to be made available to colleges for administration to worthy students who are faced with the decision to drop out of school because of the shortage of funds. This not a gift, but a long-term (10-year maximum) low interest, personal loan. Only death or total disability will cancel the obligation to repay. Maximum to a single student is $1,000 for each academic year.

¶ It provides $65,000,000 annually to improve teaching in science, mathematics and foreign languages in the public schools. This would be allocated among the states for their use in purchasing special equipment for laboratories and classrooms, etc.

UNFORTUNATELY, the Senate subcommittee added a provision of $20,000,000 a year for vocational training—clearly a boondoggle violating the purpose and intent of the act, which was to revitalize learning in the area important to the nation's survival. This could conceivably include such subjects as history and English, also added, but vocational training is far afield. Also questionable is the addition of a "general institute" to improve teaching throughout the country. We have no details on this, but it could mean bureaucratic meddling with the states —interference which is assiduously avoided in the House bill.

IT WOULD provide modest fellowships in graduate schools for able students who have decided they would like to make a career of college teaching.

¶ It would provide grants to states to help them set up counseling and testing programs. The principal objective of this provision is to identify the bright student early so that he can be encouraged and guided according to his talents.

These are the most important provisions. Alabama's share the first year of operation would be (according to a formula in the House bill): Defense scholarships, $421,529; loans available to needy students through colleges, $590,000; grants for strengthening the teaching of science, mathematics and foreign languages, $1,848,713; guidance and counseling of able students, $323,018.

Socialistic, yes. But so was the 1862 act to assist colleges by federal land grants, so was the GI Bill after World War II. Of all the proposals so far offered to stimulate learning in the interest of survival, this bill—without the subcommittee's amendments—seems the most reasonable.

Dreams and Defeat

Coya Knutson

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16—Representative Coya Knutson says two of her dearest dreams have come true.

"One was the creation of a Federal student loan fund, which is now Title II of the National Defense Education Act," she said. "The other was to do something for the family farm—and I got a family farm feature in the last agricultural bill—even though the bill didn't pass."

Woman in the News

Mrs. Knutson had just testified at the House hearing on her defeat in the November election by Olin Langen, a Republican. She is a Democrat.

Representative Knutson was a striking figure as a witness. Her flaxen hair was close-cropped, with curls on each side of the forehead. Her large light tan purse, lying on the witness table, matched her hair. The deep blue of her eyes was matched by the blue knit suit fitting closely to her trim figure. At her throat was a choker of large white pearls.

Mrs. Knutson was born Aug. 23, 1912, on a farm near Edmore, N. D., the daughter of Norwegian immigrants.

When she was very small she could not pronounce her name, Cornelia, and so she called it Coya and it became her political trademark.

She went to Concordia College in Moorhead, Minn. Later she attended the Juilliard School of Music in New York City. Piano was her instrument, but she played the accordion in campaigns.

She was a high school teacher, a member of her county welfare board, a field worker in the Agricultural Adjustment Agency, a two-term state representative and a member of Congress. In her official biographies the name of her husband, Andrew, is not mentioned.

The Knutsons' adopted son Terrence has lived eleven of his nineteen years in Oklee, where the family owns a hotel. She found him through her church, the Lutheran. He dropped out of college shortly after the November elections, "to see her through this."

Flemming sees no loans for make-shift schools

Afro-American
Baltimore Md.

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — Private stop - gap schools, set up to avoid desegregation, will not be able to qualify for loans under the Education National Defense Act of 1958.

Dr. Arthur S. Flemming, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, said Monday that he didn't see how such institutions could meet the conditions set up by the U.S. Office of Education.

Oct. 12-13-58

"THE COMMISSIONER of Education," said Dr. Flemming, "advises me that he will not approve loans to any school where the conditions are not sufficiently stable as to protect the financial interests of the United States with respect to repayment."

Factors to be considered before approving or denying an application for such loans include sources of financial support for the school, the stability and adequacy of the funds.

ALSO, THE U. S. Education Office must consider whether the school is in fact a private school, plus many other factors, Dr. Flemming pointed out.

In summation, he concluded that "it seems apparent that the schools referred to would not be likely to meet the conditions which are indicated for a sound loan."

Opening Session

Eight Bills Introduced By Powell

WASHINGTON (ANP)—Members of the House of Representatives placed 139 bills in the hopper on the opening day of this session of Congress. Among them were eight bills introduced by Congressman Adam Clayton Powell, Democrat, of New York.

One of the Powell bills called for a "better assurance of the protection of citizens of the United States from mob violence and lynching."

Another was aimed at protecting the "right of the blind to self-expression through organizations of the blind."

A third provided for "an elective Governor and Lieutenant Governor of the Virgin Islands."

The fourth was a bill "to prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, color, religion, national origin, or ancestry."

The fifth urged the "elimination of discrimination and segregation in the National Guard and Air National Guard, and to prohibit the use of the National Guard and Air National Guard to aid or abet the violations of Federal law."

The sixth was "a bill to prohibit the charging of a few to view telecasts in private homes."

The seventh was a measure "making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or other election for national officers."

And the eighth was a private bill asking for the relief of Philomena Branch.

Adam Clayton Powell Introduces Four Bills For Protection Of Civil Rights

By LOUIS LAUTIER

Washington. D. C. (NNPA) — Representative Adam Clayton Powell, Democrat, of New York Thursday introduced in the House four civil rights bills covering a variety of subjects ranging from violence against members of the Armed Forces to fair employment practices.

Fight For Renomination

The introduction of these bills, of which he has long been a sponsor is regarded as a part of his fight to win renomination for Congress in the Democratic primary in New York on Aug. 12, despite the opposition of Tammany Hall.

Under the guidance of Carmine G. De Sapio, New York County chairman, Democratic district leaders in Mr. Powell's Congressional district, by a vote of 11 to 1, rejected him as a candidate for reelection.

Mr. Powell has announced his intention first to seek renomination in the Democratic primary, which would save his Congressional seniority. If he fails to win renomination, he has said he wil run as an independent in the general election next November.

2nd Ranking Democrat

The Harlem Congressman is the second ranking Democrat on the House Education and Labor Committee. If Representative Graham A. Barden, of North Carolina, chairman of that committee, should retire, be defeated, or die, and Mr. Powell retains his seniority as a Democrat, he would success to the chairmanship of the Education and Labor Committee.

One of the bills Mr. Powell introduced is an omnibus civil rights measure. One section of would make the Civil Rights Commission a permanent agency. Under the Civil Rights Act of 1957. the Commission is doomed to die sixty days after it submits its final report to the President and the Congress. The final report to the President and the Congress. The final report is due to be submitted by Sept. 9, 1959.

Another provision in the bill would add a new section to the Civil Rights Act. This section would require the Attorney General to increase the personnel of the Federal Bureau of Investigation to the extent necessary for the effective in vestigaion of civil rights cases.

Provides Training

It also provides that the Director of the FBI shall, with the approval of the Attorney General, include in the training of agents and other FBI personnel "appropriate training and instruction for the investigation of civil rights cases."

A Joint Committee on Civil Rights also would be created by the bill. This committee would be composed of seven Senators, appointed by the Speaker. The two major parties would be represented on this committee in proportion to their membership in the Senate and House.

The Joint Committee would make a continuing study of matters relating to civil rights and advise with the Congressional committees which handle civil rights matters.

It would be authorized to hold hearings and would have subpena powers to require the attendance of witnesses and the production of books and papers.

The bill also would amend existing Federal criminal civil rights laws and also the laws against peonage.

Senate OK's housing bill—

House to get first anti-recession bill

WASHINGTON, March 13—(AP)—The Senate has passed its first major anti-recession measure of the 1958 session — an emergency housing bill its Democratic sponsors hope would give jobs to more than half a million workers.

The $1,850,000,000 bill now goes to the House. Speaker Rayburn (D., Tex.) has said housing legislation will get priority attention in that body as part of the program to counter the economic downturn.

Many Democratic senators expressed the hope that the House would knock out of the bill its most disputed feature —authority for President Eisenhower to raise the interest rate on GI home mortgages from the present 4½ to 4¾ per cent.

The House last year refused to go along with the president's recomendation that this rate be boosted to 5 per cent to attract more private funds into the veterans housing market.

The Senate passed the bill 86-0 yesterday after one day of debate.

BUT ON THE ONLY controversial issue — higher interest rates — the Senate divided evenly in two dramatic roll votes. Vice President Nixon broke the second one to settle the issue in favor of the administration.

In addition to permitting the ¾ per cent boost in interest on GI loans, the bill would make large amounts of new government funds available to buy mortgages for which no private lenders can be found. It would extend the VA guarantee and direct home loan programs for two years for World War II veterans and lower the down payment on FHA mortgages.

Sen. Sparkman (D., Ala.), chief sponsor of the bill, said it could make possible 200,000 additional homes in 1958.

Democratic Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D., Tex.) said such a step up in construction "could put more than 10 per cent of our unemployed back on the job."

SEN. MONRONEY (D., Okla.) and other Democrats sought to eliminate the higher GI interest rate from the bill, but their amendment lost on a 47-47 vote. It won support of 41 Democrats and 6 Republicans, but 41 Republicans and 6 Democrats oppose it. Two Democrats, Kennedy (Mass.) and Murray (Mont.) were absent.

Republican leaders then sought to seal their victory by moving to reconsider the vote and to table that motion, which would make future reconsideration impossible. The tally on this also was 47-47 but Nixon broke the tie to put over the motion to table it.

The additional money authorized by the bill would permit the Federal National Mortgage Assn. to buy one billion dollars worth of FHA and VA mortgages for which private funds are not available and give Eisenhower a $500 million fund he could direct FNMA to use to buy other mortgages if the recession worsened.

ALSO INCLUDED are an extra $300 million for direct loans to veterans and 50 million for military housing mortgages.

FHA down payments would be lowered so that 3 per cent of the first $13,500 of the mortgage would be the minimum requirement. Now it is 3 per cent on the first $10,000, with higher charges above $10,000.

The top rate on military housing mortgages would be increased from 4 to 4½ per cent as the administration asked.

Emergency Housing Bill Is Passed to Create Jobs

Senate Hikes GI Home Loan Interest Rate

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Senate Wednesday night passed a $1,850,000,000 emergency housing bill designed to create up to 600,000 new jobs.

Included in the bill was an increase in the interest rates on GI home loans—an issue that was decided earlier only after vice-president Nixon broke a rare tie vote.

The authority to boost the GI mortgage rate was kept in the bill after two dramatic roll calls. On the final one, Nixon broke a 47-47 tie to nail down the Republican victory on the issue.

The bill now goes to the House which voted last year not to permit any increase in the present 4½ per cent GI rate. The Senate bill would allow a hike to 4¾ per cent.

Senate passage of the measure came on an 86-0 roll call.

PRESIDENT ASKS HIKE

President Eisenhower has asked that the rate be increased to 5 per cent, contending there is no private market for mortgages at the lower figure.

But Sen. Capehart (R-Ind.), administration spokesman on housing, told a reporter he believed the White House would go along with the 4¾ per cent rate.

The bill is the first major piece of anti-recessionary legislation to pass the Senate this year. Its sponsors say it may bring construction of an additional 200,000 houses this year.

In addition to making large new funds available to buy mortgages and allowing the raise in interest rates, the bill lowers the down payments on FHA mortgages, and extends for two years the GI. Home loan programs for World War II veterans.

DEBATE IN G.I. RATE

Sen. Sparkman (D-Ala.), chief sponsor of the measure, said it could mean as many as 600,000 new jobs in the 1958 construction season.

Debate centered on the proposed hige in teh GI interest rate.

Provisions in the bill include:

An extra $1½ billion to the Federal National Mortgage Association for purchase of FHA and VA mortgages.

An extra 350 million for direct VA and military housing loans.

Extension of the GI loan program to July 25, 1960.

Lowering of FHA down payments to 3 per cent on the first $13,500, instead of on the first $10,000 as at present.

"Little Rock" Bills Before Legislatures

34b

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Legislatures in five southern and border states are considering so-called "Little Rock" bills to require closing of public schools if federal troops are sent to patrol them, Southern School News reported here Tuesday.

World D.T. 2-3-58

The publication noted also the first announcement of planned desegregation in a school district—this one a district in Oklahoma—for November. If Kristow District in Creek County begins desegregation next year for economic reasons as announced, it will bring to 763 the number of desegregated districts in 17 southern and border states.

Atlanta, Ga.

During January, said Southern School News, an effort was launched in a second state of the Deep South to end public school segregation. A suit by Negroes seeking entry to all-white schools, filed in Atlanta, Ga., followed a similar suit filed the previous month in Birmingham, Ala.

"Little Rock" bills have already made some progress through the legislatures of Delaware and Virginia and have been proposed in Georgia, South Carolina and Mississippi. Generally, the follow the pattern of legislation adopted in Florida and Texas which requires automatic school-closing if federal troops are employed to enforce a court desegregation order.

In a review of 145 pro-segregation laws adopted in 11 states in the past four years, Southern School News said nine of them had been declared unconstitutional. It listed some 30 current and active court cases involving school entry and related matters. Of these, 10 concern the principle of pupil assignment upheld in North Carolina but ruled invalid under state laws in Virginia and Louisiana.

'Little Rock' Bill

Gov. & L.B. 2-12-58

Governor Almond's "Little Rock" bill has sailed through the Legislature—and this news hardly comes as the surprise of the year.

The bill, advocated by the Governor, would close any public school patrolled by Federal forces without the consent of the State. Its passage is a gesture, not likely to be meaningful. For there is scant prospect that the people of Virginia will resort to mob violence to prevent school integration. In some sections of Virginia the public schools may be shut down as a last-ditch measure against integration. But it is most improbable that there will be any mob action which cannot and will not be handled by the State and local authorities.

Washington D.C.

There are two interesting points, however, in connection with the final vote—88 to 4—in the House of Delegates. When the measure was offered it was signed by 123 of the 140 House members, and others were quick to say they, too, would have signed had they been there that day. What happened to these 35 or more absentees when the final vote was taken? Was it just a case of an overly long week end?

Jus. 2-11-58

A second point of some interest is that two of the four votes against the measure came from the nearby 10th district—from Delegates Webb and Stone. Delegate Omer Hirst, generally considered a member of the "liberal" bloc, voted for the bill. And he gave his reasons. Mr. Hirst said in substance that the bill adds nothing to powers already held by the Governor, and that he saw no reason to jeopardize his own legislative program "for the sake of one more protest on a fringe aspect of the main question." This strikes us as being a quite sensible attitude.

BILL TO PROVIDE FEDERAL EXPERTS IN INTEGRATION
RESPONSIBILITY FOR ENFORCEMENT OF CIVIL RIGHTS IN SCHOOLS

Bill To Provide Federal Experts In Integration

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13 (AP)—Responsibility for enforcement of civil rights in schools would be given to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare under a bill introduced today by Rep. Sisk (D-Calif).

The department would be authorized to employ specialists in planning means for eliminating segregation in the public schools. The specialists would be placed at the disposal of any state, city or school board requesting their services.

The bill would authorize appropriations of $2 million a year to pay the specialists.

It also would authorize $40 million a year for five years for grants for school construction and hiring of teachers in communities which want to comply with Supreme Court decisions on segregation but whose states threaten to cut off funds or close the schools.

FEDERAL AID

House Rejects Antibias Rider In School Bill

Votes To Extend Aid Near U. S. Facilities

Washington, April 23 (AP)—The House Wednesday overwhelmingly rejected an attempt by Representative Roosevelt to write an antisegregation amendment into a bill to continue federal aid to schools near large Government installations.

Once Roosevelt was rebuffed, the House quickly shouted its approval of the measure. It would authorize an estimated $207,000,000 in federal aid annually to schools crowded by the children of federal workers and servicemen.

The bill now goes to the Senate. It would extend until at least June 30, 1961, the school-aid program in effect since 1950.

Leaves Bed To Raise Plea

Roosevelt (D., Cal.), eldest son of the late President, left his bed in nearby Bethesda, Md., Naval Hospital to offer his provision. He has been undergoing treatment for ulcer.

His amendment would have denied federal aid to any school district that had taken no steps to comply with the Supreme Court's 1954 ruling against school segregation.

The proposal was rejected by a standing vote of 132 to 25 after the bill's sponsors warned that its adoption would jeopardize the whole measure. Opponents of the amendment included some members normally regarded as civil-rights advocates.

Roosevelt called his proposal a "minimum step to help bring about compliance" with the Supreme Court ruling. He said Congress had a responsibility to see to it that federal aid was not used "to thwart the law of the land."

He also criticize dthe Administration for its "negative, do-nothing attitude" toward school segregation.

The fight against his proposal was led by Chairman Barden (D., N. C.) and some other members of the House Education Committee, which drafted the bill.

Anti-Filibuster Rule 22 May Hamper Liberal Force

By EDDIE WILLIAMS

Perhaps the biggest threat to the swelling clamp-down-on-filibustering tide is the anti-filibuster rule (Rule 22 or cloture) itself.

When the rule was attacked in 1949 during the Truman Administration, its defenders, once they gained the upper hand, wanted to make sure the rule would not be used from under them in the future. They threw up a mighty wall around the amended rule by inserting a section which said, in effect, that filibustering cannot be stopped during the consideration of a motion to change Senate rules.

What is expected to happen Jan 7 when the Senate opens is that one of the liberals will move to adopt Senate rules. Here the fight will begin. Those who contend the Senate is a continuing body will insist that its rules are already in effect.

According to the theory of rules continuation, the old rules, including Rule 22 which states that a filibuster cannot be stopped on a motion to change rules, will be in effect until such time as they are changed. Herein lies a problem which must be solved by the liberals.

If the old rues stand, there is almost certain to be a conservative attempt to filibuster to death any try to change Rule 22.

Much will depend on how much weight is given a ruling made in 1957 by Vice President Nixon who indicated the Senate is not a continuing body and said the section of the rule which makes it impossible to stop a filibuster while attempting to change the rules, is unconstitutional.

If the South employs a filibuster, it will be a last ditch stand because this is the last weapon Southerners would want to use at this time. At present the filibuster is under national scrutiny because of charges that it has been abused. Southerners would also think twice about how effective a filibuster can be at the beginning of Congress

A gentleman's agreement may allow the change in Rule 22 to be debated under the old rules with the exception of the section which outlaws cloture when considering a rules change.

Some observers see the Rules 22 test as one which indirectly takes a healthy slap at the South. Any softening of the cloture rule would also weaken the power of Southern Senators who have used the filibuster to kill legislation they did not like and to keep a sufficient number of moderates in check by threatening to use a talkathon to strangle legislation they consider necessary for their constituencies

Forthcoming Senate Issue

Senator Clark Questions Recent Anti-Filibuster Drive Comments

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

Arthur Krock's Nov. 19 column provided a valuable preview of the epic liberal-conservative struggle which is bound to take place in the Senate of the United States as soon as the opening formalities have been dispensed with on Jan. 7, 1959.

The value of Mr. Krock's column, however, could hardly be said to lie in its impartiality. His assertion that the anti-filibuster drive is an assault on the "continuing body" concept that has made the Senate a "fortress of the minority" invites two observations:

The "minority" referred to in the quotation is not the Negro people; and the "continuing body" argument has repeatedly been demonstrated as irrelevant to the question of whether Senate Rule XXII should be amended to prevent filibusters.

This argument holds that since two-thirds of the members of the Senate are not up for election in any given year by virtue of their staggered six-year terms, the Senate is a "continuing body," therefore (in smaller print) the rules of past Senates have a "continuing" effect and bind each new Senate. The conclusion does not follow the premise.

The "therefore" portion of this argument was supported by Mr. Krock, unquestionably Washington's leading legal layman, by citation of a statement by a deceased Senate historian and a 1927 Supreme Court opinion.

Challenge by Senate

The historian's assertion that the Senate rules "have continued in force without reaffirmation until amended or abolished" amounts only to a record of acquiescence on the part of past Senates which creates no legal bar to the challenge to be posed by the incoming Senate.

The cited reference to the Senate as a "continuing body" by Justice Van Devanter in McGrain v. Daugherty (1927) had nothing to do with Senate rules and consequently carries little weight with the legal profession. All that the court held in that case was that a warrant of arrest issued and served by the Senate of the Sixty-eighth Congress for contempt of a Senate committee by a witness could not be contested in a habeas corpus proceeding solely on the ground that the Congress had adjourned. It was noted in the opinion that the committee still had the power to convene and that it could be "continued or revived" by the incoming Senate.

Omitted from Mr. Krock's pro and con presentation of the issues was any reference to the only authority directly on point in this matter: the opinion of the Vice President on Jan. 4, 1957, in response to a parliamentary inquiry as to whether "the rules of the Senate continue from one Congress to another." It read in part as follows:

"Where the membership of the Senate changes as it does from the election of each Congress, it is the Chair's opinion that there can be no question but that the majority of the new existing membership of the Senate, under the Constitution, has the power to determine the rules under which the Senate will proceed."

Changing Rules

When we turn from law to fact the contention that the Senate is a continuing body seems even sillier. No bill introduced in the Eighty-fifth Congress can be passed by the Eighty-sixth without reintroduction and reference to committee; the committees of the Eighty-fifth Congress must be reconstituted and have no continuing power over matters pending when the Eighty-fifth Congress dies; the authority of the majority and minority leaders, the whips, the President pro tempore, all expire. How absurd to suppose the rules continue if a majority decides it wants to change them!

Those of us who favor the restoration of true majority rule in the Senate by amendment of Rule XXII to permit full but limited debate on any given issue are confident of success in January. There will be few real tears shed at that time for the long-overdue burial of that old fraud, the "continuing body."

PROSPECTS BRIGHTER SINCE ELECTIONS

Senate Filibuster Foes Push Change In Rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — Advocates of a change in Senate rules to make it easier to choke off filibusters said Saturday their prospects are much brighter as a result of Tuesday's elections.

Southern senators who have bitterly resisted any weakening of the filibuster weapon they have used for the past against civil rights measures are well aware that this is undoubtedly the case.

The battle will be joined almost with the opening bell of the 86th Congress in January. A group of Northern Democrats and Republicans will move to adopt new Senate rules.

RULE 22

Their target is Senate Rule 22, which requires the affirmative votes of two thirds of the entire membership to halt a filibuster and force an issue to a vote. In the past, this has meant the votes of 64 senators were needed. In the new Senate, with its membership swelled to 98 by the addition of two senators from Alaska, the requirement would be 66.

The controversy will put a quick strain on the unity of the Democrats' new top-heavy majority in the Senate. Democratic Leader Lyndon B. Johnson of Texas can fashion a compromise and avert a damaging intraparty fight.

MODIFY RULE

Leaders of the move to modify Rule 22 are Sens. Clifford P. Case (R-NJ), Jacob K. Javits (R-NY), Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill), and Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn).

In a letter last September to all Senate candidates, they contended the present antifilibuster rule has proved wholly ineffective and appealed for support to bring about a change.

Aides of the senators said responses to the letter, as well as other surveys, indicate they may have the votes in the incoming Senate for at least partial victory.

Even before Tuesday's election, which increased the strength of Northern and Western Democratic Senators and cut the number of old line Republicans, Sen. Richard B. Russell (D-Ga) acknowledged it was quite possible the Senate might agree in January to modify Rule 22.

Russell, one of the Southerners chief strategists in their fight to preserve unlimited debate, said the rule might be revised to permit two thirds of the senators voting, rather than of the entire membership, to cut off debate.

He suggested this might be coupled with agreement that the Senate is a continuing body and that its rules carry over from one Congress to another. The Senate is free to adopt its own rules. They say they want a rule permitting filibusters to be halted after 15 days by the votes a majority—50 in the new Senate.

Aides of senators backing a revival of the battle say they believe almost all of the 17 new senators elected this year, and possibly the two to be elected in Alaska Nov. 25, will support the move to adopt new rules.

Leaders on the other side have indicated, however, that any such compromise would be unacceptable to them.

They maintain that each new senators elected this year, and possibly the two to be elected in Alaska Nov. 25, will support the move to adopt new rules.

The Filibuster Gains Allies

AS A new session of Congress nears, with its inevitable assault on what passes for unlimited debate in the Senate, a few reasonable voices rise to admonish the stampede of the anti-filibusterers.

The rule under attack is No. 22, which requires a two-thirds majority of the full Senate membership to throttle debate. Proposed in its stead is one by Senator Johnson (as a compromise) requiring two-thirds of those present and voting, and one by Douglas of Illinois providing substantially the same but with the important additional provision of allowing a simple majority to end a debate after 15 days.

It is a fact of life that Douglas, Javits, Keating, Humphrey, Case and the others ramroding the campaign against Rule 22 do so as a means of smacking the South. Many of them have either employed or tolerated a filibuster, or the idea of a filibuster, when it was used in behalf of some pet project. But in 1959 they see the filibuster and civil rights in the same glance and are bound to act, whatever the cost.

BUT, fortunately, the idea of corrupting the rules of the Senate in the name of "majority rule," and even more so in the name of civil rights, is repugnant to cool minds outside the South as well as in.

Writes William S. White in Harper's:

> Not merely all Southerners, but also all moderates in both parties, will resist a change as drastic as that [allowing a simple majority to end debate]. Indeed, all reasonable men everywhere would oppose it, if they took time to reflect deeply about the question. For while the power to filibuster has unquestionably operated to some extent against one minority — the Negroes—it is nevertheless still a basic protection for minorities in general, and might one day be a protection for the Negroes themselves. What the liberals forget is that the filibuster has saved the day for many a liberal cause.

The idea that it was the filibuster and nothing else that worked against civil rights bills is absurd, says White. "The truth is that no civil rights bill has ever been defeated by a filibuster."

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST agrees, reminding those who "profess to speak in the sacred name of civil rights" that the filibuster has been used for a variety of purposes having nothing to do with civil rights, and warns of tampering with a vital "bulwark" of the states against complete national control.

> The "liberals" [writes The Post], in their zeal to secure the vote of, or to protect, the Negro in his civil rights, ignore history. Our federal system was founded on the principle that the Senate represents the states, not a majority of the people of the nation . . . We ought to count to 10 before changing the Senate rules to limit debate substantially. Such a change would rival FDR's court-packing bill as a challenge to established concepts of government.

FINALLY, the scholarly Walter Lippmann urges caution on the anti-filibuster immoderates who parade as anointed advocates of majority sanctity. It is a rare thing for a man to question whether majority rule is clothed in divinity or equipped with an unerring instinct for doing the right thing. Lippmann has doubts:

> In my mind [he says], the proposal to decide highly controversial questions by a vote of no more than one plus one-half of the Senate is not a good one. While the Constitution itself says nothing about the question, it is a fact that the Constitution is by no means devoted to the principle that a simple majority should rule. Treaties and impeachments require two-thirds of those present and voting. Constitutional amendments, the expulsion of members, the overriding of the President's veto, require two-thirds of all the senators elected.
> What is the reason for these exceptions to simple majority rule? Is it not that what is at stake is of such great moment that it should have the concurrence of more than half of the representatives of the states?
>
> Why should it have this concurrence? Because when controversial matters are decided by a too-narrow majority, the prospect of resistance and nullification is increased. To enforce difficult laws, there should be a very large majority which concurs in them.

IN VENTING their spite on the South, Douglas and the rest propose to tamper with something vital to the philosophy of American government. For a handful of votes or vengeance or whatever it is that moves them, they would change the character of the Senate and erase a protection in which they themselves have sought refuge in the past and doubtless would again in the future.

Death Knell For The Filibuster

One of the happier results of the balloting on November 4 is the sharp increase in the Senate of liberals — Republican and Democratic — dedicated to clear the name of that august body of the filibuster onus.

Notice was served that the showdown will come on the opening day of the 86th Congress in January.

Under attack is nefarious Rule 22 which requires the vote of 64 senators or two thirds of the Senate's 96 members to shut off debate. The new proposal is that this shall be done with 49 votes or a simple majority.

The campaign for a change is spearheaded by four senators — Democrats Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota and Paul Douglas of Illinois, and Republicans Clifford Case of New Jersey and Jacob Javits of New York.

These men during the campaign sent two - page letters to every senatorial candidate, Republican and Democratic, urging support for the effort to break the filibuster log-jam.

THE LAST EFFORT to amend Senate Rule 22 missed by only 14 votes.

Many of those Northerners who voted with the South will not be sitting in the 86th Congress and the men who succeed them are most unlikely to make common cause with Eastland.

A shift of only seven votes will do the job and Tuesday's election was a certainty to bring this about.

Gone are such implacable foes of change as California's William Knowland, Indiana's William Jenner, Pennsylvania's Joe Martin, Michigan's Charles Potter, New Jersey's Alexander Smith, West Virginia's Chapman Revercomb, and Nevada's George Malone.

Victory is clearly in sight for the Humphrey - Douglas - Javits - Case Coalition and with victory comes the cheering prospect of a speedy change in the civil rights picture.

FIRST ORDER of business will unquestionably be an all-out attempt to restore Section III to the civil rights law.

This is the section of the measure passed in 1957 which empowers the Attorney General to enjoin recalcitrant school board members and even governors in school segregation cases as well as other civil rights matters.

The Department of Justice would have authority to act promptly without waiting for an invitation either from harassed school officials or from the Federal court.

Section III was stricken from the civil rights law under the threat of a filibuster and the pussy-footing failure of President Eisenhower to give his own program full support.

IF PART III HAD been allowed to remain in the law Faubus would have been slapped down long ago, and Little Rock's high schools would now be open and integrated. And Virginia's Gov. Almond would not now find himself at the end of a blind legal alley.

More importantly, the valiant NAACP would no longer have to go it alone in shouldering the heavy responsibility of Federal law enforcement that rightfully belongs to the Department of Justice.

We can scarcely wait until January.

Foes May Have Votes To Curb Filibustering In Senate Showdown

Battle Looming

Newly - Elected Lawmakers Favor Rules Change To Limit Debate

By United Press International

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8. — A tighter curb on Senate filibustering looms as a probable consequence of last week's elections, a survey of newly-elected senators disclosed Saturday.

The survey suggests that filibuster supporters now lack the votes to defend the present Senate cloture rule. The rule has long been under attack as a major obstacle to enactment of civil rights legislation.

As now written, the rule requires the votes of two-thirds of the full Senate membership—64 senators—to limit Senate debate. Thirteen of the Senate's 16 new senators, all those responding—think the rule should be rewritten to simplify the process.

The survey was conducted by United Press International through its bureaus across the nation. Only two of the Senate's new faces could not be reached. One declined to comment.

Showdown In January

The survey's heavy support for a stronger filibuster curb indicates that the scheduled January showdown on the filibuster rule will center on how to change it—not whether to do so. No less than eight new formulas were proposed in the last Congress.

Partisans of one of those plans, led by Senator Paul Douglas (D., Ill.) and Senator Clifford Case (R., N.J.), are forcing a January showdown.

They have served notice that they will ask the Senate to write a new cloture rule at the start of the session. Furthermore, they are armed with an advisory ruling from Vice President Richard Nixon that their move will be in order.

A similar move failed on a 55 to 38 vote at the beginning of the last Congress. But here are some of the views on a new filibuster rule in 1957:

Senator-elect Stephen M. Young (D., Ohio) — Favors a stronger anti-filibuster rule but: "I would listen to debate on all suggestions and study each one before deciding . . ."

Senator-elect R. Vance Hartke (D., Ind.)—Urges a "modification" of the cloture rule and hopes to "work closely with the Senate leadership" to evolve a new formula.

Senator-elect Clair Engle (D., Calif.)—"There is no sense in tying up the Senate body with one set of vocal cords."

Favors Modification

Senator-elect Robert C. Byrd (D., W. Va.)—Favors "modification . . . a majority of those elected should be able to cut off debate."

Senator-elect Frank E. Moss (D., Utah)—Favors a stronger rule.

Aligning the newly elected senators the 1957 roll call suggests that supporters of the present rule can be sure of only 47 votes. This would not be enough to insure a victory even if they should get support from both of the senators to be elected by Alaska on Nov. 25.

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—(AP)—The Democratic victory in Tuesday's election is a national mandate to Congress "to push the fight for an all-out civil rights program in the United States Senate in the forthcoming session," Senator Paul Douglas (D., Ill.) said Saturday. He predicted the Senate rule permitting filibusters will be the No. 1 target.

Senate Group Okays Limit On Filibuster

WASHINGTON (AP) — A resolution making it easier to cut off Senate filibusters was approved Wednesday by the Senate Rules Committee. The proposal will be subject to unlimited debate—filibuster, that is—if it is called up for action on the Senate floor.

The rules group voted 5-4 for a resolution to permit a majority of the Senate membership to shut off a filibuster, rather than the two-thirds now required. The revision has strong backing from advocates of civil rights legislation.

Chairman Hennings (D-Mo) announced the action after a closed-door committee meeting and said:

"We'll do everything we can to get it before the Senate."

He made no prediction of when the resolution might be called up in the Senate, or how it might fare there.

Southern senators have made it clear they will embark on an all-out filibuster if the proposed change in rules is taken up on the floor.

Under the Senate's present controversial Rule 22, it takes the votes of 64 senators—two-thirds of the entire membership—to cut off a filibuster. And there is no provision at all for limiting debate when a motion to change the rules is being discussed.

Hennings declined to announce how committee members voted. However, he and two other members, Sens. Javits (R-NY) and Clifford P. Case (R-NJ), were among sponsors of the resolution.

The committee chairman also indicated Sen. Cooper (R-KY) had voted for the resolution. Hennings said Cooper had asked him to state that the Kentuckian was not committing himself to the proposal "in all particulars." Cooper, he said, reserved the right to support amendments if and when the measure is considered in the Senate.

Clarence Mitchell, director of the Washington office of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), applauded the committee action.

He said in a statement that the proposed rules change would make the country "more certain that good legislation in all fields will not be watered down or destroyed by filibusters or threats of filibusters."

The committee-approved resolution would amend Rule 22 to provide that 15 days after the filing of a petition signed by 16 senators, the Senate by the vote of 49 members could limit further debate on any pending issue to one hour for each senator.

An alternative procedure also would be provided. The one-hour limitation could begin two days after the filing of such a petition if approved by two-thirds of the senators present and voting.

In addition, the resolution would make proposed rules changes subject to the same debate limitation as all other legislation.

Washington merry-go-round—

Deal reportedly saves labor bill and filibuster

BY DREW PEARSON

WASHINGTON, June 21—Two unadvertised political deals operated backstage during the Senate debate and passage of the moderate Ives-Kennedy labor bill. They were:

1. A deal between liberal senators and Southern Democrats to pass the labor bill in return for an agreement not to amend the filibuster rule for two years.

2. A deal suddenly worked out between Sen. Knowland and the White House to try to upset deal No. 1 and block passage of a moderate labor bill.

The bill, as passed by the Senate, sponsored by Republican Ives of New York and Democrat Kennedy of Massachusetts, had been agreed on by such diverse personalities as George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, and Sen. McClellan of Arkansas, anti-labor chairman of the Senate rackets committee. The bill also had the full support of liberal Sens. Morse of Oregon and McNamara of Michigan, plus Southern Democrats.

PEARSON

Reason for the Southern Democratic support was realization that Senate liberals would win four to eight new seats in the next election, probably enough to override the Southern rule protecting filibusters. Rather than gamble on a possible change of rules next January, Southern senators agreed to vote for the labor bill if Northern liberals would give them another two years of the present filibuster rule.

This was the reason for an almost unanimous vote in the Senate labor committee. The one dissenting vote was bellicose Sen. Barry Goldwater of Arizona, who, after the vote, came storming over to the Senate floor to tell his California colleague, Bill Knowland:

"I never sat with such a bunch of weak-kneed sissies in my life."

He and Knowland then hatched the second deal—namely, to get the White House to oppose the Ives-Kennedy bill.

"It's the only issue we've got," Goldwater confessed.

Knowland was fully aware that labor racketeering was the most important potential issue in his campaign for California governor next November. If the Ives-Kennedy Bill passed, that issue would be gone. Therefore, he demanded that the White House keep the issue alive by opposing the compromise bill. White House aids knuckled under, issued a fiery denunciation in the name of Secretary of Labor Mitchell, who was actually in Switzerland at the time.

Mitchell, a close firend of Meany, Walter Reuther, and other labor leaders, had privately favored the moderate bill, when White House aids decided otherwise, he had to go into reverse.

NOTE—This is the second time Sen. Knowland and right-wing Republicans have reversed the White House, the other being the Kennedy amendment to permit foreign aid to the Satellite countries.

Ike's position

REP. PAUL KILDAY of Texas had just finished a speech on the government reorganization bill and some of his Democratic colleagues were engaging in a little partisan bantering in the rear of the House chamber.

"Just what is President Eisenhower's position on this bill—does anybody know?" asked Democrat George Miller of California.

"Does Ike know?" quipped Democrat Edward Herbert of Louisiana. "It's important to start at the beginning."

"I'm not interested in the president's position today," interposed Democrat Arthur Winstead of Mississippi. "We don't vote on this bill until tomorrow. Let's wait and see what his position is then."

He knew 14 presidents

SEN. THEODORE FRANCIS Green of Rhode Island has several unique distinctions, the most famous being his age. He is the oldest man in American history to serve in the U. S. Senate. He is also famous for walking to work every morning, a distance of about two miles.

Unknown, however, is another record, probably equaled by no other American in history, certainly not a recent American. Sen. Green has met every president of the United States since President Rutherford B. Hayes, with the exception of James A. Garfield who was assassinated. Hayes was the 19th president and Eisenhower is the 34th, this means that Sen. Green has met almost half the presidents of the United States.

Hayes was inaugurated in 1877, at which time Green was 10 years old. The Senator was born three years after the end of the Civil War.

When the senator was about 12 years old, President and Mrs. Hayes came to Providence, R. I., his home, for a big rally and were entertained at a reception. Young Theodor Francis went up to the reception line and stood behind the president. Mrs. Hayes noticed him and said:

"Come here, little boy. You can't see what's going on."

She stood him in front, right alongside the president, and for an hour he remained in the receiving line as the crowd passed.

Mystery voice

THE SUPER - DUPER - SECRET Central Intelligence Agency is baffled. It's supposed to have more eyes and ears around the world than the Kremlin itself, but it can't identify a mysterious heckler who has been badgering the cloak-and-dagger boys.

For months the mystery voice has been placing long distant phone calls to CIA Chief Allen Dulles, from different parts of the U. S. A. The calls are usually switched to the security force. No matter who takes the calls, the same voice always asks the same question.

"Hello, Allen!" he booms cheerfully. "I just wanted to ask whether everything is all right!"

Then the mysterious caller hangs up. CIA sleuths are still not able to solve the mystery.

New Burma road

THE AIR FORCE formally proposed relocating the Burma Road last week. The news was buried on page 14 of a routine contract list, dated June 3. But when the budget boys read it, they almost fell out of their swivel chairs.

They ordered an immediate investigation to find out why we should reopen the long, winding, jungle road that leads through Burma into the back door of China.

The sheepish investigators discovered, however, that the proposal referred to another Burma Road, nowhere near China. It is a short, dead-end street, called the Burma Road, at Moody Air Force Base near Valdosta, Georgia.

3 Senators Pledge 'No Compromise' In Filibuster Fight

WASHINGTON (ANP)—A bi-partisan strategy committee of three liberal Senators has pledged to fight out their "bedrock" proposal to change Senate Rule 22 next year so that filibusters can be halted by a majority vote of the total body.

This group consisting of Senators Paul Douglas (D., Ill.), Clifford P. Case (R., N.J.) and Jacob K. Javits (R., N.Y.) met to plan tactics for the next session of Congress.

Later, they assured the press that they would accept "no compromise on principle." They all agreed that they had made compromises in advancing the basic rules reform plan, and did not intend to retreat further on the majority rule principle.

THEY INDICATED that they would not accept the so-called compromise proposal offered by Senator Lyndon Johnson last year to impose cloture by a two-thirds vote of Senators present and voting.

The present rule requires a two-thirds constitutional vote (or 64 votes) to shut off debate.

The proposed change of this rule would require the vote of the majority to envoke cloture and end a filibuster. Still the sponsors feel that time should be allowed for full and extensive debate.

THE LONG and complicated proposal would in effect mean that cloture could be envoked by two-thirds of those Senators present and voting after two and one-half weeks of debate or by a simple majority after four and one-half weeks of argument.

This, they claim, would provide more than adequate safeguards for full and even prolonged debate, and yet permit a majority of the Senate thereafter to reach a vote.

The move to change the rules is expected to occur on the opening date of Congress, Jan. 7, immediately after the new Senators will have been sworn in.

IF A POINT of order is raised against the effort to adopt new Senate rules at the beginning of each new Congress as they do in the House of Representatives, Vice President Nixon will have to rule on the challenge.

Serving as president of the Senate, Mr. Nixon ruled in 1957 in favor of each Senate adopting the rules which govern the body. His decision was in line with a similar ruling made in 1953 by the then Vice President Alben W. Barkley.

The Vice President's ruling could be appealed, but the Senate must then by simple majority either vote to suspend the ruling or to override it.

When a similar motion came up on two previous occasions the Senate tabled it both times by a simple majority vote. But this time the liberal bloc feels that it has sufficient votes to defeat a tabling motion.

'Calls Roll' On Ike—

Johnson Expects Senate Curb On Filibusters

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19 (UPI)—Senate Democratic Leader Lyndon B. Johnson said today he expects the Senate to modify its rules to make it easier to crack down on filibusters, the traditional Southern weapon for killing civil rights bills.

He also told a news conference he conferred with President Eisenhower last night. Among other things, he said, he "called the roll" for the President on how the Democratic 85th Congress trimmed the President's own budget by some $5,600,000,000.

JOHNSON

Johnson said he suggested a possible meeting between the President and Democratic congressional leaders to discuss the legislative program for the strongly Democratic congress elected earlier this month.

Although he predicted a change in the anti-filibuster rules, Johnson indicated he did not expect passage of any new civil rights legislation at least until after the newly-created Civil Rights Commission makes its recommendations.

The Justice Dept. has said it may come up with legislation dealing with bombings of churches and synagogues and with peddlers of "hate literature." Some prominent members of the Senate and House have demanded such legislation.

But Johnson said "most people think it would be pretty hard to get a bill that would give the President more authority than when he pushed a button and sent a division of paratroopers into Little Rock" during the 1957 school integration crisis.

"Maybe he wants the power to send two, three or four divisions," Johnson commented. He added that he did not expect the new Congress to spend "all its time on race or religious problems."

A bipartisan group of liberal Northerners has served notice they will fight for a rules change making it possible to end filibusters with a simple majority vote—now 49 senators—after 15 days.

Johnson said he has not discussed the issue with any other senator since the adjournment of Congress last August. However, he is said to favor a compromise—unacceptable to the liberals—to end debate by vote of two thirds of the senators present and voting.

Johnson said he was invited to the White House yesterday after his speech at the United Nations in which he expressed bipartisan support for the peaceful exploration of outer space. White House Press Secretary James C. Hagerty told newsmen the President thanked Johnson for making his speech.

Ike To Push For Less Spending

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19 (UPI)—House Republican Leader Joseph W. Martin Jr. said today President Eisenhower would do everything possible to cut government spending next year to prevent further rises in living costs and the federal debt.

Martin reported after a White House meeting that the President would make a tremendous effort to avoid asking the Democratic-controlled Congress for another increase in the temporary legal ceiling on the national debt.

The House GOP leader also pledged the support of the trimmed-down GOP minority in Congress to the effort.

Despite the President's announced intention to cut spending, Martin conceded it was unlikely that Eisenhower could send Congress a balanced budget for the fiscal year starting next July 1. Using a hockey term, he said "that would be a pretty good hat trick."

He saw no chance of cutting taxes next year. On the other hand, he indicated there was not much prospect of increasing them, either.

Flynt's Bill Would Halt Troop Use in Integration

Constitution Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13—Rep. John J. Flynt Jr., of Griffin, today introduced in Congress two bills to prevent the use of troops to enforce racial integration.

Flynt's move was a direct result of President Eisenhower's use of paratroopers and National Guardsmen last fall to enforce a federal court decree calling for integration of Central High School at Little Rock.

One of the Georgian's bills would prohibit the use of the Army, Navy, Air Force or Marine Corps troops to suppress any domestic disorders or to force compliance with a court order except upon the request of the governor or legislature of a state.

His other bill would prohibit the President from federalizing the National Guard of any state, except in time of war or threatened invasion unless requested to do so by a governor or legislature.

Flynt admitted that his bills might not have much chance of passage, but he declared that he does not think federal troops should be used "against our own people."

The Georgian's bills are similar to legislation proposed last week by a Mississippi congressman.

34b 1958 HABEAS CORPUS AMENDMENT

"PREVENT FEDERAL COURTS (SUPREME, CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT) FROM UPHOLDING AND ENFORCING THE CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS OF NEGROES, AND ANY MINORITY GROUP OR PERSON. . . .

Habeas Corpus Bill Would Curb Federal Court Powers To Protect Minoritie's Rights

Washington, D. C. — A negative habeas corpus amendment introduced by a New York City congressman three years ago has been resurrected as "another" bill by a Southern anti-integrationis.

The habeas corpus amendment, if enacted, would "prevent the federal courts (Supreme, Circuit and District) from upholding and enforcing the constitutional rights of Negroes, and any minority group or person, including white persons, verbally sympathetic to the cause of desegregation."

Enforce Segregation

Also, if enacted, it would leave the Southern states and their states' courts free to enforce all old segregation laws and the many new ordinances that have been devised since the U. S. Supreme Court decision of 1954.

A longtime bitter foe of the civil rights of the Negro, Congressmen Howard Smith, of Alexandria, Va., introduced the bill. However, the Smith Bill is "word for word' of the one introduced in April 1955 by Congressman Emanuel Celler, of Brooklyn, N. Y., whose constituency has a number of Negroes in his district.

"Aimed at Convicts"

When the bill was protested by A. Phillip Randolph, of the National Urban League and Thursgood Marshall, counsel for the NAACP, Congressman Celler rushed the bill through the House claiming it was "aimed at convicts." The bill was then relegated to the Judiciary committee, of which Congressman Celler is chairman.

Rush Through

It is reported that Congressman Celler is planning to report this "southern measure" out of the Judiciary committee, and get it passed through the oHuse during the coming week before its real meaning and effect in destroying civil rights and civil liberties is understood."

May Help In Creating Jobs

Ike Signs Federal Road Building Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — President [illegible] ended the suspense and signed the $1,800,000,000 highway bill Wednesday.

He found things wrong with it—accidents he said he wouldn't like to see followed in the future—but decided to go along because prospects it could be a quick help in creating jobs.

There had been advance indications that Eisenhower would sign, but no certainty. Only last Saturday a big Chicago meeting to discuss highway construction was called off because of doubt as to whether the bill would become law.

The bill was pressed chiefly by Sen. Gore (D-Tenn) but it had bipartisan backing, notably by Sen. Kuchel (R-Calif). It won 84-4 approval in the Senate and the House voted for it 300-28.

The new law aims at three major goals:

1. To provide new jobs. Gore estimated that the new jobs would swell to 520,000 in time.

2. To get the schedule for the 41,000 - mile superhighway interstate network back on the 13-year schedule set for it in 1956. Otherwise, the prospect was for a long stretch-out.

3. To establish a national policy of regulating billboards on the interstate system and giving states incentives to carry out this policy. States agreeing to regulate billboards would get a bonus of ½ of 1 per cent of the cost of the interstate sections regulated by the agreement.

The bill is spoken of as a $1,800,000,000 measure because that is the sum it is estimated will be available for construction this year beyond the money previously scheduled. It raises to $5,500,000,000 the amount to be spent this year on the over-all federal-state highway program.

The federal government pays 90 per cent of the cost of the interstate network, the states 10 per cent. Where states go along with the billboard control arrangement, the federal share will be 90½ per cent.

Eisenhower's objections were mainly to the bill's provision to drop, for one year, the 50-50 federal-state division of the cost of work on federal aid programs outside the interstate network.

The bill provides that for one year, the states need put up only $1 to each $2 of federal money for primary, secondary and urban federal-aid roads.

Eisenhower said: "I deplore the possibility that some may try to use this departure from a sound arrangement as a precedent for emulation. This I would resist."

He used the words "another damaging precedent" in taking exception to a plan in the bill for states to obtain federal advances to finance most of their one-third cost of additional work on primary, secondary and urban roads.

But, Eisenhower found three main reasons for signing. He summed them up:

"The first is the desirability of speeding up construction of our badly needed system of interstate highways, as was proposed in recommendations I recently submitted to the Congress.

"The second is the hope that in the acceleration of work on this system and on the other federal-aid highway programs some impetus may promptly be given to public and private efforts to increase employment.

"The third is the temporary character of what I believe to be the faulty provisions of the bill; only because these are not permanently contemplated can I give my approval to this legislation."

Home Rule Plan Actually Lost Ground in 20 Years

Constitution P. 1-F
Atlanta, Ga.
Sun 4-27-58

By MARGARET SHANNON

Home rule talk, stirred again by Atlanta Alderman John A. White, has been going on in Georgia for a good 20 years.

In that time, home rule—which means letting local governments do more governing and legislators less—actually has lost ground.

The 1945 state constitution contained a provision saying that the General Assembly had to provide home rule for municipalities and counties.

Well, it did, a couple of times. But in 1953 the State Supreme Court held the existing home rule law unconstitutional. Home rule advocates decided the constitution would have to be changed.

* * *

THE NEW HOME RULE AMENDMENT, voted in 1954, was considerably narrower and weaker than the one it replaced.

It said the Legislature "is authorized to"—not "shall" provide home rule for municipalities. The idea of home rule for counties was abandoned.

An effort has been made at every legislative session since then to get a home rule bill passed to activate the new constitutional provision, but it has failed every time.

It doesn't take a political scientist to figure out why. As the franker among the legislators say, they don't want to cut their own powers.

Home rule would amount to that, for it would convey to the governing bodies of cities and towns many powers that now reside in the Legislature.

* * *

UNDER THE PRESENT WAY of doing business in the General Assembly, there's so-called legislative courtesy on local bills. This means a bill affecting only a certain locality—town, city or county—passes automatically if it has the approval of the legislators—the representatives and senator—from that locality.

And if one holds out and doesn't approve it, it doesn't pass. An example was the late city primary bill for Atlanta at the 1957 session. Two of Fulton County's three representatives and its one senator approved the bill. The third representative didn't. So it didn't pass until he finally approved it in 1958.

There are occasional departures from the unofficial rule of legislative courtesy, but hardly enough to matter.

* * *

THIS CUSTOM GIVES THE INDIVIDUAL legislator great power in the affairs of his county and of every city or town in his county. He has a veto, in effect, on local legislation.

The amount of power legislators have over local affairs varies, because municipal charters vary. Some towns can't even shut down an alley without an act of the Legislature.

There had been talk about more freedom of government for towns and counties for years when the writers of the 1945 constitution took up their task.

They differed among themselves about whether home rule should be given directly to the people or to city councils and county commissions.

* * *

WHAT THEY FINALLY CAME UP WITH was this: "The General Assembly shall provide for uniform systems of county and municipal government, and provide for optional plans of both, and shall provide for systems of initiative, referendum and recall in some of the plans for both county and municipal governments. The General Assembly shall provide a method by which a county or municipality may select one of the optional uniform systems or plans or reject any or all proposed systems or plans."

Rep. Charles Gowen of Glynn County, steady champion of home rule, offered a measure at the 1947 legislative session to implement the constitutional provision as it related to municipalities.

The bill passed, but with an amendment exempting towns and cities in 56 counties.

Just about everybody thought that made the measure unconstitutional. When Atlanta officials started making overtures toward activating the new law here, City Atty. Jack Savage ruled it unconstitutional.

* * *

AN EFFORT TO PASS A WORKABLE bill was thwarted in 1949 and 1950, mainly by the diligent opposition of then Sen. Spence Grayson of Savannah, Georgia's second largest city.

Sen. Grayson kept trying to block home rule legislation, but a bill passed in 1951. In the course of the debate, Sen. William P. Trotter of LaGrange said:

"If I were from the State of Chatham and the Empire of Savannah, I'd be against this bill myself, but we don't have a dynasty in west Georgia."

Though Mr. White went to work to try to get Atlanta to adopt home rule—the 1951 act made it optional—he didn't succeed.

Some 20 towns and cities did adopt home rule, though, and most of them were liking it fine until the State Supreme Court came along in late 1953 and held the law unconstitutional.

HOME RULE ADVOCATES gave up trying to draw a law to fit the constitution. They decided to try to amend the constitution instead, and they succeeded. In 1954 the people voted this new home rule amendment:

"The General Assembly is authorized to provide by law for self-governmnet of municipalities and to that end is hereby expressly given the authority to delegate its powers so that matters pertaining to municipalities upon which, prior to the ratification of this amendment, it was necessary for the General Assembly to act, may be dealt with without the necessity of action by the General Assembly. Any powers granted as provided herein shall be exercised subject only to statutes of general application pertaining to municipalities."

Since then, the Legislature hasn't passed a home rule bill. After failure in 1955, an interim legislative committee was set up to devise a measure. It worked hard, but the bill it drew up didn't pass in 1956.

34d

* * *

ANOTHER HOME RULE BILL FAILED in 1957, and a duplicate of it hardly got off the ground in 1958.

So Alderman White started talking about another amendment that would allow Atlanta home rule.

Lack of it doesn't mean there's no local self-government. Charters give cities and towns many powers, some more than others.

In some fields both the Legislature and the municipal governing body can act. One thing frequently causing a fuss is salaries. Local officials often complain legislators raise them without regard for the local budget.

If a legislative delegation is at cross-purposes with municipal officials, a real hassle can result. Occasionally these fights end up before a legislative committee whose members are reluctant to interfere with affairs they really have nothing to do with. That's one argument often used for more home rule.

* * *

ANOTHER POPULAR ARGUMENT is that it would relieve the Legislature of having to handle so many local bills and therefore give members more time for the affairs of the state.

Local legislation, because of the automatic way it's sped thorugh the House and Senate, doesn't occupy much of the time of the General Assembly as a whole.

But it does require attention of the individual legislator, and he might have more time for state matters if he had fewer local ones to look after.

But the legislator also would have less say-so about those local matters. The officials and people at home would have more—that's home rule.

Senate Unit Votes Bill on Home Rule

Governor-Ruled Territorial Plan Approved 5 to 2

The Senate District Committee by a 5 to 2 vote approved the Administration home rule bill yesterday and sent it to the Senate floor.

Thurs 5-1-58

The measure, prepared by the District Commissioners, would establish a territorial form of government for the city.

The chief city officials under the plan would be a governor and secretary appointed by the President with the approval of the Senate and would serve for four year terms. The governor would receive a salary of $21,000 a year and the secretary $17,500.

A 15-member legislative assembly would be elected on a non-partisan ballot for terms of two years and would represent five wards in the city.

Residents also would elect a non-voting delegate to serve in the House.

The present Board of Education would be abolished and its functions transferred to the elected assembly.

The assembly would have power to legislate for the city, to levy taxes and to vote the city budget. At present these functions are exercised by Congress. It also would have authority to issue bonds.

Acts of the city government, however, would at all times be subject to Congresisonal review with Congress retaining its Constitutional authority over the city.

Acts of the legislature would further be subject to a veto by the Presidentially appointed governor. Should the legislature override a veto by a two-thirds vote, the President.

Before the new form of government would go into effect, it would have to be approved by a majority of registered voters in a referendum.

In approving the bill, the Senate District Committee took a new approach to providing home rule for Washington. Three Democratic members joined two Republicans in voting for the Administration measure.

Committee Chairman Alan Bible (D-Nev.) said it was the feeling of the majority of committee members that the Administration measure stood a better chance of becoming law in this session of Congress than a more traditional form of municipal government with an elected mayor-city council and no Presidential veto.

Ike Signs 1.8 Billion Housing

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Eisenhower Tuesday signed into law the $1,850,000,000 housing bill—first major antirecession measure of the 1958 congressional session.

In a message to Congress, advising that he was signing the bill, Eisenhower said some of its provisions will promote a higher level of economic activity at this time of business recession.

But he was sharply critical of some features of the bill.

"WHOLLY INCONSISTENT"

"This legislation contains provisions that are wholly inconsistent," he said, "with the philosophy of the free enterprise system that has made this nation strong."

He said Congress should promptly enact new legislation dealing with the interest rates for loans to veterans for housing.

The bill authorizes the President to set the GI mortgage rate at 4¼ per cent, the highest in history. It now is 4½ per cent.

4 PCT. RATE

Administration housing officials had asked for a 5 per cent rate, contending that the present figure is too low to attract private lenders and that the VA mortgage program is drying up.

Eisenhower did not specifically mention the request for the 5 per cent rate, but told the Congress in his message that the authorized rate should be sufficiently flexible to attract private capital.

In addition to making large new federal funds available for home mortgages, the bill extends GI home loan programs for two years.

It also lowers down payments on FHA-insured mortgages.

The FHA said the bill's provisions for lower down payments go into effect immediately, applying to loan applications pending or in process, as well as new ones.

Sponsors estimated it could result in an additional 200,000 housing starts this year and produce up to 600,000 new jobs.

Both the VA home loan guarantee and direct loan programs for World War II veterans are extended to July 25, 1960, by the bill. Both were due to end this summer.

The bill contains these three authorizations for the Federal National Mortgage Assn., the agency which buys home mortgages when private loan money is not available.

One billion dollars to be used as revolving fund to buy FHA and VA mortgages of $13,500 or less.

Five hundred million dollars to be used at the discretion of the President to buy FHA and VA mortgages when he believes national economic conditions require such action.

Fifty million dollars to buy mortgages for housing at military installations, to be occupied by servicemen or civilian employes of the armed forces.

Also included in the bill is an additional authorization of 150 million dollars each for direct GI loans in fiscal 1959, starting July 1 this year, and fiscal 1960. These loans are made in small towns and rural areas.

The bill lowers down payments on FHA mortgages so that, for example the requirement on a $15,000 mortgage will be $630 compared with $1,050 under previous law.

G. O. P. SENATORS ASK CUT IN HOUSING BILL

WASHINGTON, June 19 (AP) —A minority report by three Republican members of the Senate Banking Committee signaled a vigorous fight today to cut and remodel the huge Federal housing bill.

The program would provide billions of dollars in grants, loans and mortgage insurance for various long term housing programs, including slum clearance and public housing. Just how many billions is not clear, because some of the money is spelled out by formula provisions rather than in dollars.

The Republicans report was signed by Senators Homer E. Capehart of Indiana, John W. Bricker of Ohio and Wallace F. Bennett of Utah. It was made available while a majority report explaining and defending the measure was getting a final polishing. Both reports will be filed later with the Senate.

The minority demanded, among other things that the bill's six-year $2,100,000,000 program of grants for slum clearance urban renewal be cut back by the Senate to the $1,300,000,000 the Eisenhower Administration had asked.

The three Senators also contended that the bill's public housing provisions would allow drastic departure from original Congressional intention to provide Federally subsidized low rental dwelling space for small wage earners. They said that most of the benefits could go to middle income families under language allowing them to rent or buy space intended for much lower wage earners.

2.5 Billion On Housing Is Voted

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Senate zipped to passage Friday a $2,475,000,000 omnibus housing bill going far beyond President Eisenhower's recommendations.

With the way to quick passage cleared by Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D-Tex), the Senate adopted several amendments by voice vote without even having them read or explained.

The senators present shouted approval of the measure and sent it to the House.

BILL CONTAINS

The bill contains new provisions or authorizations for FHA mortgage insurance programs, for urban renewal or slum clearance projects, for low-rent public housing, for the mortgage insurance program for elderly persons, for the FHA rental housing program, and for the college housing program. It also would provide a new program.

A compromise amendment worked out in the cloakrooms by Sens. Sparkman (D-Ala), Capehart (R-Ind), and others at Johnson's instigation cut the new money in the bill by 475 million.

VETO POSSIBLE

Nevertheless, the total new authorizations were far more than the administration asked and Sen. Bush (R-Conn), said there is a possibility of a veto.

The principal new money authorizations in the bill are:

$1,800,000,000 in federal grants for urban renewal over a six-year-period, compared with 1,300,000,000 asked by Eisenhower.

400 million for college dormitory loans, as against 200 million asked by the President.

150 million for direct loans to veterans.

125 million for college classroom and laboratory loans.

Nolen Charges Grant Voted Against South

Congressional candidate Wilbur Nolen of Montgomery charged here Saturday night in a television address that Congressman George Grant voted against the South on the Integrated School Aid Bill."

Nolen, making his second race against the veteran incumbent from Troy, was also critical of Grant's attendance record while in Congress.

"While drawing pay from the taxpayers at the rate of $86 per day, Grant was absent from his seat on some of the most important roll calls in Congress," Nolen declared. "Among these roll calls missed were those that provided billions in give-aways to foreign aid."

Nolen said if he is elected he "will serve all the people of the Second District and not just the big mules."

"And after four months of 18-hours-per-day campaigning, at every crossroads in the District, I a mconfident of a tremendous victory on Tuesday," Nolen concluded.

KENNEDY-IVES BILL

Sparkman Defends Kennedy-Ives Bill

Must Rid Labor Of Gangsters, Senator Tells Prichard Group

MOBILE, Sept. 1 (AP)—Sen. John J. Sparkman said tonight that failure of Congress to enact the Kennedy-Ives labor reform bill means that James Hoffa, Teamsters' Union head, and the handful of irresponsible and arrogant labor leaders who plague an otherwise clean labor movement will continue to operate."

Speaking at a Labor Day celebartion at Prichard Park, Alabama senator said "it is to the interest of all Americans that the honest and respectable leaders of labor be given help and cooperation in this new struggle.

"I refer to the problem of cleaning out the hoodlums, the crooks and the bribe takers and bribe givers who have infiltrated some labor unions."

Sparkman devoted his address almost exclusively to defense of the Kennedy-Ives Bill and to labor problems.

Tomorrow night in Mobile, Sparkman is to speak at a banquet sponsored by the Young Democrats. His subject will be the Little Rock School situation.

In his talk tonight, Sparkman described the Kennedy-Ives measure, passed by an 88-to-1 Senate vote, as a "strong bipartisan measure," representing "a real opportunity for effective labor reform."

Referring to the defeat of the bill in the House, the senator said opposition came largely from Republicans who voted overwhelmingly against it."

"They were encouraged to do so," he continued, "by certain groups who opposed those parts of the bill that would correct employer abuses uncovered by the McClellan committee and who also wanted more stringent legislation against labor unions.

"The bill also was opposed by the handful of labor leaders shown by the McClellan committee to be heads of the unions so infiltrated by racketeers and gangsters. On the other hand, Mr. Meany of the AFL-CIO and a great part of the reputable labor leaders urged the House to accept the Senate bill."

Of business, Sparkman commented on an improved economy in recent months but added that 'it is certainly too soon, however, to say that the recession has ended and that there is no cause for worry about the future."

As bright spots in the national economy he cited an increase in business activity in July for the third consecutive month; and upward trend in housing starts; an increase in farm proprietors' income in the second quarter of the present year over the corresponding period last year, and a temporary slowing down in the rising cost of living."

Tie Proposal to Space Bill

Courier p. 17

The South Seeking New Segregation Legislation

Pittsburgh Pa. Sat 1-18-58

WASHINGTON (ANP) — Representative Overton Brooks of Louisiana introduced legislation in the new session of Congress which he hopes will give America control of space, and Southerners control of segregation.

• His first bill would probihit the President from calling out the National Guard and from using Federal troops in the enforcement of State laws and Federal court orders.

The second would establish a joint committee to study problems relating to the navigation, use and control of outer space.

DIRECT OPPOSITE to the Brooks bill was one introduced by Rep. Kenneth Keating (R.-N.Y.) which would prohibit the use of the National Guard to obstruct the enforcement of any Federal law or any order of a Federal Court.

• Another of Keating's bills would provide for the establishment of a joint committee on outer space.

The New Yorker introduced another which would call for further protection of the civil rights of persons within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Prosegregation Bills Near Passage By Mississippians

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Two bills — one dealing with helping fight desegregation and the other with curtailing Negro voting — were expected to pass the Legislature quickly Monday afternoon.

Both houses return at 3 p.m. from a long weekend.

The House will consider a Senate bill authorizing cities and counties to donate, with no strings attached $100 per million dollars of assessed valuation to the citizens councils — prosegregation groups of whites.

The Senate will consider a House bill setting up a court-appointed registrar of voters to relieve the circuit clerk of those duties and to reduce the number of Negro registrants.

AMENDMENTS PREPARED

Several amendments have been prepared for the citizens council donation bill, including some restricting the use to which the money can be put.

Under the bill, the councils are not restricted in the use of the money and need not show how it was spent.

State Council Administrator W. J. Simmons of Jackson says the council's books are not open to inspection by the public or by newspaper reporters.

There are no penalties in the bill for improper use of the money.

The registrar bill zipped through the House last week with no dissenting vote.

WARNED LEGSLATURE

Gov. J. P. Coleman had warned the Legislature Mississippi's circuit clerks are vulnerable in cases under the Civil Rights Act because they are not trained in federal laws.

He suggested a three-member board of registrars but the House voted to set up a single registrar with authority to ask for assistance by a lawyer and by the sheriff.

He also would be required to open the poll books for registration no more than five days a month and he would be the sole judge of whether prospective voters are qualified to register under Mississippi law.

MISSISSIPPI HOUSE PASSES RACE BILLS TO PROTECT SCHOOLS

Four Measures Get Speedy Approval On Heels Of Senate Action

SYSTEMS CAN BE CLOSED

Attorney General Is Given Power To Investigate Groups Seeking Charter —To Defend Officials

By KENNETH TOLER

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., April 8. — [illegible] to strengthen Mississippi's position on segregation gained easy House approval Tuesday.

The moves came on the heels of Senate action Monday vesting the Governor with authority to close all public educational institutions on threat of integration.

One of the House measures would give school authorities the same closure authority vested in the Governor in event integration is threatened.

Investigation Authorized

Another authorizes the state attorney general to make a thorough investigation of all groups seeking to incorporate in Mississippi, which one of the proponents said could be applied to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The other measures charge the state attorney general with the duty of defending all school and public officials in suits which challenge the state statutes on segregation as well as the qualification of voters.

Chairman Joe Hopkins of the House Judiciary En Banc Committee handled the four segregation-strengthening bills. They were passed without being read, the same procedure followed by the Senate Monday in passing its proposal vesting the Governor with power to close all public educational institutions.

Other Bills Scheduled

Four other bills dealing with the segregation issue were set for special order Wednesday afternoon on motion of Representative Dave Womack Jr. of Humphreys County. They deal with investigation of applications for charters by foreign corporations, as well as non-profit groups.

In another major House action, a bill lowering the present sliding scale property tax of two to four mills to one to three mills was passed 79-39 under steerage of Speaker Walter Sillers of Bolivar County. He said the bill would react favorably on outside industry and would give it an added inducement to locate in Mississippi.

Effective In 1960

The bill would not go in effect until January, 1960.

Speaker Sillers said if the state is to compete with other Southern states in the industrial development program, "we are going to have to set our house in order and become competitive with other states in the matter of taxes."

He said a recent survey showed that Mississippi's tax schedule was the highest of 30 states studied, and 25 per cent above the second highest."

SEGREGATION ISSUE TOPS IN LEGISLATURE

Series Of Measures Passed In Mississippi

TEACHER SALARIES HIKED

By The Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., April 12. — The race question dominated the Mississippi Legislature this past week although lawmakers reached agreement on teacher salary increases.

Both houses acted on a series of measures aimed at preserving segregation—with the Federal Civil Rights Commission the only adversary named outright.

Charges were raised in the House that legislators are passing anything with a "racial tag" without giving it a close look. But the race measures, with two exceptions, had easy going.

The exceptions were bills to require labeling of blood for blood banks by race and to require segregation of children with sickle cell anemia—peculiar to Negroes—and children with antibiotic-resistant ailment—peculiar to whites.

Two Bills Killed

The Senate Public Health Committee killed the bills after hearing testimony that patients cannot contract sickle cell anemia from infusions. The committee also was told hospitals could not comply with the blood labeling bill and still render good and inexpensive service.

Further action, in one chamber or another, is expected next week on the other race measures, but the great concern will be how to finance the 98 million-dollar "quality education" program.

Calling for teacher salary raises ranging up to $675 and an optional nine-month school term with state aid, the program will cost 3¼ million dollars more than is provided by all pending revenue measures. And agreement on the pending revenue bills may be hard to get.

Friday, the Senate concurred in House action to make an exception—for two bills—to the March 27 deadline for introduction of general bills.

Closing Authorized

The two bills, by Representative Ben Jack Hilbun of Lafayette County, would authorize the Governor or Park Commission to close any or all state parks.

Like similar school bills passed by the House, they obviously are intended as an answer in advance to any Federal court order directing integration.

The school bills authorize the Governor or school district trustees to close any or all schools if they fell the public peace recommends the step.

The Senate Judiciary Committee approved a bill which could channel city and county tax money into the pro-segregation Citizens Councils—despite Gov J. P. Coleman's objections.

Governor Coleman told the committee passage of the bill would mean handing over to a private group those responsibilities belonging solely to the people's elected representatives.

Governor Opposed

The Governor, not a member of the councils, said, "I am opposed to any group . . . purporting to perform the duties of state government."

The committee, headed by Senator Stanton Hall of Hattiesburg, voted to offer three restrictive amendments:

1. Groups receiving such tax money would have to be cleared by the state Sovereignty Commission, the state's official "segregation watchdog" agency.
2. Use of the money for political purposes would be banned.
3. Groups receiving it would have to give an accounting of how it was spent.

The Civil Rights Commission named in House-passed bills authorizing the attorney general to represent schools, cities, counties and other public officeholders.

The bill says the state's chief legal officer could come to their defense if they were made defendants in Federal court suits or called as witnesses before the Civil Rights Commission.

Mississippi OKs Blood Label Bill

By the Associated Press.

JACKSON, Miss., March 25. —A bill requiring that blood for transfusions be labeled to show the race of the donor passed the Mississippi House of Representatives yesterday without dissent. Rep. Elmo Anderson, the author, told the house Negroes are susceptible to a disease, sickle cell anemia, which he said is not known to any other race.

The bill requires that the patient be told the race of the blood donor. In the event of an emergency, the attending physician could waive this notification but would be required to prepare a certificate to be made a part of the patient's case history.

POWELL BILL

Pass Powell bill

34 1 WASHINGTON

Thanks to the floor efforts of Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D., N.Y.), the $910,000,000 scholarship passed Thursday by the House contains amendments prohibiting discrimination.

Powell's amendment makes the student loans and graduate fellowships available to all citizens without regard to race, color, religion, national origin or sex.

STATE PROJECTS INCLUDED

Public Works Bill Sent To Possible Veto By Ike

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Senate Wednesday completed Congressional action on a $1,118,128,835 public works appropriation bill and sent it to the White House.

The Senate gave unanimous approval on a voice vote to a compromise version of the big money bill which carries funds for water projects throughout the country in the fiscal year started July 1. The House approved the bill earlier in the day.

The total in the bill compares with $1,077,827,200 as originally approved by the House and $1,[illegible]15,835 which it carried when it passed the Senate. President Eisenhower had recommended $1,077,358,000.

Members of Congress did not might recommend a veto since the new projects added would involve a total ultimate cost of over 1½ billion dollars.

Of the total in the bill, $813,887,500 would go to Army Engineers for flood control, navigation, beach erosion and power projects; $255,577,335 to the Interior Department for reclamation projects; $30,104,000 to the Bonneville Power Administration; $735,000 to the Southeast Power Administration; $975,000 to the Southwest Power Administration, and $16,850,000 to the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Army Engineer construction projects in Alabama would total $18,300,000. This construction, as approved by the House and Senate, includes $11,700,000 for the Fort Gaines Lock and Dam (Henry County); $600,000 for the Columbia Lock and Dam (Houston County); and six million dollars for the Jackson Lock and Dam (Choctaw-Clarke Counties).

Democrats and 25 Republicans.

As soon as the Jenner-Butler proposal went down to defeat, Douglas moved that Congress express "its full support and approval of recent historic decisions" declaring racial segregation in public schools to be unconstitutional.

WASHINGTON (UP) —The House after a partisan debate which touched off applause and booing, voted Wednesday to grant $25,000-a-year pensions to former President Harry S. Truman and Herbert C. Hoover and all future ex-Presidents.

The standing vote of 155 to 45 followed three hours of wrangling during which the House stripped other special benefits from a broader bill which the Senate passed last year.
